AS the Croſs is carried before the Pope whenever he appears in Public at Rome, ſo the Hoſt goes before him when he is upon a Journey. [a] Father Rocca, who has written on the Riſe of this Cuſtom, tells us that it was borrowed from the antient Practice of the Pope's hanging the Hoſt about his Neck, when the Church laboured under Perſecution: This, he tells us, was practiſed in the ſame Manner by the reſt of the Clergy, but it was afterwards aboliſhed; and the Sovereign Pontiffs have ſince appropriated to themſelves alone the Privilege of having the Hoſt carried before them whenever they travel.

[b] THE moſt antient Inſtance of the Hoſt going before the Pope, is that of Stephen III. in his Journey to France, when he went to implore the Aſſiſtance of King Pepin againſt Aſtulfus King of the Lombards. However, ſome Authors affirm, that a Crucifix, and not the [c] Hoſt, was carried before his Holineſs on that Occaſion: Be this as it will, Father Rocca aſſures us, that the Cuſtom of carrying the Hoſt in Pomp is not of greater Antiquity than two hundred Years. The Examples of preceding Ages do indeed ſhew that this Cuſtom took its Riſe from a Principle of Devotion, in order to excite the Piety, &c. of the People; but then it does not prove that it was uſual for it to be carried with ſo much Pomp and Solemnity as before the latter Popes.

WHEN Pope Pius II. went in 1458. to Mantua, to make an Alliance againſt the Turks, he had the Hoſt carried before him on a White Horſe, under a ſilken Canopy, and in a gilt Tabernacle, ſurrounded with a great Number of Lights. This is the moſt antient Example of the Hoſt being carried in Pomp. In 1494, when Alexander VI. went to Naples, he had the Hoſt carried before him on a Pad. Pope Julius II. and Leo X. obſerv'd the ſame at the Coronation of Charles V. And Clement VII. cauſed it to be carried on Horſe-Back under a golden Canopy. The holy Sacrament was put in a Tabernacle of Cryſtal, and lighted by ten Flambeaux; which during the March, ſurrounded the Horſe on which the Hoſt was ſet. When the Pope went to Marſeilles by Sea, in order to hold a Conference with Francis I. King of France, he cauſed the Sacrament to be carried in the Admiral-Galley.

PAUL III. and Gregory XIII. followed the Cuſtom which had been obſerved by their Predeceſſors, and the latter reſolved to rival all the preceding Popes by the Magnificence of their Equipage; but nothing can enter in Compariſon with the Pomp with which the Hoſt was carried into Ferrara, 1598. when Clement VIII. went to take Poſſeſſion of that City after the Death of Alphonſo of Eſte. The Hoſt was carried in Proceſſion out of Rome in a magnificent Tabernacle, which it would be needleſs to deſcribe in this Place. The Tabernacle was carried by eight Canons of the Vatican upon a kind of Litter, and under a magnificent Canopy embroidered with Gold, Silk, &c. The Brotherhood of the Bleſſed Sacrament, with each a Torch in his Hand, walk'd before the Hoſt. The religious Orders, the Muſicians of St. Peter's Chapel, and the Clergy with our Saviour's Croſs carried before them, followed the Brotherhood. Afterwards the Hoſt appeared under the Canopy, carried by eight of his Holineſs's private Chamberlains, and was guarded by a Body of Swiſs, and other Soldiers. After the Hoſt his Holineſs appear'd, with a Taper or Torch in his Hand; and next to him the ſacred College, the Prelates, and the Roman Nobility, all of them holding Tapers in their Hands. In this Manner the Hoſt was carried out of Rome.

It was carried to Ferrara on a Pad-Nag, adorn'd with the moſt gaudy Trappings; but his Holineſs, before he began the March, bent his Knee before the Hoſt, and did not riſe up till it was gone out of Sight. The Mules employed to carry the Baggage, and his Holineſs's Lacqueys carrying his Arms, marched at the Head; theſe were re-inforced by ſeveral Companies of Soldiers, with their Trumpets ſounding as they march'd: After which eight led Horſes came forward, and they were followed by the Domeſtics of the Cardinals and Prelates, all of them on Horſe-Back; two Couriers belonging to the Apoſtolic See, the Band of Muſic of the Pope's Chapel, two Eſquires, two Mace-Bearers, followed by the Maſter of the Ceremonies, and the two Clerks of the Pontifical Chapel: The latter carried each of them a Lanthorn, fixed at the End of a Lance, in order to light the Hoſt, which followed immediately after. Two of his Holineſs's Grooms held the Reins of the Horſe on which he rid; and the Hoſt was guarded by a Body of armed Swiſs. Afterwards came the Sacriſtan, with his white Staff in his Hand, the Badge of his Office, and was followed by a great Number of Roman Prelates. After this another Band of Muſicians, and a Company of Lacqueys belonging to the Baggage appear'd, and five hundred Horſemen, in very magnificent Habits, divided likewiſe into Companies. We are not to forget his Holineſs's Barber, Taylor, and Shoemaker, who all advanced forward, according to their Rank. Four Chamberlains carried four Pontifical Caps, made of Purple, at the End of four Pikes. All the Nobility of Rome and of Ferrara aſſiſted alſo in it, dreſs'd in a very ſumptuous Manner: And after theſe came the Acolytes, the Chiefs of the Apoſtolical Chamber, the Auditors of the Rota, the Sub-Deacons, the Orators, the Biſhop of Ferrara with his Clergy, his Holineſs's Key-Bearers, his chief Maſter of the Ceremonies, his Croſs-Bearer, twenty Clerks of the Cathedral of Ferrara, each having a lighted Torch in his Hand. The Hoſt, when the Proceſſion went out of Rome, and during the whole Journey, was carried along with the Baggage; but at the Entrance into Ferrara it was placed in the Center of the Proceſſion. The Pope's chief Treaſurer had Bags fix'd on each Side of his Saddle, out of which he threw Money to the People. St. Peter, who from a poor Fiſherman was become a temporal Prince, had found by long Experience, that the good Things of this World have a greater Influence over the Minds of Men than Apoſtolic Bleſſings. Theſe latter were wonderfully efficacious, when the Lame, at the bare Command of our Saviour, uſed to riſe up and walk; but Things are greatly changed ſince that Time. After the Treaſurer came thirty Youths of the greateſt Quality in Ferrara, walking on Foot, bare-headed, dreſſed in Cloth of Silver, with little black Clokes embroidered with Silk, and Caps in their Hands enrich'd with golden Roſes, Pearls, and precious Stones. After this ſhining Troop Pope Clement VIII. himſelf advanced forward, not as one who ſtil'd himſelf the [a] Servant of Servants, but in Quality of the Lieutenant of the Almighty,

[a] As the Popes were deſirous of having it thought that they did not affect any great Titles, but ſtill profeſſed that Humility on which their Greatneſs had been chiefly founded, the more they found their Grandeur increaſe, the more they ſought out for unambitious Titles, and called themſelves the Servants of Servants: An humble Title, which has the ſame Effect on our Minds as thoſe which the Perſians uſed to give their Monarchs, viz. King of Kings. The firſt Pope who made uſe of it was Damaſus, and it was afterwards fully eſtabliſhed by Gregory I. Vid. Paſquier, in his Enquiries concerning France.

clothed in a Robe of very rich Silk, having on his Head a Crown enriched with Jewels of immenſe Value: He was carried on the Shoulders of eight tall Lacqueys, clothed in long ſcarlet Robes, under a Canopy of the fineſt crimſon Velvet embroidered with Gold, ſurrounded with a double Range of Guards very richly dreſs'd, and followed by his Swiſs and an Auditor of the Rota, who carried his Triple Crown after him, having on each Side of him the Great Chamberlain and the Chief Butler. We take no Notice of the great Number of Coaches and Horſemen which follow'd the Jeſus Chriſt and his Vicar.

DURING the whole March, the Faithful ſung Anthems and Motets, a kind of Muſical Compoſition, repeating Prayers, making Signs of the Croſs, giving and receiving Bleſſings; and, in a word, practiſing all the exterior Tokens of Devotion. They marched very ſlowly: The Clergy, both ſecular and regular, in all the Places thro' which the Proceſſion paſs'd in the Night-Time, advanced to meet it, with a Body of the Militia at their Head; after the Clergy came the Magiſtrates, and other Perſons of Diſtinction; and at the Entrance into the City, the Trumpets ſounded, and the Air echo'd with Spiritual Songs, and People crouded from all Parts to come and adore the Hoſt. People of the higheſt Rank ſtrove who ſhould firſt preſent his Holineſs with the Canopy, ſtudiouſly endeavouring to pay all theſe worldly Honours to him, who, during his Reſidence here below, had trampled on Pride, Vanity, and Oſtentation. Such was the Splendor of this Proceſſion, whereof there is a more particular Deſcription in Father Rocca, or in Bonanni, to whom we are obliged for this Extract.

BONANNI is of Opinion that this Ceremony took its Riſe from the Practice obſerved by the primitive Chriſtians, of keeping the Hoſt in their Houſes, and taking it along with them in a Journey; looking upon it as a Preſervative againſt Dangers; for it gave them ſpiritual Comfort in the Storms of Perſecution; and whenever they found themſelves in danger of dying, they received it as the Life of their Souls. The Popes have been deſirous of preſerving this Cuſtom; but as the Times are changed, and that the ſpiritual Father of the Chriſtians is now the Image of the triumphant Jeſus, it is but reaſonable, that this divine Saviour of Mankind ſhould appear in Splendor, and march in great [a] Pomp. But it may be aſked, That in caſe the Cuſtom of carrying the Holy Sacrament on a Journey took it Riſe from the Piety of the Sovereign Pontiffs, and the Deſire they have of being always in a Readineſs to receive the ſacred Body of Chriſt Jeſus in caſe of Death, why it is carried a whole Day's Journey before the Holy Father? An Anſwer is indeed made to this Objection; but ſo trifling a one, that 'tis not worth taking Notice of. 'Tis very probable, that this Ceremony is an Imitation of the ſolemn March of the Ark under the antient Law, on extraordinary Occaſions. This Judaical Cuſtom was ſo neceſſary to the Majeſty of the Chriſtian Religion, that 'tis very ſurpriſing the Popes, who from Time to Time have bent all their Endeavours to heighten the Solemnity of it, ſhould, for ſo many Centuries, have neglected to borrow from the Jews the moſt auguſt of all their Ceremonies.

IN this Plate are exhibited two different Manners of carrying the Holy Sacrament before the Pope; the one on Horſe-Back, and the other in a kind of Litter between two Mules.

WE ſhall conclude this Article with the Manner of the Deacon's giving Notice to the People that the Pope is to carry the Holy Sacrament, which is done the Eve before. The Form of Words uſed on that Occaſion is pretty remarkable; [b] to Morrow, ſays the Deacon, the moſt Holy will carry the moſt Holy.

[a] Ribadeneira gives the following Relation in his Life of this Saint: A certain Franciſcan Novice throwing off his Habit, ran away from the Monaſtery in which the Saint lived, and ſtole away with him a Pſalm-Book, written with St. Anthony's own Hand, and explained with marginal Notes, which St. Anthony often uſed, when he privately expounded the Scriptures to the Friars. As ſoon as St. Anthony perceived his Book to be ſtolen, he fell down on his Knees, and earneſtly intreated God to reſtore him his Book again. In the mean Time the Apoſtate Thief having his Book with him, as he prepared to ſwim over the River, he met the Devil, who, with a drawn Sword in his Hand, commanded him to go back again immediately, and reſtore to St. Anthony the Book he had ſtolen from him, threatening to kill him in caſe of Non-Compliance. The Devil gave this Order with ſo dreadful an Aſpect, that the Thief being aſtoniſhed, returned immediately to the Monaſtery, reſtored the Saint his Book, and continued in a religious Courſe ever after. Hence 'tis ſaid that St. Anthony is implor'd to reſtore loſt Goods.

[a] The Holy Balm, ſo pleaſantly deſcribed by Father Peter of St. Lewis, a Carmelite of Provence, in his Poem entitled Mary Magdalen.

[b] 'Tis related in the Romiſh Breviary, that this Saint was bound to a Wheel, and roaſted at a Fire; and as they pour'd on Oil, the Flame broke forth, and ſlew a thouſand of the Heathens. She was again thrown into Priſon, where being viſited by an Angel he heal'd and refreſh'd her. Then ſhe was caſt into the Lake Vulſinus, with a great Stone faſtened to her Body, but the Angel kept her from drowning. Upon her Prayers the Image of Apollo, which ſhe was commanded to worſhip, was ſuddenly reduced to Aſhes, by which Miracle three thouſand were converted to the Faith. She was afterwards put into a fiery Furnace, and remained five Days unhurt in it.

[c] This Feſtival was inſtituted about the Middle of the fifth Century by Pope Sextus III. at the Deſire of the Empreſs Eudoxia; it was cuſtomary before to celebrate on that Day the Anniverſary of the Defeat of Anthony and Cleopatra.

[a] The Feaſt of the Transfiguration was inſtituted by Pope Calixtus III. Ann. 1456, in Commemoration of a great Victory which the Chriſtians gain'd over the Turks.

[b] One Day in the Monaſtery of St. Clare, when Meal-Time was come, ſhe was told that there was but one Loaf of Bread, and that not a large one, to ſerve the whole Community. Notwithſtanding this, ſhe commanded one half to be given to the Friars, and reſerved the other half for her Nuns, to be divided into fifty Parts, according to their Number. This Command, tho' a ſtrange one, was yet humbly complied with by her Servants; yet theſe ſmall Portions, by the Divine Power, did ſo ſwell in the Hands of every one that brake them, that the whole Convent was filled.

[c] 'Tis ſaid that this Saint was born with the Sign of the Croſs on his Left Side; and that, as a Token of his future Sanctity, when he was a Child, he would never ſuck but once a Day; that he cured Men of the Plague, by only making the Sign of the Croſs upon them; that a little Dog brought him Bread, and an Angel healed him of the Plague; that he died in Lombardy, and that an Angel deliver'd him a Table, written in gold Letters by God's own Hand, with the Name of St. Roch in it, and that whoever commemorated him ſhould be cured of the Plague.

[d] 'Tis related in the Breviary of Pope Pius V. that Helena being ſent by her Son Conſtantine to the Holy Land, to find out the Wood of the Holy Croſs, that ſhe there found inſtead of it a Marble Statue of Venus; that the Ground being dug, three Croſſes were found, and alſo the Title that was once faſten'd to our Saviour's Croſs, but now was fixed to none of them, but lay by itſelf a part from the Croſſes; ſo that they knew not which it belong'd to. However, that Doubt was ſoon taken away by a Miracle, for a Woman, who by a Fit of Sickneſs was brought almoſt to the Grave, having two of them applied to her by Macarius, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, ſhe received no Benefit at all; but the third being applied, ſhe was inſtantly heal'd.

O C T O B E R.

THE firſt Sunday; Feaſt of the Roſary at the Minerva, and at the Churches of the Order of St. Dominic.

1. St. Remigius, Biſhop and Confeſſor, Feaſt at St. Mary's in Traſtevera, where her Relics are depoſited; at St. Agatha's and St. Lewis's.

[a] The following is related of this Saint, which I ſhall tranſcribe in the old Engliſh Style: Michael appered to another Byſhop, and badde hym go to an Hyll Toppe unto the Mount of Gardell, and there as he founde a Bull teyed, he ſholde make a Chyrch in the Worſhyp of God and Saint Mychaell. Than were there two Roches (Rocks) of Stone on eyther Side, that the Werke might not up. Than Saynt Mychaell appered to a Man that hyght Haymo, and badde him go and put awaye the Roche and drede no thynge. So this Man went thyder and ſette to his Shoulders, and badde the Roche goo utter in the Name of God and Saynt Mychaell, and ſo the Hylles wente utter as moche as neded to the Werke.

Jacobus de Viragine has recorded, that when a great Multitude were going to the Church on his Mount (for twice a Day, as we are told, the Sea that encompaſſes this Mount gives the People a Paſſage) it happened that a big-belly'd Woman who was near her Time went along with them; and behold the Sea returned with a mighty Force, and all the Company in a Fright fled to the Shore again, the Woman with Child excepted, who was overtaken by the Waves of the Sea; but Michael the Arch-Angel preſerv'd her unhurt, ſo that ſhe brought forth her Child in the Middle of the Sea, and taking her Child in her Arms, there gave it Suck; and the Sea making way for her, ſhe rejoicing brought her Babe to Land.

St. Chryſanthus and St. Darius; Feaſt at the Holy Apoſtles; and at St. Sylveſter's in Campo Marzo, where their Relics are lodged.

[a] The Feaſt of the Guardian Angels was eſtabliſhed, or rather rendred general, by Pope Paul V. at the Sollicitation of Ferdinand of Auſtria, afterwards Emperor.

[b] We are told that this Saint and his two Companions refuſing to ſacrifice to the Heathen Gods, they were all beheaded in one and the ſame Moment, whoſe Tongues, after their Heads were cut off, did ſtill confeſs the Lord. And to declare the Merits of the Martyr Denis, after he was beheaded, he ſtood upon his Feet; and taking up his Head in his own Hands, carried it to the Place of Burial.

[c] In Rome a Picture is ſhewn which was ſaid to be begun by St. Luke, and miraculouſly finiſh'd by an Angel; or, according to others, St. Luke preparing to draw it, and praying to God that he might draw his Son exactly, when he roſe he found the Picture finiſhed.

NOVEMBER.

ON the Feaſt of [a] All Saints, the Pope aſſiſts the ſolemn Office in the Apoſtolical Palace: A Cardinal Biſhop ſings Maſs in it, and a Student of the German College preaches the Sermon there. Feaſt at S. Bibiana's, and at the Rotunda. At Veſpers the Pope aſſiſts at the ſolemn Office, which is ſung for the Dead. St. Cæſarius; Feaſt in his Church.

2. Commemoration of the Dead; a Papal Service in the Apoſtolical Palace; the Cardinal Grand Penitentiary ſings Maſs. Feaſt at St. Gregory's on Mount Cælius, and at the Fraternity of the Dead, and that of the Interceſſion, and of the Agonizing, which laſts the Octave.

WHEN the Pope aſſiſts at Veſpers, and at the Mattins of the Dead, he is clothed in Purple, having on his Head a Capuche turn'd in [b] ſuch a Manner, that the Fur with which it is lin'd, covers Part of his Face, and is ſo adjuſted, that it ſticks out like two Horns: In this Trim he goes to the Chapel, with the Croſs carried before him, and follow'd by the Cardinals as uſual.

The officiating Prieſt, whether the Pope be preſent or not, is dreſs'd in the uſual Ornaments, ſuitable to all Maſſes, with this Exception, that there they are black; and he neither uſes Sandals nor Gloves[c]. At the End of the Maſs, when the Pope himſelf pronounces the Abſolution, whilſt the Choir begins the Libera, his Holineſs puts on a ſcarlet Chaſuble, and a Pall is, in his Preſence, ſpread upon the Steps of the Pontifical Throne. At the Repetition of the Libera, two Acolytes in Surplices go up to the Pope; the former, with the Thurible and the Navicula; the latter, with the Holy Water and the Sprinkler. The chief Cardinal Prieſt preſents the Navicula to his Holineſs: At the Beginning of the Kyrie Eleiſon, the Pope gets up, and takes off his Mitre; and at the Concluſion of it he turns about towards the Altar, and begins to ſay the Lord's Prayer audibly, and continuing it with a low Voice, the chief Cardinal Prieſt gives the Sprinkler to his Holineſs, who ſprinkles the Shroud thrice with it. This being done, the Cardinal preſents the Pope with the Thurible, who incenſes the Pall with it thrice; whereupon the two Acolytes withdraw, and the Ceremony concludes with a Prayer; after which the Pope ſays the Requiem, and the Choir Requieſcant in Pace.

[a] In the ſeventh Century, Boniface IV. conſecrated the Pantheon at Rome, in Honour of the Bleſſed Virgin, and All Saints, which, upwards of ſix Centuries before, had been dedicated to Jupiter, and all the Gods, by Agrippa. This Conſecration of the Pantheon by Boniface IV. was a Preparation to the Feſtival of All Saints: He eſtabliſhed it at Rome, after the Dedication of this Temple. In the Beginning of the Ninth Century, Gregory IV. ordained that it ſhould be generally received in all Parts of Chriſtendom, and ſolemniz'd on the 1ſt of November; whereas before it us'd to be ſolemniz'd the 12th of May.

[a] ON ſome Occaſions, after the Veſpers of the Dead, a Kind of Bed of State is raiſed in the Middle of the Church, having four Tapers at leaſt on the four Sides. In the Midſt of the Pall muſt be a ſilken Croſs, embroidered with Purple and Red.

[b] THE Romans uſed to commemorate the Dead in the Month of February, when it was cuſtomary for them to eat and carouſe in Remembrance of the Deceaſed. This the antient Fathers reproach'd them with, as repugnant to Religion and Good Manners: However, this Part of the Abuſe was introduced among the Chriſtians of the primitive Church, ſince we find in the Hiſtory of thoſe Ages, that [c] ſeveral ſuperſtitious Chriſtians uſed to pray and drink upon the Graves of the Martyrs, purely from a principle of [d] Religion. Ovid, in his Faſt. Book ii. aſcribes the Inſtitution of this Feſtival to Æneas. The Romans alſo made Oblations for Souls departed, on which Occaſion they lighted [e] Tapers on their Graves: They uſed to implore the Gods in their Favour, and offer up [f] Vows for the Repoſe and Comfort of their Souls, who, if we are to believe Ovid, one Day took the Pains to come out of their Graves, and ran up and down the City and Country to implore the Aſſiſtance of the Living; asking them the Reaſon why the appointed Anniverſaries were diſcontinued. This Negligence, ſays he, was owing to the Troubles and Confuſion of the Civil Wars; the [g] Souls departed made heavy Complaints about it; dreadful Howlings were heard for ſeveral Nights together; every one was terrified with the Sight of his Anceſtors in the Figures of Skeletons; Fathers appeared to their Children, Husbands to their Wives, when they beſought them to offer up Prayers and Sacrifices; whereupon they immediately reviv'd the Anniverſaries, and after that the Souls departed made no farther Excurſions. But to return to our Commemoration of the Dead: It owes its Riſe to Principles which are much more juſtly founded than thoſe of the antient Heathens: The Wants and Neceſſities of deceaſed Chriſtians have undoubtedly a quite different Foundation than thoſe of Idolaters. But however that be, without taking Notice in this Place of a numberleſs Multitude of idle Tales concerning Spirits, or making any Compariſon between the Heathen and Chriſtian Dead, it is certain, that our Commemoration, or All-Souls-Day, did not become general in the Church, till Odilon, Abbot of Clugny, firſt eſtabliſhed it in his Dioceſe for the ſecond of November, at the End of the tenth Century; not but the primitive Chriſtians uſed to pray in a certain Manner for Souls departed, but no general Commemoration had been yet ordained like that of the Second of November; which is due to the Piety of St. Odilon, or rather, if we are to believe the old Legends, to the Charity of a Traveller who return'd from Sicily. We are told that this Man, terrified at the Flames which Mount Ætna belch'd out, imagin'd it to be Purgatory; he even fancy'd that he had heard the Cries and Groanings of the Souls departed; which ſtruck him ſo prodigiouſly, that he went and acquainted St. Odilon with it, who thereupon inſtituted a ſolemn Day for the Conſolation of the Souls departed, throughout the whole Extent of his Dioceſe.

27. St. James, the Martyr, that was cut aſunder; Feaſt at St. Peter's, where his Head is interr'd.

28. St. Gregory III. Pope; Feaſt at St. Peter's; at St. Sylveſter's, at St. Stephen's del Campo, for ſeveral Martyrs: at Ara Cœli's, for the bleſſed James of Marca Ancona.

29. St. Saturninus, Martyr; Feaſt at St. John's and St. Paul's, and at St. Catherine's of the Rope-makers.

30. St. Andrew the Apoſtle, Feſtival in his Churches; at St. Angelo's of the Fiſh-Market, and at St. Peter's, where his Head is depoſited.

[a] We find the following Account in the Roman Breviary, in the Life of S. Cecilia. On the Marriage-night, when Cecilia, and her Spouſe Valerian were alone together in the Bed-chamber, ſhe ſpake to him in theſe Words: O ſweet and moſt loving Youth! I have a Secret to reveal to thee, if thou wilt ſwear to conceal it. Valerian making an Oath as ſhe deſired; I have, ſays Cecilia, an Angel a Lover of mine, who keeps my Body with the ſtricteſt Jealouſy; if he ſhould in the leaſt perceive that thou toucheſt me with polluted Love, his Fury will immediately be ſtirred up againſt thee, and the Flower of thy Youth will be deſtroy'd: But if he finds that thou loveſt me with a ſincere and immaculate Love, and preſerveſt my Virginity whole and untouch'd, he then will love thee as well as myſelf, and will expreſs his Favour to thee. Valerian replied, If thou wouldſt have me give Credit to thy Words, ſhew me the Angel; and if I find that he is really an Angel of God, I will do as thou ſay'ſt; but if thou loveſt any Man better than me, I will ſlay both him and thee with my Sword. So perſwading him to become a Chriſtian and be baptiz'd, ſhe ſhewed him the Angel.

1. ST. Eloi, Biſhop and Confeſſor; Feaſt in his Churches, and at that of the Order of St. Bennet.

2. S. Bibiana, Virgin and Martyr; Feaſt in her Church, and at S. Maria Maggiore's.

3. St. Maurus, Martyr; Feſtival at St. Praxeda's, and at Jeſus's Church for the Feaſt of St. Francis Xaverius.

4. S. Barbara, Virgin and Martyr, Feaſt in her Church of the Bookſellers; and at the Tranſpontina, for the Bombarders of the Caſtle of St. Angelo.

5. St. Sabas, Abbot; Feaſt in his Church.

6. [a] St. Nicholas, Biſhop and Confeſſor, Feaſt in his Churches; at St. Laurence's in Damaſo, and at St. Paul's.

7. St. Ambroſe, Doctor of the Churches, in his Churches.

THE firſt Sunday in Advent, Station at S. Maria Maggiore's: Papal Service in the Apoſtolical Palace; a Biſhop Aſſiſtant ſings Maſs; the Procurator-General of the Dominicans preaches the Sermon: After Maſs the Pope carries the Hoſt in Proceſſion to the Chapel Paulina, where it is expos'd for forty Hours.

THE Seaſon of Advent has a myſterious Senſe; it repreſents to us the Time which preceded the Incarnation of the Meſſias, and the Hopes which the Fathers in the Old Teſtament had conceived of his coming to redeem Mankind; for which Reaſon Advent is conſider'd as a Seaſon intermixed with Joy and Sorrow. And for this [b] Reaſon the Gloria in excelſis is not ſaid in Advent, nor the Te Deum at Mattins. The Miniſters of the Altar don't put on the Dalmatica, it being a Habit ſuited to Joy. In like Manner it was formerly a Cuſtom to faſt in Advent, which is ſtill obſerved in Religious Communities. During this whole Seaſon the Pope always goes to Chapel on Foot.

ON the three other Sundays in Advent the Service is likewiſe ſolemnly performed in the pontifical Chapel, and an Aſſiſtant Biſhop ſings Maſs: The ſecond Sunday the Procurator-General of the Conventual minor Minims, preaches the Sermon; the third a Cardinal-Prieſt ſings Maſs, and the Procurator-General of the Auſtin Fryars preaches the Sermon.

THE third Sunday is celebrated with Tokens of Joy, becauſe the Accompliſhment of the Propheſies is at Hand. Accordingly the Altar is adorned with greater Magnificence than on [c] common Days, being embelliſhed with Flowers, Images, and the Relics of Saints; and the Miniſters reſume the Dalmatica. Myſtical Writers take Notice of ſeveral other Ceremonies, which we ſhall omit as proper to Prieſts only.

[a] This Saint is invoked in Dangers, eſpecially at Sea. The Legend informs us, that certain Mariners being in great Danger by a ſudden Storm that aroſe at Sea, they began to cry out; O Nicholas, the Servant of God! if theſe Things be true which we have heard concerning thee, now ſuccour us; that ſo being delivered from this Danger, we may render Thanks to God and thee. While they were ſpeaking one appeared, and ſaid to them, Behold I am here, for you called me; and immediately began to help them in ordering their Sails, Cables, and other Tackling; and a little after the Sea ceaſed its Roaring, and the Tempeſt was heard no more. The Mariners, when they came to Shore, preſently enquired where Nicholas was, and hearing he was in the Church, they went into it; and, what is wonderful, knew him immediately, without any one's pointing him out, tho' they had never ſeen him before; and falling proſtrate at his Feet, they paid their Thanks to him, and related in what Manner he had delivered them from impending Death.

THE fourth Sunday in Advent, the Procurator-General of the Carmelite Order preaches the Sermon.

THE ſecond Sunday, Station at St. Croſs's in Jeruſalem, and at St. Mary's of the Angels; the third at St. Peter's; the fourth at the Holy Apoſtles.

8. The Conception of the Bleſſed Virgin; Feaſt in the Churches of our Lady, at that of the Capuchins, and at St. Lawrence's in Damaſo; at St. James's of the Spaniards, and S. Mary's in via lata.

9. St. Melchiades, Pope; at St. Sylveſter's.

10. At St. Salvator's in Lauro; Feaſt of our Lady of Loretto.

11. St. Damaſus, Pope; Feaſt at St. Laurence's in Damaſo.

12. St. Valerius, Benedictin Abbot; Feſtival in the Churches of his Order.

13. [a] S. Lucia, Virgin and Martyr; Feaſt in her Churches; at St. John's of Lateran the Chapter chaunts a ſolemn Maſs, to return Thanks to God for the Converſion of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty Henry the Great, of glorious Memory, one of the Benefactors of this Chapter, in Preſence of the French Embaſſador, and the Cardinals of that Nation. At St. Apollinarius's, Feaſt of the Holy Martyrs St. Euſtachius and his Companions, whoſe Bodies are there depoſited.

14. St. Angelus, Benedictin Abbot; Feaſt in the Churches of his Order.

15. St. Claudius, Martyr; Feaſt in the Church of the Holy Apoſtles, where his Relics are depoſited.

16. St. Ananias, St. Azarias, and St. Mizael, Feſtival at St. Adrian's, where their Relics are depoſited. In the Evening a Concert of Muſic at St. Marcellus's, at the Minerva, and the reſt of the Churches, which is continued during the nine Days Devotion at Chriſtmas.

[b] THERE is a particular Office for the nine Days Devotion which immediately precede Chriſtmas. This, according to the Accounts given by the Writers upon Myſteries, repreſents the nine Months, during which the Bleſſed Virgin labour'd with the Child. We are told, that it was firſt celebrated under the Pontificate of Pope Vitalis, when the Council of Toledo was held, viz. in 694. ſince which it has always been obſerved in Spain, and eſtabliſhed in moſt Parts of Italy. During this nine Days Devotion, the Altar muſt be adorn'd as for the forty Hours, and Care muſt be taken to ſet the Image of the Bleſſed Virgin upon it. There is nothing particular in the reſt of the Ceremony.

17. Tranſlation of St. Ignatius, Biſhop and Martyr; Feaſt at St. Clement's.

20. S. Fauſta, Mother to S. Anaſtaſia; at her Church.

21. St. Thomas the Apoſtle; Feaſt in his Churches, and at that of St. John's of Lateran, where the Ark of the Covenant, and the Table on which our Saviour eat his laſt Supper, are exhibited.

22. St. Flavian, Martyr, Father of S. Bibiana; Feaſt in his Church.

23. St. Victoria, Virgin and Martyr; at St. Adrian's, where her Body is depoſited.

[a] The old Roman Breviary ſays, that Paſchaſius the Judge, having commanded S. Lucia to be carried to the Stews, the Holy Ghoſt fixed her down with ſuch Weight, that when many endeavoured to thruſt her forward, they could not ſtir her: Then they tied Ropes to her Hands and Feet, and all pulled together; but they found her as immovable as a Mountain. Then the Magicians and Soothſayers tried their Skill upon her, but all in vain. After this they brought many Yoke of Oxen; but all their united Force could not move her one Step.

25. Our Lord's Nativity: At Midnight, and at the Day-Maſs, Station at S. Maria Maggiore's, and at S. Maria's in Ara Cœli; Station at S. Anaſtaſia's at Day-break. A Pontifical Service in St. Peter's, or at S. Maria Maggiore's, or of the Manger. The Pope celebrates [b] Maſs in his Pontificalibus, and delivers a Homily.

The BLESSING of the SWORD, and of the DUCAL HAT fix'd on its Point.

ON Chriſtmas Eve, before the Office of the enſuing Feſtival begins, the Sovereign Pontiff annually bleſſes a Gold-hilted Sword, enriched with precious Stones, wrought in the [c] Form of a Dove; with the Scabbard and Belt enriched in like Manner, and a [d] Ducal Hat fix'd on the Point of it. This Hat is made of purple-colour'd [e] Silk, furr'd with Ermin, and ſurrounded with a Hat-band, made in the Form of a Crown adorn'd with Jewels. The Hat and Sword are both ſent by his Holineſs to ſome Potentate, for whom he has a peculiar Affection, or to a great General, who may have merited ſuch a Diſtinction for his Bravery exerted againſt the Enemies of Chriſtianity. His Holineſs performs the Ceremony of bleſſing them clothed with the Albe, the [f] Amict, and the Stole, before he puts on the red Cope, which he wears at the Office of Chriſtmas Night. A Clerk of the Chamber preſents to him the Sword, and the Hat fix'd on the Point of it; and after having pronounced the Bleſſing, he ſprinkles and incenſes them both with Holy-Water. This being done, the Pope goes to his Chapel, preceded by the ſame Clerk of the Chamber, who walks with the Sword and the Hat before the pontifical Croſs. If the Perſon for whom theſe Preſents are deſign'd happens to be at Rome, he muſt receive them from the Pope's own Hand, obſerving to kiſs both that and his Foot. His Holineſs declares to him that the Sword denotes the Power of our Saviour, and the Victory which he has gained over the Devil: But he does not forget to add, that it alſo denotes the temporal Power, which Chriſt has devolv'd upon his Vicar. 'Tis, adds he, in giving the Sword which has received the Benediction to the Perſon who is to gird himſelf with it for the Defence of the Holy Apoſtolical See: " 'Tis by this Sword that we declare you the Defender of the ſame Power, and of the " [g] Pontifical Sovereignty; the Protector of the Holy See againſt the Enemies of the " Faith, and the Bulwark of the [h] Church. May your Arm, by the Virtue of this

[a] Some Interpreters of Myſteries aſcribe the Inſtitution of the Maſs of Midnight to St. Teleſphorus, who ſat in the pontifical Chair about the Middle of the ſecond Century: But the Learned reject the Decrees which ſome impute to this Pope and his Predeceſſors. Cardinal Bona alſo rejects the Opinion, which aſcribes to St. Teleſphorus the Inſtitution thereof, and thinks that it was not celebrated annually, at ſtated Times, till the Pontificate of Julius I. Gregory the Great mentions this Maſs in ſome of his Writings.

There is a particular Privilege annexed to the Church of St. Mark, at Venice, of ſaying the Midnight Maſs at Six in the Evening. " This Office, ſays S. Didier, in his Account of the City and Republick of Venice, begins at 24 a-Clock (according to the Way of computing Time in Italy) and two Hours after Maſs is ſung by four Choirs of Muſic, " with the utmoſt Solemnity, and a great Concourſe of People. The Diſorders and Scandals which uſed to hap- " pen at that Ceremony, when celebrated at Midnight, were the Occaſion that this Church was allowed to cele- " brate it at that Hour."

SOMETIMES the Perſon to whom the Pope preſents the conſecrated Sword is invited to read one of the Leſſons of the Office; in which Caſe a Clerk of the Chamber girds him with the Sword over the Surplice, clothes him with a white Chaſuble, and puts the Hat upon his Head. After this the Maſter of the Ceremonies conducts him to the Steps of his Holineſs's Throne, where he bows to the Altar, and then to the Pope; and after having returned the conſecrated Hat to the Maſter of the Ceremonies, he draws the conſecrated Sword out of the Scabbard, touches the Ground with the Point of the Sword, waves it thrice aloft, and after having brought it back gently over the Left Arm, puts it again into the Scabbard. This Ceremony ended, he goes to the Desk, and ſings the fifth Leſſon of the Office, having firſt received the Pope's Bleſſing. When he has done ſinging, he goes and kiſſes his Holineſs's Feet; which done, his ſacerdotal Veſtments are taken off, and the Hat is again fix'd on the Point of the Sword, which a Gentleman holds with the Point upwards till the Office is ended. If the Perſon for whom the Sword is conſecrated, ſhould not be preſent at Rome, or is not able to read, the Romiſh Ceremonial ordains, that a Clerk of the Chamber muſt put on the Surplice, and ſing at the Desk in his Stead; and that afterwards (if preſent) both of them ſhall go and kiſs his Holineſs's Feet.

[b] THE Perſon to whom the Sword has been preſented, is conducted back to his Houſe in Pomp, by the Nobility of the Court of Rome. The Sword is carried before him held aloft, with the Hat fix'd on the Point of it.

POPE Pius II. ſent the Hat and Sword to Lewis XI. with [c] four Latin Verſes engrav'd on the Blade of it, by which his Holineſs exhorted him to revenge the Blood of the Greeks, and to deſtroy the Ottoman Empire. The aboveſaid Pope ſent ſuch another Sword to Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy.

As we have taken Notice of the fifth Leſſon, which is ſung in the Office of Midnight by the Perſon who receives the conſecrated Sword, it may not be improper to preſent the Reader with the Order of the Leſſons of this [d] Office. An Apoſtolical Sub-deacon uſed to ſing the ſixth, the Aſſiſtant-deacon on the Left Hand the ſeventh, the Aſſiſtant Deacon on the Right Hand the eighth, and the Pope the ninth: However, Pope Paul II. changed that Order, and regulated it as follows, viz. that an Acolyte ſhould ſing the firſt Leſſon, an Auditor the ſecond, a Sub-deacon the third, the youngeſt of the Cardinal Prieſts the fourth, the Perſon who received the conſecrated Sword the fifth, a Cardinal Prieſt the ſixth; but made no Alteration with regard to the three laſt. Sixtus IV. ordained that all theſe Leſſons ſhould be ſung by Cardinals, and alſo that in Caſe the Emperor ſhould happen to be at this Office of Midnight, his imperial Majeſty ſhould read the ſeventh Leſſon. On this Occaſion, two Deacons Aſſiſtant to the Pope, uſed to wait upon the Emperor in his Place, whilſt the laſt Pſalm of the third Nocturn, or Night-ſervice, was ſinging. Theſe two Cardinals clothed his imperial Majeſty with a Surplice, girt him with the conſecrated Sword, put on him the white Chaſuble, which was cloſe over the Right Shoulder, and open over the Breaſt, like that of a Biſhop. As for the conſecrated Hat, it was given to an Eſquire, for the Dignity of a Duke being much inferior to that of an Emperor, his Imperial Majeſty would have demeaned himſelf too much in wearing a Ducal Hat. The Emperor being thus clothed in Sacerdotal Veſtments, was conducted to his Holineſs's Feet by two Cardinal Deacons, when he pay'd him the accuſtomed Homage, and afterwards drew the Sword in the Manner above-mentioned; after which he went up to the Desk, where he received the Apoſtolical Benediction, and either ſung or read the Leſſon. This being ended, his Imperial Majeſty uſed to go and kiſs the Feet of the Holy Father; after which, the two Cardinal Aſſiſtants brought him back to his Place, and took off his Sacerdotal Veſtments. This Ceremony was obſerved when Frederick IV. was at Rome, at the Maſs of Chriſtmas, in 1468. under the Pontificate of Paul II. Hiſtory does not relate that any other [a] Emperor has been ſince at Rome, at that Seaſon: And as for Frederick IV. thoſe who are acquainted with the Hiſtory of Germany, know that this Prince was fitter for a Prieſt than an Emperor.

[b] Polydore Virgil has told us a remarkable Story, how God miraculouſly avenged St. Thomas of his Enemies. St. Thomas being reputed King Henry's Enemy, began to be ſo deſpiſed and hated by the common People, that coming to a Town called Strode, the Inhabitants thereof, in order to put an Affront on the Holy Father, had the Impudence to cut off the Horſe's Tail on which he rode: but hereby they brought a perpetual Reproach upon themſelves; for afterwards it ſo fell out by Divine Permiſſion, that the whole Poſterity of thoſe Men who committed the Fact, were born with Tails like Brute Beaſts; whence the Proverb of Kentiſh Long-tails.

We find alſo in the Feſtivale, that a Bird being taught to ſpeak, and to ſay St. Thomas, happening one Day to ſit out of its Cage, a Spar-Hawk ſeiz'd on it, and was going to give it a fatal Gripe; but the Bird crying out St. Thomas, the Spar-Hawk fell down dead. ——— The Inference drawn from it is admirable: If St. Thomas heard the Bird of his grete Grace, moch more will he hear a Chriſten Man or Woman, that cry to him for Help and Succor.

In ſome Churches the Feſtival of a Saint is never kept but on the Sunday in the Octave; particularly if any Body or Society of Tradeſmen perform the Functions belonging to it.

Every Night in the Dusk of the Evening there is an Oratory at St. Francis Xaverius's, and every other Day they ſcourge themſelves there. At the new Church they diſcipline themſelves thrice a Week, viz. on Mondays, Wedneſdays, and Fridays: They alſo ſcourge themſelves at the Stigmates, every Friday at the ſame Hour.

Every Monday Morning in the Year the Hoſt is expoſed at Ara Cæli, at the Church of the Holy Apoſtles, and St. Anthony's of the Portugueſe.

On all Mondays in the Year at the Holy Apoſtles, and at Ara Cæli, Feſtival for St. Anthony of Padua: The Hoſt is alſo expoſed.

On all Mondays in the Year at St. Andrew's della Valle, at the firſt Chapel on the Left Hand: In the Evening the Holy Sacrament is expoſed. Here is a Concert of Muſic; and a Sermon is preach'd for Souls departed.

On all Tueſdays in the Year, in the Afternoon, the bleſſed Sacrament is expoſed at our Lady's of Loretto, in Piazza Trajana; at that of the Suffrage's, and of St. Paul's of the Rule.

On all Wedneſdays at St. Euſtachius's; and in the Morning the Bleſſed Sacrament is expoſed at St. Vincent's and St. Anaſtaſia's, at the Fountain of Trevi.

On all Wedneſdays in the Evening, the Muſicians of Rome aſſemble at St. Mary Magdalen's Church, where the Litanies are ſung. The Hoſt is in like Manner expoſed on the ſame Day at St. Frances the Roman, in Happy Street.

On all Thurſdays at the Church of Anima, and at our Lady's of the Mountains.

On all Fridays at Jeſus Church, for the bleſſed Souls departed; and at St. Sixtus's of the Invalids, in Ponte Sixto, at twenty one o' Clock, to compute after the Manner of the Italians; at the Oratory of the Agonizing, and at Paſquin's, at twenty two o' Clock; and

'Tis ſaid in an old Leger-Book of Canterbury Church, that the Zeal of the People for this Saint was ſo great, that there being three Altars erected therein, one dedicated to Chriſt, another to the Virgin Mary, and a third to St. Thomas; one Year the Offerings at St. Thomas's Shrine amounted to 954 l. 6 s. 3 d. when thoſe of the bleſſed Virgin came only to 4 l. 1 s. 8 d. and to Chriſt nothing at all.

'Tis related, Gononi Chronicon, &c. that St. Thomas had, from his Youth, vow'd his Chaſtity to the bleſſed Virgin: And being on a Time among ſome of his Companions, (before he was Archbiſhop) he heard them boaſting of their Miſtreſſes, and the rich Preſents they had received from them. Thomas told them they vapour'd fooliſhly, for he had a Miſtreſs that far excell'd them all; and that ſhe had beſtowed ſuch a Preſent on him, the like whereof they had never ſeen. All this he intended in a ſpiritual Senſe: But they being very urgent with him to ſhew it them, he ran to the Church, and pray'd the bleſſed Virgin to pardon the preſumptuous Words he had ſpoken of her; when immediately ſhe appear'd to him in a Viſion, and encouraging him, ſaid, that he did well to cry up the Excellency of his Miſtreſs: Upon which ſhe gave him a very fine little Box, and opening it he ſaw ſomething of a purple Colour, and taking it out, beheld a wonderful fine ſacerdotal Garment.

at twenty three, at St. Nicholas's of the Prefects in Campo Marzo; and at St. Lucias's of the Gonfalone.

ON all Saturdays in the Evening at St. Maria Maggiore's: The Litanies of the Virgin are ſung in Muſic, in Preſence of the Cardinals, at the Chapel Paulina.

THE Hoſt is expoſed, and the Litanies are ſung to Muſic, at St. Saviour's of Copelles, at our Lady of the Mountains, at St. Salvator's in Lauro, at St. Pantaleone's, and at Paſquin's: The Muſic ends at twenty one at Night; but at twenty two o' Clock the Hoſt is expoſed at St. Maria's in Via lata, and at St. Mary's of the Mountains. In like Manner the Hoſt is expoſed at St. Apollinarius's, at twenty three o' Clock, as at St. Saviour's of Copelles; and in the Night at St. Salvator's in Lauro.

ON all the firſt Sundays in the Month the Hoſt is expoſed, Sermons are preach'd, and a Concert of Muſic perform'd at St. Laurence's in Lucina; at the Noviciat, or Probation Place of the Fathers of St. Mary Magdalen in Trivio; at St. Stephen's del Cacco: At twenty two o' Clock the Bleſſed Sacrament is expoſed at St. Joſeph's in Carcere, and at the Trinity of the Pilgrims; but it remains expoſed for three Days together in the laſt mentioned Church.

ON all the ſecond Sundays of the Month the Hoſt is ſhewn in the Morning at St. Auſtin's Church; at Jeſus Maria's of the Court, at the Guardian Angels, and at St. Bernard's at the Trajan Pillar.

ON all third Sundays Expoſition of the Hoſt at the Church of the Stigmates, and that of Minerva: Morning and Evening at twenty two o' Clock at St. Marcellus's; at St. Roche's; at that of Death, where are the Prayers of the forty Hours; at Mary Magdalen's Church, and that of St. Jerom of the Slaves.

EVERY fourth Sunday at St. Maria's in Porticu; and at St. Saviour's of the Copelles.

I. Of BAPTISM.

THE Church acknowledges ſeven Sacraments, which Number, according to the Catechiſm of the Council of Trent, is eſtabliſh'd by the Scriptures, by the Tradition of the Fathers, and the Authority of Councils. 'Tis alledg'd, that there ought to be neither more nor leſs than that Number; and the Reaſon given for it, and which we are told is ſufficiently convincing, is the Relation there is between the natural and ſpiritual Life. " Seven Things, ſays the ſame Catechiſm, are naturally neceſſary to " Man: His Birth; Growth; Nouriſhment; the Uſe of Medicines to reſtore him to " Health when decay'd; the Recovering of his Strength when it has been weakened by " any Infirmity; Magiſtrates, who may be inveſted with Authority to govern him; and " laſtly, lawful Procreation, by which he may perpetuate himſelf in ſome meaſure, and " preſerve the human Species. All theſe Particulars are found in the Life which the " Soul receives of God by the Sacraments. By Baptiſm we are born again in Chriſt; " by Confirmation we increaſe in Grace; by the Euchariſt our Souls are nouriſh'd and " ſuſtain'd; by Repentance we recover the Health which we had loſt by the Wounds " which Sin had made in our Souls. Extreme Unction waſhes away the remaining " Impurities of Sin, and recruits the Strength which our Souls had loſt. By the Sacra- " ment of Holy Orders, the Miniſters of the Church receive the Power of adminiſtring " publickly the Sacraments to the People, and of exerciſing all the reſt of the ſacred " Functions of the Miniſtry. Every one knows the End of Marriage. Notwithſtand- " ing, continues this Catechiſm, that each Sacrament comprehends in itſelf a divine and " admirable Virtue, they yet are not all equally neceſſary, nor equal in Dignity——. " Three of them, altho' not equally neceſſary, are nevertheleſs more ſo than the other " four. Thus Baptiſm is abſolutely neceſſary; ſo is Repentance to thoſe who have " fallen into mortal Sin. The Euchariſt ſurpaſſes all the other Sacraments in Excellency, " and is no leſs neceſſary to the Adults than Baptiſm."

THESE Sacraments are accompanied with ſeveral ſolemn and public Ceremonies, which the [a] Church has thought fit to heighten them with, notwithſtanding they are not an eſſential Part of them, ſince they can ſubſiſt without them; however it would be a Sin to omit them, unleſs in Caſes of Neceſſity. Hence it is that the Council of Trent has pronounced Anathema againſt thoſe who ſay that the Miniſters of the Sacraments may, without Sin, deſpiſe, or omit intirely at Pleaſure, the ſeveral Ceremonies received in the Church; or that it is in the Power of every particular Biſhop or Prelate, to change them, or inſtitute new ones. We are aſſured, " That theſe [b] Ceremonies give " us a more ſtrict Idea of, and as it were ſet before our Eyes the Effects which re- " ſult from, theſe Sacraments; and imprint the Sanctity which attends them more ſtrong- " ly on the Minds of the Faithful. They raiſe the Minds of ſuch as obſerve them re- " ligiouſly, to the Contemplation of the moſt exalted Things." In a word, we are aſſured that they excite and increaſe in us a true Faith and Spirit of Charity.

" THE Sacrament of [c] Baptiſm is defined, a Sacrament inſtituted by our Saviour " in order to waſh away Original Sin, and all thoſe actual ones we may have commit-

ANTIENTLY there was no ſtated Time or Age for Baptiſm; it was uſual to baptize on any Day, in a Perſon's Infancy, or a more advanced Age, and very often it was defer'd till the Point of Death. As for the Water employ'd in Baptiſm, 'tis manifeſt that the Apoſtles and their Diſciples uſed to baptize their Neophytes, or New-Converts, with the firſt Water that came in the Way, whereof we have undoubted Teſtimonies in the Scripture. This primitive Simplicity has diſappear'd, and inſenſibly given Way to a Variety of Practices, accompanied with numberleſs Precautions, Formulas, &c. to which the Neceſſity of the Times, the Abuſes it was proper to prevent or repreſs, the Order neceſſary to be obſerv'd in the Church, the Authority of the Prieſts, and even Devotion itſelf, may have equally contributed. The Plainneſs of the Uſe of pure River-Water ſcarce ſuited any but the primitive Times; it was afterwards bleſſed, and to make the Sacrament ſtill more ſolemn, it was added, " That [a] ſuch Water, if poſſible, muſt be " made uſe of in baptizing, as had been bleſſed on Eaſter or Whitſon-Eve of the ſame " Year; which muſt be carefully kept in a very clean Veſſel employ'd for that Pur- " poſe." 'Tis true the ſame Ritual adds, " That in caſe the Water bleſſed and deſign'd " for Baptiſm, ſhould be ſo far ſpent, that there is not enough remaining to ſerve till " Eaſter or Whitſon-Eve, it may be mixed with common Water, provided there always " be a leſs Quantity of the latter."

THE uſe of Baptiſteriums is not of a modern Date, nor yet is it ſo antient, as thoſe would make us believe who give Credit to the [b] pretended Writings of St. Denis the Areopagite, and the Conſtitutions of St Clement. [c] Bede ſomewhere in his Works takes Notice of certain Engliſhmen who were baptized in the Rhine: And the ſame Author, who flouriſhed in the Beginning of the ſeventh Century, ſays farther, that they had no Opportunity of building either Baptiſteriums or Chapels, in the Infancy of the Churches of thoſe Countries. It appears manifeſtly from the Roman Martyrology, that in the Time of St. Marcellus, Pope, the Chriſtians uſed to have Baptiſteriums in their Houſes: And under the Reign of Conſtantine the Great, ſome were erected in Suburbs, and others even in Cities, as is manifeſt from the Teſtimony of cotemporary Writers. 'Tis pretended that in France, the Uſe of Baptiſteriums in Churches began in the Reign of Clovis I. and that a little while after the Council held at Lerida, prohibited the having any out of the Churches; however that be, Gregory the Great relates, that they had been already introduced in his Time. We may preſume they were appointed to be ſet up in Churches, at the ſame Period that the Baptiſm of Chriſtians was fix'd to the Age of Infancy, to prevent the Danger that might happen to new-born Children, from their being too much expos'd to the open Air. Then Fonts were ſet up in every Pariſh, all Rectors thereof having at that Time an equal Right to baptize, as being Miniſters of the Church; tho' it is pretended that in the Infancy of the Church, Biſhops only were inveſted with that Power. There are two Ways of celebrating Baptiſm; by Immerſion, or Ablution; the latter is now uſed, and is performed by pouring Water on the Child's Head.

AFTER the Biſhop, the Pariſh-Rector, the Curate, or any other Prieſt appointed by the Biſhop, may lawfully adminiſter Baptiſm: [d] Formerly the Monks were entirely excluded from this Right; [e] both Monks and Nuns are ſtill prohibited from preſenting any Children to be baptiz'd. In Caſes of urgent Neceſſity a Layman may adminiſter this Sacrament, as alſo Women, who in certain Caſes are prefer'd to Men; and this is when [a] a Child muſt be baptized before it is intirely come out of the Mother's Womb; upon which it may be proper to make the following Obſervations. Some Part of its Body muſt appear before it can be baptized, and 'tis baptized on that Part; on its Head, if that appear firſt, in which caſe the Rituals ſay that 'tis not neceſſary to re-baptize the Child; but if only a Foot, or Hand appears, or ſome other Part of the Body, which, by its Motion, gives ſome Tokens of Life, it muſt be baptized on that Part, upon Condition however that it be re-baptized [b] after it comes out of the Womb. A Child that that is ſtill-born, after having been baptized in this Manner, may without any Scruple, be buried in conſecrated Ground.

A MONSTER, or Creature that has not the human Form, muſt not be baptized; if it be doubted whether it be a human Creature, it is baptized conditionally, thus, If thou art a Man I baptize thee, &c. If the Monſter has more than one Head or Breaſt, it is taken for granted, that it is more than one Perſon; on which Occaſion each of the Perſons is baptized ſeparately. We meet with ſeveral Particulars on this Head in the Rituals.

THE Godfathers and Godmothers "repreſent the [c] Church which offers the Child "to Chriſt to baptize and give it a new Birth, as in reality he does by the Miniſtry of "the Prieſt. They pronounce their Confeſſion of Faith in the Child's Name, in which "they anſwer and promiſe that he ſhall acquit himſelf faithfully of the ſeveral Obligations to which he is engaged by his Baptiſm."

THE Catholic Church does not admit for Godfathers or Godmothers, either Heretics, Infidels, excommunicated Perſons, or known Sinners, who lead infamous Lives; or ſuch as are not in their Senſes, or are unacquainted with the firſt Principles of Religion, ſuppoſing them known for ſuch; nor Children, or Perſons under fourteen Years of Age. It is certain that all ſuch as are in the Circumſtances above-mentioned, are unable to perform the Things required by the Church. The Rituals add, that as a ſpiritual Alliance is contracted between the Godfather and his Goddaughter, and between the Godmother and her Godſon, they are not allowed to marry together, nor even the Godfather with his Godſon's Mother, nor the Godmother with her Godſon's Father. The Rituals add farther, that an Alliance is contracted between the Perſon who baptizes and the Perſon baptized; as if a Layman ſhould baptize a Female Child in a Caſe of Neceſſity, he is not allowed to marry either her or her Mother. Antiently it was cuſtomary to write in a kind of [d] Regiſter, the Names of ſuch as were Candidates for Baptiſm. As the very [e] Name of Godfathers denoted the Duty whereof they were to acquit themſelves towards thoſe who were to be baptized, it cannot be doubted but that they are of great Antiquity in the Church. In former Times adult Perſons had Sponſors as well as Children, and the ſame Cuſtom is ſtill obſerved in the baptizing of an Infidel.

THE Cuſtom likewiſe of giving a Name to the Perſon baptized is alſo of great Antiquity; but we are not ſo certain that it is founded on the ſpiritual Regeneration in Chriſt Jeſus. This myſterious Alluſion may perhaps ſtand good with regard to the Baptiſm of grown Perſons; but as for Infants, the ſame Cuſtom was obſerved by the [f] Greeks and Romans, who uſed to name their Children a little Time after they were born.

[e] They were call'd Sponſores and Suſceptores.

[f] This Ceremony was uſually perform'd the ſeventh Day among the Greeks; nevertheleſs the Athenians never uſed to name the Child till the tenth Day after its Birth, when it was cuſtomary to have an Entertainment, as among us at Chriſtenings. In the Time of the Emperor Antoninus the Philoſopher, Children uſed to be named three Days after their Birth, agreeable to that Emperor's Order; whereas before, the Romans uſed to perform this Ceremony on the eighth Day when it was a Girl, and the ninth when a Male Child; and theſe Days were call'd Luſtrici Dies.

IT would be needleſs to take notice of the ſeveral Particulars which the Prieſt who is to baptize the Child muſt obſerve before he performs that Ceremony; as for inſtance, in what Manner he muſt addreſs himſelf to Heaven, waſh his Hands, put on the Surplice, take the Purple Stole, and how, thus clothed and attended by his Clerks, he walks towards the Church, at the Door of which thoſe who bring the Child muſt wait for him. The moſt eſſential Part of the Ceremony is as follows: He firſt asks the Godfather and Godmother what Child they preſent to the Church? whether or no they are its true Godfather and Godmother? if they are reſolved to live and die in the true Catholic and Apoſtolic Faith? and what Name they intend to give it? All profane Names, as thoſe of the Heathens and their Gods, muſt be rejected; nevertheleſs thoſe of Hercules, Hannibal, Achilles, Urania, Diana, &c. are common enough, but thoſe of the old Teſtament are much leſs ſo: But the Proteſtants, who are very little ſcrupulous on this Head, never reject them; and to ſpeak the Truth, are not the Saints of the Jewiſh Covenant as much ſuch as thoſe of the Chriſtian Church, whoſe Names only are ordered to be choſen? A Prieſt is authorized to change the Name of a Child who had been baptized [a] Abraham, Iſaac, or Jacob, by a Proteſtant Miniſter. After the uſual Queſtions have been aſked, the Prieſt makes an Exhortation to the Godfather and Godmother, with regard to the Devotion which ought to accompany the whole Performance. The Exhortation being ended, the Prieſt continues the Ceremony, and calling the Child by the Name that is to be given it, aſks it as follows: What doſt thou demand of the Church? To which the Godfather anſwers, Faith. The Prieſt adds, What is the Fruit of Faith? The Godfather anſwers, Eternal Life. The Prieſt goes on, If you are deſirous of obtaining eternal Life, keep God's Commandments; thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy Heart, &c. After which he breathes three Times upon the Child's Face, but muſt obſerve not to let the Child breathe upon him; and at the ſame Time ſays, Come out of this Child thou evil Spirit, and make room for the Holy Ghoſt. This being done, with the Thumb of his Right Hand he makes a Croſs on the Child's Forehead, and afterwards another on its Breaſt, pronouncing theſe Words, Receive the Sign of the Croſs on thy Forehead, and in thine Heart, &c. Whereupon he takes off his Cap, repeats a ſhort Prayer, and laying his Hand gently on the Child's Head, prays for him a ſecond Time. This ſecond Prayer being ended, the Prieſt bleſſes the Salt in caſe it was not bleſſed before; which being done, he takes a little of it, puts it into the Child's Mouth, pronouncing theſe Words, Receive the Salt of Wiſdom; he then repeats a third Prayer, after which he puts on his Cap, and exorciſes the Prince of Darkneſs, commanding him to come forth out of him who is going to be baptized, &c. and that at the End of the Exorciſm he again makes the Sign of the Croſs on the Child's Forehead, lays his Hand on its Head, and repeats another Prayer.

AFTER this fourth Prayer the Prieſt lays the End of the Stole upon the Child, and taking hold of his ſwaddling Clothes by one Corner, he brings it into the Church; the Godfather and Godmother enter in at the ſame Time, and repeat with the Prieſt the Apoſtles Creed and the Lord's Prayer, as the advance towards the Font. Being come to the Font, the Prieſt exorciſes the Devil once again, and after the Exorciſm takes the Saliva from his Mouth, with the Thumb of his Right Hand; and with this Saliva rubs the Child's Ears and Noſtrils, and as he touches his Right Ear, repeats a Hebrew Word, which ſignifies Do thou open; the ſame our Saviour ſaid to the Man who was born Deaf and Dumb: We are therefore to ſuppoſe that the Child who is going to be baptized is as yet deaf and dumb. Laſtly, the Aſſiſtants pull off its ſwaddling Clothes, or at leaſt ſtrip it below the Shoulders; during which the Prieſt prepares the Holy Oils, &c.

[a] Benſerade had like to have had his Chriſtian Name, which was Iſaac, chang'd, when the Biſhop confirm'd him; but a witty Flight of his prevented it: For when they were for changing his former Name, and giving him another, he ask'd them, What they would give him over and above the Bargain? Which made the Biſhop ſmile, and leave him his former Name.

THE Godfather either takes the Child ready ſtripp'd, or ſtrips it the Manner above-mentioned, and holds it directly over the Font; the [a] Godmother takes it by the Feet, they both obſerving to turn it towards the Eaſt: Whereupon the Prieſt asks the Child, Whether he renounces the Devil and all his Works, the Pomps, &c. The Godfather anſwers in the Affirmative. This [b] Renunciation uſed formerly to be made without the Church. The Prieſt anoints the Child between the Shoulders in the Form of a Croſs, and after that lays aſide his Purple Stole, and puts on a white one; when the Child is again queſtion'd with reſpect to his Belief, to which the Godfather makes ſuitable Anſwers in his Name. Theſe long Preliminaries being ended, the Prieſt takes ſome of the Baptiſmal Water, which he pours thrice on the Child's Head in the Form of a Croſs, and as he pours it ſays, I baptize, &c. taking care to mention one of the Perſons in the Trinity every Time he pours it on. This being done, he anoints the Top of the Child's Head with the Chriſma in Form of a Croſs, lays a [c] Piece of white Linen upon his Head, to repreſent the white Garment mentioned in Scripture, and puts into the Child's Hand, or rather into that of the Godfather, a lighted Taper, the Signification of which is eaſily underſtood. Such are the Ceremonies of Baptiſm, which the Prieſt concludes with an Exhortation; but if the Child's Life is in Danger, theſe Ceremonies are omitted, but upon Condition that they ſhall be obſerved in caſe he recovers his Health; but if he has all the Symptoms of Death upon him, ſo that it would be to no Purpoſe to wait for the Prieſt, then the Midwife baptizes the Child in the Manner repreſented in the Plate hereunto annexed.

ADULT Perſons muſt, if poſſible, be baptized by the Biſhop himſelf; and the moſt proper Time for this Ceremony is Eaſter or Whitſon-Eve, which are the Days appointed for Baptiſm by the antient Church. [d] The Miniſter who baptizes, and the Candidate for Baptiſm, muſt both be faſting. There is but very little Difference between the Ceremony of the Baptiſm of Catechumens and that of Children. The Prieſt ſigns the Catechumen ſeveral Times with the Sign of the Croſs; firſt on the Forehead, which implies that he muſt take upon himſelf the Croſs of Chriſt; on the Ears, in order that he may open them to the divine Precepts of the Goſpel; on the Eyes, that he may ſee the Light of God; on the Noſtrils, that he may ſmell the fragrant Odour of Chriſt; on the Mouth, that he may utter the Words of Life; on the Breaſt, that he may believe; on the Shoulders, to the End that he may bear the Yoke of the Lord. All the preceding Signs of the Croſs are concluded by three more, which he makes over the whole Perſons of the Catechumen.

THE Godfather and Godmother conduct the Catechumen to the Font, after he has been introduced, exorciſed, interrogated, his Ears and Noſtrils rubbed with Saliva before he is admitted to Baptiſm, and been anointed in the Form of a Croſs with the Oil of the Catechumens. The Catechumen muſt put off Part of his Clothes, to denote his being diveſted of Sin.

HERE follow ſome Remarks borrowed from Miſſon, [e] which alſo relate to the Baptiſm of the Catechumens. "The Ceremony of the Baptiſm of the Jews, and other "In-

[e] Vide his Voyage to Italy, Vol. II. Edition of 1702. We ſhall here add the ſingular Circumſtances which are obſerved at Chriſtenings by the Venetians: When a Father has a Child to be chriſtned, he firſt goes and invites the Godfathers; the meaneſt Plebeian has three at leaſt, who preſent themſelves; the Wealthy have twenty, and ſometimes above an hundred. The Goſſips all croud to Church together, among whom the Father chuſes one to name the

" Infidels, is celebra:ed at Rome in the Church of St. John of Lateran, where we are " told Conſtantine the Great was baptized. We ſaw ſix Turks baptiz'd there; they " were dreſs'd in white Damask Clothes, with a Cloke, a Lawn Band, and a Silver " Croſs hanging at their Necks. A Cardinal, accompanied with the Prebends of St. " John's of Lateran, being come thither, the Ceremony of conſecrating the Water was " firſt performed; which being done, the Proſelytes being preſented by their God- " fathers, advanced forward one by one, declaring their Deſire of being admitted to " Baptiſm. Then they lean'd on the Font, when the Cardinal baptized them, and " named them, pouring Water on their Hands with a large Silver Spoon: This being " done, they each took a lighted Taper, and were confirmed in a Chapel of the Bap- " tiſterium; after which they went and heard Maſs in the Church of St. John of La- " teran."

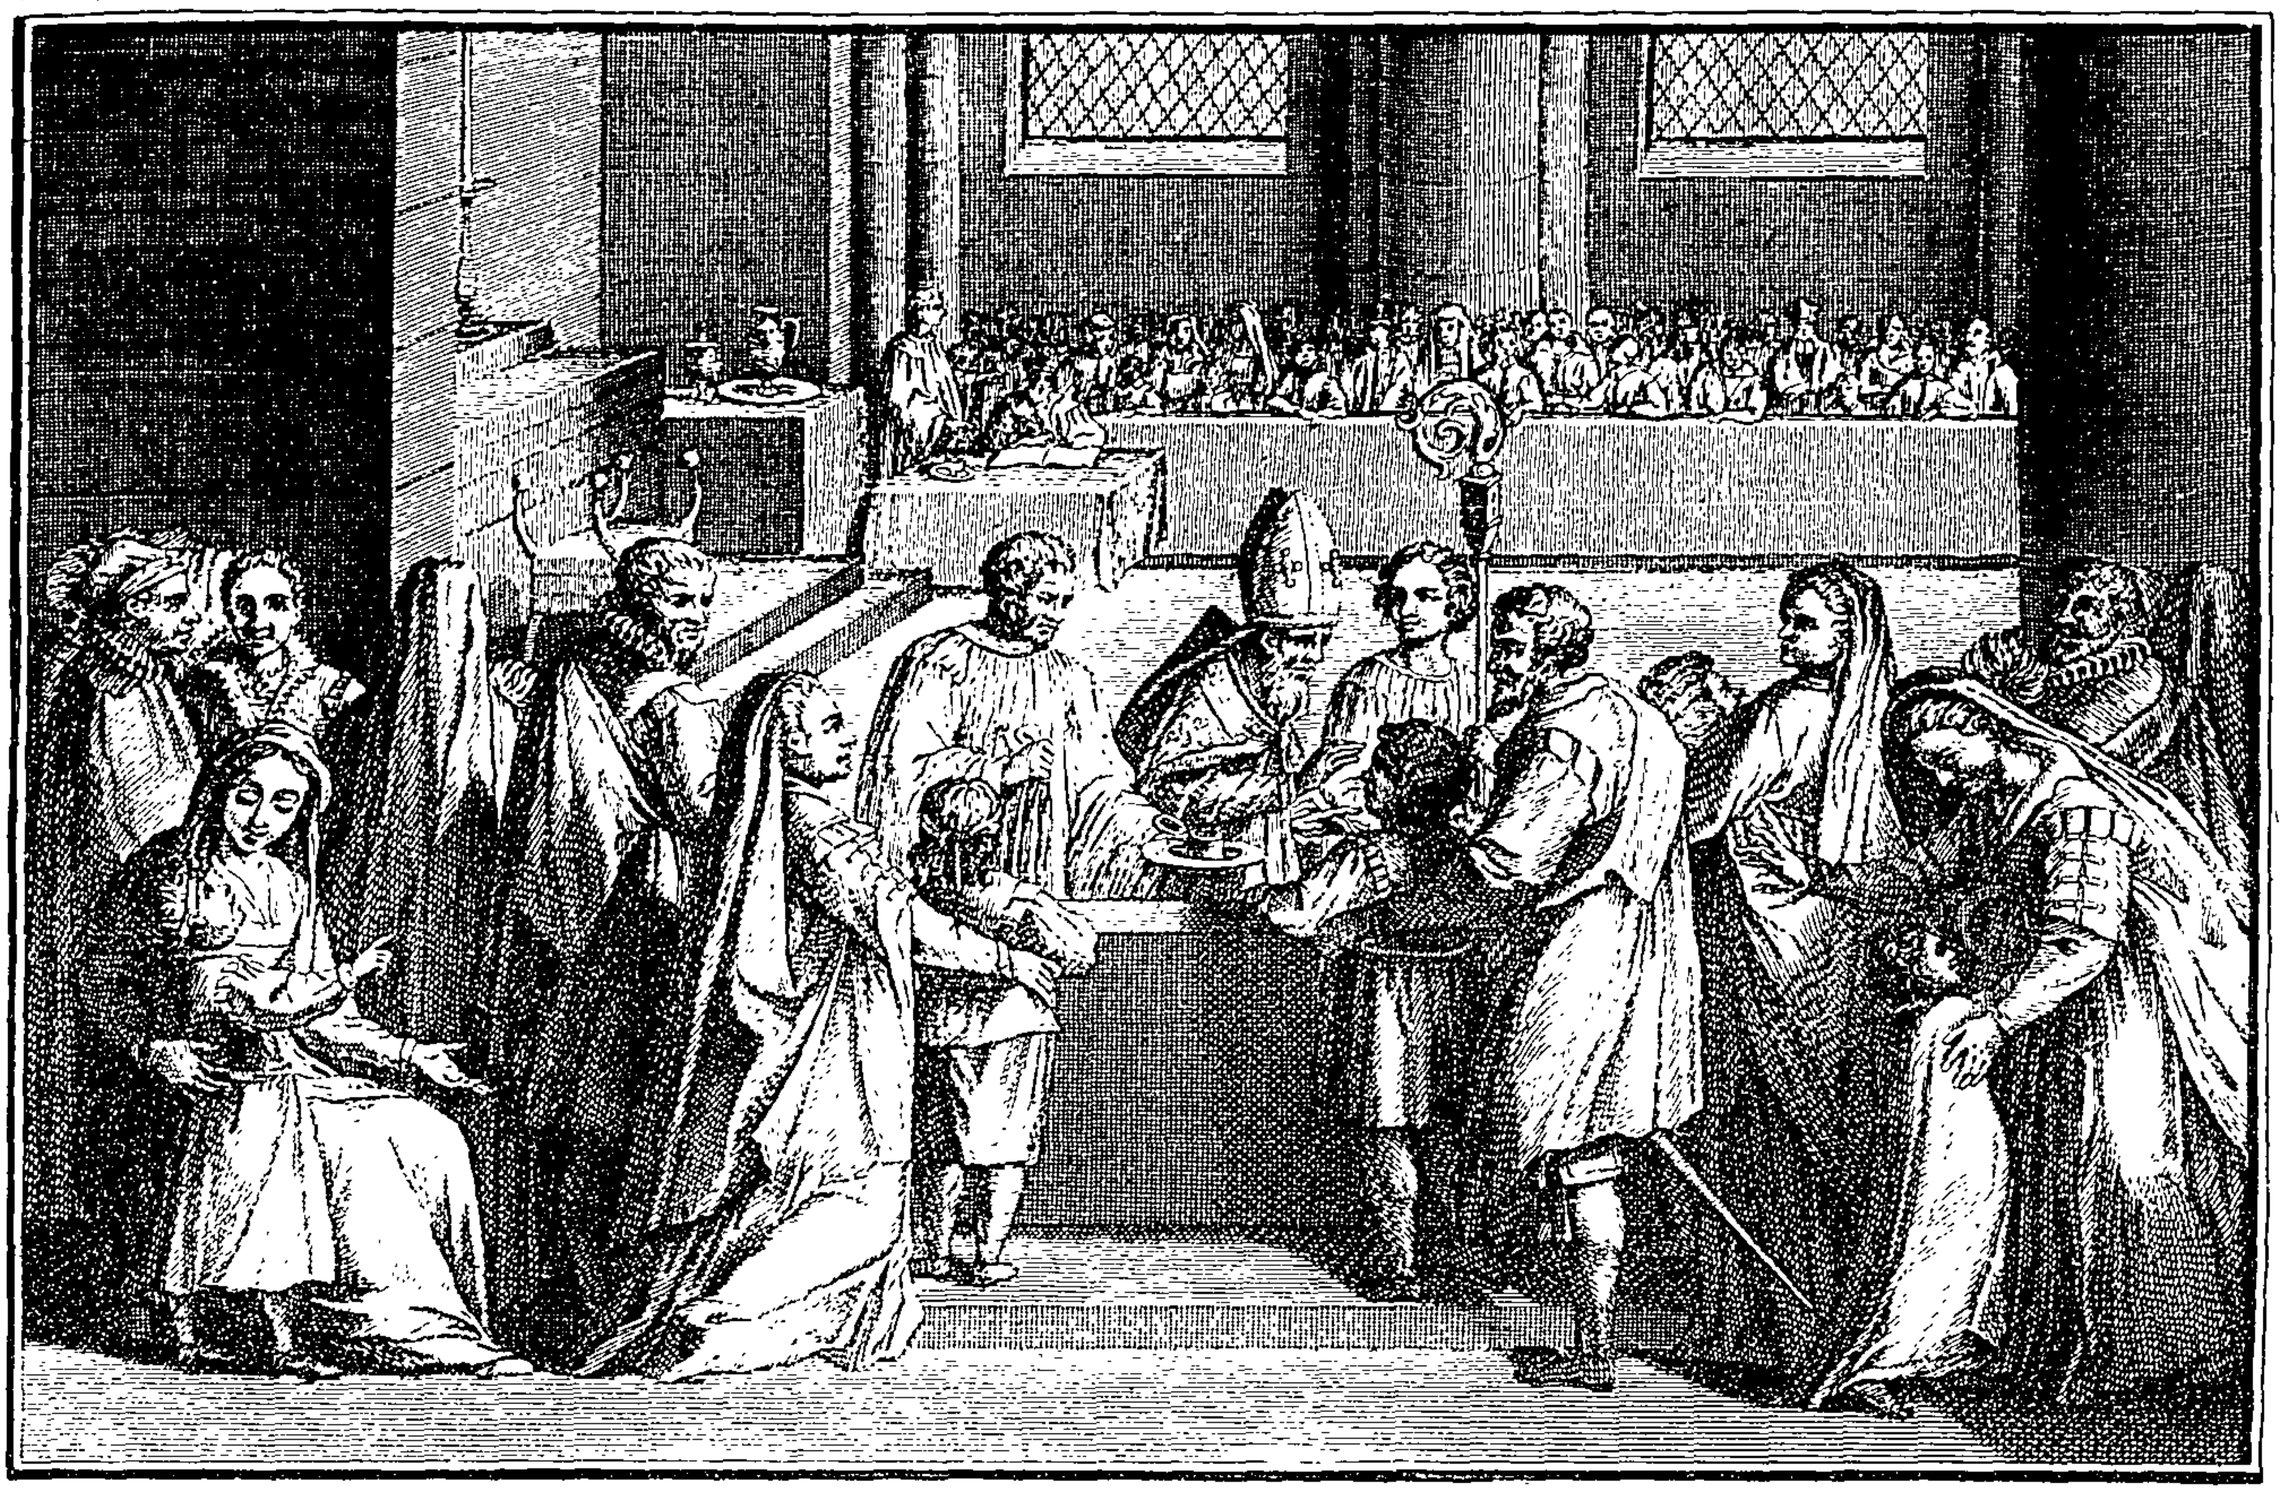
THE Ceremonies of Baptiſm are founded on ſeveral antient Cuſtoms, ſome where- of were practiſed in the Apoſtolic Ages. One of theſe laſt is the Confeſſion of Faith before Baptiſm, whereof we have ſome Inſtances in the New Teſtament. That of touching the Ears and Noſtrils with Saliva is of a more modern Date; we neverthe- leſs meet with it in the Works of St. Ambroſe. Exorciſm is founded on ſome Paſſages in which our Saviour ſays to his Diſciples, that they ſhall caſt out Devils in his Name: And this was practiſed in St. Chryſoſtom's Time. The lighted Taper which is given in- to the Hands of the Catechumen, is perhaps of later Inſtitution; but 'tis not ſo with Regard to the Sign of the Croſs. As for the baptiſmal Unctions, if they had no other Proofs than the Conſtitutions of the Pſeudo St. Clement, and the ſpurious Writings aſ- cribed to St. Denis the Areopagite, their Antiquity would be very much ſuſpected.

BAPTISM by Ablution or Aſperſion was not known in the firſt Century of the Church, when Immerſion was only uſed; and 'tis ſaid it continued ſo till St. Gregory's Time. The white Veſtment given to the Catechumens is much more antient than this Pope; this the Catechumens uſed to wear for ſeven Days immediately following their Baptiſm, and laid it aſide on the eighth. We are told that theſe ſeven Days denoted the ſeven Gifts which the Holy Ghoſt communicates in Baptiſm.



II. CONFIRMATION.

SOME think the Origin of the Sacrament of Confirmation is found in the eighth Chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles; [a] the Biſhop only is allow'd to Confirm; it ought to be done on Whitſunday, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt then deſcended on the Apoſtles. That of ſeven Years is the ſtated Age for Confirmation; however it is ſometimes confer- red before, and frequently after that Age; but this is left to the Biſhop. The Perſon to be confirmed has a Godfather and Godmother appointed him, as in Baptiſm. We ſhall not take Notice of the Ornaments, and Preparations neceſſary for Confirmation, but proceed to the Ceremony itſelf.

the Child. No Entertainment is made after the Ceremony, as in moſt other Countries, but four Sugar Loaves are generally ſent to each Goſſip. The Goſſips range themſelves in a Semi-circular Form from the Church Door to the Font; and at the chriſtning of a Tradeſman's Child, they give the Child from one to another, till it is gone quite round. The Child is dreſs'd up like a Doll in Swathes made of Silk, fine Lace, &c. The Manner in which the Child is carried to Church, and brought back from thence, is alſo particular; a Man carries the Babe on a Velvet Cuſhion, who is dreſs'd in very neat ſwaddling Clothes, but has nothing over him; his Head and Shoulders are quite bare. THE Candidates for Confirmation [a] muſt, if poſſible, be faſting, and conſequently receive this Sacrament in the Morning, becauſe it was at that Time of the Day the Holy Ghoſt deſcended on the Apoſtles. The Biſhop, before he begins the Confirmation, falls to his private Devotions, waſhes his Hands, puts on the white Ornaments; after which he turns himſelf about to the Candidates, who ſtand in the ſame Order as at Baptiſm, viz. the Boys on the Right, and the Girls on the Left. He next repeats a Prayer, which being done he ſits down, when the Candidates kneel before him in the Manner deſcribed in the ſecond Compartment of the Print. If the Candidates for Confirmation are very numerous, the Biſhop ſtands up, and the Candidates ſtand on the Steps of the Chancel of the Altar, [b] and muſt be ſupported under the Arm by their Godfathers, particularly Children; for as [c] to adult Perſons, their Godfathers only put one of their Feet forward, for the Candidates to ſupport themſelves by as it were. The Biſhop asks the Name of each Candidate, and has them regiſtred, after which he dips the Thumb of his Right Hand into the Chriſma, and therewith makes the Sign of the Croſs upon their Foreheads, and at the ſame Time gives a gentle Blow on the Cheek to the Perſon confirmed, ſaying at the ſame Time, Peace be with you. Immediately after the Forehead of the Perſon confirmed is bound with a Slip of Linen about the Breadth of two Fingers; then the Biſhop ſays unto him, [d] I confirm you by the [e] Chriſma of Salvation, in the Name of the Father, &c. the Ceremony ends with the Bleſſing of the Perſons confirm'd, which is done by the Biſhop, who makes the Sign of the Croſs upon them. All the Ceremonies above-mentioned are exactly exhibited in the two Compartments of the Copper Plate.

THE little Blow which the Biſhop gives the Perſon confirm'd, on the Cheek, denotes to him, that the Suffering for [f] Chriſt Jeſus is the Sum Total of Chriſtian Perfection; but it may rather be ſaid, that 'tis a Mark of ſpiritual Enfranchiſement; for the antient Romans, from whom this Cuſtom was certainly borrow'd, uſed to manumiſe their Slaves, by giving them a Box on the Ear, probably to denote that that was the laſt Time they would be uſed as Slaves. The Chriſma is laid on the Forehead, [g] that being the Seat of Confidence, Fear, Shame, &c. Altho' ſuch Explications as theſe are fit only for the Pulpit, yet who can be ſo blind as not to perceive the ſalutary Reflections they excite in the Mind? By applying the Chriſma to the Forehead, we are taught that we are to defend the Croſs of our Lord with Boldneſs and Courage; that we muſt dread offending him; tremble continually for fear we ſhould be wanting in the Duties of Religion; not be aſhamed of bearing the Croſs of Chriſt; or if we will bluſh, or be aſhamed, that it ſhall be for the Sins and Diſorders of Mankind. The Godfather's ſupporting the Candidate, denotes that thoſe who have not yet been confirm'd, are weak Aſſertors of Chriſtianity.

III. SACRAMENT of the EUCHARIST.

IN former Times all Catechumens, immediately after their Baptiſm, were admitted to the Communion, agreeable to the Order of the Sacraments; for Baptiſm repreſents Regeneration; Confirmation Strength, or rather the Spiritual Vigour of Chriſtians; and the Euchariſt their Spiritual Nouriſhment. 'Tis not our Buſineſs to give an Explication of this Sacrament in this Place, nor to enter into a Controverſy upon that Head; for we confine ourſelves to the bare Deſcription thereof. The Prieſt is the ſole Miniſter impower'd to conſecrate the Hoſt, and the reſt of the Miniſters of the Church are allow'd [a] only to prepare the Things neceſſary for this Sacrament; [b] he alſo has the Privilege of communicating under both Kinds; whereas the Laity communicate only under one; and we are told that this Cuſtom was introduced, in order to prevent certain Accidents, which degraded the Dignity of the Sacrament. One of theſe was, the overgrown Whiskers and [c] Beards of ſome who received, which, as they ſometimes reached into the Cup, wherein the Blood of our Lord was contained, might by that Means make ſome good Chriſtians ſick at the [d] Stomach. A Proteſtant Writer dates the Time of the taking away the Cup from the People, in the Middle of the thirteenth Century; but he tells us, "That this Decree was not received without ſome Struggle; inſo-
"much that ſeveral Churches long retained the receiving under both Kinds as abſolute-
"ly neceſſary. However, in order to ſatisfy —— the People, a Cuſtom was introduced
"of giving them Wine to rinſe their Mouths ——. And indeed the taking the Cup
"from the Laity was not fully enjoined till a Decree of the Council of Conſtance was "made for that Purpoſe in 1414." at leaſt it then firſt had the Force of a Law. We ſhall only make this tranſient Remark, that the Church ſeems to have a Power of either changing or leſſening the Signs of a Sacrament, without doing any Prejudice thereby to Faith, or the Eſſence of the Sacrament. Were we always obliged to follow the literal Senſe, the Sacraments would not be the only Things in which we ſhould deviate from the written Injunctions of the Holy Scriptures.

EVERY Chriſtian ought to communicate at leaſt every Chriſtmas, Eaſter, Whitſontide, and Twelfth-tide, the Day of Vocation among the Heathens; but every good one ſhould, beſides the Seaſons above-mentioned, receive on Corpus Chriſti Day, All Saints, the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin, the Feſtival of the Patron, and the Anniverſary of his Baptiſm. They muſt receive faſting, and be dreſſed in ſuch a Manner as beſt ſuits the Chriſtian Simplicity: Such Devotees, however, as are converſant in the Polite World, and ſtudious to heighten all their Acts of Devotion with Grace and Delicacy, know how to ſet off that Modeſty which ſhould always accompany a Communicant, with an agreeable and eaſy Air. The firſt of the two [e] Compartments are infinitely more expreſſive than any Thing we can ſay on this Head.

[a] Alet's Ritual.

[b] This Practice was confirmed by a Decree of the Council of Conſtance, as we find in Mr. l'Enfant's Hiſtory thereof. —— Notwithſtanding that in the Primitive Times, the Sacrament of the Euchariſt was received by the Faithful under both Kinds; nevertheleſs to avoid certain Accidents of dangerous Conſequence, it had been much more juſtly lawful to introduce this Cuſtom, which accordingly has been introduced, viz. That the Sacrament ſhould be received under both Kinds by the officiateing Prieſts; and under one Kind only, viz. the Bread, by the Laity. The above-mentioned Hiſtorian relates two of theſe Accidents, viz. the firſt, for fear the Blood ſhould happen to be ſpilt; the other, that of Unbelief, becauſe it might otherwiſe be thought that our Saviour could not be whole and entire, in the Bread, as he really is. Laſtly, a Miracle (of the Truth whereof we have the Teſtimony of Alexander de Hale's) confirmed in the latter Ages the Neceſſity of receiving under one Kind.

COMMUNION.

La COMMUNION.

The VIATICUM.

Le VIATICUM.

THE Prieſts who preſent themſelves to the Communion, receive immediately after the Deacon and Sub-deacon, before any other Perſon; and theſe muſt have a white Stole over the Surplice. The Miniſters who ſerve at the Altar, communicate in the Habits of their reſpective Orders; but the Acolytes and other Clerks receive in their Surplices. After this the officiating Prieſt goes down to the Rails, in order to adminiſter the Sacrament to the Laity; obſerving to begin by the Perſon who ſtands firſt on the Epiſtle Side, and makes the Sign of the Croſs with the Hoſt on the Perſon that is to receive, obſerving not to take his Hand away till ſuch Time as the Hoſt is entirely in the Mouth of the Perſon receiving. We ſhall not take Notice either of the Prayers, or ſeveral other Particulars, mentioned in the Rituals; the Reader will have a more lively Image of the Communion by viewing the Plate.

IF in Adminiſtering the Hoſt, or conſecrated Wafer, the ſmalleſt Bit of it ſhould happen to fall on the Ground, it muſt be taken up in the moſt reſpectful [a] Manner; the Place on which it fell muſt be covered, for fear of treading upon the leaſt Particle of it: They muſt afterwards ſcrape the Floor, and [b] throw the Shavings into the Sacriſty, and waſh the Place very clean: If it ſhould happen to fall upon the Napkin, or the Veil, &c. ſuch Part of it muſt be waſhed, and the Water thrown into the Sacriſty; if on the [c] Veſtments of the officiating Prieſt, the Part muſt be obſerved, and afterwards waſhed. If any little Worms or Maggots ſhould be found in the Pyx, ſays the Italian Explicator of Myſteries, breeding in the Wafers; or if any Pieces of Wafers ſhould happen to be muſty; in a word, if there be found the leaſt Filth in any Part of it, the Whole muſt be burnt, and the Aſhes thereof thrown into the Sink, called Piſcina, deſigned for that Uſe.

[d] NUNS uſually receive in the Parlour, for which Purpoſe a ſilken Veil, a very clean Napkin, and a Corporal to ſet the Pyx upon, muſt be got ready; ſeveral lighted Tapers muſt be placed to the Right and Left, and a Carpet on the Floor. The Prieſt, having the Stole, &c. on, carries the Hoſt to the Nuns, the Acolytes walking before with their Tapers in their Hands: After this he adores the Hoſt, the Religious repeat the Confeſſion, and he kneels down, &c. as uſual: He diſtributes juſt as many Wafers as there are Nuns to receive; and laſtly, gives them his Bleſſing.

IF ever ſo little a Bit of the Hoſt ſhould happen to fall within the Parlour, a Nun ſhall take it up, and lay it on the Paten, or on a Piece of very clean white Paper, in Order to give it to the officiating Prieſt through the Grate. The Place where it fell ſhall be taken Notice of, for fear it ſhould be trod upon. After the Communion is ended, the Nuns ſcrape this Place with the utmoſt Care, and even lick it, and caſt the Shavings into the Sink or Piſcina.

AFTER the Aſſembly have received the Communion from the Hands of the Prieſt, they go away, but obſerve as they go, to paſs before the Tables, which are ſet one againſt the other End-ways, as we ſee in the Plate repreſenting the Communion. On theſe Tables ſeveral Silver Baſons are ſet, filled with various Sorts of Relics, and theſe the Prieſt preſents the Communicants to [e] kiſs; which being done, they throw a Piece of Silver into the Baſon.

[e] This Cuſtom is not obſerved in all Roman Catholic Countries, nor upon all Occaſions alike. It ſeems to be a Practice only allowed to poor Pariſh Churches, or Mendicant Orders of Spain and Italy, &c.

Now

Now we are upon this Ceremony, we cannot omit mentioning their Offerings, and Bleſt Bread. We have already taken ſome Notice of the former, and ſhall now quote the Ritual of Alet, a Work juſtly eſteemed by ſuch as are Judges of thoſe Matters. " Offerings were firſt invented to ſhew that we join in Communion with the Body " of Jeſus Chriſt and the Church ——; for which Reaſon thoſe who go to the Offer- " ing are preſented with the Pax to kiſs; —— but in Proceſs of Time the Bread, which " was before offered as a Token of this Communion, was changed into Money." The Ritual aſcribes three Reaſons for this Change, whereof the Principal is, that this Money goes towards the Prieſt's Subſiſtence.

GOOD Chriſtians are enjoined to preſent ſomething to God at Maſs; "for which " Reaſon the People muſt be excited to go to the Offering, as being a Ceremony " founded on Apoſtolical Tradition."—— However, the Church excludes from it all Catechumens; ſuch as are in a State of Penitence; all excommunicated Perſons, and thoſe who lie under an Interdict.

" THE Offering is made after the Goſpel, and the Apoſtles Creed, while the Offer- " tory is ſung —: For this Purpoſe the officiating Prieſt goes down to the loweſt Steps " of the Altar, —— with the Deacon and Sub-deacon; after which they all three go to- " gether to the Door of the Rail, when the Deacon placing himſelf to the Right Hand " of the officiating Prieſt, preſents him with the Pax, or Inſtrument of Peace; or in " ſome Places, with a Crucifix. Each Man comes forward according to his Rank; " firſt, the greateſt Perſons of Diſtinction; and laſtly, the common People: And, in " Order to avoid Confuſion, they advance on the Goſpel Side; after having ſaluted the " Altar and the Prieſt, they kiſs the Pax, then throw their Offerings into the Baſon, " and at laſt return back on the Epiſtle Side."

The BLEST BREAD.

WE are told in the Ritual above-mentioned, "That the Church uſed to bleſs Bread from Time immemorial, in the ſame Manner as ſhe bleſſed all Things that are " fitting for the Nouriſhment and other Uſes of Mankind; and we may affirm that this " Cuſtom owes its Riſe to Apoſtolical Tradition." It muſt indeed be own'd that ſome Paſſages in the New Teſtament mention Communion, and the Breaking of Bread: " But, continues the ſame Ritual, we don't find that Bread, as now bleſt in the Church " in order to be diſtributed among the Communicants, is of ſo great Antiquity; or that " the Fathers of the Church make any Mention of it. The Word Eulogy, employ'd " by them, does not ſignify Bleſt Bread in particular, but all Kinds of Preſents which " Chriſtians uſed to make one another, as a Teſtimony of their Love and Friendſhip, " although theſe Preſents were not conſecrated.". Cardinal [a] Bona obſerves that Eulogy was a Kind of Communion; and indeed antiently the Prieſt, after Maſs was ended, uſed to diſtribute what Bread remain'd after Conſecration to thoſe who had not an Opportunity of communicating, or had neglected to prepare themſelves for it: However, theſe Eulogies were never given but to ſuch only as were intitled to receive it duly prepared; but they were not given either to Catechumens, or impertinent Sinners. Theſe Eulogies, or Scraps of Bleſt Bread, were to be eat in the Church. In fine, Cardinal Bona is of Opinion, that this Bread owes its Inſtitution to the frequent Communion of Chriſtians in the firſt Ages of the Church. Afterwards a Cuſtom inſenſibly took Place of preſenting it alſo to thoſe who had communicated, and this is the Origin of Bleſt Bread, which for that Reaſon was called the [b] Vicar of the Communion. Cardinal

[a] Rerum Liturg. Lib. ii. Cap. xix. § 7.
[b] Alet's Ritual.

Bona

Bona is likewiſe of Opinion, that the Fathers of the ſecond Century were not acquainted with theſe Eulogies. Biſhop Alet tells us in his Ritual, that in the primitive Church the Euchariſt often went by the Name of Eulogy; and that 'tis in this Senſe we muſt take that Word, when mentioned in a Canon of the Council of Laodicea, held a little before that of Nice. This Canon forbids the ſending of Holy Things, i. e. according to that Biſhop, the Euchariſt, as the Eulogies into other Pariſhes.

When Bleſt Bread, if eaten in the Spirit of the Church, i. e. in a Spirit of Union and [a] Charity, "waſhes out all venial Sins by the religious Affections or Impulſes it excites in thoſe who eat of it, it may even have the Power, by the Virtue of the "Prayers of the Church, to caſt out Devils, and heal bodily Diſeaſes."

The Pariſh Prieſt performs the Ceremony of bleſſing this Bread on all Sundays and high Feſtivals in the Year. Such Inhabitants of a Pariſh as are of Diſtinction, and at the Head of a Family, or even the Ladies, give it in their Turns; and this is called preſenting the Bleſt Bread. This Bread is ſtuck full of Tapers, and exhibited with great Solemnity, as we ſee it ſet forth in the Copper Plate, under that of the Ceremony of giving the Aſhes. The Ceremony of offering the Bread being ended, the Prieſt gives the Perſon who offered it the Paten to kiſs, who at the ſame Time preſents his Oblation. Theſe are the moſt remarkable Circumſtances in the Manner of offering this Bread. As to the Manner of conſecrating it, 'tis as follows: [b] The Prieſt having ſaid the Offertory, a Clerk takes the Bread from the Perſon who preſents it, and gives it to the Sub-deacon, if there be one in Office, in Order to have it conſecrated by the Prieſt, who being in a ſtanding Poſture before the Altar, and uncover'd, repeats a Prayer, at the ſame Time making a Croſs over the Bread, and afterwards ſprinkles it with Holy Water. After this an Acolyte cuts it into ſeveral Pieces of equal Bigneſs, and diſtributes it among the Pariſhioners; which is done after the Communion. It is not lawful to ſell bleſt Bread; for which Reaſon no more muſt be bleſt than what is juſt ſufficient for the Diſtributions, and if there be any Over-plus it muſt be given to the Poor.

The Viaticum, or Communion of Perſons at the Point of Death

THE Bleſſed Sacrament is adminiſter'd as a Viaticum, or Proviſion for a Journey, to thoſe whoſe Life is in Danger. The ſick Perſon muſt receive it faſting, provided he can do it with Safety; but if he is not able to receive, it muſt not be carried to him. If the ſick Perſon is not able to [c] ſwallow the whole Wafer, a Piece of it may be

[b] Idem.
[c] We find the following in an Old Homily: There was an Earl of Venice called Syr Ambright, that loved the Sacrament of the Awter paſſing Well, and did it all the Worſhyp and Reverence that he might; ſo when he lay ſick, and ſhould die, he might not receive the Sacrament for caſtyng (Fear of caſting it up;) then was he ſorry, and made Dole; and then he let make clean his Right Syde, and to cover it with a fayr Clothe of Serdall, and layd God's Body therein, and ſayd thus to the Hoſt: "Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee with all my Heart, and would "fayne receive thee with my Mouth and I durſt; and becauſe I may not, I lay thee on the Place that is next to my "Heart, and ſo I ſhew thee all the Love of my Heart that I can or may; wherefore, I beſeech thee, good Lord, "have Mercy on me." And even therewith, in the Sight of all the People that were about him, his Syde opened, and the Hoſt went there into his Syde, and then it cloſed again; and ſo anon after he dyed. Feſtival in Die Corp. Chriſti, Fol. 52.

The curious Incident following is alſo related in the above-cited Homily: In Devonſhyre beſyde Exbridge was a Woman that lay ſick, and was nye deed, and ſent after a Holy Perſon about Midnight, to have her Ryghts. Than this Man in all Haſte he might aroſe, and went to the Church, and took Goddes Body in a Boxe of Ivory, and be given him, and afterwards ſome Liquid; but the Hoſt muſt not be dipped in any Liquor before-hand, upon Pretence that the ſick Perſon will be the better able to ſwallow it.

IN Caſe the ſick Perſon throws up the Wafer, and that the Particles of it plainly appear, they muſt be put into a clean Veſſel, and carried to the Church, and there depoſited in ſome holy and decent Place, [a] till ſuch Times as they are corrupted, after which they ſhall be caſt into the [b] Sacrarium; but if the Pieces are not to be diſtinguiſhed, what he has vomited up muſt be wip'd with Pieces of Tow, or ſome ſuch Thing, and theſe muſt afterwards be burnt, and the Aſhes thrown into the Sacrary. The Prieſt muſt take Care not to give thoſe the Viaticum who are troubled with a continual Coughing, or are not able to ſwallow or conſume the Hoſt, for Fear of any Accident unſuitable to the Dignity of the Sacrament.

WHENEVER the Viaticum is to be carried to any Place, Care muſt be taken to make the Chamber in which the ſick Perſon lies, very clean; and alſo all thoſe Parts of the Houſe through which the Hoſt is to paſs; and they ſhould likewiſe be ſtrewed with Flowers and odoriferous Herbs. The Hoſt muſt be laid on a Table very neatly covered, on which two Candleſtics, with two lighted Tapers in them, ſhall be ſet; as alſo a Drinking Glaſs, a Veſſel full of Wine or Water to purify or waſh the Fingers, and a white Cloth to lay before the ſick Perſon. In caſe the Viaticum be carried in Public, as is the Cuſtom in Roman Catholic Countries, the Rector gives Notice to his Pariſhioners by ringing of a Bell, to prepare themſelves to accompany the bleſſed Sacrament with Tapers and Torches; to ſupport the Canopy, or give ſome other exterior Marks of their Devotion and Reſpect. Being aſſembled, the Prieſt waſhes his Hands, as is uſual in the Celebration of the Divine Myſteries, and ſuch Ceremonies as are performed by him in Bleſſings, Conſecrations, &c. He puts on the Surplice, the Stole, the Chaſuble, and goes up to the Altar, accompanied or followed by other Prieſts or Clerks. Here he falls upon his Knees, repeats a private Prayer; and afterwards riſing up, puts a white Scarf about his Neck, ſpreads the Corporal on the Altar, opens the Tabernacle, kneels down a ſecond Time at his taking out the Ciborium or Pyx, which he lays upon the Corporal; kneels a third Time when he has opened it; and after having view'd the Hoſts, covers it with its little oval Lid, and takes it in both his Hands, which are put it into his Boſome, and went forth toward this Woman. And as he wente through the Foreſt in a fayre Mede that was his next Waye, it happed that his Box fell out of his Boſome to the Ground, and he wente forth and wyſt it not, and came to this Woman, and herde her Confeſſion. And then he asked her, yf ſhe would be Houſeled? And ſhe ſayd, ye Syr. Then he put his Hande into his Boſome, and ſought the Box; and whan he found it not, he was full ſorry and ſad, and ſayd, Dame, I will go after Goddes Body, and come agayne anone to you; and ſo he wente forth ſore wepynge for his Symplenes. And ſo as he came to a Wylowe Tree, he made thereof a Rodde, and ſtryped hymſelf naked, and bette hymſelf ſo, that the Blode ranne downe by his Syde, and ſayde thus to hymſelf: "O thou ſymple Man, why haſte thou loſt thy Lord God, thy Maker, thy Fourmer and Creatour?" And when he had thus bette himſelfe, he dyd on his Clothes and went forth, and than he was ware of a Pyller of Fire that laſted from Erth to Heven, and he was all aſtonyed thereof, yet he bleſſyd hym, and wente to it; and there lay the Sacrament fallen out of the Boxe into the Graſſe, and the Pyller ſhone as Bryght as the Sunne, and it laſted from Goddes Body to Heven; and all the Beeſtes of the Foreſt ware come aboute Goddes Body, and ſtode in Compaſſe round about it, and all kneled on four Knees ſave one black Horſe that kneled but one Knee. Then, ſayd he, yf thou beeſt ony Beeſt that may ſpeke, I charge thee in Goddes Name here preſent in Fourme of Breede, tell me why thou kneleſt but on one Knee. Then, ſayd he, I am a Fende of Hell, and wyll not kneele and I might; but I am made agenſt my Will; for it is wryten that every Knelynge of Heven, and of Erthe ſhall be to the Worſhyp of the Lord God. Why art thou lyke a Hors? and he ſayd, and make the People to ſtele me, and at ſuche a Town was one hanged for me, and at ſuche a Town another. Than ſayd the Holy Perſone, I commaunde thee by Goddes Fleſhe and his Blode, that thou go into Wylderneſſe, and be there as thou ſhalt never dyſeaſe, (i. e. afflict) Cryſten Man more. And then this Man went forthe to the Woman and dyd her Ryghtes, by the which ſhe was ſaved and went to Everlaſtynge Salvatyon. To the whiche he brynge us, our bleſſed Savyour Jheſus.

[a] Aſlet's Ritual.

[b] The Sacrary, ſo often mentioned, is a Kind of ſhallow Well, narrow at Top; and it muſt be locked up, in order that nothing profane may enter into it. In it are thrown ſuch Pieces of the Hoſt as may have been polluted by any Accident; the Aſhes of ſuch Pieces of Tow as may have been employed in the ſacred Unction; old Oils; old Holy-Water, conſecrated at Eaſter, or on Sundays; the Water with which the Biſhop or Prieſt have waſhed their Hands, &c.

folded with the Ends of the Scarf that is about his Neck. He then goes under the Canopy, and a Clerk, with a lighted Lanthorn in his Hand, walks foremoſt, and two other Clerks, the one holding the Holy Water, the Corporals, and the Purificatories, and the other the Ritual, and a [a] little Bell, march immediately after him. Next come thoſe who carry the Torches; and laſtly the Prieſt, walking under the Canopy, and carrying the Hoſt rais'd as high as his Breaſt. If the Prieſt carry the Viaticum to a conſiderable Diſtance, the Hoſt muſt be put in a little Silver Box or Pyx, encloſed in a Stuff-Purſe; which he hangs about his Neck, fixing it on to his Breaſt, in order to keep the Hoſt from ſhaking, or falling to the Ground.

THE Prieſt, at his coming into the ſick Man's Apartment, ſhall bid Peace to the Houſe, and go towards the Table, and ſpread the Corporal upon it, in order to ſet the Pyx, or Ciborium, thereon. This being done, he, and every Perſon preſent, worſhip the Hoſt; he then ſprinkles the ſick Perſon, and alſo the Room; during which Anthems are repeated, Verſes taken out of the Pſalms, and Prayers ſuitable to the Occaſion. After this he opens the Ciborium, takes out a conſecrated Wafer with the Thumb and Fore-finger of his Right-hand, obſerving to hold it a little aloft over the Top of the Ciborium, which he holds in his Left-hand, and turning about, advances towards the ſick Man, in order to adminiſter the Sacrament to him.

THE Communion being ended, the Prieſt places the Ciborium upon the Table again, obſerving to make a Genuflexion at the ſame Time; and afterwards rubs his Finger and Thumb with which he took up the Hoſt, upon the Brims of the Ciborium, to the End, that if any little Piece of the Wafer ſhould happen to ſtick to them, he may ſhake it thereinto. He afterwards ſhuts the Ciborium, and covers it with a little Veil, kneeling at the ſame Time; then he waſhes the Finger and Thumb which touched the Hoſt with Wine and Water, preſented him by thoſe of the Houſe.

THIS Act of Devotion concludes with Prayers and Exhortations. If any conſecrated Wafers are left in the Pyx, or Ciborium, the Prieſt, after having bleſs'd the ſick Perſon, returns back to the Church, attended with the ſame Perſons who had accompanied him to the ſick Man's Houſe. Being come into the Church, he pronounces the Indulgences granted by the Sovereign Pontiffs and the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, and gives them his Bleſſing: But in caſe there are no more Wafers in the Pyx, the Prieſt returns back without any Formality, after having repeated the Prayers uſed after the Communion of the Sick. If the ſick Perſon is juſt expiring, the [b] Prieſt omits all the Prayers, &c. and in giving him the Viaticum, repeats two or three Words only.

WHEN the Viaticum is given to a Prieſt, he ought to have a Surplice on, and over it a white Stole, diſpoſed croſs-wiſe over his Breaſt.

WE have already obſerved the Uſe which the primitive Chriſtians made of the bleſſed Sacrament at the Approach of Death; therefore no Sect among the Chriſtians can diſpute the Antiquity of the Viaticum.

IF a Prieſt is obliged to carry the Viaticum to any Perſon infected with the Plague, he muſt go within nine or ten Paces of the Houſe, taking care to ſtand in ſuch a Manner that the Wind may be on his Back. Being come hither, he ſhall incloſe the conſecrated Wafer between two common ones; and after having wrapt up the Whole in a Sheet of white Paper, ſhall lay it on the Ground at a reaſonable Diſtance from the Place infected, and cover it with a Stone, in order to ſecure it from the Wind,

[a] We are told that Gregory IX. inſtituted the little Bell.

[b] The Copper Plate annexed repreſents perfectly the Diſpoſition of the ſick Perſon who receives the Viaticum, and the Perſons who aſſiſt at it.

Rain, &c. This being done, the Prieſt ſhall draw back, and the ſick Perſon or his Attendant ſhall come and take up the Wafers, being inſtructed by the Prieſt which is the conſecrated Hoſt. The Prieſt ſhall ſay the Prayers, and perform the uſual Ceremonies, both before and after the Communion.

THE like Precaution is obſerved in giving extreme Unction to Perſons infected with the Plague. They take a long Wand or Rod, at the End of which a Piece of Tow or Cotton dipped in the holy Oils is fixed, with which the ſick Perſon is anointed but once, with the uſual Words. After this they run the End of the Wand and the Cotton into a Fire purpoſely prepared, in a Chafing-Diſh.

IV. PENANCE.

HERE follows the fourth Sacrament, which, according to the Roman Catholic Church, was inſtituted by our Saviour: However, this Point is diſputed by thoſe of other Opinions; but as Controverſy is not our Province, we ſhall only obſerve, that the Power annexed to the Prieſthood of remitting or retaining Sins, or inflicting Puniſhments on Sinners, and of ſettling Expedients for Reconciliation between them and their Creator, is, without Diſpute, one of the nobleſt Prerogatives that Mankind could poſſibly enjoy. Nor have the falſe Religions, in general, been leſs ſenſible of the Advantages of this Power; the idolatrous Greeks and Romans, the Mexicans and Eaſt-Indians, &c. furniſhing us with ſeveral remarkable Inſtances thereof.

BISHOPS have Power to abſolve Sinners, throughout the whole Extent of their Dioceſſes, and Rectors in their Pariſhes. As for other Prieſts and Monks, they muſt have an expreſs Approbation from the Biſhop, before they are allowed to hear Confeſſion. However, there are certain Caſes reſerved to the Pope, the Biſhops, and their Penetentiaries. We find ſeveral other Remarks in the Rituals on theſe Articles, and the Qualities required in a Confeſſor; but theſe are entirely foreign to our Inquiries.

FASTING, Prayers, Alms, Abſtinence from ſuch Pleaſures and Things as we chiefly delight in, are the general Conditions of Penance: there are others of a more particular Kind, as to repeat a certain Number of Ave-Marias, Pater-Noſters, and Credos; to kneel, or ſalute the Hoſt a ſtated Number of Times; to give one's ſelf a certain Number of Stripes; to wear a Hair-ſhirt, or a Girdle made of Horſe-hair, &c. next to the Skin. 'Twould be needleſs to enter into a farther Detail of ſuch Particulars: Thoſe who cannot hit upon Auſterities ſevere enough for their Purpoſe, will meet with ſufficient Inſtructions on that Head in the Lives of the Saints, and their Legends. Such as practiſe the greateſt Auſterities, are ſure at leaſt of gaining ſeveral Indulgences, as has been already obſerved in the ſecond Part of the firſt Volume of this Work.

" [a] THE Confeſſor muſt have a Surplice over his Caſſock, with a Purple Stole, and " ſquare Cap; he muſt hear Confeſſion in the Church, at that Part of it which is far- " theſt diſtant from the high Altar, i. e. at the Bottom of the Nave, which is moſt " expoſed to the View of the People, in the Confeſſional, or Confeſſion-Chair, which " is the Tribunal of Penance. The Confeſſional muſt be open before, and have one " or two Lattice-Windows in it: When there are two Windows, there muſt be two " Shutters to them; and 'tis proper to put all reſerved Caſes above the Confeſſor's Win- " dow, and oppoſite to the Penitent an Image of the Crucifix, or ſome Myſtery of " the Paſſion." Confeſſion muſt be made in the Day-time, and, if poſſible, when there are People in the Church. As ſoon as the Penitent is come up to the Confeſſional, he muſt make the Sign of the Croſs, and ask the Confeſſor's Bleſſing. The Form of Words us'd in confeſſing, has been already taken notice of.

[a] THE Confeſſor muſt be ſeated, his Body upright, with Gravity and Modeſty; his Cap on his Head, his Face cover'd, his Ear ſtoop'd towards the Penitent in the Manner here deſcrib'd. The Penitent ſhould be generally kneeling, and his Hands claſp'd. Women and young Maidens muſt not come to Confeſſion with their Breaſts bare, or their Arms uncover'd too far.

IT cannot be denied, but that Confeſſion is an excellent Method to keep Perſons of mean Capacities obedient to the Duties of Religion; for all Chriſtians are not capable of a ſpiritual Religion, nor of that kind of Reflection which ought to inſpire a Man to addreſs himſelf to God alone, without the Mediation of a Prieſt. On the other Side, Confeſſion ſeems to be attended with ſeveral dangerous Conſequences; and of theſe we ſhall only obſerve two: How many odious and infamous Particulars are divulg'd, which muſt naturally raiſe freſh Ideas of Impurity both in the Prieſt and the Penitent. Confeſſion oftentimes ſubmits a fearful Penitent, whoſe Conſcience is oppreſs'd with Scruples, loaded with Remorſe, weakened by the Remembrance of its Sins, to the abſolute Will of a cunning Prieſt [b]: He beholds Scepters at his Feet, he humbles Crowns, and makes thoſe tremble who ſtrike Terror into whole Nations.

CONFESSION being ended, the Confeſſor uncovers himſelf, in order to abſolve the Penitent; and accordingly he recommends him to the divine Mercy, ſtretches out his Right-Hand towards him, begging God to remit his Sins; after which he puts on his ſquare Cap, gives him the Abſolution in the Name of Chriſt Jeſus, and adds, holding his Right-Hand always lifted up towards the Penitent, that he abſolves him, by Chriſt's Authority, in the Name of the Father, &c. He takes off his Cap a ſecond Time, and prays to God that our Saviour's Paſſion, the Merits of the holy Virgin, and of all the Saints, may conſpire to remit the Penitent's Sins.

IT is thought that Confeſſion was inſtituted in the Apoſtolic Ages, and that it is [c] enjoin'd in the New Teſtament. It is in all Probability the Fruit of a Diſcipline, infinitely more exact and ſevere than it would have been, had it been inſtituted by the Clergy latterly. In the primitive Ages of Chriſtianity there was no ſuch Thing as auricular Confeſſion, but it was always made in public, as well as Penance. In this Manner Chriſtians were kept to their Duty, and the Chriſtian Religion was ſecur'd from the Calumnies of its Adverſaries. This public Penance was proportioned to the Nature of the Faults committed, ſo that it ſometimes laſted whole Years. The Penitents us'd to be ſeparated from the reſt of the Aſſembly in a Place appointed for them. Here they were in a ſtanding Poſture, in a State of Mortification, and in a mourning Habit, frequently in Sackcloth, cover'd with Aſhes, and their Eyes bath'd in Tears. They were enjoin'd very ſtrict Faſts, nor were they reſtor'd to the Peace of the Church till the Time of their Penance was completed; but this Severity began to ſlacken by Degrees. The Time for the Continuation of Auſterities was much ſhortened, and very often the Puniſhments inflicted on Penitents were commuted into pecuniary Mulcts. This was owing to a Variety of Reaſons, viz. the Death of many Chriſtians in a State of Penance; the Indolence and Deſpair they were afraid others would fall into, from the apparent Weakneſs of their Minds; the Diſhonour and Shame which the Chriſtians, who degenerated from their priſtine Humility, imagin'd they ſaw inſeparable from theſe public Reparations, after having confeſs'd, in Preſence of the whole Church, ſeveral enormous and often infamous Crimes. Laſtly, the Proſperity of the Chriſtian Religion, which made theſe public Reparations altogether unreaſonable. From that Time Confeſſions began to be made in a more private and ſecret Manner, and accordingly diſcreet and prudent Perſons were [a] appointed Confeſſors. This is the Origin of the Penitentiaries, who were firſt inſtituted by the Greek Church; but that of the Latins retain'd the Practice of public Confeſſion till the Pontificate of St. Leo.

HERE follows the preſent Manner of enjoining public Penance, and of abſolving thoſe who have undergone it. [b] The Penitent comes into the Church in a very plain Dreſs, and without his Weapons, if he be a Soldier, with a modeſt Air, and kneels without the Church at the Door, in caſe he be excommunicated, or under an Interdict, but within the Door in caſe he be not. After ringing for Maſs, the Congregation being aſſembled, the Penitentiary, or Prieſt appointed for that Ceremony, takes the purple Stole over his Surplice, and goes, accompanied with the Clergy belonging to the Church where this Ceremony is perform'd, to the Middle of the Nave, where he ſits down in a Chair ſet ready for that Purpoſe, and puts on his Cap; then the Penitent goes up to him, kneels down, and implores with a loud Voice that his Sins may be forgiven him; the Prieſt anſwers him by a ſhort Remonſtrance, and injoins him ſuch Penance as he thinks proper. The Romiſh Pontifical orders the Penitent to be clothed in a Hair Shirt, which is a kind of Garment made of Goats Hair: This the Penitent muſt wear next his Skin, the better to mortify himſelf. If he be alſo excommunicated, he is obliged to go out of the Church, after which ſome Prayers are ſaid. The Prieſt afterwards takes the Penitent by the Right-Hand, or in caſe there be ſeveral, he takes the firſt ſo, and then all the other Penitents join Hands; after which he leads them to the Church-Door, and ſays to them, You are turn'd out of the Church, for the Sins you have committed, in the ſame Manner as Adam, our firſt Parent, was driven from Paradiſe, becauſe of his Diſobedience. The Penitents being in this Manner put out of the Church, the Prieſt returns back into it, and ſhuts the Door. But in caſe the Penitent be not excommunicated, the Prieſt, after having enjoined him Penance, ſhews him the Part of the Church he muſt ſtand in, till ſuch Time he has completed the Courſe of it, which is always to the Left of the Church-Door, becauſe he muſt look upon himſelf as the meaneſt and the moſt unworthy Chriſtian in the World: Theſe are the expreſs Words of the Ritual [c]. In caſe the Penitent receives Penance from the Biſhop, or his Penitentiary, it ſhall be given him in Writing, in order that when he is return'd back to his own Pariſh, he may preſent it to the Rector thereof, who ſhall exhort him to execute it faithfully, and ſhall take care to ſee it punctually perform'd.

WHEN the Penitent has completed the Penance enjoin'd him, he returns back to the Biſhop, or his Penitentiary, with a Certificate ſign'd by the Rector, to prove that he has fulfill'd it; after which they proceed to his Reconciliation with the Church. [d] This Reconciliation was formerly perform'd on Holy Thurſday. But whether it happens on this or any other Day of public Worſhip, the Penitent muſt come to the Church-Door on the Day appointed him for receiving Abſolution. The Roman Pontifical enjoins, that he ſhall be there upon his Knees, with an unlighted Taper in his Hand. But it was not uſual always to excommunicate ſolemnly the Penitent who appear'd in this Manner. Be this as it will, he muſt be in a plain and ordinary Dreſs, without his Weapon, if he be a Soldier, and bare-headed; in an humble and contrite Manner, with a pale and dejected Countenance, if he can aſſume ſuch an one. Women muſt be veil'd. Immediately before the Parochial-Maſs, the Prieſt cloth'd with his Albe, or Surplice, and the purple Stole, ſhall give the People notice that the Penitent, or Penitents, are going to be reconciled to the Church. He then ſhall exhort the Congregation to pray for them; ſhall fall proſtrate before the Altar, and pronounce ſome Prayers, which are anſwer'd by the Congregation. Theſe Prayers, and all the reſt we meet with in the Pontifical and the Ritual, are compos'd of excellent Paſſages taken out of the Scriptures, ſelected by the Church, and ſo well adapted to the Subject, that 'tis impoſſible but the Faithful muſt be greatly edified by them. Theſe Prayers being ended, the Prieſt goes to the Church-Door, and makes a pretty long Exhortation to the Penitents; which being done, he takes them by the Hand, and leads them into the Church. But in caſe they have been excommunicated, he then, before he re-unites them to the Body of the Faithful, ſits down and puts on his Cap, when he repeats the Miſerere; the Penitent being at his Feet, the Congregation upon their Knees, and the Clergy ſtanding. [a] At every Verſe of the Miſerere the Prieſt ſtrikes the excommunicated Penitent on the Shoulder with a little Stick, or Whip made of Cords. [b] The Roman Ritual and the Pontifical ordain, that the Penitent who is abſolv'd in this Manner ſhall be ſtripp'd to his Shirt, as low as his Shoulders. This Ceremony, as all the preceding, muſt be followed by ſome Prayers; and afterwards the Litanies ſhall be ſung, the People being upon their Knees. Thus have we given the Explication of the ſix Ceremonies repreſented in the Plate.

[d] Penitents were reconcil'd to the Church in the following Manner, in the Beginning of the fifth Century, by which it will appear, that the Practice of the Roman Church at this Day does not differ very much from that Cuſtom. He, who after having been excommunicated, teſtified a ſincere Repentance, was ſolemnly reſtor'd to the Church in Preſence of the whole Congregation. The Biſhop, or his Vicar, uſed to go to the Church-Door, attended with twelve Prieſts, when the Penitent preſented himſelf to him with all the Tokens of Penance and Humility. After this the Biſhop took him by the Hand, brought him into the Church, and admitted him to the Communion.

When an excommunicated Perſon dies unabſolv'd, they begin by examining whether he may have given ſufficient Teſtimonies of a true Contrition, and whether it may be proper to abſolve him, in order that his Body may not be deprived of Chriſtian Burial, nor his Soul of the public Wiſhes and Prayers of the Church. Here follows the Form of this Abſolution. The Rector puts on a black Stole over the Surplice, and goes in a ceremonious Manner to the Place where the Corpſe lies. He ſhall be preceded by his Clerks in Surplices, whereof one ſhall carry a Wand, the other the holy Water, and the third the Croſs. If the Body is not yet interred, he ſhall ſtrike it with his Stick at every Verſe of the Miſerere; after which he ſhall abſolve it, and it ſhall then be buried in conſecrated Ground; but if the Corpſe was buried in unhallowed Ground, it muſt be removed from thence, if poſſible, and ſtruck in the ſame Manner; but in caſe it cannot be dug up, the Rector only ſtrikes upon the Grave with the Wand.

The Jews had alſo their Excommunication, whereof we have given a Deſcription in the Diſſertations upon their Ceremonies. The Idolaters likewiſe us'd to prohibit their Myſteries to all thoſe who were polluted with any Crime, which Cuſtom anſwer'd to the Excommunications of the Jews and Chriſtians. We take no notice of the Interdict of Fire and Water, eſtabliſh'd amongſt the Romans againſt Criminals of a certain Order. Among the antient Gauls the Interdict from the Sacrifices was a capital Puniſhment. Thoſe who were ſo unhappy as to incur this kind of Excommunication, were rank'd among the Impious, whom all Men ſhunn'd to meet, ſpeak to, or have the leaſt Correſpondence with: They were avoided as ſo many infectious Perſons; all the Duties of civil Society were denied them; nor was there any Juſtice for them in judiciary Proceedings. All this Cæſar aſſures us of in his Commentaries.

THE third Compartment of the Plate repreſents the Excommunication perform'd with unlighted Candles. This formidable Excommunication is preceded by the Anathema, by which the Perſon excommunicated is threaten'd with Torments, both in this Life, and in that which is to come; is deliver'd up to Satan, ſeparated from civil Society; and, in a Word, compleatly oppreſs'd, which is the Reaſon why it is compar'd to Thunder. It us'd to rowl with ſurprizing Swiftneſs heretofore, but now its Violence is prodigiouſly abated. The papal Fulminations in particular have often made the Chriſtian World tremble; but at this Time the Storms which gather in the Vatican, ſeldom extend farther than Italy, or at leaſt find it a very difficult Matter to croſs the Alps; and the Thunder of Jupiter Capitolinus no more daſhes Crowns to Pieces.

WHEN the Pope is to fulminate this ſolemn Excommunication, [a] he goes up to the high Altar with all the Air of an Excommunicator, and accompanied with twelve Cardinal-Prieſts, all of them having lighted Tapers in their Hands; he then ſits down on the Pontifical Seat plac'd before the high Altar, from whence he thunders out his Anathema's. Sometimes a Deacon, cloth'd in a black Dalmatica, goes up into the Pulpit, and publiſhes this Anathema with a loud Voice; in the mean Time the Bells ring a kind of Knell, as for deceas'd Perſons; for the excommunicated Perſon is look'd upon as dead with regard to the Church. After the Anathema, every one cries thrice with a loud Voice, Fiat, or So be it. At the ſame Time the Pope and Cardinals throw their lighted Candles upon the Ground, and the Acolytes tread them under their Feet. After this the Sentence of Excommunication, and the Name of the Perſon excommunicated, are ſet up in public, [b] in order that no one may have any farther Communication with him.

THE Roman Pontifical takes notice of three kinds of Excommunication, viz. 1. Minor, 2. Major, and 3. Anathema, which is that above-mention'd. The Minor may be conſider'd as a kind of ſpiritual Infection, ſince it is incurr'd by thoſe who have the leaſt Correſpondence with an excommunicated Perſon. The Pariſh-Prieſt may abſolve from this Excommunication; but he who has been ſo unhappy as to incur it, muſt immediately go and make a Confeſſion thereof. The Pontifical tells us, that a Perſon who has incurr'd the Minor Excommunication, is oblig'd to confeſs himſelf in the following Form of Words: I confeſs myſelf to God, and to you, reverend Father, as having incurr'd Excommunication for frequenting an excommunicated Perſon; for having ſpoke, drank, eat with him, &c.

THE Major Excommunication is made in Writing, againſt thoſe who diſobey the Commands of the Church, or of the Holy See, or refuſe to ſubmit to certain Points of Diſcipline; infringe ſome Immunities, &c. The Pope fulminates his Anathema's againſt all Heretics and Apoſtates; againſt ſuch as unjuſtly ſeize upon the Temporalities of the Church; in a Word, all the Enemies of it. By this Excommunication they are declar'd to be ſeparated from the ſacred Body of Chriſt as rotten Members, cut off from all Chriſtian Society; excluded from the Church both militant and triumphant, deliver'd over to the Devil and his Angels, &c.

WHEN an excommunicated Perſon gives Tokens of a ſincere Repentance, [c] he muſt take a new Oath of Fealty, incur the Penalties inflicted on him, and make ſuch Satisfaction as may be neceſſary. He firſt falls proſtrate on his Knees, during which Time the ſeven penitential Pſalms are ſung; and after having been brought into the Church, he falls on his Knees a ſecond Time at the Foot of the Altar, to which he is conducted by the Perſon who reconciles him to the Church. The latter goes up to the Altar, and turning himſelf towards the Perſon reconcil'd, offers up a Prayer to God in his Favour, and ſigns him with the Sign of the Croſs. Whenever an Heretic, an Infidel, or an Apoſtate, is reconcil'd to the Church, before he is receiv'd into it, the Pope, or the Perſon who performs the Ceremony of Reconciliation, [a] asks him the Occaſion of his coming thither, obſerving to ſay to him, [b] Receive the Sign of the Croſs of Chriſt, and of Chriſtianity, which thou hadſt borne before, but renounced it by the Error into which thou didſt unhappily fall. He then [c] conducts him to the Altar, in the Manner repreſented in the ſixth Compartment of the Plate. He there examines him a ſecond Time concerning the Articles of the Chriſtian Faith; and the reſt of the Ceremony concludes as uſual. If the Perſon ſo reconcil'd has taught any Hereſies or Errors, he is oblig'd to abjure them in a ſolemn Manner.

[a] HERE follows the Form of Abſolution which the Pope gives to crown'd Heads, who have been excommunicated by the Court of Rome. When his Holineſs is to pronounce this ſolemn Abſolution, a pontifical Throne, richly adorn'd, is erected before St. Peter's Church. Here the Pope is carried in Proceſſion, and preſides therein with his Rod or Wand in his Hand, in the Midſt of the Apoſtolical Court. One of the Maſters of the Ceremonies brings a dozen Wands, which he diſtributes among the twelve Aſſiſtant-Cardinals. The Ambaſſadors of the excommunicated Princes appear with an Air of Humility before this formidable Aſſembly, and throw themſelves at his Holineſs's Feet. But notwithſtanding the Indignity of the Perſon they repreſent, the Vicar of our Saviour indulges them the Privilege, or rather the Favour, of kiſſing them. This being done, one of the Ambaſſadors asks Pardon, with a loud Voice, of the Church and the Holy See; offers to make Reparation in his Maſter's Name, and deſires to be abſolved: Then the Fiſcal-Attorney examines the full Powers of theſe Miniſters; a Secretary reads them aloud, and the Attorney asks them a ſecond Time, [c] Whether they are ready to obey the Commands of the holy See and the Church, i. e. if they will promiſe Fealty to the Pope and Church, and ſwear to ſubmit to their Orders and Deciſions? Then the Maſter of the Ceremonies brings the Maſs-Book, which two Cardinal-Deacons hold before the Pope, who lays his Hand on it; on this the Ambaſſadors lay both their Hands, when they promiſe, ſwear, and oblige themſelves by the holy Goſpels, and the holy Crucifix, which is brought there, to obſerve inviolably the Engagement which they take in their Maſter's Name, whereof one of the Apoſtolical Notaries draws up a ſolemn Inſtrument. The Abſolution follows, when the Pope and the twelve Cardinal-Prieſts ſing the Miſerere, obſerving to ſtrike each of thoſe Mi-

[a] Theſe Formalities were obſerv'd at the Abſolution of Henry IV. Being come to the great Gate of St. Denis's Church, the Archbiſhop of Bourges was attending, he being appointed to perform the Ceremony, at a little Diſtance from the Door within the Church, ſeated in his pontifical Habit, in a Chair cover'd with white Damask, with the Arms of France and Navarre, and ſurrounded with a great Number of Prelates and Monks belonging to the Abby. The Archbiſhop asking him, Who he was? he replied, The King. What is your Buſineſs, replied the Archbiſhop? I deſire, ſaid the King, to be receiv'd into the Boſom of the Catholic Church. Are you deſirous of it, continued the Archbiſhop? Yes, anſwer'd the King, I very much deſire it. He then fell upon his Knees, and made his Confeſſion of Faith. The Formulary of this Confeſſion of Faith was put into the Hands of the Prelate that pronounced the Abſolution, who gave the King his Ring to kiſs, and bleſs'd and abſolved him from the Cenſures incurr'd by the Hereſy he had profeſs'd and defended.

[c] Here follows the Formulary of the Introduction: Return into the Church of God, out of which thou haſt been caſt, having unhappily been miſled by Error: Know that thou haſt been taken out of the Snares of Death; abhor Idols, Superſtition, Hereſy; adore God alone in three Perſons, &c. May we not conclude from this Formulary, that the Catholic Church is very unjuſtly accus'd of teaching Idolatry? Are we to impute to it ſuch Abuſes as are made by the Vulgar and Bigots? Is it not notorious that the common People always go to Extremes in all ſuch Things as relate to exterior Practices, and that very few Perſons are capable of forming abſtracted Ideas? Which of the two is preferable, an Unity of Worſhip, under a ſingle Body of Doctrine, or an eternal Diſ-union, by Virtue of a Liberty of examining? An unbounded Liberty, indulg'd to the meaneſt Cobler, no leſs than the greateſt Man of Learning! Theſe are the Arguments which zealous Roman-Catholics imploy, in defending their Religion againſt the Sectaries.

niſters on the Shoulder, at the Beginning of each Verſe of the Pſalms. The Ceremony ends with Prayers, &c. and the Impoſition of a Penance, proportionable to the Fault committed by the Perſon abſolv'd. Laſtly, the Cardinals and Penitentiaries conduct theſe Ambaſſadors to the Obedientia, with the accuſtomed Ceremonies.

'TWAS much after this Manner that Clement VIII. [a] abſolved Henry IV. of France. D'Oſſat and Du Perron, who were afterwards made Cardinals, received the Blows with the Wand, which their Maſter would have had, had he himſelf appear'd in their Preſence. As to the Penalties, and the uſual Works of Piety, his Majeſty was order'd to repeat his Beads once a-day; to ſay the Litanies on Wedneſday, the Roſary on Saturday; to obſerve all the Faſts, and other Injunctions of the Church; to go to Maſs every Day, &c. Moreover, he was enjoin'd to found a Monaſtery in every Province of his Kingdom, particularly in the Province of Bearn, Part of his Demeſnes, which he order'd to unproteſtantize itſelf, if I may be allow'd the Expreſſion.

WE are aſſur'd in the Ceremonial, that Abſolution was perform'd with much greater Severity in former Ages; as for Inſtance, in ſeveral important Caſes, the [b] Penitents us'd to go naked, and ſtand before St. Peter's Porch, when twelve Prieſts thereof beat them with their Wands. But ſuch Vaſſals as had rebelled againſt the Pope and the Church, were beat very ſoundly for a [c] long Time together, it laſting during the ſinging of ſeveral penitential Pſalms.

THE Ceremonies of degrading, and reſtoring of the Perſon degraded, bear ſuch Relation to Excommunication, that it would not be proper to omit them in this Place. However we ſhall confine ourſelves to the Deſcription of the Degradation of a Biſhop, in order not to vary from the Inſcription of the Figure repreſenting it. [d] The Biſhop who is to be degraded is conducted to the Pope, and clothed in his Preſence with all his pontifical Veſtments. A ſecular Judge aſſiſts at this Ceremony. They begin by ſtripping the Perſon to be degraded of his pontifical and other Ornaments, piece-meal; after which he is deliver'd over to the ſecular Judge, in caſe that the Actions he has committed are of ſo criminal a Nature as to merit a temporal Puniſhment.

IT is uſual to raiſe a kind of Throne or Tribunal at the Church-Door, to give the Degradation a more ſolemn Air. At ſome Diſtance from the Perſons who perform the Ceremony, a little Credence, or narrow Table, is ſet, though not repreſented in the Plate. Over this Credence the ſeveral Utenſils are plac'd, that denote the Employment of the Perſon to be degraded; as for Inſtance, a Veſſel fill'd with Wine, another with Water, the Chalice, the Paten, and the Hoſt, for the degrading of a Prieſt; the Book of the Goſpels, that of the Epiſtles, a Candleſtic, with an unlighted Candle in it, at the degrading of a Deacon, a Sub-Deacon, or an Acolyte; a Leſſon-Book, at the degrading of a Reader; Keys, at that of a Sacriſtan or Door-Keeper; the Antiphon, at that of a Choriſter. On the above-mention'd Credence a Pair of Sciſſars, a Knife, a Glaſs, and the pontifical Ornaments of the Prelate are laid. He whoſe Province it is to degrade, is ſurrounded by his Miniſters and the civil Magiſtrate, accompanied with ſome Soldiers; as alſo a Notary and a Barber. All theſe ſeveral Perſons and Things are requir'd in the Ceremony of Degradation. Immediately the Delinquent is brought in his uſual Habit before the Pope, or the Perſon who repreſents him; after this the Clerks dreſs him in his pontifical Veſtments, and preſent him to the Perſon that degrades him, who is cloth'd with the Amict, the Albe, the Stole, the red Chaſuble, the plain

Mitre,

Mitre, has his Loins girded, &c. The Perſon who degrades begins with a Speech addreſs'd to the Spectators, whereby he acquaints them with the Particulars of the Degradation; after which he proceeds to the Execution of the Sentence, I ſtrip thee of the epiſcopal Mitre, which thou haſt polluted, at the ſame Time taking the Delinquent's Mitre from off his Head: Return back the Goſpel, (which had been put into the Hands of the Delinquent) continues he, becauſe thou art become unworthy of preaching it. In taking off his pontifical Ring he is told, That he has violated the Church, which is the Spouſe of Chriſt. It would be needleſs to take notice of the ſeveral Particulars which are the Marks of the epiſcopal Dignity. After he has been ſtripp'd of all his pontifical Veſtments, the Perſon who degrades begins to eraſe the Tonſure, by cutting off his Hair with his Sciſſars, and the Barber completes the reſt by ſhaving the Delinquent's Head all over; upon which he is told, That he is driven out of the Inheritance of our Lord, as an ungrateful Son; and that he loſes the Crown, which is the Mark of the royal Prieſthood, becauſe of his evil Adminiſtration. After this he is given over to the ſecular Arm; but at the ſame Time the Perſon who degrades, intreats the civil Magiſtrate to be merciful, becauſe the Church abhors Blood. This Maxim agrees with the Spirit of the Goſpel; however the Clergy make a Multitude of Exceptions to it.

As an Example of the Ceremony of degrading, we ſhall deſcribe that of the famous [a] John Hus. He was dreſs'd in all his ſacerdotal Veſtments, and the Chalice was put into his Hands as if he had been to celebrate Maſs. —— After this his ſeveral Veſtments were taken off one after another, ſome Curſe being pronounced at the ſame Time —— but they heſitated a little, whether they ſhould employ the Razor or the Sciſſars in eraſing the Marks of the Tonſure, but at laſt the Sciſſars prevail'd. His Hair was cut in the Form of a Croſs, in order that there might not be the leaſt Marks of the Crown remaining; and they even waſh'd it, the better to take away any Footſteps of it. Such a Form of Degradation, continues the Author laſt cited in the Margin, after having quoted the Canon Law, ſinks a Prieſt to the Laity; and although it does not deprive him of his Character, that being [b] indelible, it yet incapacitates him for ever from exerciſing any of the miniſterial Functions; and to make the Puniſhment of John Hus ſtill more ignominious, a Paper Mitre was put on his Head, with three hideous Devils painted on it; which being done, the Prelates who perform'd the Ceremony, devoted his Soul to all the Devils in Hell. In a Word, the Church gave him up; he was declar'd a Layman, and as ſuch delivered over to the ſecular Arm.

We muſt now take notice of the ſpiritual Benefits of which thoſe are depriv'd, who have incurr'd the Major Excommunication; and theſe are ſeven in Number: 1. The Partaking in public Prayers, which the Church offers up for the Faithful; of theſe the Perſons excommunicated are depriv'd, only with ſome certain Reſtrictions, as may be ſeen in [c] the Rituals. 2. The Right of adminiſtring and receiving the Sacraments. 3. The Right of aſſiſting at divine Office. If the Prieſt ſees an excommunicated Perſon enter into the Church during the Office, he muſt command him to go out of it. If he has begun Maſs, he muſt diſcontinue the Service till ſuch Time as the excommunicated Perſon is gone out; and in caſe he refuſes to do it, the Prieſt muſt put off his ſacerdotal Veſtments, and diſcontinne the Maſs; but in caſe the Canon of the Maſs is begun, he muſt continue it to the Communion incluſive, and afterwards conclude it in the Sacriſty. This is what we find injoin'd in Alet's Ritual upon this important Head. Excommunicated Perſons are allowed to aſſiſt at Sermons and Inſtructions; but we are to ſuppoſe, though they are preſent, they yet cannot have any Communication with any of the Faithful, leſt they ſhould corrupt them; and therefore the excommunicated Perſon muſt ſtand in ſome Corner, or be intirely ſeparated from the faithful Chriſtians.

[b] Vide Tom. I. Part ii.
[c] Alet's Ritual.

Without

Without this he would not be deprived of the fourth Benefit, which is the being intirely [a] excluded from common Converſation; the Prayers in common, i. e. the Privilege of praying with any good Chriſtian; of the Civilities, and all other Duties of Society; of the Pleaſure of living with other Chriſtians under the ſame Roof; of carrying on Buſineſs, and working with them; in a Word, they are prohibited from eating and lying in the ſame Bed with an excommunicated Perſon. However, there are certain Caſes in which it may be lawful to have Commerce with them: Theſe are all expreſs'd in one [b] Latin Verſe. It may be lawful to correſpond with an excommunicated Perſon, provided it be with an Intention to inform him of his Duty, and to endeavour to bring him back to it. The Word Lex expreſſes all the Duties of the conjugal Life, which Excommunication does not diſpenſe from. The Word Humile expreſſes the Duties of Children and Servants, which continue after the Excommunication. If a Perſon ſhould ignorantly get acquainted with an excommunicated Perſon, he in that Caſe would be no way guilty. Laſtly, the Neceſſity of Affairs obliges or permits the frequenting of excommunicated Perſons. This Exception is now carried to very great Lengths, there being hardly any Romaniſt who refuſes to have Dealings with a Heretic, though Heretics are known to be excommunicated and anathematiz'd by the Pope. 'Tis well known that the Church deprives them of all ſpiritual Succour and Benefits. This Toleration, with regard to Communication, is owing to the Neceſſity of the Times. Excommunication was more formidable, when the Church had not yet loſt thoſe Countries, which Luther and Calvin have ſever'd from it, within theſe two hundred Years. The fifth ſpiritual Benefit is the being buried in conſecrated Ground. The ſixth the having either an active or paſſive Voice, with regard to all Benefices or eccleſiaſtical Dignities, i. e. he can neither elect or be elected. The ſeventh and laſt ſpiritual Benefit is the Exerciſe of ſpiritual Juriſdiction, and the Power of intermeddling in Cauſes tried in ſpiritual Courts.

THIS Severity of the Church againſt excommunicated Perſons is [c] founded on ſeveral Paſſages of the New Teſtament. As to the Minor Excommunication, it deprives thoſe who have incurr'd it of the paſſive Communication of the Sacraments, and the Right of being elected or preſented to any eccleſiaſtical Benefice or Dignity. The Church, however, employs ſeveral other Expedients to recal unthinking Chriſtians to their Duty; it will ſuffice to give a Deſcription thereof from Alet's Ritual. The Monitory is a Command which the Church lays on its Children to diſcover, upon pain of Excommunication, whatever they know of any important Matter, whereof it may be proper to acquaint her. If the Monitory is not complied with, Excommunication enſues. Suſpenſion deprives a Clergyman for ſome Time of the Exerciſe of his Functions, after his having been found guilty by the Church of ſome enormous Sin. The Interdict is an eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, by which the Church forbids the Uſe of the Sacraments, divine Office in public, and eccleſiaſtical Burial, for any capital Sin, &c. There are three kinds of Interdicts, the Local, the Perſonal, and the Mix'd, which laſt relates to Perſons and Places. Ceſſatio a Divinis is when for any notorious Injury or Diſobedience to the Church, a Stop is put to all divine Offices, and the Adminiſtration of Sacraments, and Chriſtians are depriv'd of Church Burial. An Interdict differs from a Ceſſation, in that during the former divine Service may be perform'd in ſuch Churches of any Place interdicted, the Doors being ſhut, as are not expreſly under the Interdict, and even be celebrated ſolemnly on certain high Feſtivals; but in a Ceſſation, no religious Service can be performed ſolemnly; the only Liberty allow'd, is, in order to renew the conſecrated Hoſts, to repeat every Week a private Maſs in the Pariſh Churches, the Doors of the ſame being ſhut; obſerving alſo not to ring the Bell, or to admit more than two Perſons to adminiſter in it. Moreover, it is lawful, during the Ceſſation, to adminiſter

Baptiſm,

Baptiſm, Confirmation, and Penance, to ſuch Perſons as deſire it, provided they are not excommunicated, or under an Interdict. The Viaticum may likewiſe be adminiſtred, but then the Prayers which are ſaid before and after that Adminiſtration, muſt not be repeated. A whole Dioceſe, a City, a Village, or one or more Churches, may incur Ceſſation. Irregularity is a canonical Impediment, by which a Perſon is incapacitated from taking holy Orders, or exerciſing the Functions of them when taken: It reſults from a Defect in the Body, Mind, Birth, Reputation, Age, civil Duties, a Neglect of the Sacraments, or Severity of Temper. One of the Defects, with regard to the Mind, is extreme Ignorance; but great Numbers of Prieſts may juſtly be reproach'd with this. Antiently many of them did not underſtand the Meaning of in nomine patris, &c. uſed in Baptiſm. We meet with ſeveral merry Inſtances to this Purpoſe in the Apology of Herodotus; however, this Author may be excepted againſt, becauſe he was a Calviniſt; we ſhall only for the Reader's Satisfaction quote an [a] Epigram made by a Poet of the Romiſh Communion. As to the Defects of the Body, we could almoſt venture to affirm, without thinking we advance a Paradox, that 'tis better to avoid them than the Defects of the Mind; few People would be edified to ſee a Prieſt either deform'd, one-ey'd, or maim'd, eſpecially in the Face, performing the eccleſiaſtical Functions; if it were poſſible to bear with him for any Time, that muſt be owing intirely to the Curioſity of the Public, and perhaps the only Motive of People's ſeeing him, would be to inſult his Defects, and make merry with his Face. But who does not ſee the Weakneſs of the human Mind on this Occaſion? After all, God himſelf has excepted all deform'd and mutilated Prieſts under the Jewiſh Law; and it is but juſt that the Chriſtians ſhould follow a Command, which, by preſerving the Dignity of the Prieſthood, points out to Mankind, that as God is a Being of ſupreme Perfection, he will be ſerv'd by Miniſters as perfect as human Nature is capable of producing them. The Catholic Church obſerves this Rule pretty exactly, but not the Calviniſts; [b] and indeed a celebrated Author has complained of their Negligence in the Choice of Paſtors; not but that Numbers of that Communion are very well pleas'd with handſome and agreeable Preachers, who ſtrike their Auditors much more by their exterior Eloquence, and the Fruitfulneſs of their Imagination, heighten'd by the Beauty of their Countenance, than the Regularity of their Lives, or a Spirit diſengag'd from all ſublunary Things. Be this as it will, they receive and conſecrate thoſe whoſe bodily Qualities are very oppoſite to the above-mention'd Talents. But to return from this ſhort Digreſſion: Baſtards are by the Church excluded from holy Orders; however, there are ſome Exceptions to this Rule, and ſeveral have in our Days been admitted to them who were publicly known to be ſo. The Defects as to Reputation, Age, and Gentleneſs of Behaviour, are liable to almoſt as many Exceptions: Theſe are ſo well known, that it would be needleſs to mention any Examples upon that Head.

We are told in Alet's Ritual, that Cenſures muſt not be employ'd in deſtroying ſuch Animals as are noxious to the Fruits of the Earth, ſuch as Rats, Caterpillars, Graſſ-hoppers, &c. for in theſe Caſes the Church makes uſe of Exorciſms, holy Water, and certain Prayers. The Rector, or Curate, continues the Ritual, is obliged to give the Biſhop an Account of the Damage which Inſects do to the Fruits of the Earth in his Pariſh; in which Caſe, if the Biſhop thinks proper, ſome Prayers are employ'd againſt them; for this Purpoſe the Prieſt goes to ſome Eminence in that Part of the Country, where thoſe Animals make the greateſt Havock. Here he puts on his Surplice and the purple Stole, and a Clerk ſtands at his Right Hand, holding the Veſſel of holy Water, and the Sprinkler. From this Eminence, the Prieſt, after having made the Sign of a Croſs, repeats the Prayers appointed for that Occaſion; after which he ſprinkles the Fields with holy Water, and this thrice, in the Form of a Croſs. Though 'tis forbidden to employ Cenſures and Excommunication againſt noxious Animals, 'tis neverthe-leſs uſual to excommunicate Graſhoppers in a great many [a] Places; and we muſt not omit the burleſque Sentence pronounced in the Biſhop of Troye's Court in 1516. againſt the Caterpillars of that Dioceſe. The Official, or Biſhop's Judge, gravely admoniſhes the Caterpillars to quit the Place in the Space of ſix Days, in default of which they are declar'd curs'd, and as ſuch anathematiz'd. Leonard Vair [b] mentions likewiſe this Manner of deſtroying Inſects: "In ſome Places, ſays he, to drive away Graſhoppers "and other noxious Vermin, a certain Exorciſt is employ'd as Judge, before whom "two Attornies are appointed, the one for the People, the other for the Vermin; "then the Attorney of the People ſues for Juſtice againſt the Graſhoppers and Caterpillars, in order to drive them out of the Fields: The other ſtands up for his "Clients.—— At laſt, all due Ceremonies having been obſerv'd, Sentence of Excommunication is pronounced againſt the Inſects, in caſe they don't leave the Place at a "ſtated Time." This Procedure does not appear ſo ſolemn to us, nor conſequently ſo remarkable, as that of the ſpiritual Court of Troyes; but what ſhall we ſay of St. Bernard, who, in order to drive away the Flies that perſecuted the Members of a Church which he himſelf had founded in the Dioceſe of Laon, declared that he had excommunicated them? To underſtand this Expreſſion in an Orthodox Senſe, we are to ſuppoſe, by Excommunication, that St. Bernard meant the Prayers of the Church, pronounced with the Forms and Ceremonies made uſe of upon this Occaſion. We meet with various Ways among the antient and modern Heathens, of exorciſing noxious Animals, which probably may have given Riſe to ſeveral blameable Practices that have unhappily crept into ſome Parts of the Chriſtian World, and chiefly among thoſe who live remote from the civiliz'd Part of it. The Exorciſms of the Pſylli, of the Theſſalians and Telchines, are well known, as alſo thoſe of the modern Indians.

NOTHING more remains, but only to make ſome mention of the Office of the Penitentiaries; we have already obſerv'd the Antiquity of it. At firſt only one Penitentiary was appointed to each Church, but their Number increas'd inſenſibly; 'twas not that Chriſtians were become more ſcrupulous and more exact, with regard to the Article of Confeſſion, but the Authority of Prieſts over the Conſciences of Men increas'd, and the Office of Penitentiary grew more uſeful and neceſſary, becauſe Men were more eaſily ſcared at the Reflection on their Sins. As for the modern Penitentiaries, we ſhall confine ourſelves to the Deſcription which Aimon has [c] given us of thoſe of Rome: "There are ſeven in every great Church in that City, appointed for the different Na-"tions, each of whom underſtands a different Language; thoſe of St. Peter's are Je-"ſuits; thoſe of St. John of Lateran, Franciſcans; and thoſe of St. Maria Maggiore, "Dominicans: They have now no Manner of Regard to the antient Penitentiary Ca-"nons: They inflict only very ſlight Puniſhments; as for Inſtance, to ſuch as over-"indulge themſelves in eating and drinking, to faſt; to the Covetous, Alms; to the

" Cauſe, when it is a litigious one, in which Caſe he puts one of the three following
" Degrees in his Reſcripts: Fiat in forma, Fiat de ſpeciali, Fiat de expreſſo, i. e. Be it
" done in Form, Be it done ſpecially, Be it done expreſly: And theſe various Expreſſions de" note to thoſe who tax the Caſe, the Importance of the Buſineſs contain'd in the Pe" tition. This Office of the Grand Penitentiary was ſome Years ago worth ſix thou" ſand Crowns per Annum to the Incumbent, but it has ſince been leſſen'd to the " Profit of the Apoſtolical Chamber; and the Pope allows now but twelve hundred " Crowns of Gold annually to the Cardinal who enjoys that Employment."

'Twould be needleſs to mention the caſual Profits of this Poſt, they amounting to an immenſe Sum of Money: But after all, as it is impoſſible to juſtify the Exceſſes which appear in the Tax of the Chancery, to the Scandal of the Chriſtian Religion; ſo on the other Side we cannot condemn the lawful Uſe of eccleſiaſtical Taxes, when they do not ſtrike at the ſolemn Majeſty of Religion, nor give a Sanction to Crimes and Diſorders. Let certain Diſpenſations be granted; certain Vows be diſpenſed with; certain Penalties eſtabliſhed by the Canons be mitigated; nay, we will allow that thoſe who infringe the Statutes enacted by the Holy See, ſhall be fined in very heavy Sums, pro-provided only, that all who perpetrate greater Crimes may not be abſolved for Money.

V. EXTREME UNCTION.

THE Rituals define Extreme Unction to be a Sacrament that gives all ſuch Chriſtians as are afflicted with any dangerous Fit of Sickneſs, a final Remiſſion of their remaining Sins, inſpires them with Grace to ſuffer with Patience the Pains and Troubles of their Infirmity, indues them with Strength ſufficient to die the Death of the Righteous, and reſtores them to Health, provided it be for the Good of their Souls. Thus the Catholic Church makes Extreme Unction a Sacrament, the indiſpenſable Neceſſity of which it teaches us, as appears by the above-mentioned Definition; and it muſt be own'd that this Doctrine receives a great Sanction from a Paſſage in the Epiſtle of St. [a] James, from an almoſt univerſally received Tradition, and the Teſtimony of ſeveral of the antient Fathers. It is therefore very unjuſt to reject it as a Practice invented in the ſixth Century, by Pope Felix IV. about Anno 528. as a certain [b] Proteſtant Writer affirms, pretending that the Anointing in the primitive Church, was ſolely founded on the Power of Healing the Sick, beſtow'd on the Apoſtles and their Diſciples. "After the Gift of Healing, ſays he, had ceaſed with other Miracles, ſome Heretics "were for retaining the Practice of this Anointing, altho' it had loſt its Efficacy, and "made it ſerve for another Purpoſe; for about the Year 180, the Valentinians uſed to "anoint their Sick when on the Point of Death with Oil, and added certain Prayers "to it." &c.

THE Form of the Sacrament of Extreme Unction conſiſts in theſe Words, "[c] May "God by this holy Anointing, and his moſt pious Mercy, grant you the Pardon of all "the Sins you may have committed." The Prieſt pronounces this Form of Words while he is anointing thoſe Parts of the Body which are proper for it, becauſe they have been the Occaſion, or ſerved as ſo many Inſtruments for Sin, Whereof, to uſe the Words of Alet's Ritual, this Sacrament purges the Dregs, i. e. thoſe Sins which we have not been careful enough to repent of: This Sacrament therefore compenſates for the Defects of paſt Repentance.

THE Prieſt is the only Miniſter of this Sacrament, which is adminiſtred to none but ſuch as are afflicted with ſome mortal Diſeaſe, or are in a Decrepit Age; provided that beſides their advanced Age, they are likewiſe ſo extremely infirm, that they may be conſidered as in a deadly Diſeaſe. But Extreme Unction is not adminiſtred to Criminals condemn'd to die; and the Reaſon given for this is, that the Criminal is not in a State of Death, either by Diſeaſe, or any other Infirmity. Some other Remarks might be made upon this Sacrament, however we ſhall omit them, as they belong properly to the Rituals, and thoſe who by their Function are obliged to peruſe them. We ſhall therefore content ourſelves with making two Obſervations, viz. that Extreme Unction is refuſed to ſuch as are impenitent, and that in Caſe a ſick Perſon dies while he is anointing the Ceremony muſt immediately be diſcontinued.

[a] Chap. v. Ver. 14. and 15. Is any ſick among you? Let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with Oil in the Name of the Lord. And the Prayer of Faith ſhall ſave the Sick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up; and if he have committed Sins, they ſhall be forgiven him. And alſo Mark vi. 13. And anointed with Oil many that were ſick and healed them.

[b] Hiſtory of the Ceremonies and Superſtitions, &c. printed at Amſterdam in 1717.

[c] Per iſtam ſanctam Unctionem & ſuam piiſſimam miſericordiam indulgeat tibi Dominus quicquid deliquiſti, &c.

THE Parts to be anointed are the Eyes, the Ears, the Noſtrils, the Mouth, the Hands, the Feet, and Reins; but Men only are anointed in the Part laſt mention'd. The Laity are anointed in the Palms of the Hand, and the Prieſts on the Back of it, and [a] that becauſe the Palms of their Hands have been already conſecrated by Ordination. The Unction of the Feet is always perform'd on the Soles. If the ſick Perſon has loſt any of thoſe Members that ſhould have been anointed, the Part next to it muſt be anointed. This is what relates to this Ceremony in general; here follows the particular Deſcription thereof. The Prieſt muſt get ready ſeven Balls of Cotton, or ſome ſuch Matter, to wipe thoſe Parts which are to be anointed with holy Oil, ſome Crumb of Bread to rub his Fingers with, Water to waſh them, a Napkin to wipe them, and a Taper to light him during the Ceremony. Before he goes to the ſick Perſon, he muſt ſanctify himſelf by Prayer: After which he muſt waſh his Hands, put on a Surplice, and the Purple Stole; muſt take the Veſſel in which the holy Oils are contained, covered with a Purple Veil, or ſhut up in a Bag of the ſame Colour, and carry it in ſuch a Manner as not to let the Oil run out. If he goes a great Diſtance off, he need not put on his Surplice and his Stole till he come to the Door of the ſick Perſon, and in that caſe he muſt carry the Veſſel of Oils in a Purſe, and hang it about his Neck, in the ſame Manner as the Viaticum is ſometimes carried to the Sick. The Prieſt muſt be attended by the Clerk, who muſt carry the Croſs without a Staff, the Veſſel of holy Water, the Sprinkler, and the Ritual. They muſt not ring the little Bell by the Way, but the Prieſt muſt offer up ſome Prayers, with a low Voice, in favour of the Sick. In entring into the ſick Perſon's Apartment, he repeats the ordinary Form of Words, Pax huic domui, & omnibus habitantibus in ea, i. e. Peace be to this Houſe, &c. After having taken off his Cap, and ſet the Veſſel of the holy Oils upon the Table, he gives the ſick Perſon the Croſs to kiſs; afterwards takes the Sprinkler, ſprinkles the ſick Perſon, the Apartment, and the Aſſiſtants, with holy Water in Form of a Croſs, at the ſame Time repeating the Anthem Aſperges me, &c. He tells the ſick Perſon, by way of Exhortation, that he would commit the utmoſt Sacrilege, in caſe he preſumed to receive Extreme Unction, without having firſt ſettled his Conſcience; but in caſe he is ſpeechleſs, and is not ſenſible, the [b] Prieſt ſhall exhort him to the beſt of his Power. If the ſick Perſon diſcovers any Tokens of a real Contrition, the Prieſt ſhall pronounce Abſolution, which ſhall be followed by an Exhortation, and this by a [c] Prayer very edifying to the Hearers. But before Abſolution the ſick Perſon muſt either repeat the Confiteor himſelf, or in caſe he is not able to do it, the Clerk muſt pronounce it for him; the Prieſt ſhall add for the ſick Perſon the Miſereatur tui, i. e. May the Lord have Pity on thee, &c. Before they begin to perform the Ceremony of Extreme Unction, all the Perſons preſent muſt fall down upon their Knees, and whilſt the Anointing is performing, they ſhall repeat the penitential Pſalms and Litanies for the Sake of his Soul.

[d] THE Anointing is perform'd in this Manner: The Prieſt dips [e] the Thumb of his Right Hand into the Oils of the Infirm; he anoints in the Form of a Croſs, and pronounces ſome Words ſuitable to the anointing of each Part; the Clerk lights him with a conſecrated Taper, and holds a Baſon in a Diſh, in which the Pieces of Cotton are laid: The Prieſt begins by anointing the Right Eye, obſerving that the Eye-Lid is ſhut; he next anoints the Left-Eye, and in the mean while repeats theſe Words: May God by this holy Anointing, and by his moſt pious Mercy, pardon you the Sins you have committed by the Eyes. If the Prieſt is accompanied with a Clergyman who is in Holy Orders, he muſt wipe the Part which hath been lately anointed, otherwiſe the Prieſt ſhall wipe it himſelf. The Eyes being anointed, he ſhall proceed to the Ears, obſerving to repeat

[a] Alet's Ritual.
[b] The Exhortation muſt certainly have a wonderful Efficacy, after the ſick Perſon has loſt his Senſes.
[c] Introeat Domine Jeſu, &c.
[d] Vide the Plate.
[e] He ſometimes, inſtead of his Thumb, dips a little Spatula into the Veſſel, and anoints with it.

the proper Form of Words. From the Ears he ſhall go to the Noſtrils, which he muſt anoint, and not the Tip of the Noſe. He afterwards proceeds to the Mouth and anoints the Lips, the Mouth being ſhut. He anoints the Hands in the Manner above-mentioned; then he goes to the Soles of the Feet, and afterwards advances upwards to the Reins, but this for Men only; nor are they anointed in this Part but when they may be eaſily turn'd in their Beds, or may be laid down in them without Danger. The Anointing being ended, the Prieſt rubs ſuch of his Fingers as have touched the Oil of the Infirm, and afterwards waſhes his Hands. The Crumbs of Bread with which he rubb'd his Fingers, and the Water with which he waſhed them, muſt be thrown into the Fire; the Pieces of Cotton that have been employ'd in anointing, are carried into the Church, where they are burnt, and the Aſhes thereof are thrown into the Sacrarium.

THE anointing being ended, the Prieſt repeats likewiſe ſome Prayers, which are followed by an Exhortation to the Sick; after which the Prieſt goes away, leaving a Crucifix with the ſick Perſon, in order that the Repreſentation of his dying Saviour may adminiſter ſome Conſolation to him. We are obliged to own, that ſome ſuch Inſtruments of Piety are neceſſary, in order to their Working upon the Minds of the Vulgar. Some People never think of ſpiritual Things but thro' the Medium of material Objects; and 'tis well if they think of them then with Advantage to their Souls. We are not to imagine, that the Simple and Ignorant are to be brought over by the ſame Methods as the Learned. Do ſuch Chriſtians as are eternally talking of Spirituality in Religion, bring a greater Number to Chriſt than thoſe who endeavour to gain over Souls to him by ſuch Objects as are in ſome meaſure palpable? A Medium would be neceſſary in this Caſe. Thoſe who are for having the Vulgar deprived of theſe external Succours, by which the Bulk of Mankind are induced to devote themſelves to God, have too exalted a Notion of ſuch Souls as are but little accuſtomed to the Meditation of ſpiritual Things; and thoſe who talk in too pompous Terms of theſe outward Aſſiſtances, make either Hypocrites or Bigots. 'Tis ſurpriſing, that St. Charles Boromeo, when at the Point of Death, ſhould contemplate to the very laſt a Picture wherein our Saviour was repreſented in his Agonies in the Garden of Olives. Should a Saint of ſo elevated a Rank condeſcend ſo far as to put himſelf into the Rank of vulgar Souls? And can we be perſuaded, that he could not lift up his Heart to God without ſome ſuch Object?

Some farther Account of what is obſerved with Regard to ſuch CHRISTIANS as are at the Point of Death.

WHEN a Perſon's laſt Hour is drawing near, and that he has received the Sacrament, made his Will, and ſet his Conſcience in Order, he ſhould be entertain'd with nothing but ſpiritual Diſcourſes. The Prieſt ought to viſit him frequently, in order to draw off his Thoughts from the Things of this Life, diſſolve thoſe Engagements which a Wife and Children in Tears make it difficult for him to break, or which ſerve him for a Pretence to wiſh to remove as far as poſſible, his Journey to Eternity: If the ſick Perſon is bound to make any Reſtitutions, the ſtrongeſt Arguments muſt be employ'd to engage him to it, and that in a juſt and honourable Manner, ſo as not to create Diviſions in his Family, or leſſen his Reputation in the World. The Prieſt muſt not ſuffer the ſick Perſon to bequeath any Wealth to the Church to the Prejudice of his Family, upon pretence of Maſſes, Prayers, and other religious Exerciſes in favour of his Soul. In a word, he muſt not ſuffer a ſick Perſon to deprive his Relations of his Eſtate, which often, by falſe Scruples of Conſcience, is bequeath'd to Prieſts, for the Love of the Heavenly Bliſs, and the Glory of God. A Prieſt muſt likewiſe take care not to impoſe upon Perſons, by terrifying them in their expiring Moments. The Clergy ſhould be forbid to receive ſuch Donations as are unjuſt, and to the Prejudice of private Families; to enveigle by artful Flatteries old Female zealots, and antiquated Debauchees, who think, in the Evening of their Days, to wipe out their Sins by leaving all their Eſtates to Prieſts. This is what we find enjoin'd in the Rituals; we ſhall now give the Particulars of what may be properly called a Ceremony in the laſt Act of a Chriſtian's Life.

We ſhall not repeat the Bleſſing which the Prieſt at the coming into the Houſe, gives to thoſe who inhabit it; his ſprinkling both the ſick Perſon and his Apartment with holy Water; [a] and the repeating of certain Prayers mentioned in the Rituals, at his putting on the Surplice and Purple Stole. Some of theſe Prayers being ended, he again takes up the Sprinkler, in order to ſprinkle the ſick Perſon; then he reads ſome pious Diſcourſe to him, and at his Beginning it, makes the Sign of the Croſs on the Book, on his own Forehead, his Mouth, and his Breaſt, and does the ſame on the Mouth and Breaſt of the ſick Perſon, in caſe he is not able to do it himſelf. If the ſick Perſon be a Woman, ſome of her She-Friends ſhall make theſe Signs of the Croſs inſtead of the Prieſt, who, when he has done reading thoſe pious Diſcourſes, repeats a very ſhort Prayer; after which he lays his Right Hand on the ſick Perſon's Head, makes the Sign of the Croſs over him, ſprinkles him with holy Water, and withdraws; but in caſe the ſick Perſon is juſt ready to expire, the Prieſt muſt not leave him. When he is in this Condition he muſt give him the Croſs, and ſay the Office appointed to recommend the Soul of the dying Perſon to God, through the Interceſſion of the Saints. The lucid Intervals, if I may be allowed the Expreſſion, of the ſick Perſon, muſt be ſpent in Acts of Contrition, of Renunciation of the World and its Pomps, of Charity for our Neighbour, of Faith in the Doctrine of the Church, of Hope in God, &c. "It is alſo fitting, ſays Alet in his Ritual, that the ſick Perſon ſhould be exhorted to confide in "the Prayers of our Lady———, in thoſe of his Guardian Angel, and of the Saint his "Patron, and of all the Saints." Finally, when the ſick Perſon's End is juſt approaching, the Prieſt ſhall take Care to ſprinkle him with holy Water; and in order to endue him with Strength ſufficient to reſiſt the Prince of Darkneſs, ſhall be more preſſing in his Exhortations, if poſſible, than before; ſhall give him the Crucifix to kiſs, and ſet it before his Eyes, in order to ſtrengthen his Confidence in Chriſt Jeſus. The Clerk ſhall then light a conſecrated Taper, if there was none lighted before. The Prieſt and the Perſons preſent ſhall begin the Litanies, and this pious Exerciſe ſhall continue till ſuch Time as the ſick Perſon is juſt going to reſign his Soul, when the Prayers appointed for Perſons in thoſe Circumſtances muſt be read, as we find them inſerted in the [b] Rituals. And when he is juſt going to give up the [c] Ghoſt, the Clerk ſhall, if poſſible, make him give ſome freſh Tokens of his Reſignation to the Will of Heaven, and ſhall not leave him till he has breath'd his Laſt.

[a] Alet's Ritual.

[b] The firſt begins, Proficiſcere Anima Chriſtiana, &c. Depart O Chriſtian Soul! in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; of the Angels, Archangels, Thrones, Powers, Principalities, Cherubims, Seraphims, Patriarchs, Prophets, &c. The ſecond implores the Divine Mercy for him. The third recommends the Soul of the dying Perſon to God. Theſe three Prayers are followed by what is call'd the Libera, which is a Prayer to God to beſeech him that his Soul may be deliver'd from all the Dangers to which it is expoſed at its Departure from this World. After the Libera is over, certain other Prayers are read, and ſome pious Lectures made in caſe there be Opportunity for it.

[c] It is cuſtomary in ſome Places to toll the Bell of the Pariſh Church, to give Notice that one of the Pariſhioners is at the Point of Death, to the End that the reſt may aſſiſt him with their Prayers.

The CEREMONIES obſerv'd at FUNERALS.

THUS have we deſcrib'd the ſeveral Circumſtances of the Devotion of a dying Perſon, and the Ceremonies with which he is prepared to ſet out on his dangerous Journey to Eternity. The Devotion of ſuch as ſurvive conſiſts in praying for the Deceas'd, and teſtifying their Remembrance of him, either by the Solemnity of his Funeral, or their Charity in offering up Prayers, and appointing Maſſes, for the Repoſe of his Soul. When the ſick Perſon has given up the Ghoſt, the Prieſt ſtanding uncover'd, ſays a Reſponſe, in which the Saints and Angels are invoked to aſſiſt the Soul of the Deceaſed: He afterwards repeats a Prayer. At the ſame Time Orders are ſent to toll the Bell, to give Notice of the ſick Perſon's Death, by which every one is minded to pray for his Soul; but it never tolls in the Night.

THEN the Prieſt withdraws; [a] the Corpſe is put in Order; [b] they waſh ſome Parts of it, and lay it in a decent Place, obſerving to put a little Crucifix in its Hands, which muſt lie upon its Breaſt: Sometimes the Hands are laid croſs-wiſe. At its Feet there muſt be placed a Veſſel full of holy Water and a Sprinkler, in order that thoſe who come to pay him their laſt Devoirs, may [c] ſprinkle both themſelves and the Corpſe with holy Water. In the mean [d] Time ſome Clergymen muſt ſtay by the Corpſe, and pray for the Deceaſed, till ſuch Time as he is laid in the Earth. If the Deceaſed was a Prieſt, or of any other Order in the Church, he muſt have the Tonſure according to his Order, and his ſquare Cap with a little Croſs on his Breaſt.

IT was cuſtomary among the Heathens to pray for Souls departed, whereof [e] ſome mention has been already made; the Form of Words, Sit tibi terra levis, is very well known: The Jews obſerve the ſame Cuſtom. 'Twould be very difficult to clear up the Diſpute between the Romaniſts and Proteſtants, viz. what kind of Prayer was offered up for the Dead in the ſecond Century, and which is acknowledged, tho' with ſeveral Diſtinctions, by the [f] Calviniſt Writers. One of theſe ſays, that the Church uſed to pray for the Completion of their Glory; conſequently it was not completed after their Death, and therefore they did not arrive at a State of Bliſs immediately after their Departure out of this World. The above-cited Writer aſcribes to a particular Zeal, tho' unauthoriz'd by the Church, the Favour which the Chriſtians in thoſe Days uſed to aſk of the Martyrs, which was, to pray, after their Deceaſe, for the ſurviving Faithful; by which we may preſume, that the Interceſſion of the Saints in Paradiſe, was thought to be of very great Efficacy in thoſe Ages. Whatever Senſe may be given to the Prayers of the primitive Chriſtians for Souls departed, it is certain they were practiſed in the Time of Conſtantine the Great, ſince the People pray'd for his Soul, as Euſebius informs us in the Life of that Emperor.

[a] That is, they cloſe its Eyes and ſhut its Mouth, according to the antient Practice; they are either wrapp'd in a Shroud, or left with their Clothes on, as in Italy.

[b] Piſcara Praxis Cerem. This Cuſtom is of great Antiquity.

[c] The Antients had a Cuſtom that has ſome Affinity to this: Upon going away from a Corpſe they uſed to waſh themſelves with Water, which was taken out of a Veſſel prepar'd for that Ablution. But this Cuſtom does not ſeem to have much Affinity with that of holy Water, with which thoſe who approach a Corpſe, ſprinkle themſelves. Here follows what diſcovers a greater Affinity: The atient Romans uſed to purify their Dead, by watering them thrice with Water call'd Luſtralis; and this Ceremony was always perform'd by a Prieſt.

[d] A Proteſtant Writer owns that this Cuſtom was in Uſe about an hundred Years after the firſt Nicene Council, and ſays as follows in the Hiſtory of the Ceremonies and Superſtitions, &c. Anno 400; "It was antiently the Cuſtom, as "ſoon as any Perſon was dead, to ſend for ſome Clergyman, who always ſpent the Night with the Relations of the "Deceaſed, and diſcourſed with them about the Word of God, for their Inſtruction. They uſed to ſing Pſalms by "Anthems or Verſes, the one anſwering the other." They recommended the Soul of the Deceaſed to God, and beſought him to preſerve it from Hell, &c.

BUT the Prayers of the primitive, as well as modern Chriſtians, ſuppoſe at leaſt a middle State between the Pains of Hell, and the Felicities of Paradiſe; and indeed without ſuch a Suppoſition, where would be the Aim and Tendency of theſe Prayers? This is the Place call'd Purgatory, and only admits of ſuch Souls as died in the State of Grace. But we are not to imagine that this Purgatory is a material Fire where Men really fry; or Waters in which the Soul is waſh'd from its Sins; or Winds or Ice that purify it. Such like Opinions being maintain'd with a ſerious Countenance, have too groſly impoſed upon great Numbers of ſimple People. The Legend Writers and their Admirers were undoubtedly ignorant that Souls don't occupy Space, and that indiviſible Subſtances cannot be ſubject to Fire, Wind, Ice, &c. 'Tis true, indeed, that this laſt philoſophical Truth overthrows a numberleſs Multitude of Fictions, and quite deſtroys the Diſcoveries the Monks have made for ſeveral Ages paſt in the above-mentioned Fairy Land. It is moreover true, that ſome [a] Doctors in the laſt Age have aſſured us, that Purgatory is a ſubterraneous Place, ſituated "over the Hell of the Damn'd, where "ſuch Souls as have not yet made the full Satisfaction they owe to divine Juſtice for "their Sins, are purged by Fire, after a wonderful, and at the ſame Time incompre-"henſible Manner." However, ſuch Chriſtians as know the true Difference between the Soul and Body, will not eaſily give Credit to ſuch Fictions. We grant the Purgation of Souls, and readily acknowledge, that all ſuch Chriſtians as die in the Fear of the Lord ought to be pray'd for; but then thoſe Souls cannot be puniſh'd after Death in the ſame Manner as while they were united to their Bodies. The moſt rational Idea we can form to ourſelves of Purgatory, is, that the Souls of good Men are ſomewhere tormented for a certain Time after this Life, in order to be purged from thoſe Dregs, which hinder them from entring into their eternal Country, as the Catechiſm of the Council of Trent expreſſes it. But it were to no purpoſe to expatiate on a Subject, of which we cannot poſſibly have any juſt Idea. All we ſhall farther obſerve in this Place, is, that one Part of the Heathens, particularly the Followers of Plato's Philoſophy, believed that Souls were purified by Fire after the Deſtruction of their Bodies. Plato in one of his Dialogues, ſeems to acknowledge a Tribunal, where ſuch Souls as in their Life-Time had been guilty of ſlight Sins, ſhall in the other World be condemn'd to finite Pains, proportionable to the Crimes they had committed. The Reader may ſee a full Account of the Sentiment of that great Philoſopher in the Margin; 'tis to a learned [b] Jeſuit that we are indebted for it. The Eaſt-Indians look upon the Tranſmigration of Souls into different Bodies, as [c] a kind of Purgatory; an Opinion which their Anceſtors borrowed from the Egyptians, from whom the antient heathen Philoſophers had taken it. We might be much more copious on this Subject of Purgatory, and ſuch of the heathen Sentiments as have a Relation to that Doctrine, could it be done in ſuch a Diſſertation as this without Affectation; but this we ſhall leave to the Doctors and the Learned, whoſe Duty it is to defend it againſt the Attacks of the Heretics, who are continually reproaching the Catholics, that their Purgatory is an Invention of Prieſt-craft; that it has given Riſe to a numberleſs Multitude of ſuperſtitious Cuſtoms, and mortuary Ceremonies, all under a Maſk of Piety, but in reality is of no Manner of uſe in religious Matters, though at the ſame Time very well adapted to ſooth the Avarice of the Clergy, and to keep a numberleſs Multitude of fearful Chriſtians in Subjection. It muſt be own'd, that the Scandal which has accrued to Religion, by the groſs Superſtitions of paſt Ages, and the pretended Revelations of ſome ignorant and knaviſh Friars, have afforded but too ſtrong a Handle to the Reproaches of thoſe who have withdrawn themſelves from the Unity of the Church. Is it poſſible for us to read without Indignation of the frequent Apparitions of various Souls which return'd back into this World about ſix or ſeven hundred Years ago; ſome with [a] their Skins burnt, and others worm-eaten; particularly of that [b] which roſe from the Dead, in order to preſerve to St. Staniſlaus the Poſſeſſion of an Inheritance which he had acquir'd for his Church; and which the Saint, in return, deliver'd out of Purgatory? As likewiſe of ſeveral thouſand Souls, who came and complained to their Relations, how that for want of a ſufficient Number of Maſſes, they ſuffer'd very cruel Torments in this Place of Purification? In fine, can one conſider in any other Light but as an Object of Scandal, that Bull of the Carmelites, called Sabbatin, which the firſt Saturday after their Deceaſe takes every Brother of that Order out of Purgatory? thoſe [c] ample Powers diſtributed under the Pontificate of Leo X. by which Souls were to be deliver'd out of Purgatory for Money? and the Order which Pope Clement VI. preſumed to give the [d] Angels to waft ſuch Souls directly to Paradiſe, as had gain'd the Jubilee publiſh'd by his Holineſs? This Order, if we may credit Cornelius Agrippa, in his Treatiſe of the Vanity of Sciences, was extant in his Time at Vienna, and elſewhere.

[b] Father Mourgues in the eleventh Letter of his Theological Plan. "The Soul of every Man is judged immediate-"ly upon its quitting the Body; there are ſome Souls, but theſe, alas! are very few, who are intirely ſound and "healthy; and have nothing to fear from this Tribunal; all the reſt are ſick, ſome whereof are nevertheleſs capa-"ble of Cure, and the others incurable. The healthy Souls wing their Flight to the Elyſian Fields, the Region of "Liberty, where they are freed from all their Evils. Here they complete their Purification, which takes up a "thouſand Years. In order to know what becomes of them afterwards, we muſt diſtinguiſh ſuch as muſt return "into the World, according to the Decrees of Fate, and thoſe who have ended their deſtin'd Progreſs.——— "Theſe laſt paſs into a Region of Felicity, where they enjoy the moſt pure Delights in the continual Contempla-"tion of the divine Word.——— All the ſick Souls ſhape their Courſe towards Tartarus; ſuch of them as are cu-"rable, in order to be healed; and the incurable, to be tormented there. When the former are healed of all "their Illneſſes, by Medicines of a very violent Nature, ſome of them go into the Elyſian Fields, others return to "animate freſh Bodies, which they are indiſpenſably obliged to do, not having yet run their Race. But loſt and "abandon'd Souls, i. e. thoſe which are charg'd with unpardonable Crimes, are never ſuffer'd to go out of Tarta-"rus." Vide the Deſcription which Virgil has given of the Purification of Souls, after the Deſtruction of the Body, in his 6th Æneid.

To return to the Ceremonies uſed at Funerals. The Prieſts and Eccleſiaſtics, after their Deceaſe, are all cloth'd in Habits ſuitable to their reſpective Ranks, as we ſhall ſee in the Sequel; and another Cuſtom which relates to the Miniſters of the Church, is, that the Corpſe of Clergymen are carried to the Grave by the Clergy only, in the ſame Manner as that of a Layman is carried by the Laity. Eccleſiaſtics do not put on Mourning for their Relations, nor accompany them to the Grave in the ſame Order with the other Lay Relations, but walk with the reſt of the Clergy in their ſacerdotal Veſtments. The Proteſtant Clergy have not thought proper to follow this Cuſtom.

The Ceremony of bleſſing CHURCH-YARDS.

CHURCH-YARDS are the Places generally uſed for the Interment of the Dead; for which Purpoſe the Church bleſſes them ſolemnly in the Manner following. This Ceremony muſt be perform'd by a Biſhop, or ſome Prieſt appointed by him. The [f] Eve before the Day on which the Bleſſing is to be perform'd, a [g] wooden Croſs, of the Height of a Man, muſt be ſet up in the Middle of the Church-Yard. Before the Croſs a Piece of Wood muſt be plac'd, about ſixteen Inches high, or thereabouts; on this Piece of Wood three Tapers are plac'd, when the Bleſſing is perform'd.

[d] We command the Angels of Paradiſe to introduce his Soul into the Peace of Heaven, without its being obliged to paſs through Purgatory.

[e] Cimitery is derived from a Greek Word, ſignifying a Place of Sleep; becauſe according to the Stile of the Old and New Teſtament, the Faithful don't die, but ſleep. Hence the Origin of the Name which the primitive Chriſtians gave to the Places in which they buried their Dead.

[f] Alet's Ritual.

[g] Or, according to the Roman Pontifical, five muſt be ſet up, viz. four at the ſeveral Angles of the Church-Yard, and one in the Middle.

The

The next Morning, before the Ceremony begins, a Carpet muſt be ſpread in the Church-Yard near the Croſs; and the ſeveral Things neceſſary for the bleſſing of the Place muſt be got ready, viz. holy Water, the Thuribles, the Tapers, &c. Then the Prieſt, being clothed in his ſacerdotal Veſtments, comes out of the Sacriſty in Proceſſion, attended by an Exorciſt, or Acolyte, carrying the holy Water; another with the Thurible; two Clerks, carrying the Ritual, and three Tapers, made of white Wax; and the whole Choir, walking two and two; with the officiating Prieſt in the Rear, as was obſerved in the other Ceremonies.

BEING come to the Church-Yard, they range themſelves round the Croſs, or Croſſes, if there are ſeveral; when the officiating Prieſt makes a [a] ſhort Diſcourſe to the Aſſiſtants, on the Holineſs, the Privileges, and Immunities of Church-Yards. After this three Tapers are lighted up before that Croſs which ſtands in the Middle; and if there be one at each Angle of the Church-Yard, three are alſo lighted up before theſe. Afterwards the officiating Prieſt riſes up, repeats a Prayer, which is followed by the chaunting of the Litanies; and at the repeating theſe Words, We beſeech thee to purify and bleſs this Church-Yard, he makes the Sign of the Croſs: He does the ſame a ſecond Time, when he repeats them for the Sanctification of the Church-Yard; and a third, in [b] repeating them for the Conſecration. The Litanies being ended, the officiating Prieſt ſprinkles the middle Croſs with holy Water; and whilſt an Anthem and the Miſerere are ſung, he goes round the Church-Yard, and ſprinkles it with holy Water. He afterwards takes one of the lighted Tapers which ſtood at the Foot of the Croſs, and ſets it on the Top of it; takes the other two, and ſets them on the two Arms of the Croſs. At laſt the whole Ceremony ends with incenſing and ſprinkling theſe Croſſes thrice with holy Water.

IF a Church-Yard, which has been thus conſecrated, ſhould afterwards be polluted, by any indecent Action, or profan'd by the Burial of an Infidel, a Heretic, an excommunicated or unbaptiz'd Perſon, it muſt be reconcil'd; and the Ceremony of the Reconciliation is perform'd with the ſame Solemnity as that of the Bleſſing.

THE antient Canons did not allow of the burying any Corpſe whatever in the Body of the Church; but a Cuſtom was inſenſibly introduc'd of interring there ſuch Perſons only as were diſtinguiſh'd for their Holineſs. The Emperors themſelves were then buried but at the Church-Doors; while the [c] Inſide was reſerv'd for our Saviour and his Saints only. The Saints, however, were not ſuffer'd to lie a long Time without Company. A great Number of [d] Chriſtians, either through Fear of what was to come hereafter, or for their own Security, deſir'd to be interr'd near them, as they hop'd to be ſcreen'd from the Puniſhments due to them by the Merits of thoſe, who, to uſe the Words of St. Maximus, had made themſelves formidable to Hell. Afterwards not only ſuch of the Clergy as had led exemplary Lives, were ſuffer'd to be buried in the Church, but likewiſe thoſe who were remarkable for nothing but the Dignity to which they had been rais'd. At laſt the Laity themſelves were admitted without Diſtinction, as is the Cuſtom at this preſent Time.

'TIS likewiſe affirm'd, that the primitive Chriſtians would not ſuffer the Bodies of the Heathens to be interr'd near thoſe of the Chriſtians, and 'tis from this antient Cuſtom that Heretics and Infidels are ſtill buried in unconſecrated Ground. The primitive Church preſerv'd for a long Time the Order enacted by the twelve Tables, of [a] having the Burial-Places without the City; which laudable and uſeful Cuſtom does not ſeem to have been diſcontinued till the Reign of Theodoſius the Emperor. Others are of Opinion, that it began to be omitted under the Pontificate of Gregory the Great. Be this as it will, as the Tranſlation of the Relics of the holy Martyrs was very common at that Time, and the Devotion of the Age run mightily after the burying Chriſtians near the Bodies of thoſe who were diſtinguiſh'd for the Sanctity of their Lives, 'tis very probable that ſovereign Princes ſoon allow'd the having Church-Yards in Cities.

Ceremonies relating to BURIAL.

MAN does not always conſider Death as a State of Humiliation, though nothing can be more mortifying than to be ſtripp'd of a Body, which, by the Diſſolution of its ſeveral Parts, is decreed to be the Food of Worms, and to be trodden under Foot like the Duſt of the Earth, after having been the Inſtrument of his Pleaſures, his Paſſions, and his Voluptuouſneſs; after having been the Cauſe of the moſt ſurpriſing Revolutions, and of the moſt difficult and ingenious Actions that can be imagin'd. However, all theſe Reflections are not ſtrong enough to abate his Pride; he is too much elated to prevail with himſelf to go ſilently to a kind of Annihilation; and indeed we meet with very few who are not deſirous of being remembred by Poſterity; and the leaſt of a Man's Ambition is to live ſome Time after he has left this World in the Memory of his Fellow-Citizens, by the Pomp of his Interment. But theſe Things do in reality very ill compenſate the Loſs of Life. However, ſince the Law which has decreed all Men to die is inevitable, we cannot forbear ſeeking for ſuch Objects in Death as may flatter our Vanity, proportionable to the Part we have acted on the Stage of Life. If, to borrow the Expreſſions of a great Poet, the [a] Titles of Sovereigns of the Earth, Arbiters of Peace, &c. periſh with thoſe who in their Life-Time made the whole World tremble, they endeavour to preſerve all their Haughtineſs in their Monuments, and their Subjects ape them in it as near as poſſible; but both Sovereign and Subject act in this Manner, purely to compenſate for the little Duration which Nature has granted to Man; at the ſame Time that inanimate Beings, or ſuch as are endued only with a vegetative Life, have a much longer Term allotted them than the moſt excellent of all created Beings, endued with human Life.

SUCH are the Complaints of thoſe who don't ſee any Thing in Man but what is inferior to the reſt of created Beings, and who only conſider him as a Portion of Matter expoſed continually to the different Changes it is forced to undergo, becauſe of the different Contexture of its Parts; but cannot conceive any Thing beyond this. 'Tis certain, that the Life of Man is very ſhort; but would it be a very agreeable one, did it reſemble that of Oaks and Fir-Trees, which wakens the Enthuſiaſm of the Poet? But a good Chriſtian argues upon ſounder Principles, by ſaying that Death is to Man a State of Penance, a Satisfaction which God has requir'd at his Hands, to attone for his Inſult of the Divine Majeſty by Sin. Agreeable therefore to this Idea, we ought to lay aſide the vain Pomp of Burials, and Funeral Monuments: And were we but guided by this genuine Principle, we ſhould leave no other Trophies of our Grandeur than Prayers and Alms. But ſtill Vanity would intrude itſelf even into theſe Motives, and the Eloquence of the Clergy would conſecrate them to Fame by their eternal Eulogiums. Immortality is as certainly obtained by Alms, by pious Foundations, and particularly by thoſe Legacies which charitable Perſons bequeath to Friars, Prieſts, and Convents, as by military Exploits, the Virtues of civil Life, or Brightneſs of Genius.

THE common Cuſtom amongſt us is to keep a Corpſe four and twenty Hours above Ground; but in ſome Countries they are kept five or ſix Days, particularly in Holland, where they are often kept ſeven. Here follow the Ceremonies ordained by the Rituals to thoſe who are allow'd [a] Chriſtian Burial. Theſe Cuſtoms vary in certain Circumſtances; but in general, when the Time is come for the Corpſe to be carried to Church, Notice thereof muſt be given by the tolling of a Bell, to the Prieſts, and other Clergymen, whoſe Province it is to aſſiſt at the Funeral, to aſſemble in proper Order, cloth'd in their ſacerdotal Veſtments, in the Pariſh, or any other Church, where they are to pray. After this the Rector puts his black Stole and Chaſuble over his Surplice, when they all ſet out to the Houſe where the Corpſe lies; the Exorciſt carrying the holy Water walks firſt, next the Croſs-Bearer, afterwards the reſt of the Clergy, and laſt of all the officiating Prieſt: And in this Order they all ſet out towards the Houſe of the Deceaſed, whoſe Corpſe muſt be either laid out at the Street-Door, or in ſome [b] Apartment near it, with his Feet turned towards the Street, which the Rituals ſay muſt be obſerved, tho' the Deceaſed were a Prieſt. We muſt not omit, that the Coffin is ſurrounded with four or ſix lighted Tapers of yellow Wax, in as many large Candleſtics. When the Clergy is come to the Houſe where the Corpſe lies, the Croſs-Bearer plants himſelf, if poſſible, at the Head of it; the officiating Prieſt over-againſt him, at the Feet, the Perſon who carries the holy Water, a little behind the officiating Prieſt, at his Right Hand, and the other Perſons of the Choir range themſelves on each Side, obſerving to ſtand nearer or farther off from the officiating Prieſt, in proportion to their Rank of Superiority in the Church. Every Thing muſt be order'd in this Manner, provided there be Room for it; for it often happens, that the Croſs ſtands at the Door, on that Side where the Funeral is to go, and that the Choir are obliged to range themſelves on each Side, in order to leave Room for the officiating Prieſt in the Middle. During this Interval the

[a] Chriſtian Burial is not allowed to Jews, Apoſtates, Infidels, Heretics, Schiſmatics, Perſons excommunicated, or under an Interdict; to thoſe who having ſtruck a Clergyman have not made Satisfaction for it before their Death; to Suicides, or ſuch as loſt their Lives in Duels; to Blaſphemers, or ſuch as have committed any enormous Crime: Laſtly, to thoſe who have not followed the Injunctions of the Church, with regard to Confeſſion and Communion.

[b] It was cuſtomary among the Greeks and Romans to ſet the Corpſe in the Entry of the Houſe, with their Feet turn'd towards the Door; and as both theſe Nations, as well as the Jews, thought that the Living were polluted by touching the Dead, a Veſſel of Luſtral Water was always placed at the Door, to ſprinkle thoſe who either went in or came out of the Houſe.

Tapers and Torches of yellow Wax are lighted, and given to thoſe who are appointed to carry them.

THE Cuſtom of carrying lighted Tapers at Funerals began among the Chriſtians, after that Peace was reſtored to the Church; or rather, it was then renewed by the Chriſtians, having before been a Practice among the Romans. As the Chriſtians diſtinguiſhed themſelves in all Things as much as poſſible from the Heathens, they probably rejected this Cuſtom as long as they continued under the Yoke of Paganiſm; not to mention that the Chriſtians, during the Ages of Perſecution, were not allowed to bury their Dead with Pomp. The Doctors of the Church, to give the greater Sanction to this Cuſtom, tell us, that the Torches and Tapers lighted on theſe Occaſions, denote [a] Faith operating with Charity, in which it is preſumed the Perſon died. This Idea might in ſome meaſure agree with the Origin which a [b] Proteſtant Writer gives of this Cuſtom, or rather one of the [c] Saints of the Church before him. "The Lamps lighted at Funerals, "ſays St. Chryſoſtom, ſignify that we accompany the Deceas'd like ſo many generous "Champions." It was uſual among the Grecks to attend upon their victorious Warriors with lighted Torches and Tapers.

THE officiating Prieſt ſtanding before the Croſs with his Face turned towards the Body, the Aſſiſtant who carries the holy Water preſents him the Sprinkler, with which the Prieſt ſprinkles the Corpſe thrice in the ſame Part, without ſaying a Word. Then giving back the Sprinkler, he begins a [d] proper Anthem, but does not repeat it throughout, becauſe two Choriſters begin immediately to chaunt the Pſalm De profundis, whence this Anthem is taken. The two Sides of the Choir continue it alternately, ſtanding oppoſite to one another; and at the Concluſion the following Words are pronounced: Requiem æternam dona ei, Domine, & lux perpetua luceat ei; i. e. O Lord, give the Deceaſed eternal Reſt, and may thy everlaſting Light ſhine upon him. After this the Anthem Si Iniquitates is again repeated; then the officiating Prieſt begins with another, viz. Exultabant Domino oſſa, &c. which likewiſe is not all repeated, for two Choriſters immediately begin the Miſerere, which the Clergy go on with alternately: This done, the Proceſſion ſets out towards the Church, in the following Manner.

[e] THE Taper-Bearers walk firſt; then the ſeveral Fraternities of Laymen, in caſe there be any; afterwards the Clergy, two and two, at a ſuitable Diſtance; before whom the Perſon walks who carries the holy Water, and the Croſs-Bearer. But the Plate [f] repreſenting a Funeral as ſolemniz'd at Paris, is ſomething different from this Deſcription. Herein we ſee ſeveral Children of the [g] Hoſpital of the Foundlings at the Head of the Proceſſion, with each a Taper in his Hand; and afterwards the Croſs-Bearer, and next the Clergy, all of them carrying lighted Tapers. The officiating Prieſt walks laſt, immediately before the Corps. All theſe are cover'd, not excepting the Croſs-Bearer, and the Officer who carries the holy Water. They all ſing the Miſerere, and ſome other Pſalms, if it be neceſſary; and at the End of each Pſalm the Requiem is ſung. This Cuſtom of ſinging at Funerals is as old as that of carrying Torches at them, as appears from ſevereral Paſſages in the Writings of the 4th and 5th Centuries, which it would be needleſs to cite. The Greeks and Romans us'd to ſing alſo at their Funerals; but what Affinity ſoever there may appear between their Cuſtoms and ours, they nevertheleſs proceed from different Motives. Among us Pſalms and Anthems are ſung for the Relief of Souls departed; whereas thoſe People uſed to ſing the Eulogiums of their Dead, and intermix them with [a] Complaints full of Regret. They had their [b] Mock-Weepers, and [c] Hir'd-Singers: Their Lamentations were heightened with Flutes and Trumpets ſounding mournfully. [d] The Relations of the Deceas'd, and ſome of his Friends, uſed to call upon him with a loud Voice, almoſt like a Singing Tone. We ſhall farther obſerve, that there were a kind of Singers among the earlieſt Romans, whoſe Buſineſs was to ſing certain [e] Songs over the Dead, the Subject whereof is not well known; but we may preſume it was intended to promote the Felicity of the departed Soul, ſince thoſe antient Heathens were of Opinion, that the [f] Harmony of Muſic made Souls find out the Paths to Heaven more eaſily. Moreover the Funeral-Songs of the Antients were of three Kinds: In the firſt Place during the Proceſſion ſome were ſung in praiſe of the Dead, and to deplore his Loſs; then they ſung at the Pile; and laſtly, while the Aſhes were gathering up, Perſons hir'd for that Purpoſe, uſed to ſing a kind of Prayer with a loud Voice, to which the People made Reſponſes; and [g] this mournful Concert between the People and the hir'd Singers, continued till ſuch Time as all the Aſhes were got together. Then the whole Aſſembly was diſmiſſed by the Word Ilicet, i. e. Go your Ways, or rather, You are permitted to go. This is all the Conformity that can be found between the Funeral-Songs of the Greeks and Romans, and thoſe of the Chriſtians.

It appears, that in St. Jerom's Time the Clergy were enjoined to aſſiſt at the Burial of Chriſtians with Tapers in their Hands, and to ſing Hymns in their Honour, and for their Sakes.

The Corpſe follows immediately after the Clergy, carried in the Manner exhibited in the Plate, with ſeveral Children, belonging to the Hoſpital of the Foundlings, with Torches in their Hands, walking on each Side of it. Then come the Relations of the Deceaſed, in long mourning Clokes; afterwards the Friends, and laſtly, all thoſe who had any Eſteem for the Deceaſed, follow the Proceſſion. In ſome, both Proteſtant and Romiſh Countries, Women alſo aſſiſt at Burials, and walk after the Men: Which was likewiſe the Cuſtom among the Antients; but there was a Law among the Greeks, by which all Women under ſixty were forbid to aſſiſt at them. But it appears, that among the Romans, their Women uſed to aſſiſt at their Funerals, ſince the She-Relations and Friends of the Deceas'd uſed to make moſt of the Preparations for the Funeral. As to the Mourning of a Son, or next Heir, &c. it conſiſted of a long black or very [h] dark-grey Robe, which anſwer'd almoſt to our long mourning Clokes. The Sons of the Deceaſed uſed to walk with their Heads cover'd, but the Daughters with their Heads bare, and their Hair all diſhevell'd.

When the Proceſſion is got to the Church-Door, Requiem is ſaid, and the Anthem repeated which begins with theſe Words, Exultabunt Domino oſſa Humiliata. Being come into the Church, they ſing a [i] Reſponſe, which is begun by one or two Choriſters, and continued by the Choir alternately, in order that the Saints and Angels may take the Soul of the Deceas'd into their Care, and preſent it to God.

IN performing the Service for the Dead, the Corpſe, if the Deceas'd was a Clergyman, is placed in the Choir; but in the Nave, if he was a Layman. The Prieſts have their Heads turn'd towards the Altar. Alet's Ritual [a] ſays, "That the Faces of deceaſed Laymen muſt be turn'd towards the Altar, when they are placed in the Church, and thoſe of the Clergy towards the People; to ſhew, with regard to the former, that in this laſt Paſſage, they ought to go to God by Jeſus Chriſt; and with Reſpect to the latter, that being united to him by their Miniſtry, they behold the People, by continuing their Care for their Salvation, even after their Death." Round the Corpſe four lighted Tapers, at leaſt, muſt be ſet; but eight are exhibited in the Plate, which repreſents the Expoſition of the Corpſe in the Choir. As to the Service for the Dead, we cannot oblige our Readers better therein than by giving an Abſtract of what is ordained in Alet's Ritual upon that Head. The Order and the Ceremony differ according to the various Regulations eſtabliſhed in different Dioceſſes; but theſe are of too little Conſequence to be taken Notice of here. The Corpſe being placed either in the Choir, or Nave of the Church, "the Croſs-Bearer plants himſelf at its Head, and the officiating "Prieſt at its Feet, but not directly in the Middle, when they are turn'd towards the "Altar: The Clergy range themſelves on each Side, in much the ſame Order as in "the Plate, with their Faces turn'd towards each other; and thoſe of the loweſt Or-"der in the Church ſtand neareſt the Croſs."——After having ſaid the [b] Office of the Dead, Maſs is ſaid, if the Time will permit it, with the Ceremonies ſuitable to the Maſſes of the [c] Dead. After Maſs the officiating Prieſt, preceded by the Incenſe-Bearer, the Officer who carries the holy Water, the Croſs-Bearer, the Taper-Bearers, and the Choir, advances towards the Corpſe. He firſt reads the Prayer which begins with theſe Words, Non intres in Judicium, &c. i. e. Enter not into Judgment, &c. After this the Choriſters begin the Libera, which is continued by the Choir; then the officiating Prieſt ſays Pater-Noſter aloud, and the Choir repeats it with a low Voice. Mean while the Deacon preſents the Sprinkler to the officiating Prieſt, "who ſprinkles the Corpſe "thrice with holy Water, (obſerving to begin on its Right, i. e. on the Goſpel-Side) at "the Feet, at the Middle, and at the Head.——Having ſprinkled one Side, he goes to "the other——and ſprinkles the Corpſe thrice on the other Side, in the ſame Manner. "——He then returns the Sprinkler to the Deacon, who gives him the Thurible.—— "He incenſes thrice the Body on one Side, and as often on the other, in the ſame "Manner as it had been ſprinkled." The Rituals inform us, that the Incenſe denotes the Charity which the Church has for the Deceaſed. The Incenſing being ended, the Prayer, Deus, cui proprium eſt miſereri, &c. is offered up, in which the officiating Prieſt beſeeches God to command the unbodied Spirits to take the Soul of the Deceaſed into their Charge, and to conduct it to Heaven.

THIS Prayer ended, the Corpſe is carried to the Grave, in the ſame Order that it was brought to the Church. The officiating Prieſt immediately covers himſelf, as do alſo thoſe of the Choir, at their going out of Church: The Singers begin an Anthem, [d] which the Choir continues very ſlowly as they walk, and which they repeat over again after it is ended, in caſe it be neceſſary; as for inſtance, if the Church-Yard where the Corpſe is to be buried is at a conſiderable Diſtance from the Church. In which caſe ſome Pſalms may likewiſe be added, to lengthen it out; the whole is perform'd with the utmoſt Gravity, and in the Tone appointed by the Breviaries and Rituals. Being come to the Grave, the whole Company pull off their Hats, and draw up in much the ſame

Order

Order as at Church. The Bearers lay the Corpſe near the Grave, with its Feet turned towards the Eaſt, it being affirmed that our Saviour was buried in that Manner. Be this as it will, this Cuſtom was long in Uſe before the Time of Venerable Bede, who mentions it in his Works. The Deceaſed, ſet in this Poſition, looks towards the Almighty, riſing from the Eaſt, who is the Sovereign Creator of all Things. However we ſhall juſt obſerve, that the Cuſtom of laying the Corpſes of the Dead with their Faces towards the Eaſt, was generally practis'd among the antient Greeks, tho' this Rule admitted ſome Exceptions, the Athenians turning their Faces towards the Weſt. If the Corpſe be buried in the Church, its Feet muſt be turn'd towards the Altar; but thoſe of Prieſts muſt have their Heads turn'd contrarywiſe, in the Manner above-mention'd.

AFTER the Body has been laid on its Brink, the officiating Prieſt bleſſes the Grave by a Prayer, in which he makes the general Commemoration of the Dead who have been interr'd therein. The Prayer being ended, he again ſprinkles and incenſes the Body thrice, as alſo the Grave. He afterwards begins this Anthem, Ego ſum Reſurrectio, &c. I am the Reſurrection and the Life, &c. and concludes with the Requiem. Then the officiating Prieſt performs a third Time the triple Sprinkling the Corpſe with holy Water, but does not incenſe it; which is followed by another Prayer, with the Anthem Si Iniquitates and the De Profundis. The Body being laid in the Grave, the Relations and Friends of the Deceas'd come, before the Earth is thrown into it, and ſprinkle it with holy Water, in their Turns; after which the Company condole the Relations of the Deceas'd in a dumb Compliment, as they walk before them, as we ſee repreſented in the Plate: Which being done, they all return back.

AFTER the Maſs for the Deceas'd is ended, the Funeral-Sermon is preach'd. Among the antient Greeks it was never pronounced till the Corpſe was interr'd; but the Romans varied very much from this Cuſtom. The Proceſſions, before they were arrived at the Pile where the Body was to be burnt, uſed to ſtop at the Roſtra, or Places whence the Orators uſed to harangue the People; and the neareſt Relations of the Deceaſed, or the Perſon who had the greateſt Regard for his Memory, went up into the Roſtrum, and pronounced an Oration in his Praiſe. A Father uſed to harangue in praiſe of his Son; a Husband in praiſe of his Wife. But this ſeems to have been a very ungrateful Office, in what Light ſoever we conſider it, whether the Grief was real or fictitious. Is it not much more natural that a Clergyman ſhould perform this Part, as is the Cuſtom among us? La Mothe le Vayer tells us in the 137th Letter of the Second Volume of his Works in Folio, that the Spaniards never have any Sermons preach'd at their Funerals.

SOMETIMES the Funeral happens in a Seaſon when Maſs cannot be ſaid, in which Caſe the Ceremony is perform'd with much greater Simplicity; for then the Corpſe is only ſprinkled and incenſed by a Prieſt, cloth'd in his black Chaſuble, and accompanied with two Clerks, the one carrying the Croſs, and the other the Sprinkler and the Thurible.

THE primitive Chriſtians obſerved two very remarkable Cuſtoms with regard to their Dead; the firſt was to lay a [a] green Turf, or ſome ſuch Thing, under their Heads, a Cuſtom that Durant recommends in his Rationale in theſe Words: "Let Ivy and "Laurel be laid in the Coffin under the Corpſe; for thoſe Plants which always keep "green, ſignify that ſuch as die in Chriſt, live eternally in him." The other Cuſtom which they obſerv'd, and which ſeems to border upon Superſtition [b] was, not to lay the Bodies of their Dead upon one another. However, this Cuſtom ſeem'd to be of ſo much Conſequence, that a Council aſſembled at Macon, made a Decree for the Obſervation thereof. We are likewiſe to obſerve, that in the primitive Ages, ſuch as died Virgins were buried with Crowns and Chaplets of Flowers round their Heads. Great Perſons and Eccleſiaſtics were buried with the Marks of their Dignity; and Martyrs with the Inſtruments which had been employ'd in their Martyrdom.

AFTER all theſe Funeral-Honours are over, the officiating Prieſt is paid. The Poor only are exempted from this [a] Expence, in whoſe Favour the Rectors are obliged to furniſh the Tapers, and every Thing that is neceſſary for the Burial. Among the Greeks it was alſo cuſtomary to pay for the Burial of the Dead. Ariſtotle relates, in his OEconomics, Book II. that for every Corpſe two Meaſures of Corn of an Obolus were given to the Prieſteſs of Minerva at Athens. We muſt not forget the ridiculous Cuſtom of putting a Piece of Silver into the Mouth of the Deceaſed, to pay Charon for Ferrying him over the Styx. We may naturally ſuppoſe, that either the Prieſt got this Money, or thoſe who ſuper-intended the Funeral. Another remarkable Cuſtom of the Antients, and which is eſtabliſhed in moſt Countries in Chriſtendom, was, to have peculiar Church-Yards for the [b] Poor, and the meaner Sort of People.

ALET informs us [c] in his Ritual, that no one ought to be buried before he has been dead four and twenty Hours; but this Cuſtom is not ſo general but that it admits of a great many Exceptions, in all Catholic Countries, not excepting France, where this Ritual was writ. Plato, in his Laws, would have a Corpſe kept three Days, agreeable to the Cuſtom of the Age in which he lived. The Romans kept their Dead ſeven Days, burnt them the eighth, and buried them the ninth. During the firſt ſeven Days they were waſhed, anointed, kiſſed, probably out of mere Ceremony, wept and bewailed, and called aloud by their Names, which Ceremony was call'd Conclamare.

BY the ſame Ritual of Dr. Alet, all Rectors, Curates, and other Prieſts, invited to a Burial, and the Funeral Service of the Dead, are forbid to go and dine with thoſe who had appointed the Funeral, and for this Reaſon: Becauſe at theſe kind of Entertainments there generally happen Things altogether inconſiſtent with the Modeſty which a Clergyman ought to obſerve in his Converſation; which makes the Laity loſe the Reſpect they ought to have for the Dignity of the Prieſthood. This is the Deciſion of the above-cited Ritual.

ALL civilized Nations have thought themſelves indiſpenſably obliged to pay certain Teſtimonies of Reſpect to ſuch as are willing to join with them in their Tears, ſhare their Loſſes, and comfort them under Afflictions. An Entertainment given in this View does no-ways claſh with the Laws of Good-Breeding; but it is ſurpriſing, that very polite Nations ſhould formerly, and ſtill continue to make theſe Entertainments an Occaſion of Riot and Exceſs. It was cuſtomary among the Greeks to give ſuch Funeral-Entertainments as had rather the Air of Joy than Mourning. The Romans had their Parentalia, which were performed with no leſs Solemnity or Licentiouſneſs: All which, as [d] Lucian tells us, was done to diſpel the Grief of thoſe who ſur-

[b] Hoc miſeræ plebi ſtabat commune ſepulchrum, Hor. Sat. viii. lib. 1. Among the Romans there were no more than four Bearers to a Corpſe, as is manifeſt from this Paſſage in Martial:

vived. [a] The Germans make very expenſive, as well as riotous Banquets, for all who are invited to a Funeral. The Dutch have the ſame Cuſtom, attended with the ſame Abuſes; and neither of them ſcruple to drink to great Exceſs on theſe Occaſions. Perhaps ſome Excuſe might be made for theſe ridiculous Cuſtoms.

As to the Manner of inviting to Burials, 'tis well known that the preſent Cuſtom is to give Tickets, and that Perſons are employ'd for that Purpoſe, clothed in Black, to denote the Mourning, and the Function, for which they are appointed. The antient Romans had alſo Perſons appointed for the ſame Purpoſe, call'd Deſignatores. Theſe Perſons uſed to give notice of the Day of Burial, and repeated it when the Corpſe was ready to go to the Grave; for it was look'd upon as an indiſpenſable Duty to accompany the Corpſe to the Funeral Pile, or Sepulchre; and the more numerous the Company, the more the Deceaſed was honoured. Nay, ſo great was their Vanity, that they cauſed Inſcriptions to be put on their Tombs, declaring that their Corpſe was attended with a [b] great Concourſe of People.

We muſt now make ſome mention of the Commemoration of the Dead. Their Memory is ſolemnized the third, the ſeventh, and the thirtieth Day, not to mention the Anniverſary. If we are to give credit to ſome Doctors of the Church, this Inſtitution is of great Antiquity; and 'tis certain that ſome Writers, cotemporary with Charlemain, mention it as a Cuſtom which was then of ſome ſtanding. Be this as it will, the Doctors of the Church have not omitted to ſeek for the myſtical Explication of theſe Ceremonies. They tell us, that the Service of the third Day is for Sins committed in Thoughts, Words, and Actions; againſt God, one's Neighbour, and one's ſelf; at leaſt, that this Service is an Emblem of the Reſurrection. We may judge by this Interpretation, of thoſe which are given for the other Services; but without ſubtilizing ſo much, we had better own ingenuouſly, that theſe [c] Commemorations have been piouſly transferr'd from Heatheniſm to Chriſtianity.

[d] We are told, that in all Church-Yards, ſome Place ſhould be ſet a-part for the Burial of ſuch Children as died before they came to Years of Diſcretion, "becauſe the "Bodies of thoſe little Children muſt be conſider'd as ſo many Temples, which had "always been inhabited by the Holy Ghoſt, and conſequently ought to be buried in a "Place ſeparate from the reſt. The Ceremonies obſerved at their Interment are diffe-"rent from thoſe of the Adult. We beg of God to pardon the Sins of the latter; but "we thank him for preſerving little Children from the Corruption of Mankind." The Office for theſe conſiſts in Prayer, Pſalms of Praiſe, and Thanks to God, for his Goodneſs in taking them to himſelf. However, notwithſtanding the great Purity of Children, [e] they yet are admitted into Paradiſe through heavenly Grace and Mercy alone, and conſequently without meriting it; whereas the Adult receive it as a Reward for having faithfully fought in the Warfare of Chriſt Jeſus, and under his Banner. This is ſignified by carrying the Croſs on a long Pole at the Burial of grown Perſons; whereas at that of Children, it is carried in a Man's Hand. Moreover, Maſs may be ſaid over the Bodies of Infants, to thank God for his Goodneſs, in taking them to himſelf, while they remain'd in the State of Innocence.

HERE follows the Manner of burying ſuch Children as die after Baptiſm. The Bell tolls, but in a different Manner than at the Interment of grown Perſons. Neither Palls, black Ornaments, nor Tapers made of yellow Wax, muſt be us'd on this Occaſion; all the Ornaments and Tapers muſt be white. The Corpſe muſt be dreſs'd according to the Age of the Deceaſed, obſerving that it be done with Modeſty; and that a Crown of Flowers, or odoriferous Herbs, be ſet on its Head, as a Token of Innocence and Purity. Four or ſix Wax-Tapers, lighted, muſt be ſet round their Coffin. The Prieſt who performs the Ceremony of Burial, wears a white Stole over his Surplice; but there is nothing particular in the reſt of the Ceremony except that after the Burial the Libera is not to be ſung in the Church-Yard, nor any other Deprecations for the Dead.

As to ſuch Children as die unbaptiz'd, they are not ſuffer'd to be buried in conſecrated Ground, and that becauſe they did not die in Communion with the Church. As they never were admitted into it, they are not to be pray'd for. As they had not waſh'd out the Spots of their original Sin by Baptiſm, they are look'd upon as excluded from the State of Innocence, in which ſuch Children as are baptized, die. But if it ſhould be aſked, whether thoſe who die unbaptiz'd, are loſt, and muſt fry in Hell through their Parents Negligence, or becauſe they were born in a Religion which refuſes to acknowledge Chriſt for the Saviour of the World? I anſwer, No; to ſay otherwiſe would be the higheſt Cruelty. They have a Place allotted for them, call'd Limbo; where they are to dwell to all Eternity. Some Writers aſſure us that this Limbo is ſituated in the upper Region of Hell; but we have only their Word for it.

WE ſhall conclude this Article with obſerving, that almoſt all the Heathens, both antient and modern, ſeem to have ranſack'd their Imaginations for the moſt whimſical Ceremonies they could deviſe at the Burial of their Dead. We ſhall take notice hereafter of the extravagant Cuſtoms of the Americans on this Head, for the leaſt whimſical whereof we have endeavour'd to account from rational Principles. The antient Egyptians gave a kind of Immortality to their Dead, by their wonderful Art of embalming them, the Secret whereof is now loſt; but the Perſians on the contrary, if we may give credit to ſome Hiſtorians, gave their Dead a Prey to wild Beaſts. However, Herodotus tells us, that they buried them afterwards, which Cuſtom he ſays was peculiar to the Magi; whereas the other Perſians uſed to cruſt their Bodies over with Wax, in order to preſerve them. Beſides, the Cuſtom of expoſing their Dead to Beaſts cannot have been very general, ſince modern Travellers take notice of ſeveral magnificent Ruins of the Monuments of the antient Perſians. Farther, we have the Teſtimony of Xenophon in the eighth Book of his Cyropædia, not to mention ſeveral other Authors, who relate that the Perſians had the Cuſtom of burying the Dead. The Parthians and Bactrians uſed to caſt their Dead to the Dogs and Birds; the Inhabitants of Pontus Euxinus devour'd the Bodies of their deceaſed Parents; and ſome People of Aſia did not permit their aged People to die a natural Death, but uſed to kill them, in order, as they ſaid, to free them from the Infirmities of old Age. From this Principle, Children thought it was a charitable Act in them to ſhorten the Days of their decrepid Parents; and in order to prevent their languiſhing in thoſe Diſeaſes with which old Age is oppreſs'd, they uſed to ſtab them, and afterwards devour their Bodies, imagining they thereby re-united themſelves to thoſe, of whoſe Subſtance they had been a Part, before their Birth. The Heruli, as Cælius Rhodiginus, Book xvii. Lectio. antiq. relates, treated all their aged People, and ſuch as were afflicted with any mortal Diſeaſe, after the ſame barbarous Manner. The Barcæans expoſed the Bodies of their Dead to Vulturs, becauſe the long Life of theſe Birds was ſome Image of Eternity; which kind of Interment was look'd upon as ſo honourable, that it was indulged only to Perſons of Merit, none being buried but the meaneſt Sort of People, and ſuch as had lived in Obſcurity. Several Nations of Antiquity uſed to burn their Dead, the Greeks for Inſtance, and the Romans their Imitators. However, there were ſome Exceptions to this Rule among the latter, and 'tis probable that they obſerved the Cuſtom alſo of burying the Dead without burning them, as was practiſed by the Family of the Cornelii, although Sylla order'd his [a] Body ſhould be burnt after his Death, for fear the Romans ſhould treat it in the ſame Manner as he had done that of Marius his Enemy. The Greeks likewiſe varied ſometimes from the general Rule; for Themiſtocles and Braſidas, both Grecian Generals, were buried. 'Tis very probable that all the above-mention'd Nations uſed originally to bury their Dead; it being the moſt rational, moſt natural Practice, and moſt worthy of human Nature; but in Proceſs of Time, Mankind, from a peculiar Delicacy, intermix'd with Superſtition, to which Men are too prone, thought proper to burn their dead Bodies, probably to purge or diſincumber them of all their groſs and terreſtrial Particles; for the receiv'd Opinion was, that Fire wafts the divine Part of Man to Heaven, and leaves his impure and corruptible Part behind on Earth. One would think theſe Antients underſtood by ſuch Notions a Diſtillation, or Separation of the Elements, like that whereby our modern Chymiſts make their new Diſcoveries. We ſhall here omit the various Methods of burning the Dead and the Living along with them, it being our Deſign to take notice thereof in the Sequel.

It was antiently a Cuſtom among ſeveral Nations to throw their Dead into the Water; ſome chuſing Lakes, and others Ponds; ſome again Rivers, and others in ſhort the Sea. All the ridiculous Cuſtoms of theſe People were doubtleſs founded on ſome Reaſon or other; and who can tell but they might therein follow the Opinion of Thales, who look'd upon Water as the Principle of all Things? or perhaps they might pretend that the Waters into which they threw their Dead, purged them from the Filth they had contracted in this Life. Here follow ſome other Cuſtoms ſtill more fantaſtical, and more unworthy the Dignity of human Nature. The Inhabitants of Colchis, and the Tibarenians, uſed to hang their Dead upon the Branches of Trees in their Woods and Foreſts, firſt ſewing them up in Ox-Skins; whereas the antient Goths uſed to do their Princes the Honour to hang them up without all this Pomp, as poſſibly thinking it ſavour'd too much of Vanity. Cælius Rhodiginus tells us in his 17th Book, Chap. xix. that it was cuſtomary amongſt the Troglodites to make their Dead up in a Bundle, thruſting their Head between their Legs, and afterwards tying them together with a Rope; after which they carried them into the Fields, and there left them a Prey to wild Beaſts. The Sabæans threw their Dead, not excepting their Kings themſelves, among the Filth upon the Dunghils. Perhaps the greateſt Part of theſe Barbarians might be of the ſame Opinion with Mæcenas, viz. that Sepelit natura relictos, Nature takes care to bury the Dead; but unhappily for that Wit of antient Rome, This is a falſe Notion. The People of the Balearean Iſlands, now Majorca and Minorca, who were not altogether ſo barbarous, uſed to cut the Bodies of their Dead to Pieces, and afterwards put them up in earthen Pots. The Phrygians uſed to lay the Bodies of their Prieſts upon high Pillars, whether it were to denote that the Prieſts are ſuperior to other Men, or to teach them that they ought to ſerve for Examples, even after their Death. The Naſamonians uſed to clothe their deceaſed Warriors and Captains in White; and inſtead of burying them afterwards, always laid them on Rocks and in Deſarts. The Macrobii, a People of Africa, uſed to encruſt their Dead with Parget, or Plaiſter, and ſhut them up in Pillars of Glaſs. In this kind of Monument they kept them in their Houſes, and there offer'd them their Firſt-Fruits. But this Cuſtom is not altogether ſo ridiculous as it appears at firſt Sight; it being follow'd not only by the People who bor-der'd on the Nile, but we are even aſſur'd that thoſe of Alexandria, ſhew'd the Relics of Alexander the Great in a Glaſs Shrine; and perhaps 'tis to theſe People that we owe the Invention of our modern Shrines of the ſame Make; though indeed it muſt be own'd, that with regard to religious Inventions, the Mind of Man does not want any Models to ſet it at Work; for ſuch as ſerve God wholly and ſoley by exterior Practices, are ever fruitful enough in new Shifts. They applaud themſelves for it, and flatter themſelves they ſhall draw down the Bleſſing of the Almighty, and the Protection of the Saints, by this kind of Service, more than by a punctual Obſervation of all the real Duties of Religion put together. We ſhall conclude this Topic with a few Obſerva-tions upon Graves and Sepulchres.

ALL Nations are unanimous in ſhewing Reſpect to theſe laſt Habitations of the Living, if I may be allow'd the Expreſſion; all thoſe who violated them in former Times were look'd upon as infamous and ſacrilegious Wretches, and very ſevere Laws were enacted againſt them. The Greeks and Romans had them in equal Horror, as may be ſeen in the Works of ſuch Writers as have made Collections on this Subject, particu-larly Cælius Rhodiginus, who has collected ſeveral curious Articles upon this Head. The burying of their Enemies was alſo thought a Debt due to Decency and Humanity, eſpe-cially to the latter; for, according to the heathen Theology, none of thoſe who re-main'd unburied could croſs the River Styx, but were oblig'd to ramble up and down for an hundred Years about the Borders of it, before they could be ferried over. Hence every one that met with an unburied Corpſe was obliged to throw a little Earth upon it, till by Degrees it was at laſt completely buried. 'Tis alſo to this Notion that the Ce-notaphia or empty Monuments, which were made for ſuch whoſe Bodies could not be found, owe their Original. If to theſe Cenotaphia we add the Devotion of nine Days, which undoubtedly were made for thoſe for whom theſe empty Monuments were de-ſign'd, the Vicennalia celebrated every twenty Years, the Tricennalia obſerved every thirty Years, and the Anniverſaries, we may be ſure that the Zealots among the Hea-thens thought they performed thereby all that could any way contribute to the Repoſe and Conſolation of the Deceaſed. They likewiſe had the Cuſtom of ſurrounding, or, as others call it, crowning the Graves with Greens; as for Inſtance, with Hyacinths and Amaranths, &c. the Verdure of which Plants was a Symbol of Eternity.

VI. MARRIAGE.

THE Roman Catholic Church defines Marriage to be [a] a Sacrament inſtituted by our Saviour, to eſtabliſh a holy Alliance between Man and Woman, in order that they may bring up the Children who ſhall ſpring from it, in his Fear and Love. This Definition, however, agrees with the Chriſtian Religion only. The Ritual referr'd to above adds, "That the End of the Sacrament of Marriage is, that Man and Wife "may mutually help and comfort each other, in order to ſpend this Life in a holy "Manner, and thereby gain a bleſſed Immortality; and to contribute to the Edifica-"tion of the Church, by the lawful Procreation of Children, and by the Care of pro-"curing them a ſpiritual Regeneration, and an Education ſuitable to it." All this is the Reverſe of the carnal and ſelf-intereſted Views of moſt Perſons who enter into the married State. But an Unbeliever will ſay, Man is created with a carnal Appetite; why therefore ſhould not ſuch as are unable to conquer the Stimulations of the Fleſh, endeavour to ſatisfy them by a lawful Marriage? 'Tis certain that the Procreation of Children is the firſt Object of that mutual Inclination which God hath implanted in both Sexes. However, this Act is heighten'd with ſome Pleaſure; and let an Agent in this Commerce be ever ſo chaſte, 'tis certain his Mind is no way fix'd upon Heaven while he is endeavouring to propagate his kind; nor do we find there is any Prohibition to this Pleaſure, whenever it may be lawfully enjoy'd. We daily have Examples of Numbers of looſe young Fellows who have Wives given them, purely to engage them to quit their unlawful Pleaſures. We might ſay farther, that a Perſon is not abſolutely forbid to try to make his Fortune by Marriage, provided that Procreation, the chief matrimonial Duty, be duly attended to at the ſame Time; but it were needleſs to dwell any longer on a Topic which is properly the Province of the Caſuiſts. We ſhall likewiſe omit thoſe Counſels and devout Prayers, which, according to the Directions of our ſpiritual Guides, ought to be offer'd up by all Perſons before they enter into Wedlock; for few People carry their Piety ſo far. The Idea which ſuch as are acquainted with Marriage only in Speculation, form to themſelves of it, has ſo little of Gravity and Serioufneſs in it, that we ſhall ſcarce meet with one in a thouſand, who would not think he was rallied, were he adviſed to offer up his Prayers to God, to meditate on the Duties of the conjugal Life, or to conſult with pious People before he enter'd into that State. A young Fellow who is juſt upon the Brink of Marriage, has no ſuch ſpiritual Thoughts, and can ſcarce find Time to trouble his Head about Devotion. Can any Thing poſſibly interfere more with thoſe Charms which Hymen preſents to his Votaries at their firſt ſetting out; to the Pleaſures he then offers them; to thoſe Delights which are always made inſeparable from the divine Precepts, Precepts which were given to Man for the Propagation of his Kind? A [a] ſpiritual Director, however, requires farther, that every Perſon before he enters into Wedlock, ought "to beſeech "God to join him with ſuch a Perſon, as he may work out his Salvation with; to ex- "amine whether or no the Perſon he has pitch'd his Affections upon, has the Fear of "God before her Eyes, if ſhe be prudent, diſcreet, and able to take care of a Fami- "ly, &c." We muſt own that ſuch Reflections as theſe are pious and beautiful; but they ſeldom enter into the Heads of young Perſons who are going to tie the indiſſoluble Knot.

PERSONS before they marry are generally betroth'd to one another, i. e. both Parties promiſe reciprocally, in Preſence of their Relations and Friends, to take each other for Man and Wife; after this the Marriage Articles are ſign'd, and by virtue of ſuch an Engagement, the contracting Parties might, one would think, without riſquing their Honour, beſtow thoſe mutual Endearments on each other, which are now forbid till the Marriage Knot is tied, did not the Perfidiouſneſs of Men, and the Fickleneſs of the other Sex, make ſome ſtronger Tie neceſſary, even in Chriſtian Countries; and to this the Marriage Ceremonies uſed in different Parts of the World, as well as the public and ſolemn Engagements by which Perſons are obliged to bind themſelves, owe their Original. And as the Authority of Heaven makes an Impreſſion on the Minds of Men, it was thought proper to conſecrate Marriage by a religious, ſymbolical, and myſterious Form of Words, as we ſhall ſhew hereafter. Becauſe of the Falſhood and Fickleneſs above-mention'd, or perhaps of the Diſcovery that is made, after Marriage, of certain Defects which are inviſible but in a certain Point of Light, it has been thought proper to ſolemnize Marriage immediately after the Parties are betrothed; the contrary Practice being very repugnant to the Purity of the Chriſtian Religion. Not but it is fitting that Perſons who are to ſpend their Lives together, and whom our Saviour commands to love as their own Fleſh, ſhould be pretty familiarly acquainted with one another: But how difficult is it to reſiſt Temptation, or to conſider the Perſon to whom we have plighted our Troth, as forbidden Fruit! Beſides, were long Betrothings authoriz'd by the Laws, People would inſenſibly make it a Cuſtom to ſtop there; ſo that they would perhaps at laſt introduce the commodious Practice of taking one another upon Trial. And in this Caſe a ſort of Prenticeſhip would be introduced between the two Sexes, attended however with this Convenience, that when their Time was out, both Parties would be at Liberty to forſake their Trade. But to be ſerious, it muſt be own'd, that as Religion and Reaſon ought to be call'd in at this perilous Change of Condition, young Perſons ſhould reſolve before hand to bear with each other, and to live in ſuch mutual Harmony as if they both were perfect Beings; for which deſirable End, the ſhorter the Courtſhip perhaps 'tis the better; nor ſhould either Party form too agreeable Illuſions, or chimerical Difficulties. Perſons who marry with this Frame of Mind may be very happy, and find a bliſsful Tranquillity in family Cares.

HERE follows ſome farther Advice given by the Rituals, to ſuch as are deſirous of making a Chriſtian Uſe of Marriage. On the Wedding-Day, the Parties muſt reflect on the State into which they are going to enter, and beg of God to preſerve their Chaſtity in thoſe Moments, when, though a Perſon be never ſo pious, the Fleſh is apt to be victorious over his Spirit, unleſs he be gifted like the Quietiſt in [a] Rouſſeau the Poet, whoſe Spirit was able to perſiſt in Prayer, even while his Body ſtoop'd down to terreſtrial Things. They muſt not give their Minds over to Dreſs, Vanity, Senſuality, &c. but 'tis well known that the contrary Cuſtom generally prevails, and that moſt young Perſons look on the Days immediately preceding their Marriage, which are ſpent in Luxury and Jollity, as the moſt happy Seaſon of their Lives. Nay the Aged too are not a little pleaſed with theſe Amuſements, as they help to awake paſt Pleaſures in their own Minds: They are fond of that Gaiety and Pomp which concludes with the joining of two Perſons, in whom they in ſome Meaſure behold themſelves live a ſecond Time; and farther, as old People are generally fond of Reſpect, they are proud to ſee thoſe who are ſo nearly related to them make a Figure ſuperior to the Company they have forſaken. Thus do the Aged gratify their own Vanity, while they are ſoothing that of young People. Could we think, were it not with this View, that ſo many venerable Matrons (for old Women are ever famous for being good Match-Makers) would be prevail'd with to make a Trade of uniting young Perſons together. The Bride and Bridegroom ought to walk together to Church with a modeſt and humble Air: This Religion enjoins, but Cuſtom and the Practice of the World teach the contrary. The latter are for having them walk with Pomp, accompanied with a Croud of Bridemen, Bridemaids, and other young Perſons, and that every Thing they caſt their Eyes upon ſhall be inferior to themſelves. Laſtly, they make both Parties preſent themſelves before the Prieſt, as it were, out of mere Ceremony and Pleaſure, wherein Religion uſurps Privileges that don't in the leaſt belong to it; ſuch is the Pomp and Pride of moſt Perſons who enter into Wedlock. The reſt of the bridal Day, if we may give credit to our ſpiritual Directors, ought to be ſpent with Modeſty, nor ought they to indulge in Riot and Exceſs; but the above-mention'd Gentlemen are not enough acquainted with the World to know, that Modeſty and Sobriety are impracticable in theſe Days of high Feſtivity. From the Time of giving the Bleſſing, to the conducting the married Couple to the Nuptial Bed, Luxury muſt triumph; and to ſay the Truth, this Cuſtom has taken ſuch deep Root, that it would be ridiculous to pretend to be ſerious on ſuch Occaſions.

[b] THE Rituals ordain that Marriages be ſolemniz'd on Work-Days; and that becauſe the Mirth and Joy that reigns at Weddings is inconſiſtent with the Devotions ſuitable to Sundays and Holidays. They ordain that a Pariſh Prieſt ſhall always be preſent at this Ceremony. The Banns muſt be publiſh'd thrice before Marriage, on three Sundays or Holidays ſucceſſively, at the Parochial Maſs, and muſt be publiſh'd in thoſe Places where the Parties have dwelt a conſiderable Time: If the Man and Woman live in different Dioceſes, they muſt be publiſh'd at the ſame Time in both. The Deſign of theſe Banns is in order to find out whether the Perſons may lawfully marry, which obliges us to take ſome Notice of the Impediments with regard to that State: Theſe are reckon'd fourteen, all which are expreſs'd in the ſix [a] Latin Verſes quoted in the Margin. The firſt Impediment is call'd Error; as for Inſtance, if a Perſon ſhould be ſo far impoſed upon as to be made to marry one Perſon, when he intended another. The ſecond, call'd Condition, is when a Perſon imagines he marries one of a Condition ſuitable to his own, and it is afterwards found that ſuch Perſon is of a mean and diſhonourable Condition. A [b] ſolemn Vow of Chaſtity made in any religious Order, approved by the Church, is likewiſe an Impediment; and that becauſe the Perſon who has made ſuch Vow, contracts a ſpiritual Marriage with God. But in caſe a Perſon ſhould repent of his Vow; if after having made a ſolemn Engagement with Heaven for ſeveral Years, he ſhould find it impoſſible for him to reſiſt the Stimulations of the Fleſh, would not Marriage be a moſt ſalutary Remedy? would there not be leſs Guilt in it than in the clandeſtine Intrigues of Monks and Nuns? A Perſon who has only made a private Vow of Chaſtity cannot marry afterwards, without committing a great Sin; but a Marriage in this Caſe is valid. But when once Perſons have made ſuch a Vow, they muſt no longer ſollicit their Partner, to indulge the procreative Faculty, but live together like ſo many Angels, and not as Perſons of a different Sex. Another Impediment is Conſanguinity, whereof it were needleſs to ſet down the Degrees in this Place, or the Alliance comprehended by the Impediment cauſed by Conſanguinity, or of the ſpiritual Alliance mention'd in the Article of Baptiſm. Certain Crimes are likewiſe an Impediment to Marriage, ſuch as Homicide, Adultery, &c. A Difference of Religion is likewiſe an Obſtacle in certain Caſes; as for Inſtance, an unbaptiz'd Perſon is incapable of contracting Marriage with one who was baptiz'd; but the Marriage between a Roman-Catholic and a Heretick is valid. Force, or Violence, is alſo an Impediment to Marriage, ſince it deprives the Will of its juſt Liberty; ſuch as the running away with, or ſtealing a Woman. The Obſtacle with regard to holy Orders is when a Perſon has taken ſuch Orders. The Impediment with regard to Ties, or Pre-engagements, is when one of the Parties is already married to ſome other Perſon. The Impediment with regard to Decency, is when a Perſon betroth'd to another happens to die, or enters into a religious Order, before the Marriage is conſummated; in which Caſe the ſurviving Perſon, or who has not embraced a religious Life, is not allowed to marry with the Brother or Siſter of the other Perſon. Impotency is by ſo much the greater Obſtacle, as Procreation is the chief End of Marriage. Impotency is of two kinds; the one perpetual, the other accidental, or occaſion'd by Incantation. As to a perpetual Impotency, it is unanimouſly agreed to be an Obſtacle, both to prevent before Marriage, and diſſolve it after 'tis contracted. Eunuchs come under this Head of perpetual Impotency, as alſo thoſe who are invincibly cold by Nature. The Caſuiſts pronounce Sentence againſt theſe, and againſt an Order of Husbands who are in the Caſe mention'd by [c] Petronius. However, theſe Caſuiſts and the eccleſiaſtical Judges allow three Years to this kind of Palſy; but then they ſhould grant a reaſonable Compenſation to the ſuffering Party. Is it juſt and equitable for a Perſon to undergo an undeſerved Trial, and [d] after having embraced for many Years a mere Shadow, be forced to continue three Years longer in a State of Life in which the moſt rigid Virtue is expos'd to the ſtrongeſt Temptations? But on the other Side, aged People, not excepting the Decrepid, are allow'd to marry together; but how greatly does this claſh with the chief End of Marriage! And is it not plain that an antiquated Fellow who marries, may be juſtly compared to a Man who pretends to walk though he has no Sinews in his Legs? But there are Women who don't ſcruple to run this diſagreeable Riſque, but flatter themſelves they ſhall be able to warm the moſt frozen old Age. 'Twould be to no Purpoſe to quote to them the Example of David, who in vain attempted to preſerve, or rather recover his loſt natural Heat, in the Embraces of a young Woman. 'Tis well known that this is not the Deſign of Marriage. The Romans, in the Time of their Republic, had a Law called Papia Popæa, which was afterwards abrogated by Claudius Cæſar, at a Time when their Manners were very much corrupted. By this Law all Perſons upwards of ſixty were forbid to marry. However, ſuch a ſalutary Medium might be made uſe of in this Caſe as would be more worthy the genuine Spirit of Religion; which is, that old People ſhould be prohibited marrying with young, but at the ſame Time be left at Liberty to marry Perſons of an Age ſuitable to their own: Thus would Marriage be an indiſſoluble Union between two Perſons of different Sexes, for their mutual Comfort and Aſſiſtance. Let us wave this Inquiry, ſince [a] Sanchez has in ſome meaſure appropriated it to himſelf, by his skilful and diligent Diſquiſition of it. We refer to that learned Jeſuit, all who are deſirous of knowing whether Barrenneſs ought to be conſidered and treated as Impotency; whether a Woman, who cannot be made a Mother, without running the Riſque of loſing her Life, ought to be rank'd among the Impotent; whether on certain Occaſions ſuch natural Defects as cauſe an exterior Impotency, may be repair'd by violent Methods, &c. If that nuptial Tie may be diſſolv'd, in which both Parties happen not to be made for each other, becauſe it has pleaſed Nature to be ſometimes over liberal, and at other Times too ſparing. In this laſt Caſe Sanchez informs us as the Popes had done before him, that both Parties are allow'd to ſeek for better Fortune in a ſecond Marriage.

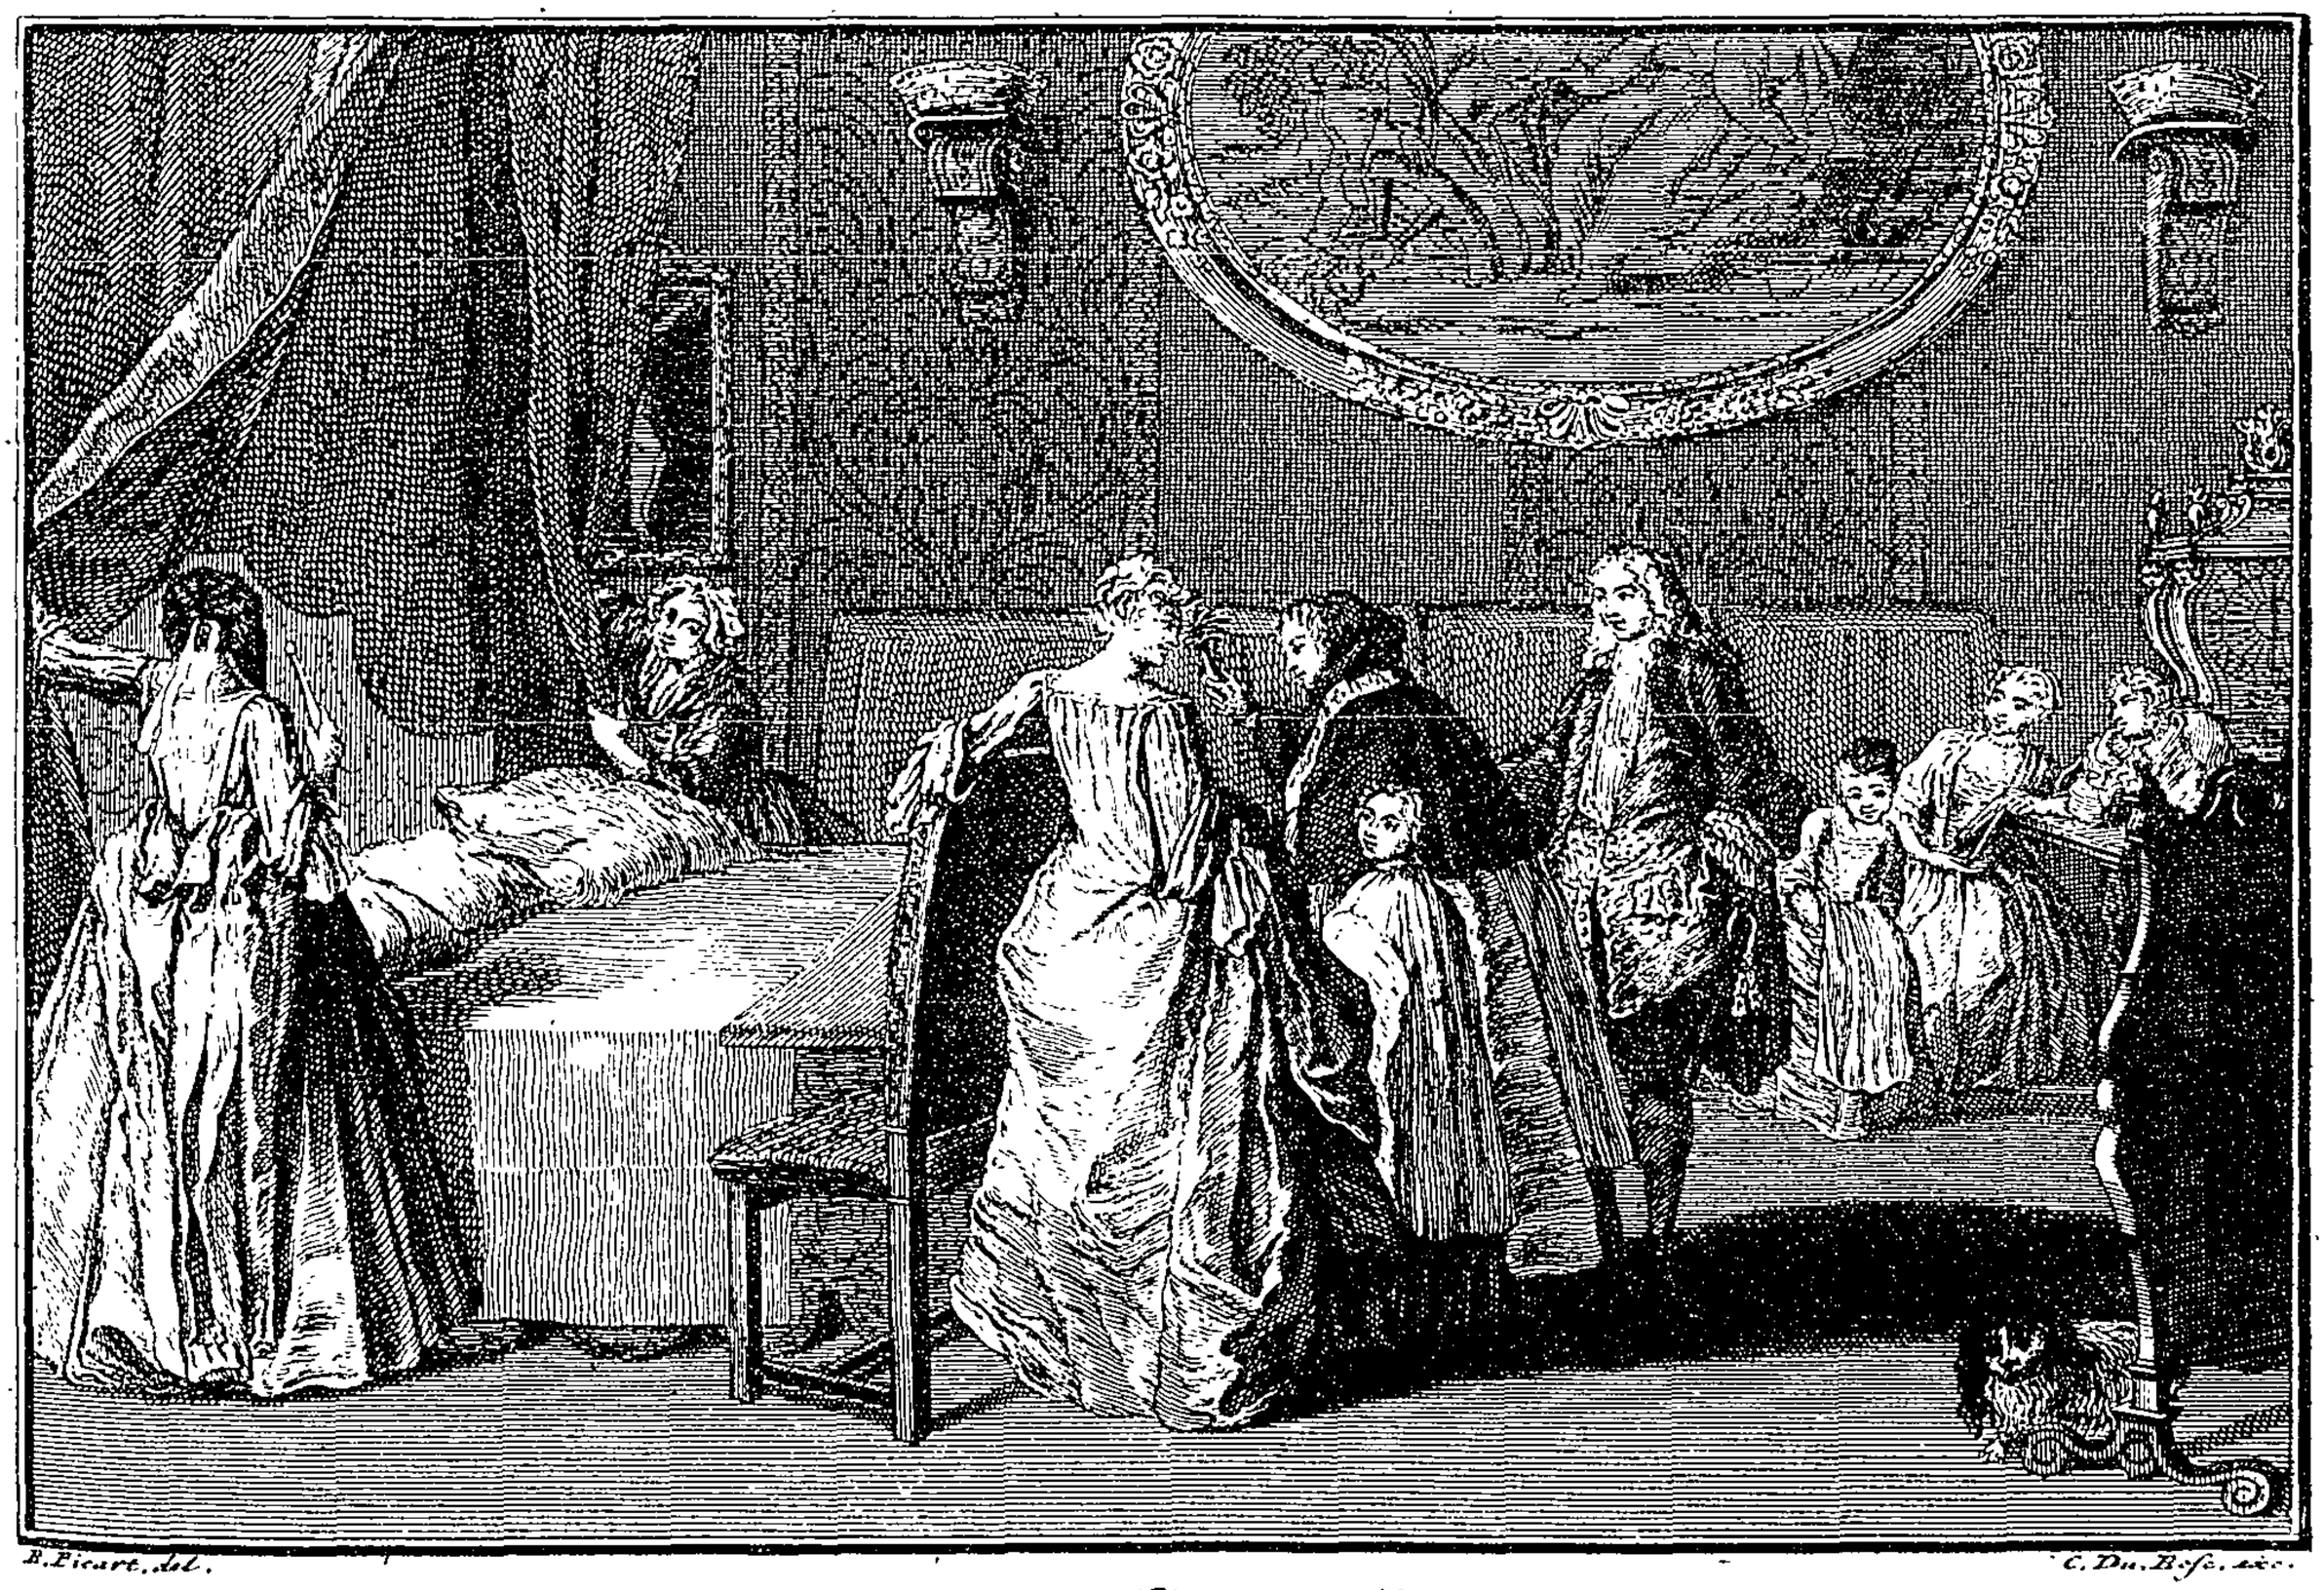
As to Impotency imputed to Sorcery, it may be cauſed by various Methods, ſay the Caſuiſts, which it would not be decent for us to mention in this Place. This kind of Sorcery is call'd by the Vulgar Nouer L'aiguillet. This Faſcination, whoſe Virtue is ſuch as to prevent the Conſummation of Marriage, is perform'd after ſeveral Ways. Here follows one of them: Take a Wolf's Pizzle, and the Skin of a Dog or Cat; dye them of two or three Colours; tie them into three or nine Knots; ſpit thrice on the Duſt, or in your Cap, and mutter over ſome barbarous and obſcure Words, whilſt the Prieſt is pronouncing his Bleſſing on the Marriage. Whatever there be in this, a Man muſt have a good Stock of Faith to give credit to ſuch idle Stories. Nevertheleſs the Rituals ordain, that on theſe Occaſions Recourſe ſhall be had to Prayer and Confeſſion, in order to diſſolve the Charm of the wicked Spirit, or his pretended Agents; nay, public Prayers may be made in the Church, and Exorciſms uſed, for ſuch Perſons as imagine they labour under this Faſcination.

FORMERLY it was a Cuſtom to make a public Trial of a Perſon's procreative Ability, either in Preſence of a ſpiritual or ſecular Judge, and ſeveral Surgeons and Matrons; but it was aboliſh'd in France in 1677. after having been obſerv'd for near a hundred and twenty Years. Juſtinian the Emperor had alſo forbid this, and other ſuch Cuſtoms enacted for the examining the like Caſes.



IN fine, the Rituals teach, that the mutual Duties of Marriage ought by no means to be refuſed; however, there are ſome Exceptions to this Rule; among which are thoſe which the Solemnity of Religion requires. The Romiſh Maſs-Book ordains, That the Prieſt muſt enjoin thoſe he marries, to be chaſte in the Seaſons of Prayer, and on Faſting, and ſolemn Days. [a] The ſame was enacted among the Heathens, and all ſuch were rank'd among the Profane as approach'd the Altars, after having ſolemniz'd the Myſteries of Love. The above-mention'd [b] Rituals inſinuate likewiſe, that Copulation is ſinful when a Woman is with Child, or when both Parties are unable to get Children. It muſt be own'd that Beaſts inſtruct Mankind in this Caſe; but to wave this trite Obſervation, a famous Queen once boldly anſwer'd her Confeſſor, That Beaſts act in this Manner becauſe they are Beaſts.

The Ceremonies of MARRIAGE.

BESIDES the Age requiſite for Marriage, the Liberty of contracting, and the Publication of the Banns, the Rituals require farther, That the Perſons to be join'd together in Matrimony, [c] ſhall be ſufficiently inſtructed in the Chriſtian Doctrine; that they ſhould know the Nature of the Sacrament of Marriage, its Ends, its Obligations; and that they ſhould firſt confeſs themſelves, and receive the Sacrament before they join themſelves together for ever. The Prieſt ought to beſeech God that the married Couple may acquit themſelves in a holy Manner of the Duties of Marriage, which muſt be celebrated at the high Altar, himſelf being clothed in his pontifical Veſtments.

WHEN the Prieſt goes to the Altar, he is preceded by one or two Clerks in their Surplices, as we ſee in the Figure repreſenting this Ceremony. Theſe Clerks carry the holy Water-Pot, the Sprinkler, the Ritual, and a little Baſon to put the Ring in, when it is to be bleſs'd. After he has ſaid the uſual Prayer for the Couple, he advances towards them on the laſt Step of the Altar; the Man ſtanding on the Epiſtle and the Woman on the Goſpel-Side, ſo that the Man ſtands at the Woman's Right-Hand. The Relations and Witneſſes ſtand behind them. Then the Prieſt asks the Couple their Names and Sirnames; which is only a Formality, their Names being already known to him, by the Publication of the Banns, and by a Certificate confirming the ſame, which the Couple are oblig'd to produce at that Time. He afterwards addreſſes himſelf to the Man and Woman ſeparately, in their Mother Tongue, calling them both by their proper Names, and asks the Man whether he will have ſuch a one for his Wife, and the Woman whether ſhe will have ſuch a one for her Husband. This reciprocal Conſent is abſolutely requiſite in this Caſe, and without it the Marriage would be null. After mutual Conſent has been given, by expreſly anſwering, Yes, or giving ſome equivalent Sign thereof, the Prieſt who before was cover'd, uncovers himſelf, takes the Couple by the Hand, and making them join Hands, ſays, Ego jungo vos in matrimonium, &c. that is, I join you together in Marriage, in the Name of the Father, &c. At the ſame Time he makes the Sign of the Croſs upon them, and then ſprinkles them with holy Water. This being done, he bleſſes the Wedding-Ring, and ſprinkles it alſo with holy Water, in the Form of a Croſs; after which he gives it to the Man, who puts it on the Wedding-Finger of the Woman's Left-Hand. This Ring is the Pledge of the conjugal Chaſtity and Fidelity which the Wife owes the Husband. To all this the Prieſt adds ſome Prayers; after which follows an Exhortation to the married Couple, and to the Aſſembly, and afterwards Maſs.

THE married Couple are bleſs'd in the following Manner, when the Woman is a Virgin, and has always had the Reputation of Chaſtity. The Prieſt, after the Offertory, goes to the Foot of the Altar, and the married Couple make what Oblation they think proper;

proper; the Husband firſt, and the Wife afterwards. The Prieſt likewiſe repeats ſome Prayers, and the Ceremony ends with an Exhortation to the married Couple. The Subject of this Exhortation is on the Duties of the conjugal Life, the End and Deſign of Marriage, reciprocal Love, &c. after which he ſprinkles them with holy Water. Young People are not to inhabit under the ſame Roof, or be in Company together, except in the Preſence of their Parents, or Relations, till ſuch Time as they have received the Bleſſing of the Church. But when this is over, they are at Liberty to go and conſummate the Marriage, and taſte thoſe Pleaſures which would be criminal, if taken without the Formalities eſtabliſh'd by the Church.

THE married Couple muſt deſire the Prieſt to bleſs the Marriage-Bed; the Ceremony of which Act is here repreſented. Among the other Bleſſings which are ask'd by the Mediation of the Prieſt when he bleſſes the Marriage-Bed, one is, that thoſe who are to lie in it may increaſe and multiply. The holy Water completes the Sanctification of the Nuptial Bed.

SOMETIMES the married Couple are incapable of Conſummation, and imagine that it is owing to the Sorcery and Incantations whereof we have already ſpoken. But this is frequently made uſe of as an Excuſe for their own Deficiency, by Husbands who are really impotent, or have worn themſelves out by their Debauchery.

Et tout cela n'eſt que pour amuſer,
Un peu de tems des eſprits de poupée.

That is, This is contriv'd only to amuſe ſimple Girls for a ſhort Time.

A HUSBAND muſt be very much puzzled when this is the only Shift left him to ſave his Honour. Every Man ought to be acquainted with himſelf, and to know what he is fit for. However, there may be ſome Exceptions to this Rule. But in general, this pretended Sorcery is no other than a Want of Spirits, an Extinction of the natural Heat; and in this Caſe a Man is ſo far from being a R——m, that he is not even a Husband of the loweſt Order. Be that as it will, in this unhappy State of Impotency the Prayers of the Church have been thought neceſſary, and are attended with the following Formalities.

THE [a] Prieſt begins by exhorting the married Couple to put their whole Truſt in God, and admoniſhes them to devote themſelves to Prayer till the Day appointed by him for the performing of the Ceremony; which being come, he celebrates Maſs upon their Account, and in their Preſence: They both fall down on their Knees, and he in the mean Time repeats certain Prayers and Pſalms ſuitable to the Occaſion. In theſe Prayers he exclaims againſt the Devil, the Author of Witchcrafts and Sorcery, and beſeeches Heaven to reſtore to the married Couple their generative Faculties. Laſtly, he lays his Hand on the Woman's Head, praying that ſhe may be fruitful. The Ceremony ends with ſprinkling Holy Water.

WE ſhall here make ſome Remarks on the Conformity between the Cuſtoms of the Antients, and thoſe now in uſe among us, with regard to the Decorums, the Ceremonies, and Advantages of this State. We need ſcarce mention the Portion, or Fortune, the Cuſtom whereof is of great Antiquity, and was eſtabliſh'd among the moſt unciviliz'd Nations. The giving a Fortune with a Woman, is in ſome Meaſure the beſtowing Money upon her to purchaſe a Maſter with, as Euripides obſerves in his Medea.

[a] Alet's Ritual.

This

This Thought is ſo far from being new, that it has been long ſunk to a mere common-place Obſervation; inſomuch, that the Fathers have not forgot to [a] mention it in their enumerating the Advantages of Virginity. However, very few young Girls are ſo fond of this Privilege, as to be prevail'd with to live unmarried. Solon, an antient Legiſlator among the Greeks, enacted that a Woman's whole Fortune ſhould conſiſt in three Sutes of Clothes, and a few Houſhold Utenſils; and this in order to prevent the Motives of conjugal Society from being venal. But ſuch a Cuſtom would not take place in thoſe Countries where a Man's whole Fortune depends on his Wife's Portion, without the leaſt Regard to her Merit and Qualities. But here follows a much more extraordinary Particular. The Greeks look'd upon Marriage ſo eſſentially neceſſary to the public Good, that the Lacedemonian Women were allow'd to beat and buffet publicly all the old Batchelors, once a Year at leaſt; and the Anniverſary of this whimſical Cuſtom us'd to be celebrated on a very ſolemn Feſtival, at the Foot of the Altars. But theſe very People, who looked upon Marriage as one of the Foundations of the Happineſs of their Commonwealth, allow'd two other Cuſtoms, both of which interfer'd very much with that domeſtic Tranquility they ſeem'd deſirous of eſtabliſhing, and which is the greateſt Pleaſure of a married State. They allow'd of [b] Proſtitutes and Concubines, to act in thoſe domeſtic Employments which are now given to Chamber-Maids. The former 'tis true had greater Power than the latter have. But be that as it will, the Chriſtian Religion has depriv'd Husbands of all ſuch Privileges; and if they pay their Tribute to any but their Wives, 'tis contrary to its Dictates, and the Duties it preſcribes to married People; but at the ſame Time our Women gain a very noble Privilege thereby, ſince it puts them upon the ſame Level with the other Sex. But this Cuſtom is obſerv'd by Chriſtians only; for the Heathens, the Turks, and the Jews, uſurp ſuch an Authority over their Wives as is not many Removes from Tyranny.

We omit the Ceremonies of the Woman's aſking her Parents Conſent, the Contract of Marriage, and the Betrothings of antient Times: Theſe Particulars being pretty near the ſame then as they are at preſent. They likewiſe us'd a Ring at their Marriages, call'd Annulus Pronubus, or the Wedding-Ring. The Bridemen and Bridemaids us'd to accompany the Bride and Bridegroom, to do them the greater Honour, and to aſſiſt them as Counſellors, Maſters of Ceremonies, and to guard them. The Betrothing us'd to be ſpent in Feſtivity and Mirth. They us'd to viſit, compliment, and congratulate one another. The Wedding was kept for three Days together, when the Bride, the Bridegroom, and the young People who aſſiſted at it, were dreſs'd in their fineſt Clothes, and deck'd with Jewels. The Bride was crown'd, and carried with great Ceremony to her Husband's Houſe, where the Nuptial Bed, adorn'd with Flowers, was prepar'd; and here the Bride was laid in Bed by a Company of Matrons, call'd Pronubæ. Theſe Matrons were like ſome of the ſame Sex in our Days, of about fifty or threeſcore Years of Age; Perſons who grown hoary in the Labours and Fatigues of Wedlock, and who being thoroughly experienc'd in that Warfare, imagin'd they had an Authority to inſtruct the Bride. We muſt not omit an antient Cuſtom which bears ſome Affinity to one now practis'd in Holland, viz. that the Threſhold of the Houſes of a new-married Couple were ſtrewed with Flowers and Greens; and among theſe Feſtoons and Foliage, the Laurel made the moſt conſpicuous Figure; ſo that this Signification might be drawn from it, that the Wedding-Day is the fineſt in Life, a Day of Conqueſt and Triumph.

[a] St. Ambroſe declares, that a Woman who marries ſells herſelf for a Slave; nay, he even affirms, that the Condition of a Slave is preferable to that of a Wife. "A Slave is bought and paid for, whereas a poor young Girl is "oblig'd to give a good Sum of Money to be receiv'd in Quality of a Slave." But how pretty ſoever this Thought may be, it is not very juſt.

THE Nuptial Ceremonies uſed among Chriſtians vary in different Countries, and even in different Provinces of the ſame Country. In ſeveral Parts of France, the Bridegroom, attended with his Relations and Friends, goes to the Bride's Houſe, and conducts her from thence to the Church in great Ceremony. He himſelf walks between his two neareſt Relations, and is followed by the Bridemen. The Bride is conducted with the ſame Ceremonies: She is attired according to her Quality, and crown'd with Flowers, and is followed by the Bridemaids, who are alſo crowned. In Italy, if Gaiac, Author of the Marriage-Ceremonies, may be credited, the Bride and Bridegroom go directly to Church to be married without the leaſt Ceremony. But the French are pretty long in their Courtſhips, and will be acquainted with a Woman before they ſet their Affections upon her; or at leaſt they uſe this as a Pretence to ſcreen the Inclination they have to enjoy a long Courſe of Gallantry. But the Italians are no Friends to theſe long Preliminaries. At Venice Matches are made between Perſons who have never ſeen or ſpoke to each other; a Cuſtom which differs vaſtly from that once eſtabliſh'd among them [a], when young Virgins were put up to Sale, and given to the higheſt Bidder. Several whole Months are now ſpent between the Wedding and Conſummation. The Commentary which Miſſon makes in his Travels upon this Cuſtom is ſomething waggiſh: "You are not, ſays he, to imagine that People marry here "with the ſame Views as in all other Countries; for here Love, Eſteem, and Affection, "are entirely out of the Queſtion. If any of theſe Ingredients happen to ſeaſon the "State, ſo much the better: However, they regard nothing but Money, or the Great-"neſs of a Family; for as to the Perſon 'tis out of the Queſtion." Here follows the Progreſs of the Venetian Gallantry, when every Thing has been adjuſted between the Parties: St. Didier tells us, that Cuſtom has ſo eſtabliſh'd it, that the Gallant muſt, every Evening, at certain Hours, paſs backwards and forwards under his Miſtreſs's Windows. Another Cuſtom is, that the Bridegroom never makes a Viſit to his Bride till he carries her a Pearl Necklace, which he is obliged to give her. This firſt Interview of Perſons who had never ſeen one another before, often makes their Accoſting vaſtly whimſical; and this is owing in general to the retir'd Way of their Women's Education.

CONCUBINAGE is the conſtant Remedy to thoſe whimſical, and oftentimes deceitful Marriages: And this Cuſtom is now ſo well eſtabliſh'd among them, that it is very common to ſee Wives live in great Harmony with their Rivals; like to thoſe Wives in the Infancy of the World, mentioned in Geneſis, Chap. xxx. who were ſo far from being jealous of their Husbands Concubines, that they aſſiſted them in Child-Birth, by which they ſeem'd to appropriate to themſelves in ſome meaſure the Children of the Concubines. Nay, the Concubinage of the [b] Venetians is frequently a kind of clandeſtine Marriage, the Ceremony whereof is not perform'd till a long Time after Conſummation; and this generally a few Days only, or even Hours, before the Death of one of the Parties. But the moſt unaccountable Circumſtance in theſe Cuſtoms, ſo repugnant to the Laws of Chriſtianity, is, that Mothers themſelves ſhould procure Concubines and Miſtreſſes for their Sons. The ſame Cuſtom is pretty nearly obſerved in Perſia, according to Chardin.

NOR are theſe Exceſſes leſs frequent in Spain. Several Travellers aſſure us, that their young Boys, ſcarce got out of the Shell, get themſelves Miſtreſſes, and engage in ſuch a Commerce with them as ſpoils them for ever after. Nevertheleſs, the Spaniards carry Love and Gallantry to a very great Exceſs. 'Tis in this Country therefore that true and perfect Love is to be found. The Lovers muſt never forget each other. 'Tis an uninterrupted Intercourſe of generous Sentiments, expreſs'd after a thouſand different Ways, and all with equal Paſſion and Warmth. However, they omit nothing that may at laſt indulge them the Gratification of their Paſſion, which is the ultimate of Love: For how pure and chaſt ſoever the Deſires of a Lover may be, 'tis well known that Love is not ſatisfied with ſpiritual Fires. Theſe Miſtreſſes, for whom the Spaniards have ſuch pure and exalted Sentiments, are of a different Order from the Concubines; for theſe, if we are to credit Madam D'Aunoy, do not occaſion any Domeſtic Broils. Nay, a Husband ſhall often have a Wife, a Miſtreſs, and a Concubine, ſays ſhe, without occaſioning the leaſt Noiſe, Confuſion, or Diſorder in Families. The laſt Particular we ſhall take notice of relating to the Spaniſh Gallantry, and which is very ſingular, if it be true, is, that after a Lady has been let blood, the Surgeon who performed the Operation has a very conſiderable Preſent made him by her Lover, for the Fillet with which the Orifice was bound.

LASTLY, to be ſomething more particular in what relates to their Marriage: When a young Maiden has fixed her Choice, ſhe is allow'd to marry, tho' againſt her Parents Conſent: In which caſe ſhe addreſſes herſelf to the Pariſh-Prieſt, who takes her from her Father's Houſe, put her into a Convent, or with ſome old Female Devotee; and if ſhe continues ſtill in her Reſolution, obliges her Parents to give her a Portion according to their Wealth.

THESE Cuſtoms are very fantaſtical; however we ſhall meet with ſome in the Sequel of this Work that are much more extraordinary.

The Bleſſing of a WOMAN with CHILD.

IN this Circumſtance, which often proves ſo fatal to Women, and which they ſeldom reflect upon before Marriage, ſome devout Females have Recourſe to St. Margaret's Girdle, that of St. Francis, certain Relics, &c. On theſe Occaſions the Church enjoins as follows. The [a] Prieſt in his Surplice and Stole begins by his exhorting the Woman with Child to ſubmit herſelf entirely to the Will of God; to offer to him the Pains and Labours of Child-Birth, for the Satisfaction of her Sins, &c. Then he repeats certain Prayers appointed for that Purpoſe in the Ritual. After this he takes the Sprinkler out of the Hands of his Clerk, and ſprinkles the Woman with Child with holy Water, himſelf and the Aſſiſtants in the mean Time repeating the ſixty ſixth Pſalm alternately. The whole concludes with other Prayers.

ANOTHER Ceremony obſerved by Women immediately after their Lying-in, is called Churching, and conſiſts of their deſiring the Prieſt's Bleſſing before they preſume to enter into the Church: Nay, many of them are ſo very ſcrupulous as to keep from it for ſome Time; which Cuſtom, ſays Alet in his Ritual, is approved by the Church, altho' neither our Saviour or the Church has given any Precept on that Head. But in this they imitate the Practice of the holy Virgin, who went to the Temple to purify herſelf, and preſent her Son: And the bleſſed Virgin on this Occaſion followed one of the principal Rites of the Jewiſh Religion.

A WOMAN who deſires the Prieſt's Bleſſing after lying-in, muſt ſend him Notice of it, and in the mean Time ſtay at the Church Door upon her Knees, with a lighted Taper in her Hand. Women ſtay in this manner out of Humility, in order to be introduced into it by the Prieſt, and by that means cleanſed from all their Sins, and reconciled to the Church. The lighted Taper, we are told, denotes, that they ſhall bring up their Children in the Faith of Chriſt, and ſhall inſtruct them therein by their own good Example. The Prieſt having his white Stole over his Surplice, with his Sprinkler in his Hand dipt in Water, comes and meets the Woman at the Church Door, where he takes off his Cap, ſprinkles her with holy Water, makes the Sign of the Croſs over her, repeats an Anthem and a Pſalm; after which he puts the Extremity of his Stole in the Woman's Hand, leads her into the Church, and then to the Choir, ſaying, Ingredere in Templum Dei; adora filium beatæ Mariæ virginis, qui tibi fæcunditatem tribuit prolis: That is, Enter into the Temple of the Lord; adore the Son of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, who has been ſo propitious as to make you a Mother. There ſhe ſays her Prayers on her Knees; and the Prieſt having ended the Prayer he had made for her, ſprinkles her with holy Water, which concludes the Ceremony.

EXORCISM.

THIS Ceremony the Heretics and Libertines have frequently attempted to burleſque; nevertheleſs, the former allow the Antiquity of it, i. e. of the Power of caſting out evil Spirits: But this Power was originally, ſay they, the Effect of the Gift of Miracles, which having ceaſed for many Ages, they pretend Exorciſm is now no more than a mere Chimera, and that the Power of modern Exorciſts over the infernal Powers, exiſts only in the Imagination of the vulgar and weak People. They [a] likewiſe affirm, that after the Ceaſing of Miracles, public Prayers were thought to be the beſt Expedient for delivering Demoniacs. Accordingly they were brought into the Church: And it is to theſe public Prayers that the Employment of Exorciſt, conſidered as a Place in the Church, owes its Original. The Libertines make Exorciſms, and the being poſſeſſed with evil Spirits, a Subject for Raillery and Diverſion. They aſcribe the modern Bewitchings to pious Frauds, intereſted Motives, and crazy Imaginations; but as to Women and young Girls being poſſeſſed, they imagine that certain irregular [b] Deſires are the only Devils who poſſeſs them. However, ſay theſe People, if the Devil is caſt out of a young Girl, they piouſly celebrate the Defeat of the Hobgoblin.

[b] Women and young Girls are ſometimes ſubject to Vapours and Suffocations of the Matrix, which probably may contribute to thoſe Contorſions and convulſive Motions which have been obſerved in thoſe of Loudun, Cartigny Louvires, &c. who were poſſeſſed. The Diſtemper, called by Phyſicians Furor Uterinus, ſeem'd to have ſeiz'd the Brain of that Woman who was poſſeſs'd by the Devil at Loudun, who imagin'd that an Incubus uſed to come every Night, and force her to his Embraces, under the Shape of a Confeſſor, and pollute her chaſte Bed. But it may be ſaid, that thoſe who were poſſeſs'd at Loudon, gave other Marks of their being ſo, and ſuch as are indiſputable. But to theſe we might oppoſe the Remarks of the Phyſicians of Montpellier, who were conſulted in this Affair. We are to obſerve farther, that in theſe latter Ages the Devil has always taken up his Abode in the Bodies of Women, whereas in the Infancy of the Church he had no reſpect of Sexes.

make People Demoniacs, and particularly Nuns, whoſe being poſſeſſed in this Age exerciſed the Pens of ſeveral able Writers, and raiſed a thouſand Scruples in the Minds of good People, ſo as to force the moſt reaſonable Zealots to ſay:

Eſt-ce l'eſprit immonde,
Ou l'eſprit de Dieu?
Ou plutot la chair & le monde,
Que jouent leur jeu?

That is,

Is it the unclean Spirit, or the Spirit of God? Or rather, is it not the Fleſh and the World that act this Farce?

Such are the Diſcourſes of our Libertines, and even of all thinking Men, who endeavour to aſſign phyſical Reaſons for a Thing which gives the common People ſo great an Idea of the Power of the Clergy. And indeed can there be a greater or a more noble Privilege than that of driving the Enemy of Mankind out of the Body of a Chriſtian, and of triumphing over him who is the Prince of Darkneſs, the Source of Evil, the Tempter of the Faithful, the great, and even in the Judgment of ſome Divines, the only Cauſe of the Diſorders of the Univerſe; in a word, the ſworn Enemy of Grace, and the Tyrant over Man's Will?

The antient Heathens were acquainted with, and practiſed, Exorciſms; of which we have a thouſand Examples taken from Antiquity: However, this Employment, ſo holy among us, was the Province of their old Women only, who gadding from Houſe to Houſe, uſed to ſprinkle them with luſtral Water, and lay the Spirits by the Power of certain Forms, and ſome very whimſical Ceremonies, which are deſcrib'd in ſeveral [a] Authors. As to the modern Heathens of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, they alſo have ſeveral Ceremonies among them for caſting out Devils and Hobgoblins; but for theſe we refer the Reader to the Diſſertations on the Ceremonies of thoſe Idolaters.

The Church not only diſpoſſes the Bodies of Men and Animals, but likewiſe drives evil Spirits from all Places where they endeavour to ſettle themſelves. We have already obſerved in what manner the Devil is driven from the Bridal Bed and Chamber, from Salt, Oil, Water, and Chriſm; he would certainly remain in all thoſe Things, did not the Ceremony of Exorciſm drive him away. Hence we may form to ourſelves an Idea of the Importance of the Employment of the Exorciſt, ſince the Church devolves on him the Authority it has over the infernal Powers. However, this Office is no longer a ſeparate Employ, ſince the Prieſts reſerve to themſelves only the Functions of it; and this is ſo far from humbling the Devil, that on the contrary it puffs him up [b] with Pride, on Account of the great Honour done him, while none but Prieſts and Biſhops are employ'd againſt him.

The moſt infallible Indication of a Perſon's being poſſeſſed by the Devil, ſays Alet's Ritual, is, if the Perſon ſo poſſeſſed either ſpeaks, or underſtands Languages that before were unknown to him, eſpecially, if he holds long and ſurpriſing Diſcourſes, &c. To which we will add, that the Devil muſt be conſiſtent with himſelf, and not make Soleciſms or Barbariſms, as he has ſometimes done; witneſs what Writers relate concerning the Devils of Loudon, who were not near ſo learned as thoſe of Cartigni, who were put to the Trial in ſixteen Languages: But the Poſſeſſed of Loudun, if we except a little broken Latin, which they ſpoke now and then to the Exorciſt, kept ſtrictly to the French, which was undoubtedly their Mother Tongue, and conſequently was moſt familiar to them. Another Mark of Poſſeſſion, is the diſcovering of Secrets, the Knowledge of Things tranſacted at a great Diſtance, or the diving into Peoples private Thoughts.

[b] Alet's Ritual.

A third Indication is, when a Perſon makes ſuch Efforts, or performs ſuch Actions, as are above his natural Strength, in whatever Condition, or with what Sickneſs ſoever he may be afflicted. A [a] fourth conſiſts in anſwering difficult Queſtions, and ſuch as are above the Reach of the human Mind.

THE Rituals forbid the exorciſing of any Perſon, unleſs the Biſhop's Leave be firſt obtain'd for this Purpoſe, who muſt always be told the ſeveral Symptoms of the Poſſeſſed, in order that he may enquire whether or no they are genuine, to prevent the Tricks and Impoſtures which too frequently happen on theſe Occaſions. He alſo muſt direct the Conduct of the Exorciſt on this Occaſion, who, to enable himſelf the better to caſt out the Devil, muſt exerciſe himſelf in Faſting and Prayer. He muſt bear with Patience all the Inſults of the Devil, and take care that no Vice, particularly Pride, may give that Enemy to God any Advantage over him; he muſt afterwards endeavour to acquaint himſelf with the Character and Abilities of the particular Devil, and examine whatever is moſt repugnant to him. As for Inſtance, he muſt obſerve what Expreſſions are moſt ſhocking unto him, and theſe he muſt repeat over often. He muſt likewiſe know the Names and Number of the Devils who have taken up their Abode in the Body of the Demoniac; how long he has been poſſeſſed; the Cauſe and Accidents of ſuch Poſſeſſion, &c. He muſt endeavour to keep the Enemy cloſe to the Queſtion, and make him anſwer exactly to every Particular; for the Rituals aſſure us, that the Devils are very fond of talking at Random, and endeavour by Equivocations and Evaſions, to parry the Thruſts of an Exorciſt. They ſometimes fight flying, and frequently, out of a Feint, pretend to take to their Heels.

THE Demoniac muſt have a Crucifix in his Hands, or in his Preſence, and ſome Relics of Saints muſt be laid on his Head and Breaſt; he muſt likewiſe be provided with Agnus Dei's, and be cover'd with a Monk's Capuche, a Stole, or ſome other ſacred Ornament. As to the Hoſt, the Rituals will not allow it to be laid on the Head or Breaſt of the Perſon poſſeſſed. It likewiſe prohibits the exorciſing a Woman who is poſſeſſed, unleſs ſhe be accompanied with her Relations, and ſome pious Perſons. The Exorciſt muſt not touch her, except when he ſigns her with the Sign of the Croſs on the Forehead, Mouth, and Breaſt. The Demoniac, ſay the above-mentioned Rituals, ought to faſt and pray, to reconcile himſelf to God, renounce Vice, eſpecially that which is ſuppoſed to have brought the Calamity upon him; otherwiſe we are told that the Exorciſt would labour in vain, and it would be doing the Devil a kind of Injuſtice, to drive him out of a Man who was his Property and [b] Slave. And, indeed, who is ignorant that 'tis not lawful to diſpoſſeſs an Uſurper, when he has a long Preſcription to plead in his Favour? And is it not well known that the Rules of Morality forbid us to deprive a Man of his Poſſeſſions, tho' we ſhould think them unjuſtly acquir'd?

THE Ceremony of [c] Exorciſm muſt be perform'd in the Church, but not before the Altar, which the Devil or the Demoniac muſt not be ſuffer'd to behold. It muſt be perform'd at the lower End of the Church, towards the Door, this being the Place appointed for Catechumens, Penitents, and excommunicated Perſons, who are not worthy of approaching the Altar. If Alet is to be credited in his Ritual, this Contempt of the Devil will drive him out the ſooner. In caſe the Demoniac is ſick, or hindred from going to Church by any juſt or lawful Cauſe, the Exorciſm may be perform'd privately in a Houſe, provided it be done before Witneſſes. The Exorciſt, before he performs the Ceremony, muſt confeſs himſelf; which being done, in caſe he be a Prieſt, or a Deacon, he muſt put on the Surplice or purple Stole; and if the Exorciſm is performed in the Church, he muſt go and addreſs himſelf in Prayer to Heaven before the Altar, accompanied with ſome Eccleſiaſtics in Surplices, or with a Clerk carrying the holy Water, and the Sprinkler. This Prayer being ended, the Prieſt draws near the Demoniac, and makes him kneel down, and if it be neceſſary, has his Hands and Feet tied. After this he puts the Stole about the Demoniac's Neck, and after having firſt ſigned him, then himſelf, and the Aſſiſtants, with the Sign of the Croſs, he ſprinkles him with holy Water: He likewiſe ſprinkles the Aſſiſtants, which is a holy and laudable Precaution; for otherwiſe the Devil who inhabits the Demoniac, might upon feeling the holy Water, be ſo terrified as to run out of the Body of the Demoniac, and ſhelter himſelf in that of one of the Aſſiſtants, were he not prevented by the Sprinkling. Theſe firſt Sprinklings with holy Water being performed, the Exorciſt kneels down, and the Aſſiſtants alſo; when he begins the Litanies of the Saints, to which the Aſſembly make the Reſponſes. The Litanies are followed by ſome Pſalms, and a Prayer. When the Prayer is ended, the Exorciſt conjures Satan and his Companions by the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion; asks his Name, and forbids him to afflict or trouble the Perſon or Place, which are to be exorciſed. Then the Exorciſt ſigns himſelf anew, the Demoniac or Perſon poſſeſs'd, and the Goſpel he is going to read, with the Sign of the Croſs, making choice of ſuch Paſſages of the Goſpel as may beſt mortify the Prince of Darkneſs and his Retinue; as for inſtance, the Beginning of St. John's Goſpel, which mentions the Incarnation of the Word; the Power which Chriſt gave to the Apoſtles of driving out Devils, and ſuch like Paſſages, the whole agreeable to the Tenor of the Goſpels; then follows a Prayer, and the Signs of the Croſs are repeated. Afterwards the Exorciſt lays his Right Hand on the Head of the Demoniac, and repeats a Prayer, which is follow'd by the [a] Exorciſm, by which the Devil is prodigiouſly four'd; nor is that which follows it, after the Exorciſt has made three Croſſes on the Breaſt of the Demoniac, leſs dreadful to him. Then begins a cloſe Attack with the Spirit of Darkneſs, and (together with a great Number of Signs of the Croſs) the Power and Judgments of God are ſet before him; the Sacrament, or rather Sacrifice of the Croſs; the Faith of the holy Apoſtles, and of all the Saints; the Death of the Martyrs, the Chaſtity of Confeſſors, the Interceſſions of Saints, and the Force of the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion are all fully diſplay'd. He is reproach'd for all his Guilt, is told that his Empire has been deſtroy'd, and that he has been caſt into outer Darkneſs. (This, by the way, is one of the chief Reaſons which the Heretics employ, to prove that ever ſince the Reign of Chriſt, Satan has been bound in everlaſting Chains, and baniſh'd to Hell, till the Conſummation of all Things.) In the mean Time he is conjur'd, in the Name of the Lord, to come out of the Perſon poſſeſſed. "It is hard for thee to reſiſt, "ſays the Exorciſt to him, and to kick againſt the Pricks; but thy Reſiſtance will ſerve "only to heighten the Rigour of thy Puniſhment, &c." Then follows a Prayer, and afterwards a third Exorciſm, in caſe the Devil is not gone out at the firſt or ſecond Summons. This third Exorciſm is of the ſame Nature with the reſt, and conſiſts of hiſtorical Quotations from the holy Scriptures, (accompanied with Signs of the Croſs) which very much mortify evil Spirits. This laſt Exorciſm muſt be repeated, till ſuch Time as the Devil is come out of the Body of the Demoniac; as alſo from Time to Time, Pſalms, ſpiritual Songs, the Apoſtles Creed, that of Athanaſius, the Lord's Prayer, Ave Maria, &c.

When the wicked Spirit has taken up his Abode in any Dwelling-Houſe, the Rector or Curate of the Pariſh, after having taken the neceſſary Informations, and receiv'd the Biſhop's Orders, ſhall exhort the Inhabitants of the Houſe to Penance: And if this Act of Return to God is not ſufficient, he muſt go in Perſon to the Houſe which is haunted with the evil Spirit, and exorciſe him in the manner above-mention'd, ſprinkling all the Apartments of it with holy Water.

PART I.

The Sacrament of HOLY ORDERS.

IN the laſt Part of this Diſſertation we propoſe to treat of whatever bears any Relation to the Sacrament of holy Orders. It were needleſs to give the Reader the Origin of the Name of this Sacrament, or to inform him that [a] Order in general is ſuch a Diſpoſition and Arrangement of different Things, as aſſigns to each its proper Place; that by this Sacrament, an Order is ſettled among the Faithful, diſtinguiſhing the Laity, who compoſe the inferior Part of the Church, from the Clergy, who are the ſuperior Part of it, and to whoſe ſpiritual Government the Laity are ſubordinate; that by this Sacrament, an Order and Relation is ſettled between the ſuperior and inferior Miniſters of the Church. Laſtly, that the Clergy are obliged, by virtue of the Sacrament of Holy Orders conferr'd upon them, to preſerve Order among the Faithful committed to their Charge.

THERE are ſeven Orders in the Catholic Church, viz. the Sacriſtan or Door-Keeper, the Reader, the Exorciſt, the Acolyte, the Subdeacon, the Deacon, and the Prieſt, which includes Epiſcopacy, which is only the Accompliſhment or Perfection of the former. Among theſe ſeveral Orders, thoſe of the Subdeacon, of the Deacon, and Prieſt only are ſacred, and that becauſe the Vow of Chaſtity is more immediately attach'd to them; and that this [a] Vow ſeparating theſe Miniſters, as it were, from the reſt of Men, does thereby devote them intirely to the Service of God's Church. Theſe ſacred Orders are likewiſe call'd Majores, or the Greater. The Reaſon for this Plurality of Orders, according to the Rituals, is the Glory of God, which requires a great Number of Officers in different Stations; and the Excellency of the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt, for which thoſe Officers act. They add, that as the inferior Orders are ſo many Steps for arriving at the ſuperior ones, thoſe who take Orders have thereby an Opportunity to exerciſe themſelves gradually in the Practice of all the Virtues and Duties of the genuine Prieſt.

[b] THERE are ſome myſtic Writers, who imagine they find the Inſtitution of all the above-mention'd Orders, in the fourth and following Verſes of the twelfth Chapter of the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians. That Wiſdom there mention'd denotes Epiſcopacy; Knowledge, the Prieſt; Faith, the Deacon; the Gift of Miracles, the Subdeacon; that of healing Diſeaſes, the Exorciſt; the Interpretation of Tongues, the Acolyte; Prophecy, the Reader; the Variety of Tongues, the Singer; and the Gift of penetrating the human Mind, the Door-Keeper.

SOME other Writers of the ſame Character tell us, that our Saviour took upon him all theſe ſeveral Orders, during his Reſidence upon Earth; that he was the Door-Keeper when he drove the Money-Changers out of the Temple; Reader, when he read in the Synagogue; Exorciſt, when he caſt out Devils; Acolyte, when he declared he was the Light of the World; Subdeacon when he turn'd Water in Wine; Deacon, when he diſtributed the Bread and Wine among his Diſciples, and at other Times; and Prieſt when he inſtituted the Sacrament of his laſt Supper. As to the Origin of theſe different Orders, if we may believe the Proteſtant Author quoted in the Margin, "[c] Hygi- "nus, Biſhop of Rome, was the firſt that regulated the Clergy, by dividing them into "their ſeveral Ranks and Orders; that before his Time there were but two Poſts in the "Church; that of Prieſt, (i. e. Elder) or Biſhop, and that of Deacon." The ſame Writer tells us, that in the Infancy of the Chriſtian Religion, the Office of Prieſt and Biſhop ſeem to have been one and the ſame Thing. However, we are not to be guided by a Writer withdrawn from the Authority of the Church, in an Affair where we have the Teſtimonies of Euſebius, and ſome other Writers of ſtill greater Antiquity, to vouch for us. And 'tis, moreover, very certain, that the whole Diſtribution of Orders as it now ſtands is of great Antiquity in the Church.

ALL thoſe who intend to enter into holy Orders are obliged to live [d] ſingle, and muſt have a Teſtimonial of their Probity, Virtue, &c. A Declaration is made in the Church

[d] However, 'tis certain that the Clergy in the primitive Ages were allowed to be married. It muſt, indeed, be own'd, that the Celibacy of the Clergy was debated in the firſt Council of Nice, and perhaps earlier; but in ſhort, in ſpite of the Oppoſition of ſome Puritiſts in religious Matters, the Marriage of the Clergy did once prevail; not but that ſeveral plauſible Reaſons were made uſe of, in oppoſition to that Liberty; ſuch as the Cares of a Family; a Neglect of the Cure of Souls, or a Dioceſe, occaſion'd by thoſe Cares; the Prieſt employing the Temporalities of Church on three Sundays ſucceſſively, before the Day of Ordination, of their Intention to take Orders. They enter into Orders by the Tonſure, which, according to the Rituals, denotes the renouncing of the World. The Ceremony of the Tonſure owes its Original to the Practice of the Nazarenes among the Jews, which St. Paul allow'd of, in order to bring over that People to Chriſtianity [a]. The eccleſiaſtical Writers aſſure us, it was obſerved in the primitive Church. [b] An antient Prelate, who was mighty fond of the allegorical and myſtical Interpretation of Ceremonies, informs us, that the ſingle Tonſure is an Image of the Crown of Thorns which was planted on our Saviour's Head, to deride his Sovereignty; and that the double repreſents St. Peter's Head, or rather the heavenly Crown of Martyrdom with which it was crown'd, after the Apoſtle had loſt it in his Miſſion to the Infidels; and yet the Acts of St. Peter's Martyrdom make no mention of beheading, but poſitively ſay he was crucified. If the Reader is not pleaſed with theſe Allegories, here follow ſome others. The orbicular Form of the Tonſure is a Hieroglyphic of the [c] Perfection to which a Clergyman ought to aſpire. This Tonſure, which is call'd a Crown, becauſe of its Form, repreſents alſo the ſpiritual Sovereignty of the Clergy. We cannot preciſely ſay, whether the Heathens did not alſo endeavour to explain the Tonſure of ſome of their Prieſts, by ſuch like Allegories; as for Inſtance, that of the Prieſts of Iſis and Serapis; for they alſo had their Heads ſhaved.

The Adminiſtration of the Sacrament of Orders is the peculiar Province of the Biſhops, in quality of Superiors of the Church, and of all the inferior Clergy. This religious Ceremony muſt be perform'd before the People, and if poſſible in the Cathedral; the Seaſons for it are Lent, the Eve of Paſſion, or Eaſter-Sunday, and the Ember Weeks. At theſe Times, ſay the Rituals, the Faithful are to faſt and pray, in order to implore of God wiſe and prudent Miniſters over the Church.

The Candidate for the Tonſure preſents himſelf before the Biſhop, in a black Caſſock, with a Surplice hanging on his Left Arm, and a lighted Taper in his Hand. [d] He kneels down, while the Biſhop in a ſtanding Poſture, and cover'd with his Mitre, repeats a Prayer, and ſeveral Verſes out of the Scriptures ſuitable to the Ceremony. This done, the Biſhop ſits down, and [e] cuts his Hair from five Parts of his Head, viz.

of the Church to the Maintenance of their Families; the Tenderneſs for a Wife and Children, incompatible with that which a Prieſt or Biſhop ought to have for their Flock, who are their ſpiritual Children. Be this as it will, there was at that Time no eccleſiaſtical Law enacted againſt the Marriage of ſuch as were in holy Orders. It is affirm'd that Pope Syricius, who lived at the End of the fourth Century, enacted the firſt Decree againſt the Marriage of the Clergy of the Romiſh Church. However, this Decree was not univerſally received, and ſeveral Centuries after, a great Number of the Clergy were married. Notwithſtanding Pope Pius II. boldly affirm'd, That Prieſts had been prohibited from marrying for very good Reaſons, but ought to have been allowed that Privilege again for better, 'tis nevertheleſs certain, that Continence in a Clergyman is honourable, and perfectly well adapted to the Purity of the Chriſtian Religion. It muſt be own'd, that the animal Part of Man finds it a very difficult Task to obſerve ſuch an awful Silence on this Occaſion, as the Church requires, and is apt to put the Query, Wherefore does ſhe reject Eunuchs, ſince ſhe prohibits Marriage? To this it will be anſwer'd, That the Church offers nothing to God but what is perfect; but then in a ſpiritual Religion God can require nothing but a ſpiritual Perfection. 'Tis anſwer'd, that a viſible Imperfection in the Body might diſguſt great Numbers of good Chriſtians; but the inviſible can give no one a Diſtaſte. Eunuchs were likewiſe rejected in the Jewiſh Church. But the Egyptians went farther, and carried the Notion of Eccleſiaſtical Manhood to ſuch a Degree of Extravagance, that among them none were admitted to the Prieſthood before they had undergone a Probation in the Rites of Priapus, and duly practiſed the different Ceremonies of his Worſhip.

[b] Germanus, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, mention'd by Caſalius.

[c] The Egyptians repreſent Perfection and Eternity by a Circle; which Hieroglyphic was likewiſe employ'd by the Jews, as is manifeſt from the Circle or golden Crown which was round about the Ark of the Covenant. After this it was received by the Heathens in far diſtant Countries, as the Romans, &c. Laſtly, we meet with it among the antient Mercians. Vide the third Volume of this Work, containing the Ceremonies of the Idolatrous Nations.

[e] Formerly it was the Cuſtom to cut the Hair in ſuch a Manner, as to leave only a little Circle at the Extremities; in the ſame Manner as the Monks and ſinging Boys at this Day. The Council of Toledo condemn'd, as Heretics, all ſuch Spaniards who in Imitation of thoſe of the Order of Readers in France, and of ſome Heretics in Spain, received the Tonſure only on the Crown of their Heads, *Canon. before, behind, each Side of his Ears; and the Crown; during which the tonſur'd Perſon ſays, with the Biſhop, Dominus pars hæreditatis meæ, &c. i. e. the Lord is my Inheritance, &c. The Tonſure being performed, the Biſhop takes off his Mitre, and repeats a Prayer over the Perſon tonſured, and the Choir chaunt an Anthem; which being done, the Biſhop repeats a ſecond Prayer, obſerving to turn himſelf towards the Perſon who receives the Tonſure. He afterwards puts him the Surplice on, ſaying at the ſame Time, Induat te Dominus novum hominem, &c. May the Lord clothe thee with the new Man, &c. [a] When the Ceremony is perform'd in private, the Candidate preſents a Wax-Taper to the Biſhop, who gives him his Bleſſing. Alet tells us in his Ritual, that the black Caſſock which the young Abbé puts on, teaches him that he ſhould be clothed intirely with Chriſtian Virtues; and its Colour, that he muſt look upon himſelf as dead to the World; that the lighted Taper he holds in his Hand denotes the Innocency of Baptiſm, which he has preſerv'd, or the Light of Faith; that the Tonſure itſelf is a Mark of the Renunciation he makes of the World, and its Vanities; but the [b] Hair that is left denotes with what Sobriety he ought to uſe the Things of this World. It may be farther added, that the Hair cut above the Eyes, ſignifies that the Clergy ought to be deliver'd from ſpiritual Blindneſs; and that which is cut above the Ears denotes that they ought to be open to the Word of God; behind the Head, that they ought not to meditate on Things behind them; on the Crown, that they partake of the Sovereignty of Chriſt Jeſus; the Whiteneſs of the Surplice denotes their Innocency and Purity of Life; every Thing in ſhort, even the very Flax, of which the Surplice is made, has its allegorical Signification.

THE Employment of the Door-Keeper, call'd Sacriſtan, in the third Compartment of the annex'd Plate, is to open and ſhut the Church-Doors, as alſo to take care that the Bells be rung in due Time; that of the Reader, to read aloud the Leſſons and Prophecies which are ſung at Matins and Maſs; that of the Exorciſt, to caſt out Devils from the Bodies of Perſons poſſeſs'd; that of the Acolyte, to bring in the Tapers, to light them, to take care to put Fire into the Thurible and Frankincenſe into the Navicula, to prepare the Wine and Water for the Sacrifice, to attend upon the Subdeacon, the Deacon, and the Prieſt. The Employment of the Subdeacon is to take care of the holy Veſſels, to prepare and pour out Water on the Wine in the Chalice, to ſing the Epiſtle at ſolemn Maſſes, to bring and hold the Book of the Goſpels before the Deacon while he is reading them, to give it the Prieſt to kiſs, to carry the Croſs in Proceſſion, and to receive the Oblations of the People. The Function of the Deacon is to adminiſter to the Prieſt all Things neceſſary for the [c] Sacrifice; to read the Goſpel publickly, to explain it; to be in ſome Meaſure the Church's Steward, with regard to the Diſtribution of thoſe Things which are given to the Poor. Alet tells us in his Ritual, that antiently it was the Deacon's Buſineſs to turn out of the Church before Maſs began, all ſuch Perſons as were not allow'd to be preſent at it, and after Maſs to diſmiſs ſuch as had aſſiſted at it. The Deacon uſed to [d] remind the Faithful of Humility, which Cuſtom is ſtill obſerv'd. Moreover, the Deacon muſt aſſiſt and ſerve the Prieſt in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, and may himſelf baptize in the Abſence of the Prieſt in Caſes of Neceſſity. Laſtly, it is his Duty to give the Biſhop an Account how the Laity ſpend their Lives, purely for their Edification, and the better Government of the Church. The Duty of the Prieſt is to offer up the Sacrifice of the Maſs, to adminiſter the Sacraments, (thoſe of Confirmation and Orders excepted) to preach the [c] Antiently the Deacon uſed to give the Cup in the Sacrament, and the Biſhop or Prieſt the Bread.

[d] By ſaying to them, Humiliate capita veſtra Deo, i. e. Humble yourſelves before the Lord; which, we are told, was generally directed to Penitents, who uſed to proſtrate themſelves while the Biſhop or Prieſt impoſed his Hands upon them. But in Seaſons of a general Penance, ſuch as Lent, they uſed to ſay theſe Words publickly at the End of the Maſs for the whole Congregation in general, in order that they might kneel down when the Prieſt prayed for them, becauſe it was not poſſible for him to lay his Hands on each particular Penitent.

Word

Word of God; to bleſs the People, and to watch over the Souls committed to his Charge.

WHEN the Biſhop ordains a Door-Keeper or Sacriſtan, he gives him the Keys of the Church, and while the Sacriſtan touches them, the Biſhop ſays to him, Remember that you are to give an Account to God, of whatever theſe Keys ſhut up; or rather, Govern yourſelf, as being to give an Account, &c. Sic age quaſi Deo redditurus ſis rationem, &c. [a] This being done, the Arch-Deacon gives the Door-Keeper full Power to exerciſe his Office, by cauſing him to open and ſhut the Gates of the Church, and to ring the Bells. During the Ceremony the Biſhop makes an exhortatory Diſcourſe to the Sacriſtan.

THE fourth Council of Carthage, held in 398, but which ſeveral learned Writers look upon as fictitious, mentions the greateſt Part of the Ceremonies made uſe of in theſe Ordinations. 'Twould be needleſs to obſerve, that certain Perſons were appointed in the Temple of Jeruſalem, whoſe Employments were much the ſame with thoſe of theſe inferior Officers of the Church. There were alſo ſuch like Officers belonging to the Temples of the Idolaters.

WHEN a Perſon is admitted into the Reader's Order, the Biſhop cauſes him to lay his Hands on the Book of the Propheſies, and the Leſſons of Matins, ſaying to him at the ſame Time, Accipe & eſto verbi Dei relator, &c. i. e. Receive this Book, render an Account of the Word of God, and if you acquit yourſelf worthily of this Office, be aſſured that you ſhall have a Portion of the Inheritance allotted to thoſe who from the Beginning have diſpenſed the Word of God. We are told that the Readers are at this Time, in the Church, the ſame with the Prophets among the Jews; at leaſt their Office bears ſome Affinity to thoſe who were called to the Reading of the holy Books in the Synagogue, and to ſuch as perform that Office to this Day, but with this Exception, that the Jews do not rank them in the Body of their Clergy.

WHEN the Biſhop ordains an Exorciſt, he makes him lay his Hand on the Book of Exorciſms, ſaying to him, Receive this Book, and remember at the ſame Time that you receive the Power of exorciſing Demoniacs, or ſuch as are poſſeſſed, whether they have been baptiz'd, or are only Catechumens. The Ceremony of exorciſing is now performed by Prieſts; the Buſineſs of the Exorciſts being generally only to get ready the Salt, and every Thing neceſſary for the Bleſſing of the Water on the Day appointed. When the Prieſt exorciſes any Perſon, the Exorciſt muſt aſſiſt at the Ceremony, and get ready the Book of Exorciſms.

AT the Ordination of an Acolyte, the Candidate lays his Hand on the Candleſtic, which has a Taper in it, and which the Biſhop preſents unto him, repeating at the ſame Time a ſet Form of Words ſuitable to the Occaſion. After this the Biſhop preſents him empty Burettes or Cruets uſed for the Wine and Water in the Sacrifice of the Maſs. This Ceremony, like the former, is concluded with an Exhortation.

THE Biſhop when he confers the Order of Sub-Deacon, cauſes the Candidate to lay his Hand on the Chalice and the Paten, both being empty, ſaying to him at the ſame Time, [b] Take care of the Miniſtry which is committed to your Charge, preſent your ſelf to God in ſuch a Manner as may make you agreeable to him. After which he cauſes the Sub-Deacon to lay his Hand on the Epiſtles, ſaying to him, Receive this Book, and the Power of reading the Epiſtles in the holy Church of God, &c. The Perſon to be ordained muſt preſent himſelf clothed in a white Albe girded about him, and a lighted Taper in his Right Hand; he falls proſtrate on the Ground, and continues in that Poſture while the Biſhop and Clergy read the Litanies of the Saints. After this the Biſhop turning himſelf towards the Candidate, (or Candidates, if there be more than one) who is ſtill proſtrate, gives him his Bleſſing [a] thrice, and makes a Diſcourſe, in which he repreſents to him the Importance of the Sub-Deaconſhip; after which he gives him the Paten, &c. in the Manner above-mentioned, and repeats ſome Prayers. Which being ended, the Biſhop clothes him with the Amict, ſaying to him, Accipe amictum, per quem deſignatur caſtigatio vocis, i. e. Receive this Amict, which denotes the Chaſtiſement, or rather the Bridling of his Tongue. He then puts the Maniple on his Left Arm, telling him, That it ſignifies the Fruit of Good Works: Finally he clothes him with the Dalmatica, telling him, That 'tis a Garment of Joy. Alet tells us in his Ritual, that the Amict denotes the Application of the Tongue, the Maniple that of the Hands, and the Dalmatica that of the Heart to the Service of God.

CASALIUS in his Book of the Ceremonies of the antient Chriſtians, is of Opinion that the Sub-Deacons have ſome Affinity to the Nethimeans, who were ſubject to the Levites, and whom Joſhua firſt choſe from among the Gibeonites. Be this as it will, the Inſtitution of the Sub-Deaconſhip is of great Antiquity; but 'tis the Buſineſs of the Critics to inform us whether that Order, and the other minor ones above-mentioned, were exerciſed in the ſame manner in the antient Church, as at this Day.

HERE follows the Ceremony of the Ordination of Deacons: The Candidate preſents himſelf clothed in the Sub-Deacon's Habit; then the Biſhop enquires after his Character of the Arch-Deacon and the People, and afterwards makes an Exhortation to him on the Excellency of the Deaconſhip: The Deacon proſtrates himſelf in the ſame Manner as the Sub-Deacon. After this the Biſhop gives him the Holy Ghoſt, by laying his Right Hand only on his Head, to ſhew that he does not receive it as fully as the Prieſt. The Biſhop [b] being ſeated, the Candidate kneels before him, and receives the Stole on his Left Shoulder, which an [c] Acolyte fixes round the Left Side of his Neck, in ſuch manner that the Extremities hang under the Right Arm. After the Stole he receives the Dalmatica. The Ordination being ended, the Biſhop preſents him with the Book of the Goſpels, and the Ceremony concludes with the Prayers of the Biſhop and People. An Italian Writer on Ceremonies tells us, [d] that after the Offertory, the new Deacons offer Tapers, &c. The Rituals aſſure us, that the Stole put over the Albe [e] denotes the Power given to the Deacon, which however is inferior to that of the Prieſts, and accordingly he wears it hanging down, not before him, but under the Right Arm only. The Dalmatica points out to the Deacon [f] three Gifts of God, viz. the divine Protection, Joy, and Juſtice. The Origin of the Inſtitution of Deacons may be ſeen in the ſixth Chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles: They were the Miniſters of the Apoſtles.

THE Order of Prieſthood is ſuperior to all thoſe above-mentioned, becauſe a Prieſt is empower'd to conſecrate the Body of our bleſſed Lord. He preſents himſelf to the Biſhop in a Deacon's Habit, with a lighted Taper in his Right Hand, and the Chaſuble folded over his Left Arm. After the Arch-Deacon has acquainted the Biſhop with the Character of the Candidate, and the Biſhop has made a previous Exhortation to the Aſſembly, the Litanies are ſaid, the Candidate lying all the while proſtrate on the Ground, in Teſtimony of his Humility: He then riſes up, and preſents himſelf to the Biſhop, who lays both his Hands upon him; all the Prieſts who aſſiſt at the Ceremony do the ſame, which being done, the Biſhop and his Miniſters repeat ſome Prayers appointed by the Pontifical. Then the Prelate takes the Stole, which hangs from one Shoulder only, and puts it over both, in ſuch a manner that it [a] falls croſs-wiſe on the Candidate's Breaſt. The Biſhop in putting on his Stole ſays to him, Receive the Yoke of the Lord. The Stole thus fix'd on both the Prieſt's Shoulders, points out to him, that he receives a Fulneſs of Charity, greater than that of the Deacon. After the Stole the Biſhop gives him the Chaſuble, which ſignifies Charity; and accordingly the Biſhop when he gives it the Prieſt, ſays to him, Accipe veſtem ſacerdotalem, per quam charitas intelligitur, i. e. Receive the ſacerdotal Veſtment which repreſents Charity. In giving the Chaſuble to the Prieſt, it is firſt unfolded before, and afterwards behind, which we are told denotes to him the great [b] Extent his Charity ſhould bear. This Ceremony is followed by another Prayer, and the Veni Creator is ſung, during which the Biſhop anoints the Candidate's Hands in the Form of a Croſs, with the Oil of the Catechumens. This being done, the Biſhop joins the Prieſt's Hands together, and the Prelate's Vicar, or ſome other of his Miniſters, [c] wraps them round with a Piece of clean Linen.

After this, the Biſhop empowers the Prieſt to conſecrate, by making him lay his Hand on the Chalice, in which is ſome Wine, and the Paten, on which a Wafer or Hoſt is laid: The Paten is laid upon the Chalice. At the Concluſion of the Ceremony the new ordain'd Prieſt receives the Sacrament, and the Biſhop gives him his Bleſſing, after having made him repeat the Creed, laid his Hands a ſecond Time on his Head, ſaying to him at the ſame Time, Receive the Holy Ghoſt; and obliged him to make the ſolemn Promiſe of Reverence and Obedience which all Prieſts owe their reſpective Biſhops. This ſolemn Oath or Promiſe the Biſhop receives by preſſing both the Hands of the Prieſt between his own.

The Benefices and Dignities of the Church.

Church Benefices or Livings, being the Appurtenances of holy Orders and the Eccleſiaſtical State, can belong to thoſe only who are ordained, or have receiv'd the Tonſure. Eccleſiaſtical Dignities are of much more antient Date than [d] Benefices, the latter taking their Riſe from the Degeneracy of the Church in latter Ages.

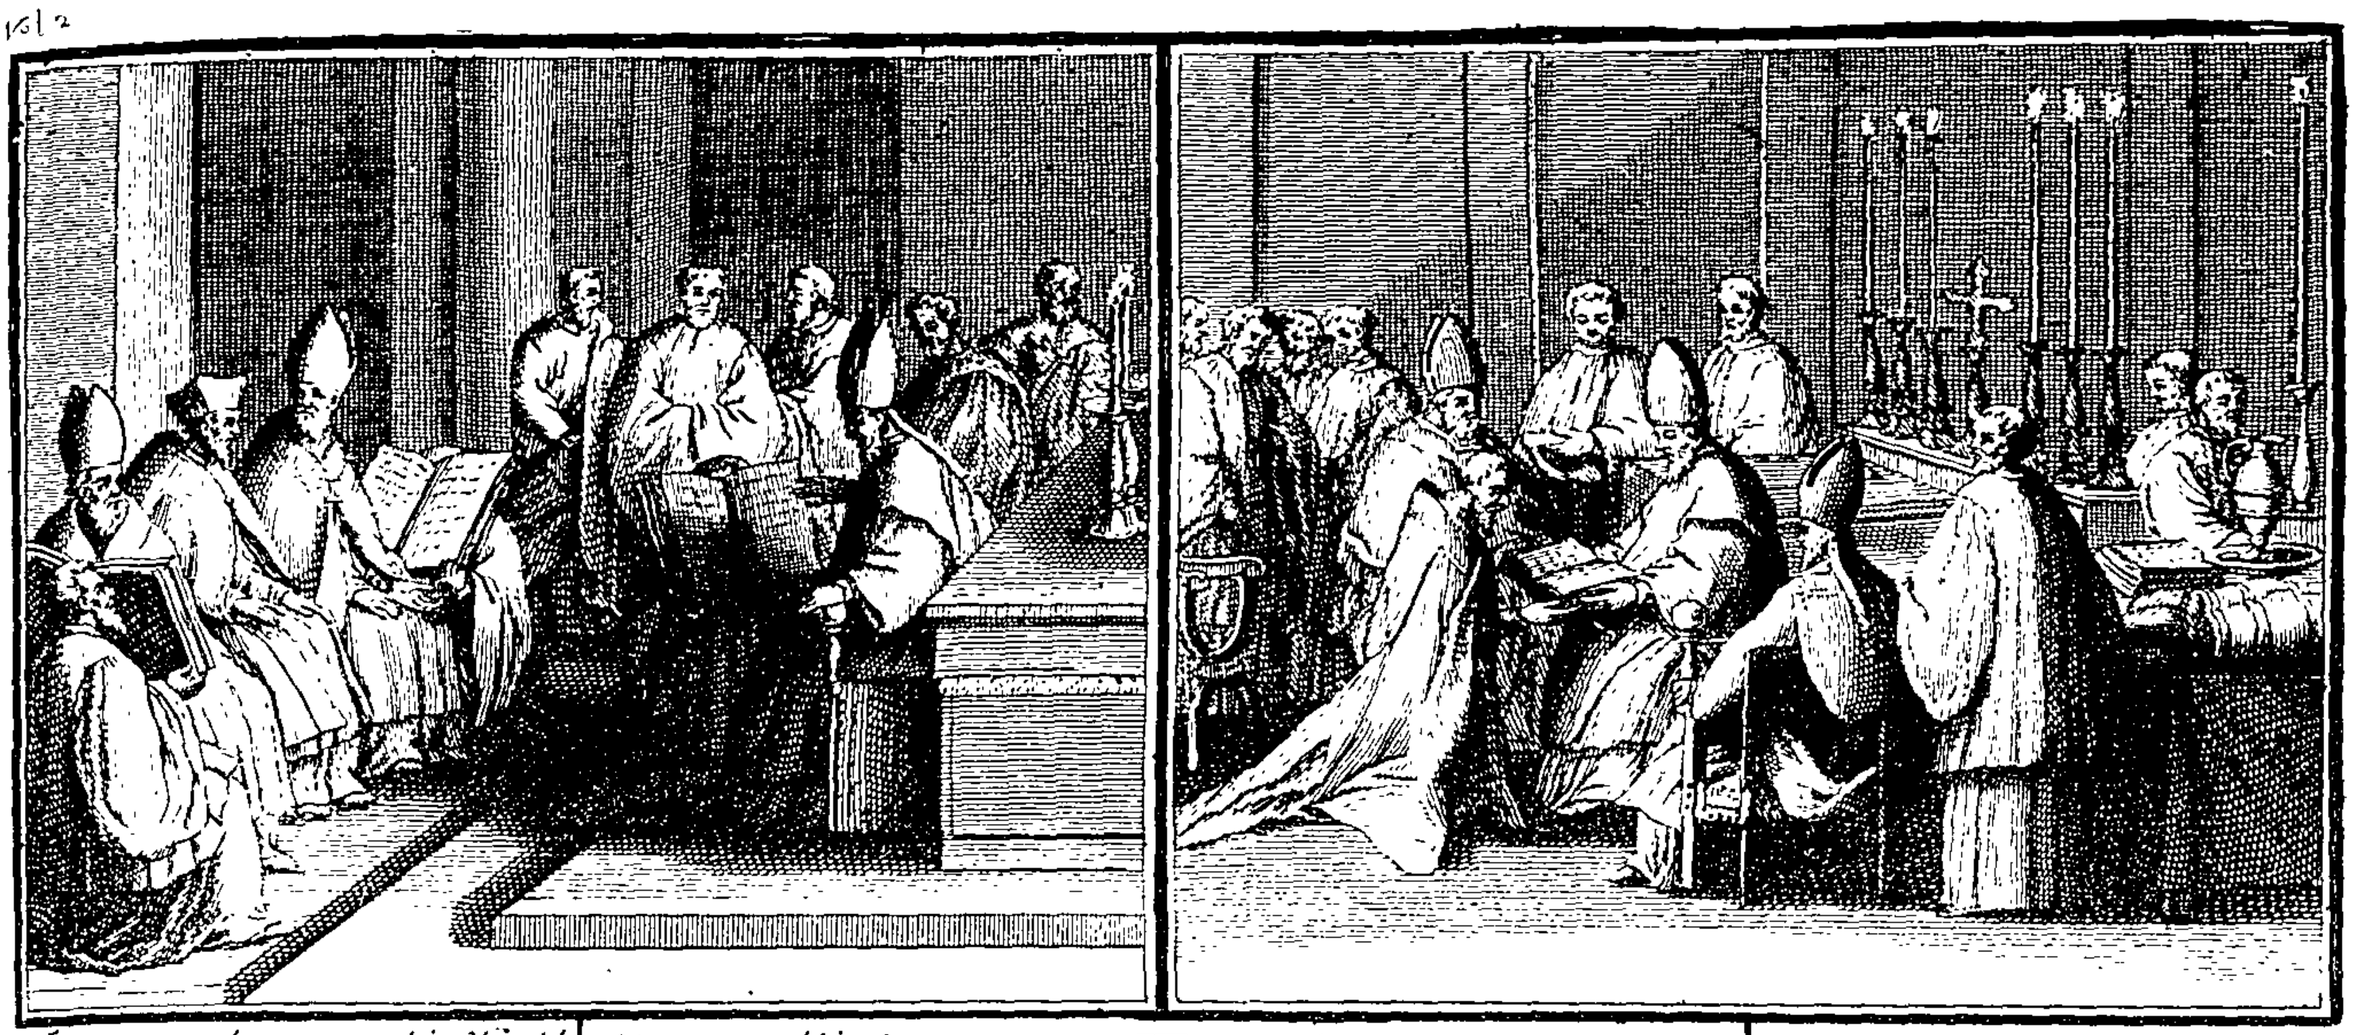
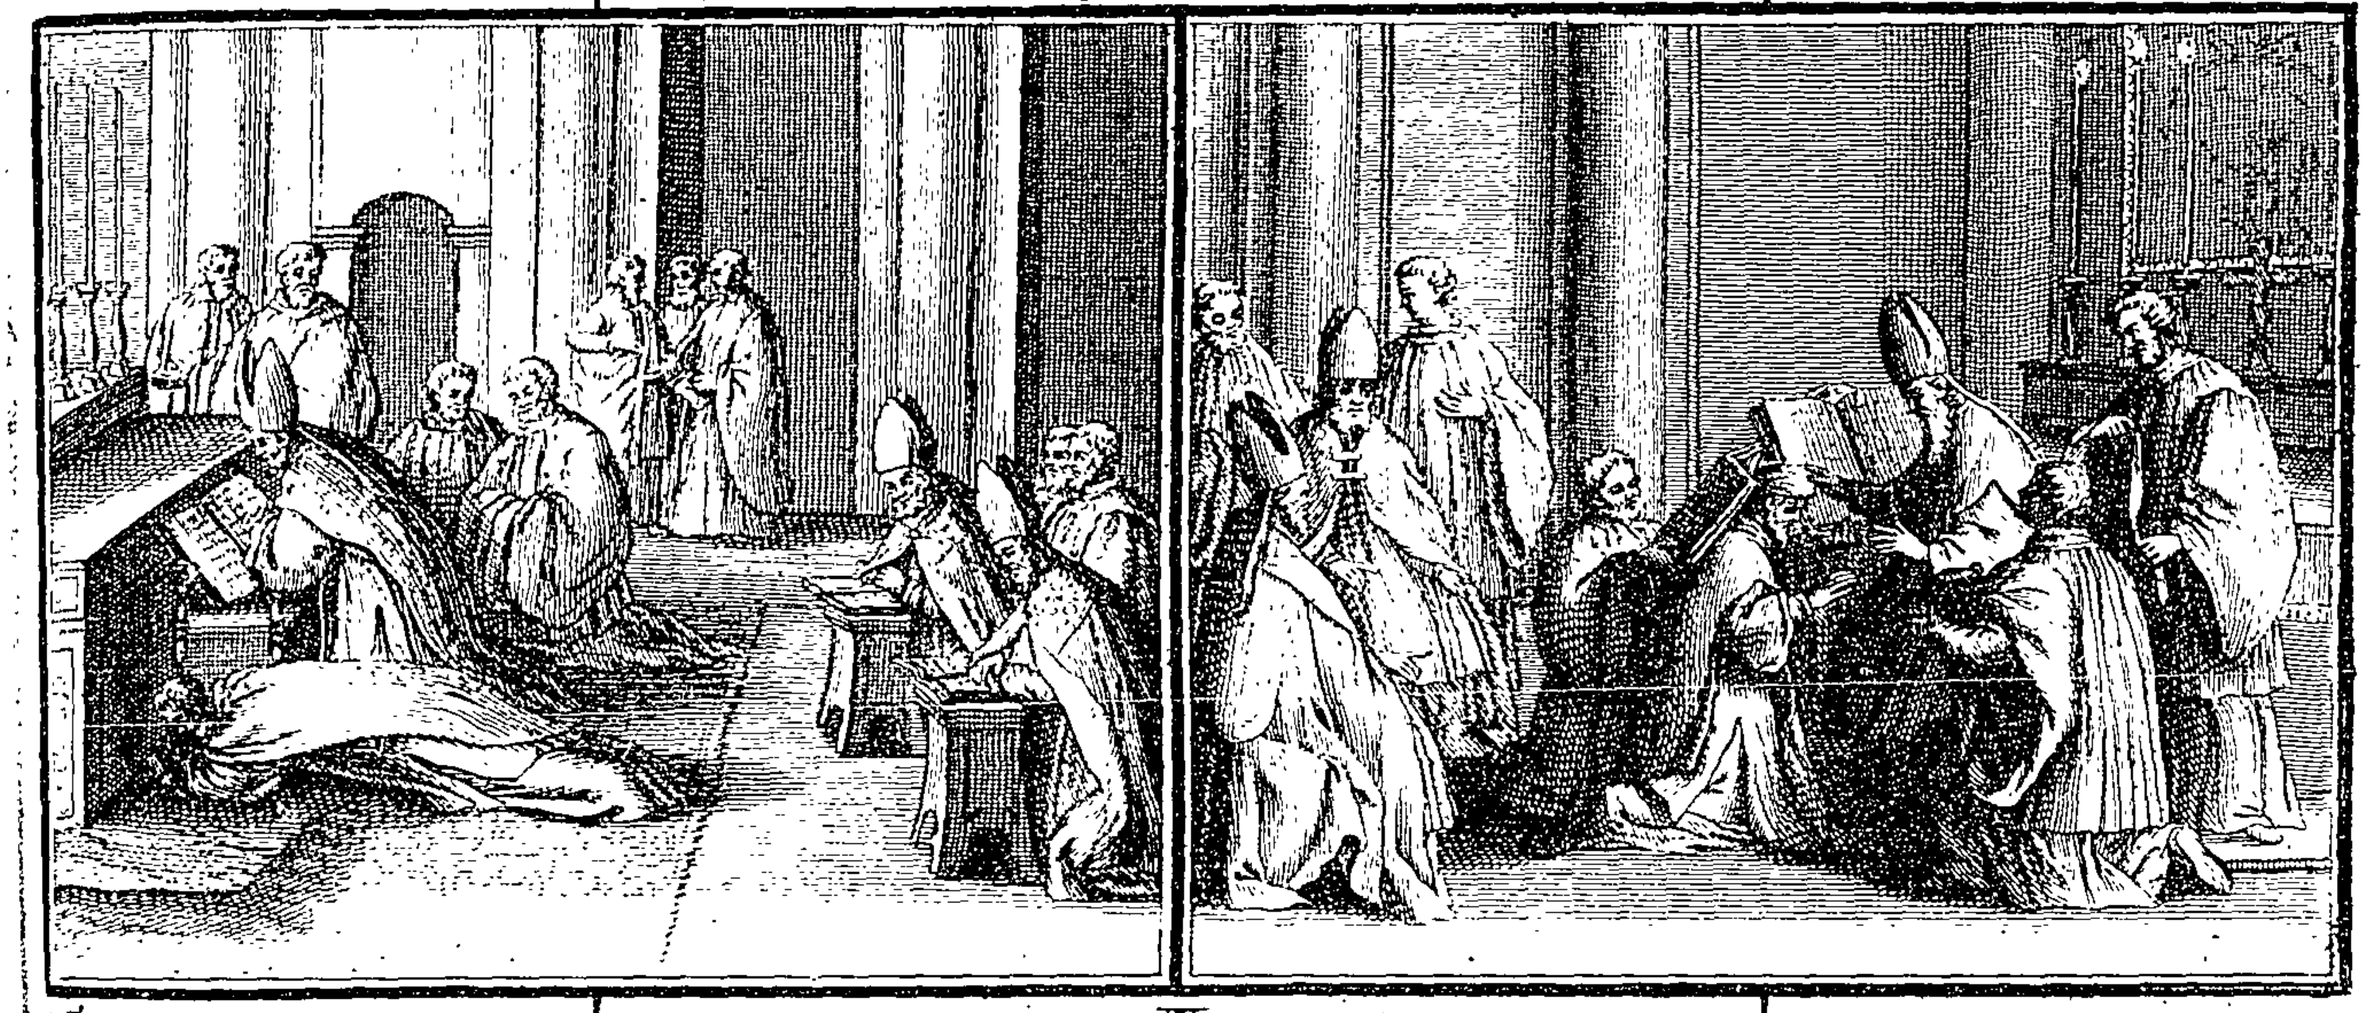
As to the Origin of the Word Benefice, we find it as follows in the above-cited Ritual: "This Word was antiently appropriated to the Lands which Kings and Princes "uſed to beſtow on thoſe who had fought valiantly in the Wars; and were not uſed in "this particular Signification, but during the Time that the Goths and Lombards reign'd in "Italy, under whom thoſe Fiefs were introduced which were peculiarly term'd Bene- "fices, and thoſe who enjoy'd them Beneficiarii or Vaſſals. For notwithſtanding that "the Romans alſo beſtow'd Lands on their Captains and Soldiers, yet theſe Lands had "not the Name of Benefices appropriated to them; but the Word Benefice was a general "Term which included all kinds of Gifts or Grants, according to the antient Signifi- "cation of the Latin Word. In Imitation of the new Senſe in which that Word was "taken with regard to the Fiefs, it was at length employ'd in the Church, when the "Temporalities thereof began to be divided, and to be given up to particular Perſons, "inſtead of remaining wholly in the Hands of the Biſhops: This Practice the Biſhops "themſelves firſt introduced, purpoſely to reward Merit, and aſſiſt ſuch Eccleſiaſtics as " might be in Neceſſity. However, it was ſoon carried to greater Lengths, and at laſt " became unlimited, as has been ſince manifeſt among the Monks and ſecular Clergy. " A Benefice therefore is not merely a Right of receiving Part of the Temporalities of the " Church, for the Service a Perſon does in it; a Right which is founded on the Goſpel, and " has always ſubſiſted ſince the Apoſtolic Age; but 'tis that of enjoying a Part of the Tempo- " ralities of the Church, aſſign'd and determin'd in a ſpecial Form, in ſuch a Manner that " no other Clergymen can lay any Claim or Pretenſion to it——. And in this Age 'tis " not barely the Right of enjoying Part of the Temporalities of the Church; but 'tis " likewiſe a fix'd and a permanent Right, in ſuch a Manner that it devolves on another, " after the Death of the Incumbent: Which formerly was otherwiſe ordered; for when " Benefices were firſt introduced —— they were conferr'd on Clergymen only for a ſtated " Time, or for Life; after which they reverted to the Church."



A PERSON muſt be fourteen Years of Age complete, before he can be entitled to poſſeſs a Benefice, and muſt have received the Tonſure beforehand. As for the Qualities requiſite to perform all the incumbent Duties annex'd to Benefices worthily, we ſhall take no notice of them, nor of the previous Vocation of thoſe who enter upon them.

As to Plurality of Benefices, Alet argues very judiciouſly in his Ritual upon that Head: " It was impoſſible, ſays he, for the Fathers of the antient Church, to condemn " this Plurality, ſince the Poſſeſſion of Benefices, as ſettled at this Day, was unknown to " them. However we ſee what were the Sentiments of the Church upon that Head, " in one of the Canons of the Council of Calcedon, which prohibits the Clergy from " inſerting their Names in the Liſts of two Churches, or, in other Words, to en- " joy a Plurality of Benefices——. The ſecond Council of Nice held under Charle- " magne, prohibits the ſame Thing as an infamous Profit; with this Exception, how- " ever, that it is allow'd the rural Clergy, becauſe of their ſmall Number in thoſe Ages. " Finally, a Council held at Paris in 829, condemns this Practice, and declares it to " flow from the ſame Source, viz. Covetouſneſs." Nor have Pluralities been leſs cen- ſured ſince the Eſtabliſhment of Benefices. The Doctors of the Church have com- plained of them, and whenever the Pope himſelf diſpenſed with holding a Plurality of Benefices, they nevertheleſs aſſerted that ſuch a Diſpenſation did not wipe out the Sin of Plurality. They inſinuated that this Salvo might ſeem plauſible enough in this World, but that the Caſe would be altered in Heaven: Nevertheleſs the Cuſtom of holding ſe- veral Benefices at the ſame Time has been general for many Ages.



ALL Incumbents, eſpecially thoſe who have a Cure of Souls, are obliged to Reſi- dence; but they frequently leave that Duty to their Curates: However, by the Laws of the Church, they are forbid to receive any of the Fruits of their Benefice, during the Time they may have been abſent from it. The great Number of ſuch Non-Reſidents gives us Reaſon to believe that a great Indulgence is ſhewn on this Occaſion; and moreover, the Diſtemper is grown ſo inveterate, that it is impoſſible to cure it.

A CLERGYMAN is forbid to buy or ſell Spiritualities, or ſuch Things as are annex- ed thereunto: This Traffic is call'd Simony. By ſpiritual Things we underſtand the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, the Sacraments, and all other ſpiritual Functions, ſuch as Preaching, and celebrating the Maſs, &c. By Things annex'd to the Spiritual, we un- derſtand the Revenues of Benefices, which depend on the ſpiritual Functions the Incum- bent is obliged to exerciſe. Were the Article of Simony to be urged a little home, 'tis to be feared that the Sin which is the Conſequence of it, has infected the greateſt Part of the Clergy. Simony is diſtinguiſh'd into Mental, Conventional, and Real. The Mental is, when a Perſon in giving one of ſuch Things as conſtitute the Simony, does it with an Intention to oblige the Receiver to give him the Value either in Money, or ſomething equivalent to it; or when any ſuch Gift is made with a Deſign to receive a Bea Benefice by that Means. The Conventional is, when two Perſons negotiate, either expreſly or tacitly, to beſtow a ſpiritual Thing, or that which is annexed to it, for a temporal one. The Real is, when two Perſons agree together to give Money for a Benefice. Such as are more rigid againſt Simony, carry this Matter ſtill farther, and reduce under this Head all Intreaties, Applauſes, and Flatteries, which may be employ'd purely to obtain or procure a Benefice for any Perſon. Beſides Simony, there are other ſiniſter Methods of procuring a Benefice; 1ſt. That of [a] Confidence, which is, "when "one either reſigns or procures a Benefice for ſome other Perſon, with Deſign or Agree-"ment to give it to a Relation or ſome other Man; or ſhall ſuffer ſome other Perſon to "take the Fruits thereof, reſerving only the Title to himſelf." 2d. The Negotiation and Traffic made in Permutations, i. e. when one Man exchanges a Benefice with another, not for the Advantage of the Church, but for his private Intereſt, and to procure more Wealth. 3d. Fraudulent Permutations. 4th. Pretended Reſignations. 5th. Forged Inſtruments in order to enjoy a Benefice. 6th. The Foundation of an Obit, which is as follows: "A Perſon deſiring to procure a Benefice either for himſelf or ſome Rela-"tion, lays out a Sum of Money, or buys a Piece of Ground, upon Condition to be-"ſtow the Intereſt of the Money, or the Revenue of the Land, on a Perſon for cele-"brating a weekly Maſs; and giving the Name of Benefice to this Foundation, which "he calls Obit, exchanges it with another Perſon for a Prebend or Cure." After this let the Reader judge, whether there are many Clergymen in the World who can juſtly boaſt of being exempt from even the Appearances of Simony. But the Clergy will make the following Objection: Are not ſuch Caſes of Simony, and other Irregularities purely imaginary? And are not all thoſe who oppoſe them ſo warmly, too violent and ſevere in their Deciſions?

Ceremonies relating to the ELECTION of BISHOPS.

BISHOPS are conſider'd as the Fathers and Paſtors of the Faithful, the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, and as ſuch the [b] Superiors of the Church of Chriſt, [c] by Virtue of which they are allowed the chief Places in the Choir, in Chapters and Proceſſions, &c. As Succeſſors to the Apoſtles, they claim Reſpect and Homage from the Laity. As Fathers and Paſtors, they themſelves are obliged to preach God's holy Word to the Faithful. This was the Cuſtom in the primitive Church; and there can be no Preſcription on this Head, ſince, in the Conſecration of Biſhops, they are commanded to preach the Goſpel to thoſe over whom they are appointed [d] Paſtors. It muſt, however, be own'd, that for many Years, they have willingly diſpenſed with that painful Function; and that their Luxury and Indolence has frequently render'd them obnoxious to the ſharpeſt Cenſures of Writers, both Orthodox and Heretical.

THE Ceremonial enjoins, that Biſhops ſhall be clothed in Purple; tho' the regular Biſhops may continue to wear the Habit of their Order. During Lent and Advent they muſt be in Black, and always clothed in their Sutane; but they are allow'd to wear ſhort Clothes when on a Journey.

THE Pope only has the Right of electing Biſhops: This is a pretended Prerogative which the Partiſans of the Court of Rome carry to a very great Height, to the Prejudice of Kings and Sovereign Princes. Nevertheleſs ſome of theſe have reſerved to themſelves the Right of nominating to Biſhoprics; after which the Pope ſends his Approbation and the Bulls to the new Biſhop. At Rome, it is cuſtomary to [a] publiſh in ſome Conſiſtory, that the Candidate for a Biſhop's See, is duly qualify'd for the ſame. He is then confirm'd, after an Inſtrument has been drawn up to teſtify the Probity of his Life and Manners. After which [b] an Inſtrument is drawn up in his Favour, called by the Inhabitants of Rome, Conſiſtorial, or Apoſtolical Letters. All theſe Formalities contribute to ſubject the Biſhops to the Pope: However, ſuch of thoſe Prelates who ſpeak ſincerely, and are not wrought upon by any political Motives, pretend that they hold the Authority they have over their Dioceſes, from our Saviour only; but they ought to be ſincere in owning, that they hold it from the Pope. [c] Hence the Origin of Degrees and Diſtinctions, which have given Riſe to numberleſs Diſputes with regard to the divine Right of Epiſcopacy. By Virtue of that divine Right, ſome Biſhops have had the Preſumption, to write at the Head of their Decrees and Mandates, Such a one, by the Grace, or by divine Providence: but [d] Innocent XI. cenſured them very ſmartly upon this Account.

WHEN [e] a Perſon hears that the Pope has raiſed him to the epiſcopal Dignity, he muſt enlarge his ſhaven Crown, and dreſs himſelf in Purple. If he be in Rome, he muſt go and ſalute his Holineſs, and receive the Rochet from him. Three Months after his having been confirm'd in his Election, he is conſecrated in a ſolemn Manner; which muſt be perform'd on [f] a Sunday, [g] or one of the Feſtivals of the Apoſtles, obſerving to faſt on the Eve of his Conſecration. The Altar, as we find in the Book of Ceremonies, muſt be adorned with Flowers, and a Carpet ſpread on the Ground before it, and on the Steps. The pontifical Ornaments muſt be laid on the Altar, and the Chriſm, the Veſſel of holy Water, the Chalice, the Pyx, the pontifical Ring, the Sandals, the Paſtoral Staff, the Mitre, Gloves, &c. on the Credences. There are likewiſe two little Barrels fill'd with the beſt Wine, two Loaves, one of them gilt with Gold, the other with Silver, with the Arms of the officiating Prelate and the Biſhop engraved on them, and two Tapers, each weighing four Pounds. Some Acolytes ſtand by the Biſhops who conſecrate, and the Perſon to be conſecrated: The latter places himſelf in the Middle of the two aſſiſting Biſhops, oppoſite to the officiating Prelate, who ſits on the epiſcopal Seat placed about the Middle of the Altar. Then one of the Aſſiſtants addreſſes himſelf to the officiating Prelate, ſaying to him, that the [h] Catholic Church requires ſuch an one (naming the Perſon) to be raiſed to the Dignity of a Biſhop. Then the officiating Prieſt demands of him the Apoſtolical Mandate, which is given to his Notary, who reads it, when the officiating Prelate anſwers at the Concluſion of the Mandate, God be praiſed. This firſt Ceremony is followed by the Oath of the Candidate, which he takes on his Knees before the Biſhop who conſecrates him. By this Oath he engages [i] himſelf to be faithful to St. Peter, to the holy Roman Catholic Church, and to

After that the Cardinal has heard the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, with regard to the Life, Manners, &c. of the Candidate, he cauſes an Inſtrument to be drawn up to that Purpoſe, and afterwards ſigns it, and gives it to three Cardinals, Heads of each Order, to be reviſed by them. The Witneſſes muſt likewiſe give their Affidavits, that the Candidate was born in lawful Wedlock; that his Father and Mother were never ſuſpected of Hereſy. Theſe Formalities being ended, a Report is made of the Candidate in a ſecret Conſiſtory, and he is propoſed in a ſecond Conſiſtory.

[b] By this Inſtrument the Candidate binds himſelf to pay to the ſacred College, to the Apoſtolical Chamber, and the Chancery, all the Charges of his Promotion. By Virtue of this Bill, Bulls are granted in his Favour.

the Pope; to defend them to the utmoſt of his Power, and not divulge ſuch Secrets as the Pope ſhall entruſt him with. He ſwears that he will maintain towards and againſt all Men the [a] Papacy of Rome, and the Regalia of St. Peter; the Rights, Honours, Privileges, and Authority of the holy Roman Church: That he will not enter into any Council or Machination, againſt either the Church or its Head; that he will faithfully reveal to them whatever may claſh with their Intereſts; that he will obſerve the Rules preſcribed by the holy Fathers, the Decrees, Orders, Proviſions, and apoſtolical Mandates; that he will proſecute Heretics, Schiſmatics, and all ſuch as rebel againſt the holy Father. He farther promiſes to give him an Account of his Adminiſtration, and of every thing that relates to the State and Diſcipline of his Church; to execute expeditiouſly and with Humility all apoſtolical Mandates, either in Perſon, or by his Miniſters, &c. We are told in one of the Articles of the Pontifical, that all Patriarchs, Primates, Archbiſhops, and Biſhops of Italy, and of the neighbouring Iſlands, are obliged to renew this Oath every three Years; thoſe of France, Germany, Spain, Flanders, the Britiſh Iſlands, Poland, &c. every four Years; thoſe of the Extremities of Europe and of Africa, every five Years; and laſtly, thoſe of Aſia and America every ten Years.

After this Oath the Formulary called the [b] Examen is read: By this Formulary he promiſes to [c] ſubmit his Wiſdom and Knowledge to the Senſe of the holy Scriptures; and this is followed by ſeveral Interrogatories which conclude the Examen. Theſe Interrogatories relate to ſuch Duties of Obedience as the Pope and the Church require, the Obſervance of its Commandments, Traditions, the Purity of Manners, its Faith with regard to the Tenets of the Chriſtian Religion. After the Oath, the Candidate kiſſes on his Knees the Hand of the officiating Prelate. The Maſs which follows the Oath and Examen being read or ſung, he puts off the Pluvial, and the Acolytes give him the Sandals, while the Pſalms are ſinging. He next receives the paſtoral Croſs, the Stole, and other pontifical Ornaments; and thus habited, he goes and ſtands before the Altar, where he reads the Office of the Maſs, having the two aſſiſting Biſhops on each Side of him. This being read, he makes a Bow to the officiating Prelate, who repeats the following Words to him, which include the Epiſcopal Functions: "The Duty of the Biſhop is "to judge, interpret, conſecrate, confer Orders, ſacrifice, baptize, and confirm." After the repeating of theſe Words and a ſhort Prayer, the officiating Prelate and Aſſiſtants all kneel down in the manner repreſented in the third Compartment of the Plate, except the Candidate Biſhop, who proſtrates himſelf, and continues in that Poſture, during which the officiating Prelate, with his paſtoral Staff in his Left Hand, makes the Sign of the Croſs over him with the Right. The Biſhops Aſſiſtants perform the ſame Ceremony.

Before the officiating Prelate proceeds to the Anointing, he takes the Book of the Goſpels, and lays it on the Shoulders of the Biſhop elect. The officiating Prelate and the two Aſſiſtants afterwards lay their Hands on his Head, ſaying unto him, Receive the Holy Ghoſt. Then a Napkin is put on the Neck of the Biſhop elect, and the officiating Prelate anoints his Head with the Chriſm: The Anointing is performed in Form of a Croſs on his ſhaven Crown; he then anoints his two Hands, which are alſo laid croſs-wiſe. This Anointing is performed from the Thumb of the Right Hand to the Forefinger of the Left, and from the Thumb of the Left Hand to the Forefinger of the Right: After which the officiating Prelate anoints the Palms of both his Hands, and concluding this Anointing with a Prayer, proceeds to bleſs the paſtoral [d] Staff, ſprinkles it with holy Water, and gives it to the Biſhop elect, in the Manner repre-

repreſented in the ſixth Compartment of the Plate. [a] The paſtoral Ring is bleſſed, ſprinkled, and given with the ſame Ceremony; the whole accompanied with Exhortations very ſuitable to the Uſes which the new Prelate ought to make of the ſeveral Things that are put into his Hands. The Goſpel ſhut is given to him with this Exhortation: "Receive the Goſpel, go and preach it to the People committed to your Charge, &c." After this Exhortation the officiating Prelate and the two aſſiſtant Biſhops, give him the Kiſs of Peace. Theſe Ceremonies end with the myſtical Offering of the new Prelate, which are two lighted Torches, two Loaves, and two ſmall Rundlets of Wine; and afterwards the officiating Prelate gives the Communion to the newly conſecrated Biſhop. The Communion being ended, he bleſſes the Mitre, ſprinkles it with holy Water, and puts on the Head of the new elected Prelate, This Helmet of Defence and Salvation, the [b] Strings whereof, like the Horns of the two Teſtaments, ſhall make him appear Formidable to the Enemies of the Truth, &c. The Gloves are given him next, repreſenting the [c] Purity of the new Man, which muſt encloſe the Hands of the new Prelate, and render him like unto Jacob, who covered his Hands with Goats Skin, and by offering to his Father ſuch Meats as were agreeable to him, artfully procured his paternal Bleſſing. Laſtly, he is enthron'd, the officiating Prelate and the firſt Aſſiſtant taking him by the Hand, and ſetting him on the epiſcopal Seat, on which the officiating Prelate was before ſeated. After this the Aſſiſtants lead him up and down the Church, where he bleſſes the People; then walks up towards the Altar, with his Mitre on his Head, and the paſtoral Staff in his Hand. From thence he bleſſes the People a ſecond Time, having firſt ſign'd himſelf with the Sign of the Croſs: Then goes to the Epiſtle Side of the Altar, kneels down there, obſerving to turn himſelf towards the celebrating Prelate, [d] with his paſtoral Staff in his Hand, and ſays to him ſinging, Ad multos annos; which Words he repeats thrice; firſt on the Epiſtle Side, and turn'd towards the officiating Prelate, afterwards in the midſt of the Altar; and laſtly, upon his Knees, at the Feet of the above-mention'd celebrating Prelate. The Ceremony concludes with an Anthem; the officiating Prelate kiſſes the new conſecrated Biſhop, makes the Sign of the Croſs, and gives his Benediction to the People; the new Biſhop does the ſame, and goes and puts off his pontifical Veſtments.

ALL theſe Ceremonies muſt be exactly obſerved; and as the Devoirs which relate in particular to the holy Father and the apoſtolic Court, they muſt be paid by the Proxy of the new Prelate, in caſe he has not an Opportunity of doing the Honours in Perſon.

THERE are ſome Biſhops who have no Churches under their Care, but are merely titular; and theſe are generally Creatures of the Court of Rome. A certain Biſhop ſaid formerly, that [e] titular Biſhops were a mere Invention of the Court of Rome, (figmenta humana.) There are no Footſteps of this Dignity among the Antients.

[f] Antiently ſome Biſhops have been honoured with the Pallium, probably becauſe of their great Quality. The Biſhop of Bamberg in Germany, and thoſe of Lucca and Pavia in Italy, enjoy the ſame Privilege at this Time. Vide Bona. Lib. I. cap. 24. Rer. Liturg.

If the Perſon nominated to an Archbiſhop's See be at Rome, the chief Cardinal Deacon performs the Ceremony of putting the Pall on his Shoulders, tho' it was formerly done by the Pope. The Palle is laid upon the Altar. After Maſs the officiating Prelate, clothed in his pontifical Veſtments, receives the Oath of the Archbiſhop elect, who is clothed with the ſame Pomp, his Gloves and Mitre excepted. After this the officiating Prelate riſes up, and putting the Pall upon the Shoulders of the Archbiſhop elect, ſays theſe Words to him: To the Glory of God, of the bleſſed Virgin, [a] of the Apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul, of our Lord the Pope, and of the holy Church of Rome, &c. receive this Pall, which is taken from the Body of St. Peter, and in which the Plenitude, or Perfection of the Function of Pontiff, or Patriarch, or Archbiſhop, is found; make uſe of it on certain Days, [b] noted in the Privileges which are granted to you by the holy apoſtolic See, in the Name of the Father, &c. The Archbiſhop is to wear the Pall in the Solemnities of the Maſs, and on high Feſtivals, at the Conſecration of a Church, at Ordinations, at the Conſecration of a Biſhop, and at giving Nuns the Veil. In the Formulary of the Election it is ſaid, that the Pall is taken from St. Peter's Body; becauſe the Pope only has a Right of giving it, as [c] a manifeſt Indication of that ſovereign Power which flows, as it were, from the Head of the apoſtolical Church, to the ſeveral eccleſiaſtical Members thereof.

After that the Archbiſhop has received the Pall, he goes up to the Altar, and bleſſes the People. He is not allow'd to perform any of the archiepiſcopal Functions, till after he has receiv'd the Pall in a ſolemn manner, before which Time the Archiepiſcopal Croſier is not carried before him.

The Shape and Form of this Pall is ſeen in the Plate: It conſiſts of certain Pieces of white woollen Stuff, three Fingers in Breadth, and embroider'd with red Croſſes. The Pall, before it is given to the Archbiſhop, either at Rome or elſewhere by Proxy, muſt be left for one whole Night on the Altar of St. Peter and St. Paul. We ſhall obſerve by the Way, that the uſe of the Pall is pretty antient in the Church, and that ſome Footſteps of that Ornament are to be found among the antient Romans. The Officers who ſerved at Feaſts and Sacrifices, uſed to wear on the Left-Shoulder, a pretty broad Piece of [d] woollen Stuff, with [e] Plaits or Folds hanging down from it. This was the Badge of their miniſterial Function, and after it had been conſecrated to the Uſe of the Chriſtian Church, received an additional Character by being anointed. The Pall being hung about the Archbiſhop's Neck, denotes the Humility of our Lord: 'Tis ſaid that it likewiſe denotes the Vigilance of the Paſtor, the Excellence of the Virtues that ought to ſhine out in the Archbiſhop, &c. The Pall is made of Wool, and wore on the Biſhop's Shoulders; as the [f] Emblem of the loſt Sheep, which the Shepherd lays on his Shoulders, and brings back into the Sheepfold.

Every particular Pall ſerves for the Uſe of that Archbiſhop only to whom it was firſt given; [g] neither can he make any uſe of it in caſe he is tranſlated from one Archbiſhopric to another, nor leave it to his Succeſſors. When an Archbiſhop dies his Pall is buried with him, and if he is buried in his own Dioceſe it is laid upon his Shoulders; but if out of it, under his Head. An Archbiſhop who has been tranſlated to ſeveral Sees, has all his Palls [h] buried with him; that of his laſt archiepiſcopal See being laid upon his Shoulders, and the reſt under his Head.

'TIS thought that the Ceremonies which we are now going to deſcribe, were introduced into the Church when the Palls were firſt made of Wool. If this be true, they are of conſiderable Antiquity. 'Tis [a] the Buſineſs of the apoſtolical Subdeacons to take care of the making and keeping of the Palls, and the following Ceremony is obſerved at Rome upon that Occaſion. The 21ſt of January, which is the Feſtival of St. Agnes, the Friars of the Convent of that Name offer at the Agnus Dei during high Maſs, two little white and ſpotleſs Lambs. Theſe Lambs are adorn'd with Garlands, Flowers, and Ribbons. After the Ite Miſſa they are laid on the Altar, one on the Epiſtle Side, and the other on that of the Goſpel, each of them on a white damask Pillow, edged with a gold Lace, or a kind of Fringe; after which they ſing the Anthem, Stans à dextris ejus agnus nive candidior, which Words ſuit the Colour and Quality of the Lambs. After the Anthem, the officiating Paſtor gives them the Bleſſing in the Manner following: Let our Help be, &c. [b] O Lord, who didſt inſtitute by Moſes thy Servant, the Veſtments of the Miniſters of the Tabernacle; and by thy holy Apoſtles, thoſe of the evangelical Prieſts and Prelates; pour out thy Bleſſing on theſe Lambs, with whoſe Fleece the Palls of the ſovereign Pontiffs, Patriarchs, and Archbiſhops are to be made; to the End that thoſe who wear them, may arrive, together with the People committed to their Charge, at everlaſting Bliſs, by the Interceſſion, &c. After this, two Prebends of St. John of Lateran take theſe conſecrated Lambs, and give them in charge to the apoſtolical Subdeacons, who ſend them into the Fields ſacred to St. Agnes. [c] We are told, "That the Tax of theſe conſecrated Lambs is a Crown a Month, reckoning "from the Time of their being yean'd, to that of their firſt ſhearing." The Nuns of St. Laurence in Paniſperna, or the Capuchin Nuns, ſhear them at the proper Seaſon; ſpin the Wool after they are ſhear'd, and make the Palls therewith. The Prebends of St. Peter's Church lay theſe Palls under the high Altar, and put them in a very ceremonious Manner on the Bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul; and after they have lain there one Night, they are again given in cuſtody to the apoſtolical Subdeacons, as has been already obſerved.

The Entry of a new elected PRELATE into his Dioceſe.

IMMEDIATELY after the Election of a Prelate, the Bells are rung, Te Deum ſung, and the Biſhop's Throne is adorn'd. The Clergy, both regular and ſecular, and the Fraternities, ſet out on their March, and go in Proceſſion to return thanks to God. In caſe the Perſon elected happens to be abſent, he [d] takes Poſſeſſion of the epiſcopal See by ſome Clergyman of Diſtinction, whom he conſtitutes his Proxy for that Purpoſe. The Proxy goes into the Cathedral of the Dioceſe with a Notary and proper Witneſſes, where he addreſſes himſelf in Prayer to Heaven, and orders the Notary to read the apoſtolical Letters aloud; after which two Members of the Chapter lead the Prelate's Proxy to the high Altar, who takes Poſſeſſion of it by kiſſing it in the Middle, on the Epiſtle and the Goſpel Side. From thence he is conducted to the pontifical Throne, which is hung with a rich Stuff, and under a Canopy. Here he ſits a ſmall Time; after which he goes round the Church, and walks into the Chapter-Houſe, where he ſeats himſelf in the epiſcopal Chair, and addreſſes himſelf to the Chapter in the Name of the Biſhop; the Chapter return him Thanks, and lead him to the Church Gate; after which he goes and takes Poſſeſſion of the epiſcopal Palace.

Prelate's

When a Prelate ſets out to take Poſſeſſion of his Dioceſe, [a] he muſt endeavour to obtain ſome Grant or Favour from his Holineſs, and prevail with him in particular to beſtow a plenary Indulgence on all ſuch of the Faithful as ſhall aſſiſt at his firſt Maſs.

It is enjoin'd in the Ceremonial of Biſhops, that the Prelate elect ſhall provide himſelf with ſuch Things as may enable him to make his Entry in a Manner ſuitable to his Dignity, by adding a Luſtre, if I may be allow'd the Expreſſion, to that apoſtolical Humility which ought chiefly to adorn the Miniſters of the Church. As ſoon as an Archbiſhop enters into his Dioceſe, he muſt order the Croſs to be carried before him, and give previous Notice of the Day and Hour of his Arrival to his Vicar Generals, his Prebends, the whole Chapter, the Magiſtrates, and the ſpiritual Court under his Juriſdiction, in order that they may come and meet him, and pay him due Honours. The Clergy go in a Body, and receive him in Proceſſion; a Canopy is prepared at the Church Gate; the Streets are ſwept, and ſtrew'd with Leaves and Flowers. When the Biſhop is come near to the Gate of the City, he clothes himſelf in his epiſcopal Veſtments, and his Clergy receive him without the Gates, where he kneels down, makes a private Prayer, and kiſſes the Croſs. He afterwards enters the City, preceded by the Citizens in a Body, the Magiſtrates, Clergy, &c. The Prelate is mounted on a fine Horſe, and rides under a Canopy ſupported by the chief Citizens, as the Apoſtles would have practiſed had they lived in theſe latter Ages. As he paſſes along, he gives his Bleſſing to his Flock. At the Door of the Cathedral, the Sprinkler muſt be given him; when he firſt ſprinkles himſelf, and afterwards the Faithful there preſent. The Dean of the Chapter incenſes him thrice. Being come to the Altar, all the Time the Te Deum is ſinging, he kneels down before the Hoſt, ſalutes the Croſs, and makes a private Prayer. Laſtly, he admits the Chapter to the accuſtom'd Homage, which is perform'd by kiſſing his Hand; then he takes off his Mitre at the loweſt Step of the Altar, ſalutes the Croſs, ſings the Prayer of the Saint who is Patron of the Church, and pronounces a ſolemn Bleſſing; which being done, he is conducted back to his Palace. The Ceremonial obſerves farther, that in caſe a ſovereign Prince ſhould offer to accompany the Biſhop to the epiſcopal Palace, he ſhall make ſome Scruple to accept of ſo great an Honour. However, 'tis inſinuated [b] in the ſame Place, that the Prelate ſhall turn his Compliment in ſuch a Manner, that the Prince ſhall not take him at his Word.

When a Biſhop performs the Viſitation of his Dioceſe, he is received [c] much after the ſame Manner as at his firſt Entry. The Church is adorned with the greateſt Pomp imaginable; the Bells are rung; the Clergy both ſecular and regular aſſemble with great Solemnity, and wait upon the Biſhop at his Palace, and attend him in Proceſſion. The Biſhop walks under a Canopy ſupported by four Clergymen, and preceded by the reſt of the Clergy in a Body, who ſing the Hymn, Veni creator ſpiritus. The chief Prebend, cloth'd in his Chaſuble, ſtands at the Church-Door, with the Croſs in his Hand, which he gives the Prelate to kiſs, who kneels down at that Ceremony; then follows the ſprinkling the holy Water, incenſing, and the Prayers at the Altar. After the Prelate has ended his private Devotion, he ſings the Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt in a ſolemn Manner, or, as is frequently practiſed, the chief Dignitary in his ſtead. All this muſt be perform'd before the paſtoral Exhortation or Charge, which the Biſhop makes to the People, begins. The whole Ceremony ends with a Publication of Indulgences, his Bleſſing to the People, and the Abſolution of the Dead; all which are only [a] Preliminaries to his Viſitation.

The Death and Funeral of a BISHOP.

ALL that now remains, is to take a View of theſe Succeſſors of the Apoſtles on their Death-Beds. The Book of [b] Ceremonies informs us, "That a Biſhop "ought then to be duly prepared for the great Account he is going to give of his Ad- "miniſtration, and ready to preſent himſelf before the Lord, who is the Spouſe of "the Church, &c."

AFTER he has confeſs'd, done Penance, and received the Communion in his [c] epiſcopal Veſtments, upon the firſt Summons of approaching Death, he muſt give Orders for the aſſembling of his Clergy, and make his Confeſſion of Faith to them, recommend his Church to their Care, and refrain from all Converſe, except with Perſons of ſtrict Piety, who [d] ſhall ſhew him the holy Croſs, and give it him to kiſs. When he has yielded up the Ghoſt, the Prebends who then are preſent, ſhall, in their Turns, repeat the following Verſe over him, A porta inferi, &c. i. e. Deliver his Soul from the Gate of Hell; ſprinkle him with holy Water, and cloſe his Eyes. The Prelate's Servants waſh his Corpſe with Wine and warm Water. After this he is dreſs'd in his epiſcopal Veſtments, and if an Archbiſhop in his [e] Pall, and ſo laid on a Bed of State, with four or ſix lighted Tapers ſtanding round it; his pontifical Hat being laid upon him near the Feet. At the Foot of the Bed a little Cupboard muſt be ſet, on which two lighted Tapers, the Veſſel of holy Water, the Sprinkler, the Maſs-Book, the Navicula, Thurible, Surplice, Stole, and black Chaſuble are ſet. The Clergy, both ſecular and regular, come and ſing the Office of the deceaſed Prelate, ſtanding round his Corpſe, which they ſprinkle with holy Water, and incenſe it, &c. This Ceremony is perform'd by ſeveral detach'd Bodies of the Clergy; the firſt ſinging Veſpers near the Corpſe; after which they draw off, and are ſucceeded by others, who come and chaunt Matins; and then a third Detachment comes and ſings Laudes. As to the Interment of a Biſhop, he is carried to Church, the Bells tolling all the while, and the Clergy walking before in a Body. The Corpſe is carried by Prieſts, and followed by the chief Citizens, and the Burial concludes as uſual.

The

The MINISTERS of the Church, and ſuch Dignitaries as are inferior to BISHOPS.

THE great Number of Ceremonies obſerved in the Church muſt neceſſarily require a conſiderable Number of Servants, the meaneſt whereof contribute to the Glory of God, [a] are Veſſels equally conſecrated to his Honour, and all uſeful in the Service of the Lord. We ſhall firſt take notice of the Maſter of the Ceremonies, and his principal Functions, ſince 'tis he who directs the Order of the ſeveral Ceremonies. He muſt take care that all ſuch as have lately taken Orders, obſerve the Ceremonies and Practices of the Church, and that every Thing be done in the Choir conformable to the Diſcipline hereof. He muſt likewiſe regulate the Order and March in all Proceſſions, aſſiſt at all pontifical Ceremonies, ſuch as ſolemn Maſſes, the Entry and Conſecration of Biſhops, Synods, the Viſitation of a Dioceſe, &c.

THE Maſter of the Ceremonies muſt be in holy Orders, and his Veſtments are of a purple Colour; but he muſt be clothed in a Surplice when in the Choir, and at the divine Offices of the Church. On high Feſtivals he ſometimes carries a [b] kind of Wand, which is generally of a purple Colour.

THE Sacriſtan has the Care of the Relics, of the ſacred Veſſels, and every Thing uſed in the Church, committed to his Charge. It is his Buſineſs to direct the ſupplying the Altar with its Requiſites, and its Ornaments. He furniſhes the Wax at Funerals, and orders every Thing relating to the Solemnity obſerved on thoſe Occaſions. The Sacriſtan has ſeveral Clerks under him, to aſſiſt him in his Office. One of theſe ſubordinate Officers, like our Vergers, takes care that every one behaves decently in the Church, that no Noiſe be made in it, that the Women be ſeparated from the Men, &c. 'Twould be needleſs to mention the Particulars of the Duties of all the Clerks, who may be conſidered as ſo many Coadjutors to the Sacriſtan. Some are to adorn the Altar, and to furniſh it with all Neceſſaries; ſome to take care of the Pyx and the Wafers, and others of the Chalice. There are likewiſe certain Clerks appointed to take care of the Linen and Veſſels of the Altar, the ſacerdotal Veſtments, Tapers, Lamps, Bells, &c.

AMONG the Acolytes, ſome there are whoſe Province is to carry the holy Water at the Altar, others Incenſe, and others the Tapers. 'Tis an Acolyte likewiſe who holds the Mitre of the officiating Prelate; another holds the Maſs-Book, a third the epiſcopal Croſier, in caſe the Celebrant be a Prelate; another preſents him with the Gremial, a kind of ſilk Apron; another his Gloves and his Ring; and another the Pall, if he be an Archbiſhop. The Croſs-Bearer is likewiſe of the Order of Acolytes; the Train-Bearer carries the Train, or End of the Cope of the Biſhop, or other Succeſſors of the Apoſtles. The Biſhop's Throne is likewiſe taken care of by an Acolyte. We ſhall make no mention of the Miniſters of the Choir, ſuch as the Choriſters and Organiſts; nor of the Readers, whoſe Functions are pretty well known.

THE Subdeacon ſerves at Maſs, he chaunts the Epiſtle, gives the officiating Prelate or Prieſt the Book to kiſs, takes care of the Chalice and Paten, which he preſents to the Deacon; he receives the Pax from the Deacon, and carries it to the Congregation in the Choir; he carries the Chalice to the Credence, preceded by an Acolyte; he aſſiſts the officiating Prieſt in putting off his Veſtments in the Sacriſty; at a pontifical

Maſs

Maſs he carries and preſents the Sandals to the Biſhop, gives him the Maniple, and preſents that Part of it to him to kiſs where the Croſs is, and afterwards puts it on his Left Arm.

THE Deacon preſents the Incenſe to the officiating Prieſt or Prelate, and chaunts the Goſpel; after which he incenſes the officiating Prieſt, ſpreads the Corporal on the Midſt of the Altar, and receives the Paten and Cup from the Subdeacon, and preſents them to the Perſon officiating: He then goes and incenſes the Choir, and returning to the Altar, likewiſe incenſes the Subdeacon: He receives the Pax from the officiating Prelate, and carries it to the Subdeacon, who communicates the Brotherly Kiſs to the Choir, as has been already obſerved. At a pontifical Maſs, when the Biſhop gives his Bleſſing, he puts him his Mitre on his Head, takes off an Archbiſhop's Pall, and lays it on the Altar.

WE are told, that the Prebends, or Canons, are the [a] Senators of the Church. The Name from whence their Dignity is call'd, ſignifies originally Rule; but as they have degenerated from their firſt Inſtitution, People have frequently made merry at their Coſt. Not ſatisfied with quoting them as ſo many Models of Indolence and Senſuality, their Corpulency is even become [b] proverbial. What a Scandal is this to all good Men? Muſt holy Things for ever ſuffer by the Abuſe that is made of them?

" THE Colleges of Prebends (ſays Paſquier in his Recherches, Book III. Chap. v. " that have been introduced into each Cathedral, were not in the antient Church, but " are of modern Inſtitution, notwithſtanding what ſeveral learned Perſons of the pre- " ſent Age have aſſerted to the contrary; but as I don't find them mention'd in any " antient Council, except only in Charlemaign's Time, I cannot be perſuaded that their " Inſtitution is of any remote Antiquity. I therefore carry it very low, to the Decline " of the Empire, and the Riſe of the French Monarchy.—— Gregory of Tours informs " us, that in the Church of Tours, which was the Metropolitan, and one of the chief " in the Kingdom of France, Baldwin the ſixteenth Archbiſhop, under the Reign of " Clotharius the firſt, inſtituted a College of Prebends in his Church. I can never be " of Opinion, that that Body of Men were ever look'd upon as the chief Senators of " their Churches, who were not oblig'd to be in Prieſt's Orders. But, if I miſtake " not, they were a Nurſery of young Perſons of Quality, whom the Biſhops kept about " them, ſome being Deacons, others Subdeacons, who were afterwards to be ſent to " other Churches, as Neceſſity might require, upon which Occaſion they were made " Prieſts; I mean when they were attached to ſuch Churches as were deſign'd for Prieſts " only, and are ſince call'd Parſons or Rectors. But as Time changes all Things, this " Nurſery has been ſince incorporated under the Name of the College of Prebends. " However, they ſtill retain the Privilege they formerly had, viz. that of holding Preben- " daries or Canonries without being in Prieſts Orders." By this Paſſage, and another of the ſame Author, Book III. Chap. xxxvii. it appears, that theſe Prebends were ſo many Clerks united under certain Rules and Inſtitutions, which, if I may ſo expreſs myſelf, diſtinguiſh'd them from the common People of the Church. " However, thoſe " Prebends did not compoſe the general Council of the Biſhop, as ſome Perſons have " thought through Miſtake, but were a Nurſery of young Clergymen entertain'd in " the great Churches, and were afterwards divided among the parochial Churches, after " they had been ordain'd Prieſts; and from this antient Cuſtom it is that we ſay, a " Canonry is a Benefice of the ſimple Tonſure."

[b] We frequently ſay, As fat as a Prebend. Boileau's Lutrin is full of the moſt pointed Satire againſt theſe Gentlemen.

WHEN

When a Perſon is promoted to a Prebend, he muſt be preſented in a very ceremonious Manner to the Chapter, who aſſemble in the Cathedral in order to [a] receive him. He is preſented by a Deputy of the Chapter, accompanied by the Biſhop's Notary and ſome Witneſſes. This Deputy conducts the Perſon elected to the Altar, which the latter kiſſes thrice; after which he goes and takes his Seat in the Choir, and ſtays there ſome Time, during which the Deputy gives the Chapter an Account of his Promotion; and afterwards he goes and takes him into the Choir, and preſenting him to the Chapter, deſires them to receive the Perſon elect as one of their Brethren. The Prebend elect makes his Confeſſion of Faith aloud, and ſwears to obſerve the Ordinances of the Church, and of our holy Father the Pope. Being thus ſolemnly inſtall'd, he is impower'd to aſſiſt at the Chapter, to chaunt the Office in the Choir, &c.

The Arch-Deacon is ſuperior to Deacons and Sub-Deacons; his Office is to examine the Candidates for holy Orders, and to preſent them to the Biſhop; and by virtue of this Office, the Arch-Deacon is ſuperior to a Prieſt, notwithſtanding that the Order itſelf is inferior to that of the Prieſthood.

The Arch-Prieſt is ſuperior to other Prieſts. In the Abſence of his Biſhop he celebrates the ſolemn Maſſes. 'Tis he who on Aſh-Wedneſday leads the Penitents out of the Church, puts Aſhes on their Heads, and preſents them to the Biſhop on Holy Thurſday.

[b] Ritual Writers, moſt of whom are ſtrictly in the Intereſt of the Court of Rome, aſſure us, that the Office of Prothonotary was inſtituted by Saint Clement, and that at that Time, and under the Popes St. Antherus and St. Julius I. their Office was to write the Acts of the Martyrs, to look after the Church-Regiſters, &c. This Office being of ſo great Antiquity, greatly heightens the Prerogatives of the Pope. Theſe Prothonotaries are dignified with the Title of Prelates at Rome, and are impower'd to create Doctors, and to make Baſtards legitimate.

We now come to treat of the Monks, that ſpiritual Nurſery of [c] indolent Devotees, and uſeleſs Servants of the Church Militant, whoſe Origin is owing to the Retirement of the firſt Chriſtians, and their [d] Diſorder and irregular Conduct to the immenſe Treaſures which the blind Devotion of People of paſt Ages bequeathed unto them. The Name of Monk has ceaſed to be honourable for theſe many Centuries, and in our Age, [e] ſo ill-natured is the World grown, that it is become ſo infamous, that the meaneſt and [d] Their Irregularity that has expoſed the whole monaſtic Body to the ſharpeſt Cenſures, and the moſt poignant Satire. It muſt be own'd, however, that God has preſerved to himſelf ſeveral elect among the Monks; yet there is no doubt but the Corruption of this vaſt Body, has given a juſt Handle to the uncommon Liberty ſome Writers have taken with their Characters. The Monks have complain'd againſt it, and cry out Hereſy and Prophanation, &c. But would they after all, oblige us to believe as an Article of Faith, that 'tis in Convents only that Virtue is to be found in its greateſt Purity, and that none of the regular Clergy can be accuſed of the leaſt Diſorder? that every Monk is free from Senſuality? that a Man, upon taking the religious Habit, immediately ceaſes to be covetous, proud, hypocritical, and debauch'd? or, at leaſt, that that Habit has the Virtue of extirpating all the human Paſſions? We may lay it down as an infallible Rule, which may be applied to the Monks, and all ſuch Bodies as have been the Objects either of Satire or Cenſure, that had not they themſelves been guilty of ſeveral Enormities, they would never have been loaded with Calumny.

[e] Theſe Words are quoted from the Revelations of Meliton. The Monks love to be call'd religious.

moſt inſignificant Friar of the Church looks upon it as a reproachful Appellation, and the greateſt Inſult that can be offered him. Hence the Multitude of [a] Sayings, ſo injurious to that Set of Men, and the infamous Tales of Boccace, and of the Queen of Navarre. 'Tis to the irregular Behaviour of the Monks that we owe many of the facetious Turns of Wit of our antient Poets, and thoſe of la Fontaine in our Age. Thoſe dangerous, and ſo often repeated Strokes of Satire, have almoſt ruin'd, in the Minds of a great Number of good Chriſtians, the Efficacy of the Prayers of that Tribe, which they look upon as merely cuſtomary, and purely [b] mechanical, appointed only to preſerve Order in Convents.

THE World has been undeceived with regard to the Piety of a monaſtic Life, becauſe it is the common Refuge of Perſons, who " either are terrified by their [c] evil Con-
" ſciences, or dread the Severity of the Laws, and having neither Houſe nor Home
" elſewhere, and having led infamous and ſcandalous Lives, are forc'd to ramble up " and down, and to beg their Bread, after having ſpent all their Subſtance, and run
" themſelves in Debt over Head and Ears. Some out of a Love for Idleneſs, fly from " Labour to theſe Retreats, where they flatter themſelves with the Thoughts of lead" ing a Life of Eaſe and Indolence, while others who have been diſappointed of the " Enjoyment of the Object of their Affection, retire hither out of Deſpair. A Youth
" ſpent in a miſtaken Courſe, an over ſevere Step-Mother, or an unjuſt Maſter, ſhall
" often force young People to ſhelter themſelves in Convents; the whole Body of which " are afterwards join'd and maintain'd in Reputation, by a diſſembled Holineſs, by the " ſlovenly Humility of the religious Habits, and gay Courſe of Roguery and plenteous
" Beggary.—— From hence ſo many ſtoical Mumblers come, ſo many importunate
" Money-Hunters, ſo many well-clothed Rogues, ſo many Monſters hid under Cowls;
" Beard-Wearers, Cord-Bearers, Halter-Bearers, Wallet-Bearers, in leathern Breeches, " or wooden Shoes; bare-footed, in ſable, greyiſh, and reddiſh Habits; wearing Rock" ets, Nets, Copes, Clokes, Hats, girded, ungirded, &c. —— who having loſt all their " Credit with the World, expatiate, in a Tone of great Authority, on Things divine
" and celeſtial, —— alone uſurping the holy Title of Religion, and pretending to put " themſelves upon the ſame Foot with the Apoſtles. Nevertheleſs their Lives are fre" quently a continued Series of Vice, but ever clothed under the Veil of Religion; for
" they enjoy very great Privileges from the Court of Rome, and by that means ſcreen
" themſelves from all ſecular Power ——, in order to enable them to perpetrate Crimes
" with Impunity.—— And notwithſtanding they profeſs the greateſt Humility, appear" ing in a poor and mean Habit ——, and in ſhort bear all the Marks of Contempt
" and Mockery, for the Sake (as they tell us) of Chriſt Jeſus and his Religion, they " are nevertheleſs inſpired with the utmoſt Ambition, and their whole Study is bent " upon gaining Titles ——, taking a Pleaſure in being call'd Rectors, Provoſts, Guar" dians, Priors, Abbots, Vicars, Provincials, Generals, and ſuch like; inſomuch, that " there is not a Body of Men more deſirous of Precedency and Preeminence than they."
The Author adds, that the above-mention'd Character does not affect ſuch of the Monks as lead truly religious Lives, and in this we agree with him; but at the ſame Time it muſt be own'd, that the too common Motives for embracing a religious Life, and the Characters of Monks in general, are juſtly expoſed in this Paſſage.

[a] As for Inſtance, We muſt beware of a Mule's hind Feet, but muſt watch a Monk on every Side.

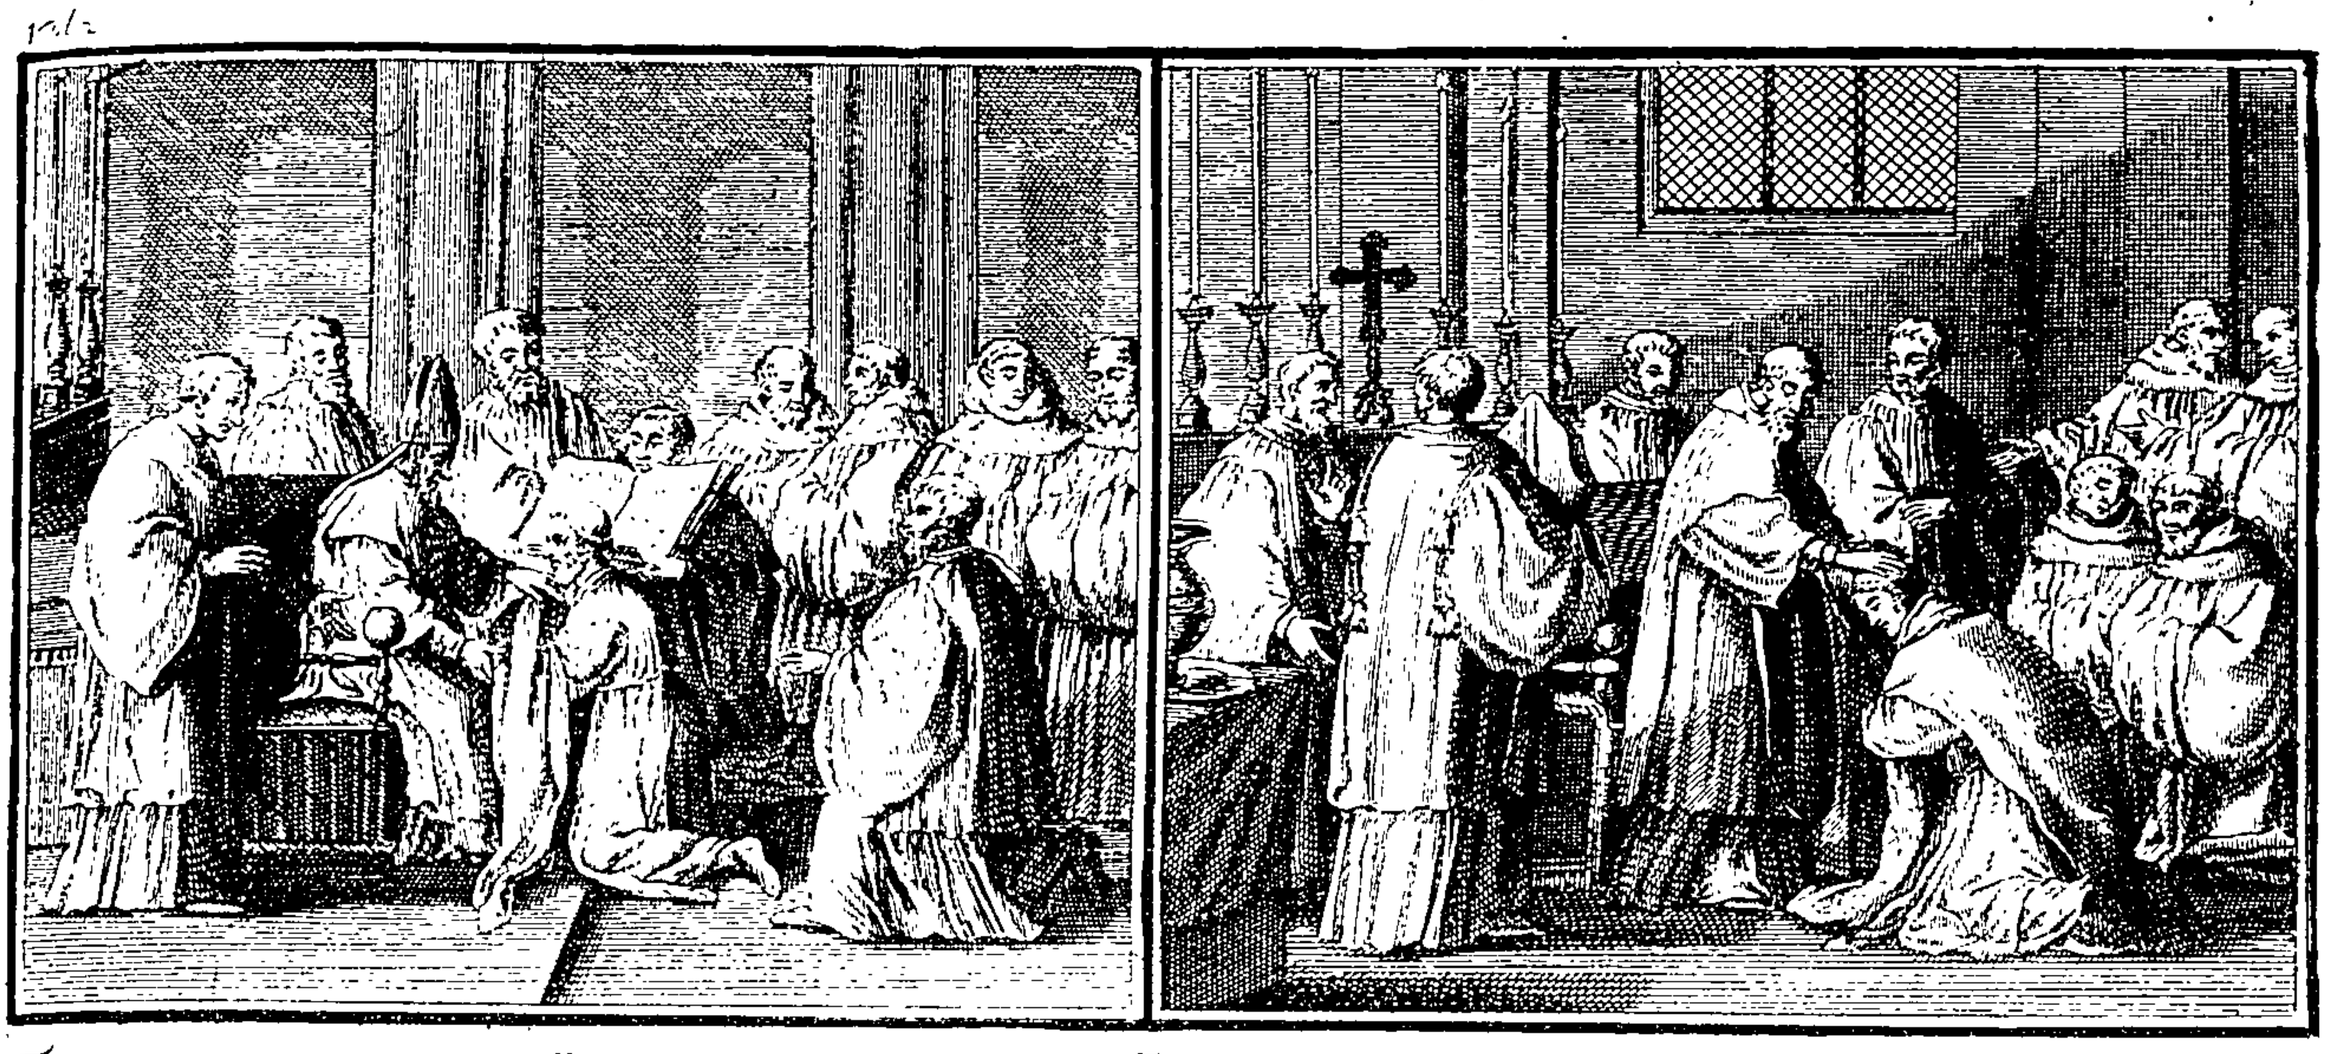
Monachus in clauſtro non valet ova duo.



A Man muſt be a Fool to truſt to a Monk: He's a Monk, we need ſay no more of him.

[b] They ſputter, ſays Rabelais, many Scraps out of the Legends and Pſalms, which they don't at all underſtand. They mumble over a great many Pater-Noſters, interlarded with tedious Ave-Marias, without Thought, or knowing what they ſay; and this I call mocking of God, not Prayer.

[c] Theſe are the Words of Cornelius Agrippa, in his Treatiſe on the Vanity of Arts and Sciences, Chapter of Monaſtic Sects. A judicious Reader will eaſily perceive that ſuch Aſſertions as theſe are not to be taken in all their Latitude.

When a Perſon devotes himſelf to a monaſtic Life, he muſt immediately not only renounce the Pomps and Vanities of the World, but alſo [a] Marriage and every kind of Gallantry. Chaſtity, Obedience, and Poverty, are the three Vows of the monaſtic State.

The firſt Riſe of the monaſtic Life is generally aſcribed to the Perſecutions which the primitive Chriſtians laboured under from their profeſs'd Enemies the Heathens. St. Anthony was the firſt Inſtitutor of it in Egypt, in the Beginning of the fourth Century, and other Anchorets immediately copied it on the ſame Plan. But in Proceſs of Time, new Rules, and more auſtere Mortifications were added, and the Monks diſtinguiſh'd themſelves by a Difference in their Habit. The Work ſoon grew to a prodigious Height, ſo as to become a Burden to the Church; but as it bore a great Appearance of Piety, its Growth was wink'd at. It is very certain, however, that there were Monks in being long before the Time of St. Anthony, i. e. certain devout Chriſtians who ſpent their Lives in Retirement, and intirely diſengaged from the World. St. John Baptiſt might poſſibly have ſerv'd for a Model to thoſe religious Hermits, though we may ſuppoſe that he himſelf was not the firſt Founder of this Way of Life. St. [b] Jerom conſiders the Sons of the Prophets as Monks. The Therapeutæ were probably of this Order, though they admitted the Converſation with Women, an Article which is now abſolutely forbidden to Monks, becauſe of the ill Conſequences attending it. Some pretend that theſe Therapeutæ were Chriſtians, and others affirm them to have been Jews. As it is not our Buſineſs to inquire into this Point of Hiſtory, we ſhall leave it to the Deciſion of the Learned; 'tis ſufficient for our Purpoſe that thoſe Perſons led a kind of Life different from the reſt of the World, and lived in Retirement, whence we may juſtly conſider them as a ſort of Monks. Other Religions have formerly had, and ſtill have, great Numbers of Anchorets, and religious Perſons of both Sexes, withdrawn from the Society of their Fellow Creatures, whether in Cities, or rural Retirements, the better to apply themſelves to Devotion: Such probably were the Rechabites and [c] Eſſenes among the Jews; and ſuch were, and are ſtill, the Brachmans and Bramins among the Indians. Probably ſome of the Sects of the antient Philoſophers may be look'd upon likewiſe as ſo many religious Orders. However that be, we ſhall conclude this Article with this ſhort Remark, That notwithſtanding the Purity of Religion in its Infancy, nevertheleſs Corruption and Diſorder crept in early among ſuch as ſeparated themſelves from the reſt of the World; for there aroſe a certain Tribe of People, who under Pretence of withdrawing and ſeparating themſelves from the reſt of Mankind, burleſqued the Piety of People of Worth, by Cenſures, Calumnies, and Invectives; robb'd the Poor of Alms, by a fraudulent and unjuſt Trade of begging, and deceived

[a] This is one of the Rocks againſt which cloiſter'd Virtue frequently ſplits, if we are to believe a numberleſs Multitude of Authors antient and modern, who affirm, that the Monks ſpare no Women, whatever be their Characters; handſome or ugly, rich or poor, all paſs in Review before thoſe good Fathers, from the Scepter to the Crook. A good Workman ſhall make every kind of Stuff ſerve his Purpoſe, ——— and the very Shadow of the Steeple of an Abbey is fruitful. Theſe are the Words of Rabelais, who perhaps writes with too much Inveteracy, becauſe he hated Friars. But what ſhall we conclude of the numberleſs Gallantries of the Cordeliers, Confeſſors, and Directors of the Nuns of Provins, as we find it in the Proceedings that go under their Name? We there ſee the amorous Education which the worthy Followers of St. Francis beſtow'd on the Boarders of the Monaſtery of St. Clare. This Education was improved by their gallant Confeſſions, their jovial Diſcourſes, their myſterious Preſents, and ſuch edifying Pieces as the Catechiſm of Love. Sometimes indeed their Gallantry appear'd more in the Air of the Cloiſter Turn, with the Exception however of gay Devices, true Lovers Knots, red, purple, grey, and flame-colour'd Ribbons, &c. gay Sports, and ſuch like amorous Devotions. But perhaps it may be anſwer'd, that theſe Scandals were found only in one Community, and at moſt among a particular Order of Monks, who have been but too much cenſur'd on that Account by ſatirical Pens. 'Tis hard if we cannot find one virtuous Monk in the World: Are there not whole Bodies of them both learned and religious?

the Piety of good Chriſtians by a ſevere Outſide, and a dirty greaſy Dreſs. Theſe mock Religious were call'd [a] Rhemebothes.

THE Abbot preſides over the Monks. The Word Abbot, which is originally Hebrew or Syriac, ſignifies Father. An Abbot is a Prelate inferior to a Biſhop: He is the Lord's Vicar over his Monks, their Father, and the myſtical [b] Spouſe of his Convent, (which is the Epitome of the Church of God.) But it muſt be obſerved, that we here ſpeak of regular Abbots. There are another ſort of Abbots, or rather Abbés, who have neither Rule, Tonſure, nor monaſtic Juriſdiction; theſe devote themſelves intirely to Gallantry, and hold no Rank but in the Empire of the Fair Sex.

[c] AN Abbot, properly ſo call'd, is bleſſed by the Biſhop in Preſence of two Abbots Aſſiſtants; and this Benediction is perform'd with the ſame Solemnity as that of a Biſhop, &c. Both the Perſon who conſecrates and the Candidate for Conſecration are obliged to faſt; the Church is adorn'd, and a ſolemn Maſs is ſaid. On the Credence near the Altar the monaſtic Habits of the Abbot elect are laid, with two little Caſks of Wine, &c. as at the Conſecration of a Biſhop. The Abbot elect preſents himſelf, accompanied with the Abbots Aſſiſtants, and delivers the apoſtolical Letters to the officiating Prelate, who afterwards bleſſes the Habit, by praying over it, and ſprinkling it with holy Water. The Benediction being ended, he undreſſes the Abbot elect, ſaying to him, Exuat te Dominus veterem hominem cum actibus ſuis, i. e. May God ſtrip you of the old Man and his Works; and at the ſame Time he clothes him with the monaſtic Habit, which repreſents [d] the new Man, created according to God in Juſtice and Truth. The Abbot, being clothed in the monaſtic Habit, and his Hands join'd over his Breaſt, ſays aloud in Preſence of his Monks, Receive me, O Lord, according to thy holy Word, that I may not be confounded. The Monks anſwer, O Lord, we have received thy Mercy, &c. After this the Abbot muſt be received into the Body of the Monks, which the Perſon who officiates performs, by preſenting the Abbot to them; then the Monks give him the Kiſs of Peace. We are not to omit, that the Abbot who is inveſted in his Dignity by the [e] Authority of the holy See, muſt take an Oath of Fidelity to the Pope, in the ſame Manner as Biſhops do.

LASTLY, the officiating Miniſter lays his Hands on him in the Manner deſcribed in the Plate; gives him the Rule by which he is to govern his Convent; the paſtoral Staff, with which he is to govern the Flock committed to his Charge; the Ring, which is the Seal of the Faith he owes to the Church, the Spouſe of Chriſt. After the Offertory, the new elected Abbot, on his Knees, preſents two Tapers, two Loaves, and two little Rundlets, to the officiating Miniſter: He afterwards receives the Sacrament. The Poſt-Communion being ended, he receives the Abbot's Mitre, which, according to the Pontifical, is the Helmet of Salvation, and alſo repreſents the two Horns of the two Teſtaments, whoſe Enemies (thoſe of Truth) he is preparing to combat. The Gloves are the laſt Thing he receives; but in caſe he be not a [f] mitred Abbot, the latter Ceremonies are omitted.

[a] Theſe Rhemebothes were very like the Capuchins; apud eos omnia affectata, laxæ manicæ, follicantes caligæ, veſtis craſſior, crebra ſuſpiria. This is the Character St. Jerom gives of the Rhemebothes.

[b] Chriſti Domini Vicarii in ſuis monaſteriis dicuntur,——— abbates ſuorum monaſteriorum ſponſi & patres, &c. Piſana Praxis Cerem. &c.

[c] The Ceremony deſcribed here is obſerved with regard to all kind of Abbots.

[d] Induat te novum hominem, qui ſecundum Deum creatus eſt in juſtitia, &c. Theſe Words he repeats as he clothes him in the monaſtic Habit. See this Ceremony in the firſt Compartment of the Plate.

[e] Pontif. Roman.

[f] The Mitre and other pontifical Ornaments were firſt given to Abbots in the eleventh Century, or at the Cloſe of the tenth.

Their Manner of NUNS being PROFESSED.

'TIS probable, that the aged Widows, and devout Maidens, mention'd by Writers in the firſt Ages of the Church, and even in the New Teſtament, were a kind of volunteer Nuns, who uſed to preſcribe to themſelves certain Duties, ſuch as Faſting, doing Works of of Charity, leading a Life of Celebacy, &c. In Proceſs of Time theſe Nuns form'd Communities, and eſtabliſh'd Rules and Practices for themſelves, which were carried to the ſame Height as the numberleſs Eſtabliſhments of the Monks. The Jews had alſo certain Devotees among them, who liv'd ſequeſtred from the Vanities of the Age, applying themſelves entirely to Prayer and Works of Mercy: Such was Dorcas, and ſuch in all likelihood was Anna the Propheteſs, mention'd in the New Teſtament. 'Tis even probable enough, that the firſt She-Zealots of the Church, were deriv'd from the Jews, whence they receiv'd this Spirit of Retirement, and introduced it into the Chriſtian Religion. The Veſtals among the Romans were likewiſe true Nuns, who during their Vow [a] liv'd under a very ſevere Rule. Theſe made a Vow of Celebacy in Convents, into which Men were not allow'd to enter, and were govern'd by an antient Matron, called by the Romans, Maxuma, which is the ſame as Mother Superior. This is all the Affinity we have been able to diſcover between our Nuns, and thoſe of the People above-mention'd.

WHEN an Abbeſs elect is to be bleſſed, ſhe firſt takes the Oath of Fidelity to her Ordinary, and to the Church over which he preſides; then the Prelate who receives her, gives her his Bleſſing, and after having laid both his Hands on her Head, gives her the Rule, bleſſes the white Veil, and [b] puts it on her Head in ſuch a manner as to let it hang down over her Breaſt and Shoulders. The reſt of the Ceremony has nothing particular in it; it conſiſts only of kiſſing the Pax, and introducing the new elected Abbeſs among the Nuns.

NUNS or Abbeſſes never receive the Veil but on ſolemn Days, ſuch as Sundays or high Feſtivals. In general, young Women ought not to be allow'd to take the Viel till five and twenty, nor till after they have paſſed the ſtricteſt Examination, and particularly till it has been ſtrongly inculcated to them, that they muſt live in a State of Virginity the Remainder of their Days; a Vow that may indeed be made ſincerely in a great Warmth of Devotion, and ſometimes from a Pique, but the Execution thereof depending upon a [c] numberleſs multitude of Circumſtances, 'tis therefore expoſed to many dreadful Temptations, even in the moſt ſtrict Retirements: For the Devil intrudes into all Places. We might add, that many Women make a Vow of Virginity after having taſted the Sweets of Love, were not the Conſequences of ſuch a Reflection too uncharitable to be allowed a Place in the Deſcription of a Ceremony, in which a Maiden profeſſes to devote herſelf to God only. The Caution that is obſerv'd, to ask them whether they are [d] real Virgins, and the Anſwer they never fail to make, is certainly no Proof that they are truly ſo. In ſuch a Caſe a young Woman who intends to devote herſelf to Heaven, is always ſure of anſwering in a pious Strain. The Habit, the Veil, and Ring of the Candidate, are all carried to the Altar, and ſhe herſelf accompanied by her neareſt Relations, is conducted to the Biſhop; two antient venerable Matrons are her Bridewomen, when the Biſhop ſays Maſs. After the Gradual is over, the Candidates for the

[a] Their Vow expired when they were thirty, after which they were allowed to marry.

[b] Vide the third Compartment. This Ceremony is uſed when the Abbeſs is not a Nun.

[c] Phyſicians tell us, that an Exceſs of Continence often occaſions a great Number of Diſeaſes. 'Tis farther obſerv'd, that old Maids are generally croſs-grain'd, ſour, and ſwell'd with ſuch a haughty Spirit of Devotion, as is very troubleſome to all about them.

Veil, attended in the Manner above-mentioned, and with their Faces cover'd, enter into the Church, and preſent themſelves before the Biſhop; but before they do this the Arch-Prieſt chaunts an Anthem, the Subject of which is, That they ought to have their Lamps lighted, becauſe the Bridegroom is coming to meet them; and while he is ſinging, they light their Lamps. The Archprieſt preſents them to the Biſhop, in the manner repreſented in the fourth [a] Compartment of the Plate. The Biſhop, after they are preſented, calls them thrice in a kind of chaunting Tone, and they anſwer him in the ſame manner. Being come before the Prelate, and on their Knees, they attend to the Exhortation he makes them concerning the Devoirs of a religious Life. After this they kiſs his Hand, and then lie proſtrate before him while the Choir chants the Litanies. Then the Biſhop, having the Croſier in his Left Hand, completes the Benediction. They then riſe up, and he bleſſes the new Habits, which denote the Contempt of the World, and the Humility of their Hearts. A Sprinkle with holy Water concludes the Conſecration, and then the Candidates go and put on their religious Habits.

THE Veil, the Ring, and the Crowns, are bleſſed after the ſame manner. All theſe Benedictions being ended, they preſent themſelves in the Habit of Nuns before the Biſhop, and ſing the following Words on their Knees, [b] Ancilla Chriſti ſum, &c. i. e. I am the Servant of Chriſt, &c. In this Poſture they receive the Veil; afterwards the Ring, on delivering which [c] he declares he marries them to Jeſus Chriſt, &c. and laſtly, the Crown of Virginity, to which they are called by the chaunting of an [d] Anthem. Being thus crown'd, an Anathema is denounced againſt all who ſhall attempt to [e] turn them from God, by endeavouring to make them break their Vow, in what manner ſoever, or ſhall ſeize upon any Part of their Wealth. After the Offertory, they preſent lighted Tapers to the Biſhop, who afterwards gives them the Communion; and as 'tis the Cuſtom in ſeveral Convents for the Nuns to read the Office and canonical Hours, the Biſhop gives the Breviary to thoſe who are taken into ſuch Convents. Theſe Ceremonies being ended, the Prelate gives them up to the Conduct of the Abbeſs, ſaying to her, Take care to preſerve pure and ſpotleſs theſe young Women whom God has conſecrated to himſelf, &c.

THE Cuſtom of giving the Veil to Nuns is of great Antiquity, and was practiſed before the Age of St. Ambroſe and Pope Liberius; as is manifeſt from the Writers of the ſecond and third Century.

CEREMONIES relating to the Dignity of CARDINALS.

THE Cardinals are [f] Senators of the Church, the Counſellors of the Succeſſor of St. Peter, and ſometimes even his Tutors; for how perſuaded ſoever their Eminencies may be of the Infallibility of Chriſt's Vicar, they yet take care to guide him, and frequently oppoſe his Views when they think them contrary to the Intereſts of the Church

[a] In cantu, dicens venite. Virgines reſpondent, & nunc ſequimur. The firſt Time they advance to the Entrance of the Choir, the ſecond to the Middle, and the third to the Chancel of the Altar; they kneel down before the Biſhop, with their Faces to the Ground, and afterwards riſe up ſinging this Verſe, Receive me, O Lord, according to thy holy Word.

[b] Pontif. Roman.

[c] Deſponſo te Jeſu Chriſto, filio ſummi patris, qui te illæſam cuſtodiat. Vide the firſt Compartment of the annexed Plate.

[d] Veni, ſponſa Chriſti, &c. Come, O Spouſe of Chriſt, and receive the Crown. In the firſt Ages of the Church it was uſual to ſet a Crown on the Heads of ſuch as died Virgins, which Cuſtom is ſtill obſerved in ſeveral Parts of Chriſtendom.

[e] The Obligation of keeping a Vow of Chaſtity, is not of modern Date, and is owing to the general Opinion, ſo univerſally received in all Religions, viz. that what has been once conſecrated to God, ought no longer to belong to Men. By the fourth Council of Carthage, all Widows, not excepting the moſt blooming, were forbid the Communion, who after having devoted themſelves to God, and aſſum'd a religious Habit, growing weary of ſpiritual Marriage, embraced the temporal one: Ad nuptias ſeculares.

[f] Pius II. gave them the Title of Senators of Rome. In the Time of Leo X. ſuch as affected writing in claſſic Latin, ſpeaking of the Cardinals and People of Rome, have often employ'd this antient Expreſſion, Senatus populuſque Romanus.

Mili-

Militant, or rather thoſe of the Hierarchy. [a] A certain Italian Author ſuppoſes the Cardinals were inſtituted by St. Peter, in order to be his Coadjutors, his Counſellors, his Vicars in the Devoirs of the Pontificate. According to this Author, Linus, Cletus, Clement, and St. Mark, were true Cardinals, tho' they did not yet bear that auguſt Title. Be this as it will, tho' the Dignity of Cardinal were not originally inſtituted by St. Peter, 'tis nevertheleſs of great Antiquity. It is thought, that in the Beginning it was eſtabliſhed for Uſe rather than for Shew. St. Evariſtus eſtabliſh'd ſeven Cardinal-Deacons, [b] to aſſiſt the Wants of the poor Chriſtians in Rome. Theſe Deacons were then diſtinguiſhed by the Name, or Pariſh of that Diſtrict over which they preſided; and this is the firſt Original of the Titles given to the Cardinals. To theſe ſeven Deacons St. Hyginus aſſociated others, both Prieſts and Deacons; but with this Difference, that the latter ſhould conſider the former as their Deans, or, as ſome will have it, Cardinals; tho' ſome are of Opinion, that this Word is too barbarous to be uſed in the Age of Hyginus. We are aſſured, that under the Reign of Conſtantine the Great, there were twenty-eight of theſe Cardinal Prieſts and Deacons, who took their Titles [c] not only from the Pariſh of their Diſtrict, but likewiſe from ſuch Family Eſtates as charitable Chriſtians bequeath'd to the Clergy for their Maintenance: And as theſe Charities were frequently very conſiderable, it ſometimes, at that Time, happen'd, that one Cardinal enjoy'd two or three Titles. 'Tis ſaid that St. Gregory the Great increaſed the Number of Deacons, whoſe Functions were the ſame as thoſe of Cardinal-Deacons, to ſeventy; however, that the laſt created were inferior to the former. But notwithſtanding all this, 'tis certain that till about the Age of Hugh Capet the Dignity of Cardinal was vaſtly inferior to what it is at this Day. This is the Remark of Paſquier, in his Recherches de la France, lib. iii. cap. v. who has added ſeveral Reflections, to ſhew what Opportunities this Dignity gives the Pope of increaſing his Authority.

THERE are now three Orders of Cardinals, viz. Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons: Six of theſe are Biſhops, fifty are Prieſts, and fourteen Deacons. [d] Sixtus V. fix'd the Number of Cardinals to ſeventy, and 'tis this Aſſembly which is now called the Sacred College. This Aſſembly, as Lunadora tells us, in his Relation of the Court of Rome, has its Camerling, or Chamberlain, whoſe Poſt is annual; whereas the Popedom is for Life; a Secretary, who is always an Italian; a national Clerk, who is annual, and by Turns a German, a Spaniard, or a Frenchman; and a Computiſt or Accomptant. But a more copious Account of theſe Employments ſhall be given in the Sequel of this Volume.

IN 1125, Pope Honorius eſtabliſh'd ſeven Cardinal Biſhops, viz. of Oſtia, Porto St. Rufina, St. Sabina, Paleſtrina, Freſtati, and of Albano. The Biſhops of Porto and St. Rufina having been ſince united, there are no more than ſix Cardinal Biſhops. However, mention is made of Cardinal-Biſhops towards the Cloſe of the eighth Century,

[b] 'Tis thought that the Name of Cardinal began in the Age of St. Hyginus, about Anno 159.

[c] After the Church enjoy'd a Calm, theſe firſt Cardinals added to their Titles the Name of holy Martyrs and Confeſſors of the Church.

[d] Or Paul IV. to imitate the antient Sanhedrim, compoſed of ſeventy Elders, or rather in Memory of the ſeventy Diſciples of our Saviour. This Regulation was confirm'd by Sixtus V. by a Bull publiſh'd in 1586, Caſalius de veter. ſacr. Chriſt. Ritib. Lunadoro, an Italian Author, ſpeaks of it as follows, where he mentions the Change that has happened from Time to Time with regard to the Election of Cardinals: "Till the Pontificate of Innocent II. ſubſiſted the Cuſtom of electing Cardinals one by one, i. e. to fill up the Number of the ſacred College as ſoon as any of them died. Innocent II. and his Succeſſors, introduced the Cuſtom of giving the Offices of ſuch Cardinals as died, In Commendam to the ſurviving ones; and ſometimes they gave the Adminiſtration of the vacant Cardinalate, to the Archprieſt of the Cardinals." However, Innocent II. himſelf created ſeveral Cardinals at once. But the Schiſm of Avignon having expoſed the Apoſtolical See to the Uſurpations of Antipopes, Cardinals increaſed vaſtly above the uſual Number, which till that Schiſm, had conſiſted only of fifty two or fifty three. He adds, that to prevent freſh Diſorders after the cruſhing of the Schiſm, the Cardinals of different Obedientiæ were left in Poſſeſſion of their Titles and Dignities. Under Leo X. there were ſixty five Cardinals; under Paul III. ſixty eight; under Pius V. ſeventy ſix. Aimon, in his Picture of the Court of Rome, has given the Titles of Antient and New Cardinals to the Number of ſeventy one. He adds, that the ſupernumery Title of ſeventy-one, and ſometimes ſeventy two, is preſerved for an extraordinary Caſe; as for inſtance, the Converſion of ſome great Prince.

under the Pontificate of Stephen IV. Others affirm, that theſe Biſhops were not call'd Cardinal Biſhops, nor admitted to the Election of the Popes, till the Pontificate of Alexander III. about the End of the twelfth Century. As to the Cardinal-Deacons, we have already taken Notice of their Original, and their primitive Functions; but Time produced an Alteration in theſe Things. The Care of the apoſtolical Patrimony, and of the Alms, were taken from them, and they had only left that of ſinging the Goſpel before the holy Father. As for the Cardinal Prieſts, in the firſt Ages of the Church, their Employment was to baptize, to bury, and take care of the Bodies of the Martyrs. This we find aſſerted by ſome Authors, who tell us farther, that from among theſe the Pope uſed to chuſe his apoſtolical Legates.

The PROMOTION of CARDINALS.

" WHEN his Holineſs makes a Promotion of Cardinals, as Aimon tells us, in " his Deſcription of the Court of Rome, he gives them the Title of Prieſt, or " Deacon, according as he thinks proper; they afterwards arrive at Epiſcopacy by " Right of Superiority, or by aſſuming the Title of thoſe who die. And becauſe " all Cardinals are equal by their Dignity, they take Place according to the Date of " their Promotion, and the Quality of their Title. Prieſts have the Precedency of " Deacons, tho' the latter may happen to be real Biſhops, becauſe they have not ſuch " Title in the College till it has been their Option. On which Occaſion we are to ob- " ſerve, that there are ſome Titles belonging to Deacons and Prieſts, which are more pro- " fitable than thoſe of Biſhops, though ſome of them are very burthenſome; and that " none but Cardinals who are actually at Rome, when a Title is vacant, are allowed " to claim it. From all theſe Circumſtances it reſults —— that ſometimes ſimple Clerks " have the Title of Prieſts, and the Prieſts have thoſe only of Deacons; whilſt Bi- " ſhops have ſuch Titles as oblige them to yield the Precedency to Prieſts and " Deacons, who have aſſumed the Title of Biſhop by reſiding at Rome, or by tak- " ing Advantage of the Date of their Promotion, in caſe it has been made before that " of the Biſhop.

" THE chief Cardinal-Biſhop, the chief Cardinal-Prieſt, and the chief Cardinal-Dea- " con, are call'd Chief of the Order. In this Quality they have the Prerogative in " the Conclave, of receiving the Viſits of Embaſſadors, and giving Audience to Magi- " ſtrates.

" THE Cardinal who is ſenior with regard to the Date of his Promotion, or who has " had an Opportunity of aſſuming the firſt Title of the Cardinal-Biſhops, namely that of " Oſtia, is by Virtue thereof Dean of the ſacred College, and has a Right to crown " the Pope, when he is elected from among ſuch Cardinals as are not Biſhops; upon " which account he wears the Archbiſhop's Pall, by a Grant from Pope Mark, the im- " mediate Succeſſor to Sylveſter. And as he repreſents the whole College, he has the " Precedency of Kings, and all temporal Princes, and receives Viſits before all thoſe Po- " tentates who acknowledge the Pope's Authority.

" EVERY Cardinal at his Promotion to the Cardinalate, loſes all the Benefices, Pen- " ſions, and Employments he before enjoy'd; and as they are look'd upon as vacant, " 'tis wholly in the Pope's Breaſt to reſtore them to him, and to collate them to others, " to enable them to live with greater Splendor, and in a manner ſuitable to the Digni- " ty to which they are raiſed. And as their Employments, particularly thoſe they en- " joy'd in Rome, ſuch as Auditors, Clerks, or Treaſurers of the apoſtolic Chamber,

" and

" and ſuch like, they revert to the Chamber, which ſells them to others to the Profit of " his Holineſs; but foreign Cardinals nam'd by crown'd Heads, do not receive the Hat " till ſuch Time as they have obtained an Indult, or ſpecial Grant De non vocando, by " Virtue whereof they preſerve their Poſts and Employments, the Pope ſuperſeding his " Right of confiſcating them.

" CARDINALS pretend that their Dignity equals them to Kings: They diſpute the " Precedency with the Children, Brothers, Uncles, and other Relatives of crown'd Heads, " and with all Princes who are not crown'd Heads.

" SUCH Cardinals as are Biſhops of other Dioceſes than the ſix Suffragans to Rome, " are not exempt from Reſidence, except by a particular Diſpenſation from the Pope, " or that they are obliged to come to Rome when a Conclave is to be held, or on ſome " other Affair of great Importance. But the ſix Biſhops Suffragan to Rome are not obliged " to Reſidence, becauſe moſt of them are uninhabited, ſuch as Oſtia and Porto, and " are moreover ſo near Rome, that the Abſence of their Biſhop is no way prejudicial to " them; not to mention that they have always a Vicar-Biſhop in partibus Infidelium, " upon the Spot, in order to perform the epiſcopal Functions.

" As Cardinals, with regard to Spirituals, are to govern the Church of Rome in all " Parts of the Chriſtian World, ſeveral Subjects of the different Nations of it are al- " lowed to aſpire to this Dignity, according to the Deciſion of the Council of Trent. " For this reaſon the Popes often create ſuch Perſons Cardinals as are nominated by " crown'd Heads, who, 'tis preſum'd, have propoſed the moſt eminent among their " Subjects for that Purpoſe. Formerly the Pope, in promoting of Cardinals, uſed " to adviſe with the antient ones; but now he creates them without conſulting any " Perſon. His Holineſs does not even ſcruple of admitting his own Relations to the " Cardinalate, pretending that he therein imitates our Saviour, who incorporated " ſome of his Relations into the apoſtolic College. He likewiſe rewards with the Pur- " ple, all thoſe who have done any important Piece of Service to the Court of Rome; " ſuch as Nuncio's, Auditors of the Rota, Clerks of the Chamber, and other chief " Officers of the Court; and ſometimes alſo, ſuch as are famous for their Learning, " Politics, &c.

" ALL Cardinals are, as ſuch, intitled to aſſiſt at Conſiſtories, at ſolemn Pontifical " Maſſes, at Proceſſions, Cavalcades, and other Papal and Cardinal Functions; and " all thoſe who uſually reſide at Rome, are deputed to aſſiſt at Councils and Con- " gregations.

" CARDINALS enjoy all epiſcopal Rights in their Churches, or Titles, and all their De- " pendencies, except that they are not obliged to Reſidence; and as to their Juriſdiction, " they enjoy it jointly with the Cardinal Vicar-General; nothing but Anticipation, or " Foreſtalments, can regulate their Rights. But when thoſe Titles or Churches are " poſſeſſed by Regulars, they have nothing to do with the regular Government of their " Houſes, the Cure of Souls, and Adminiſtration of Sacraments only excepted. If the " Title be a Collegiate Church, they then preſide over the Chapter, and have a " Right to collate to ſeveral Canonries, Prebends, and other Benefices. They aſſiſt, with " the Rochet on, in ſuch Offices as are performed on the moſt ſolemn Feſtivals in " their Churches, where they bleſs the People in a ſolemn manner, and are ſeated under " a Canopy in an Eaſy Chair raiſed in Form of a little Throne.

" SUCH Cardinals as are in greateſt Credit with the reigning Pope, have certain " Kingdoms, States, Republics, and religious Orders under their Protection. They " have the Privilege of conferring the four Orders call'd Minor, viz. that of Door-

" Keeper, Reader, Exorciſt, and Acolyte, on their Domeſtics, and the Subjects of " their Titles. They are exempt from the Reverſion of their Church-Lands and Ef" fects to the apoſtolical Chamber, as 'tis cuſtomary in all Italy, and may bequeath
" eccleſiaſtical Wealth in the ſame Manner as patrimonial. They have likewiſe ſome
" other very conſiderable Privileges; ſuch as a Power of reſigning their Penſions, by " particular Grants from Popes; to be exempt from the Examination of Biſhops,
" when they are put into Sees; to be believed in a Court of Juſtice upon their bare " Words, without being obliged to take an Oath, and their ſingle Teſtimony is equal " to that of two Witneſſes. They are conſider'd as Citizens of whatever City the " Pope reſides in, and don't pay any Taxes. They grant an hundred Days Indul" gence to whomſoever they pleaſe, and acknowledge no one but the Pope for their " Judge or Superior, particularly in criminal Matters; for as to civil Cauſes they are " always heard before the Auditors of the Apoſtolic Chamber.

" THEY have ſeveral other Prerogatives; ſuch as the wearing of purple [a] Habits, a " Mantle Royal with a Train ſix Ells long, a red Hat, an epiſcopal Mitre, though they
" be no more than Prieſts, Deacons, or Clerks." Urban VIII. in order to add freſh Splendor to the Cardinalate, order'd that the Title of Eminence ſhould be given them.

WHENEVER the Pope intends to raiſe any Perſon to the Dignity of Cardinal, he makes a Declaration thereof in a ſecret Conſiſtory. This Declaration is made after the extra omnes, his Holineſs ſaying to the Cardinals aſſembled, Habemus Fratres, We have Brethren. At the ſame Time the Pope pulls out the Liſt of the new Cardinals, when the Cardinal-Patron, or the moſt antient Cardinal of the ſacred College, reads the Liſt aloud. [b] The Eve of the Promotion the Cardinal-Patron gives the new Cardinals notice to wait upon the Pope, in order to be admitted to his Audience. The Cardinals elect kneel down there. The Pope puts the red Cap on their Heads, and making the Sign of the Croſs on them, pronounces theſe Words, Eſto Cardinalis, Be thou a Cardinal; after which the Cardinal elect takes off his Cap, and kiſſes his Holineſs's Feet. This is the private Manner of their Promotion; but whenever it is done with Pomp, the Cardinal-Patron ſends for the Candidates in their Coaches; after which they are conducted to the above-mention'd Cardinal's Apartment, in the apoſtolical Palace. There the Pope's Barber ſhaves their Crowns after the Manner of Cardinals; the Cardinal's Valet de Chambre clothes them with the Veſtments of a Cardinal; which being done, the Cardinal-Patron preſents them to the Pope, who puts the Cap on their Heads in the Manner above-mention'd. The Cardinals elect return this Honour by a Compliment, expreſſing their Gratitude and Humility.

WHENEVER any Perſon out of Italy is created Cardinal, he is not allow'd to put on the ſcarlet Veſtments, till ſuch Time as his Holineſs has ſent him his Cap; but he is nevertheleſs allow'd to aſſume the Title of Cardinal. The Cap is brought him by one of the Pope's Chamberlains, with a Brief from his Holineſs. The Cardinal elect is obliged to make the Meſſenger a Preſent of an hundred Ducats at leaſt; this is [a] the fix'd Sum. The Cap is given him by the Pope's Nuncio; but in caſe there be no Nuncio upon the Spot, then an Emperor, a King, an Archbiſhop, or a Biſhop, performs the Ceremony of putting the Cap on the Head of the Cardinal elect. This Ceremony is perform'd after High-Maſs.

WHEN a Cardinal goes to Rome to receive his Hat from the Pope in Perſon, he muſt be dreſs'd in a rural Habit; that is, a ſhort Suit of Clothes of a purple Colour. The Moment he is arriv'd at Rome, he muſt go and pay his Devoirs to the holy Father, but muſt put on the long Veſtments when he goes to Audience; and at his Return from thence muſt go directly home, and not ſtir abroad till a public Conſiſtory is held. During this Interval, the new Cardinal receives the Viſits of thoſe who come to congratulate him upon his Exaltation; but he never waits on any Perſon farther than the Door of his Anti-Chamber. On the Day of the public Conſiſtory, the new Cardinal goes thither in his Coach of State, attended by his Friends, in order to receive the red Hat. In caſe the Candidate be an Archbiſhop or a Biſhop, he muſt wear the black pontifical Hat, as Lunadoro, &c. relates, ubi ſupra. "He ſtops [b] at Sixtus V's. Chapel, "when the Ceremony is to be perform'd in the Vatican; and in a Chamber, in caſe 'tis "at Monte-Cavallo. In the mean Time the eldeſt Cardinals walk two and two into "the Hall of the Conſiſtory; when after having paid Obeiſance, or kiſs'd the Pope's "Hand, two Cardinal-Deacons advance forward towards the Cardinal elect, and lead "him to the Pope, to whom he makes three very low Bows; the firſt at the Entrance "of his Holineſs's Apartment, the ſecond in the Middle of it, and the third at the "Foot of the Throne. He then goes up the Steps, kiſſes his Holineſs's Feet, who "alſo admits him ad oſculum oris, or to kiſs his Mouth: This being done, the Cardinal "elect performs the oſculum pacis, which is done by embracing all the ſenior Cardinals, "and giving them the Kiſs of Peace."

"THIS firſt Ceremony being ended, the Choir chaunt the Te Deum, when the "Cardinals walk two and two to the papal Chapel, then march round the Altar, with "the Cardinal elect, accompanied by one of the Seniors, who gives him the upper "Hand for that Time only. This being done, the Cardinal elect kneels on the Steps "of the Altar, when the chief Maſter of the Ceremonies puts the Cape or Capuche "on his Head, which hangs behind his Cope; and whilſt they are chaunting the Te "Ergo of the Te Deum, he falls proſtrate, as is ſeen in the Plate, on his Belly, and "continues in this Poſture; not only till this Hymn is ended, but alſo till the Cardi-"nal-Deacon, who is then ſtanding at the Altar on the Epiſtle-Side, has read certain "Prayers inſerted in the Pontifical.

"THESE Prayers being ended, the new Cardinal riſes up: His Cape is lower'd; af-"ter which the Cardinal-Deacon, in Preſence of two Heads of Orders, and the Car-"dinal Camerlingo, preſents him the Bull of the Oath he is to take. Having read it, "he ſwears, He is ready to ſhed his Blood for the holy Romiſh Church, and for the "Maintenance of the Privileges of the apoſtolick Clergy, among whom he is incorpo-"rated.

"ALL the Cardinals return afterwards into the Chamber of the Conſiſtory, in the "ſame Order as they came out from thence. The newly elected Cardinal goes thither "alſo, walking on the Right-Hand of that ſenior Cardinal who accompanied him to [a] This Preſent is not always fix'd ſo low, but amounts frequently to one, three, five thouſand, and ſometimes more Ducats.

" the Chapel. He then kneels down before the Pope; one of the Maſters of the Cere" monies draws the Capuche over his Head, and his Holineſs puts the red velvet Hat
" over the Cape, repeating certain [a] Prayers at the ſame Time.

" THEN the Pope withdraws, and the Cardinals, as they go out of the Conſiſtory,
" ſtop in the Hall, where they make a Ring; whereupon the newly elected Cardinal " comes and ſalutes them in the Middle of it, and thanks them one after the other,
" for the Honour they have done him in receiving him as one of their Brethren. His " Compliment being ended, the ſenior Cardinals come one after another, and congra" tulate him on his Promotion. Afterwards they all return to their reſpective Homes;
" but when the reigning Pope has a Nephew in the ſacred College, the Cardinal Ne" phew invites his new Collegue to dine with him in his Palace."

THE red Hat which was given the Cardinal, is carried to his Palace, in a large ſilver Baſon gilt, which one of the privy Chamberlains of his Holineſs delivers to ſome Uſher or Door-Keeper; and the new Cardinal gives this Uſher thirty Crowns of Gold, which is his Fee. It were needleſs to inſert here the Tax, which ſhews the Perquiſites the new-created Cardinal is obliged to give to the Chamberlains and other Officers or Domeſtics of his Holineſs,

" THE ſame Day that the Cardinal has received the red Hat, he begins his Viſits
" by that of St. Peter's Church: He thence goes to the Cardinal-Deacon of the ſacred
" College, and afterwards waits on the crown'd Heads, in caſe any happen to be at " Rome at that Time; as for the other Cardinals, the Ambaſſadors, Princes, Princeſſes, " and Ladies of the Court, he viſits them as he has Opportunity, and is not obliged to " obſerve either Rank or Precedency.

" IN the firſt ſecret Conſiſtory after the Affairs which lie on the Table have been " terminated in Preſence of the newly elected Cardinal, the Pope performs the Cere" mony of ſhutting his Mouth; the Meaning of which is, that he forbids him to re" veal to any Perſon the leaſt Circumſtance of what has paſs'd among them." Antiently the ſenior Cardinals pretended, that thoſe Cardinals whoſe Mouths the Pope had ſhut, could neither have an active or a paſſive Voice in the Conclave, i. e. that if the Pope ſhould happen to die during that Interval, they could neither give their Votes for the Election of another Pontiff, nor be themſelves elected by other Cardinals. But Pius V. declared by a Bull, dated the 26th of January, 1571. that the Cuſtom practiſed by the Pope of laying his Hand on the Mouth of the Cardinals elect, is no more than a bare Ceremony, to teach them that they ought to be very circumſpect in their Diſcourſe; but that it does not exclude them from the Privileges of both an active and paſſive Voice.

IN the ſecond or third Conſiſtory, the Pope opens the Mouth of the new promoted Cardinals; [b] but they are firſt deſired to leave the Conſiſtory for a Moment, while his Holineſs propoſes to the antient Cardinals the opening the Mouths of the new ones. They are then re-admitted, upon which the Pope addreſſes an exhortatory Diſcourſe to them, aſſigns them their Titles, puts on the Ring-Finger of their Right-Hand a gold Ring, in which a Saphire is ſet; for which each Cardinal pays five hundred Ducats to the College of the Congregation of Faith. " This Ring, according to a Bull of " [a] Ad laudem omnipotentis Dei, & ſanctæ ſedis apoſtolicæ, &c. Receive in Honour of Almighty God, and the " holy See-Apoſtolic, this red Hat, the Mark of the Cardinalate. By this Hat you are to learn, that you muſt de" fend till Death, to the laſt Drop of your Blood, the Exaltation of the holy Faith, the Peace of Chriſtianity,

" and the holy Roman Church."

[b] Sacr. Cerem. Eccl. Rom. Lib. I.

" Gregory

" Gregory XV. is given to the new promoted Cardinal, to ſhew that the Church is " now his Spouſe, and that he muſt never abandon her."

THE Pope, in opening the Cardinal's Mouth, ſays to him, [a] In the Name of the Father, &c. we open your Mouth, that you may give your Opinion in our Conferences and Councils; in all neceſſary Caſes, or in ſuch as relate to the Cardinals, or their Functions; in our Conſiſtory, out of the Conſiſtory, at the Election of a ſovereign Pontiff. In giving his Title, or Church, he ſays, To the honour of Almighty God, &c. we commit the Church of * * * * to thy Care, together with the Clergy, the People, &c. belonging to it, &c. His Holineſs, at repeating theſe laſt Words, puts the above-mention'd Ring on the Cardinal's Ring-Finger.

" FORMERLY the Pope uſed to ſend the Hat to Cardinals, but ever ſince Paul II. " gave them the red Cap, which is a kind of Skull-Cap, they are obliged to go in Per- " ſon to Rome for it. However, to preſerve the Remembrance of the carrying the Hat " antiently to all ſuch Perſons as at the Time of their Creation were not in Rome, four " confederate Privy-Chamberlains always carry four red Hats on ſo many Maces, in " the papal Cavalcades, to denote that it was formerly their Office to carry them to " the Cardinals elect.

" WHEN the Pope, by a ſpecial Favour, is pleaſed to ſend the Hat to an abſent " Cardinal, the following Ceremonies are obſerved: The Hat, in this Caſe, is carried " by an honorary Chamberlain, or a Gentleman of the Pope's Houſhold, together " with a Brief directed to the Nuncio, or the Biſhop of the Place where the Cardinal " elect reſides. As ſoon as the latter hears of the Approach of the Chamberlain who " brings the Hat, he ſends his Houſhold to meet him, and as many of his Friends as " he can get together for that Purpoſe, to do him the greater Honour, when they all " make their Entry together in Cavalcade, if allow'd by the Cuſtom of the Place. " Then the Pope's Chamberlain holds the red Hat aloft on the Mace, in order that " it may be ſeen by all the Spectators.

" THE Pope's Envoy, and the Prelate who is to perform the Ceremony, meet on a " Sunday, or ſome high Feſtival, at the newly elected Cardinal's with their Domeſtics, " and as many Friends as they can get together, and go in Cavalcade to the principal " Church of the Place in the following Order.

" THE March is open'd by the Drums and Trumpets; then come the Livery-Ser- " vants. The Soldiers upon Guard, in caſe there be any, or the Inhabitants of the " Town under Arms, march before the Gentlemen, and afterwards the Pope's Cham- " berlain appears in a purple Habit, holding the red Hat aloft, and uncover'd. Im- " mediately after follows the newly elected Cardinal, with his Cope on, his Capuche on " his Head, and over all a black Hat. On the Right Hand the Prelate marches who " is to perform the Ceremony, and on his Left ſome other Perſon of Quality; ſuch as " the chief Nobleman of the Place; and behind him the Coaches of the Cardinal, " and of all ſuch Perſons as are proud of doing him Honour, with a great Train. " When this Ceremony is perform'd in any Place where a King or Prince reſides, " their Guards always attend on the newly elected Cardinal.

" WHEN the Cavalcade is come to the Church, Maſs is ſung in it, and 'tis uſual for " the King or Prince of the Place, as alſo the chief Lords and Ladies of the Court, " to be preſent at it. Maſs being ended, the Prelate who is to perform the Ceremony " puts on his Cope and Mitre; then, being ſeated in an Eaſy-Chair which ſtands on [a] Sacr. Cerem. Eccl. Rom. Lib. I.

" the Steps of the Altar, with his Back turn'd to it, the Perſon who brought the Hat " lays it on the Altar, and preſents the Pope's Brief to the Prelate, who gives it to his " Secretary, and this latter reads it with an audible Voice, ſo as to be heard by the " whole Congregation, Immediately after the Prelate makes an Oration in Praiſe of " the newly elected Cardinal, and at the Concluſion declares, that he is ready to deli- " ver the Hat to him, according to his Holineſs's Order.

" THEN the Cardinal elect advances towards the Altar, and kneeling down takes the " ſame Oath before the Prelate which the newly created Cardinals take at Rome be- " fore the Pope. Then the Prelate riſes from his Seat, and taking off his Mitre ſays " ſome Prayers over the new Cardinal, whoſe Head is covered with the Capuche; af- " ter which the Prelate puts his Hat on, and at the ſame Time repeats a Prayer out " of the Roman Pontifical. He afterwards gives him the Kiſs of Peace, upon which " the Te Deum and ſome Prayers are ſung, which conclude the Ceremony. The " newly created Cardinal returns in Cavalcade, with the red Hat on his Head."

THIS pompous Ceremony concludes with Feſtivity and noble Banquets, but it happens ſo ſeldom, that we ſcarce have one Example of it. The Roman Ceremonial ordains, that it muſt never be practiſed except on ſuch Occaſions as are of great Importance to the holy See, at which Times the apoſtolical Legate muſt be ſet off with the greateſt Splendor imaginable.

" [a] WHEN a Cardinal takes Poſſeſſion of his Title, he goes under the Portico " of his Church, and there puts on the Cope of a Colour ſuitable to the So- " lemnity of the Day, and afterwards kneels down on a Cuſhion laid on a Carpet in " the Middle of the great Gate. The moſt dignified Prieſt of the ſaid Church, hav- " ing his Cope on, preſents him the Croſs to kiſs; after which the Cardinal advances " three or four Steps into the Church, and immediately an Acolyte preſents him the " Navicula, out of which his Eminence takes ſome Incenſe, and bleſſes it as he throws " it into the Thurible. After this he takes off his Cap, and having received the " Sprinkler from the ſame Prieſt who gave him the Croſs to kiſs, he ſprinkles ſome " Drops of holy Water on his Forehead, and immediately after ſprinkles the Clergy " and People about him therewith. He then gives the Thurible to the Prieſt who has " the Cope on, and ſtanding up, with his Cap on, receives the Incenſe which this " Prieſt offers him thrice ſucceſſively.

" THIS being done, they begin the Te Deum, and the Chapter of the Church at- " tend in Proceſſion on the Cardinal to the high Altar, where he kneels till 'tis ended; " then the Prieſt who introduced him, ſtanding up on one Side of the ſaid Altar, ſays " the firſt and laſt Words of the Lord's Prayer aloud, and the reſt to himſelf; after " which he ſings ſeveral Prayers with a uniform Voice; which being ended the Car- " dinal riſes up, and goes and ſeats himſelf under a Canopy on the Goſpel Side. All " the Congregation come and kiſs his Hand, the officiating Prieſt excepted, to whom " he gives the Kiſs of Peace on his right Cheek.

" THEN the Bull is read which inveſts the Cardinal with the Title in Queſtion, and " the Benefice he has now taken Poſſeſſion of. In caſe the Ceremony be performed in

" the Morning a private or ſolemn Maſs is ſaid, as the Cardinal thinks proper; but if " in the Afternoon, Veſpers are ſung, and in the Evening only Compline. After this " the Cardinal goes to the Middle of the Altar, when, having put his Capuche over his " Head, he gives his Bleſſing to the People, and grants them an hundred Days Indul- " gence. He then goes down to the Foot of the Altar, and after having taken off his " Cope, and put his Lunula over the Rochet uncover'd, he walks in the Middle of the " Church, and as he paſſes, gives his Bleſſing on both Sides of him. Being arrived at " the Sacriſty, he viſits the Relics, and when he returns to his Palace, he puts on the " Camail, or purple Ornament, and the Lunula over his Rochet.

" If the Cardinal who takes Poſſeſſion of his Title is only in Deacon's Orders, i. e. " if his Church has only the Title of a Deaconry, notwithſtanding he be a Biſhop or " Prieſt, he in this Caſe does not go to the Altar, and bleſs the People from thence; " nor when he goes from the Altar to the Sacriſty, nor in any Part whatſoever of his " Church.

" A CARDINAL who aſſiſts at Maſſes, Veſpers, Proceſſions, or any other ſolemn Of- " fices of the Church, the Title whereof he is put in Poſſeſſion of, is allowed to wear the " red Cope, whereas the other Cardinals who aſſiſt at the above-mention'd Services are " permitted to wear the purple Cope, with a Proviſo, however, that it be not on a Day " when the wearing of that Colour is prohibited.

ON the Feſtival of the Saint to whom the titular Church of a Cardinal is dedicated, " the Incumbent goes thither in red Robes, and a Cope of the ſame Colour, though " it be in Advent, Septuageſima, or Lent, and celebrates the Office there himſelf. He " then gives the pontifical Bleſſing; but in caſe he himſelf does not officiate, he goes " and ſits down on the pontifical Seat which is cover'd with red Cloth, and under a Ca- " nopy. If during his aſſiſting at the Office, any Cardinal ſhould happen to come to " it, his Chamberlain and other Gentlemen muſt go and receive him, and accompany " him, at the ſame Time making an Excuſe in their Maſter's Name; and when he has " ended his Devotions, they muſt conduct him to his Coach.

" IN caſe the titular Cardinal is not buſy, he himſelf muſt go and receive every Car- " dinal that comes into his Church, wait upon them to the Praying Desk, and recon- " duct them: But if ſuch Cardinals are deſirous of hearing Maſs or Veſpers, which they " never do when the Throne or rather pontifical Seat is raiſed, the titular Cardinal muſt " ſeat them in the moſt honourable Place, though he himſelf be a ſenior Cardinal; " contenting himſelf with the loweſt Place, as being in his own Church. However, " there are two Caſes in which this Rule is not to be obſerv'd, viz. when either the " Pope or a Cardinal aſſiſts ſolemnly at Maſs, or at the Funeral of a Cardinal; in this " caſe the Incumbent, tho' in his own Church, ſtands according to his Rank, and muſt be " clothed in Veſtments of the ſame Colour with the reſt of the Cardinals, without any " other Formality.

" To conclude: We are to obſerve that the three Archprieſts of the great Churches, of " St. John of Lateran, of St. Peter's, and St. Maria Maggiore's, enjoy the ſame Pri- " vileges in their reſpective Chapters, as the titular Cardinals in their Churches.

The

The Interment of CARDINALS.

" WHEN a [a] Cardinal dies, he immediately is embalm'd, and the following Night " is carried into the Church, where his Obſequies are to be ſolemnized. One " of the largeſt Churches is generally made uſe of for this Purpoſe, in order that the greater " Concourſe of People may aſſemble in it. The Inſide is hung through with black " Velvet, and adorned with Eſcutcheons, on which the Arms of the Deceaſed are " repreſented. A great Number of white Tapers are lighted up on both Sides of the " Nave.

" IN the Middle of the Church a kind of very high and large Bed of State is ſet, co- " ver'd with black Brocade, with two Pillows of the ſame Colour, both which being " put one above the other, are laid under the Head of the deceaſed Cardinal, whoſe " Corpſe lies in the Middle of the Bed, in ſuch a Manner that his Feet point towards " the great Gate, and his Head towards the high Altar.

" THE Corpſe of the deceaſed Cardinal is clothed in pontifical Veſtments, viz. the " Mitre, the Cope if he were a Biſhop, the Chaſuble if a Prieſt, and the Tunic if " if a Deacon. The ſix Maſters of the Ceremonies aſſiſt in this Church, clothed in " Caſſocs of purple Serge, and all the Pope's Couriers in Long Robes of the ſame Co- " lour, trailing on the Ground, with ſilver Maces in their Hands. There are likewiſe " two of the Deceaſed's tall Lacqueys, each holding a Wand, on which purple Taffety " Streamers with the Arms of the deceaſed Cardinal, are fixed ; with theſe they are " continually fanning his Face, in order to keep off the Flies.

" ON the Morrow after Veſpers, the religious Mendicants meet together in a Cha- " pel of that Church, where they ſing the Matins of the Dead, each Order repeating " alternately a Nocturnum, and the Pope's Muſic the Laudes. In the mean Time the " Cardinals arrive clothed in Purple, and at their coming into the Church they put on " a Cope of the ſame Colour, and then advance forwards before the high Altar, where " the Hoſt is kept, and there offer up their Prayers, and adore it upon their Knees. " They afterwards go one after another to the Feet of the Deceaſed, and repeat the Pa- " ter Noſter, &c. to which they add certain Verſes out of the Scripture, and the Prayer " Abſolve, from the Office of the Dead.

" THEY then make the uſual Sprinkling with holy Water, and go and ſeat them- " ſelves in the Choir, where they hear the Office of the Dead, ſung by ſeveral Monks " and Prieſts with great Solemnity. Others repeat it to themſelves, not ſtirring out of " their Places till it be ended ; the Cardinals, Prieſts, and Biſhops, on the Epiſtle Side, " and the reſt of the Clergy in the loweſt Seats, which ſtand round the Choir ; the Car- " dinals being always ſeated on the higeſt Chairs or Benches.

" THIS being done, the Congregation return to their reſpective Homes, without any " farther Ceremony. At Night the Corpſe is ſtript, and laid in a leaden Coffin, which " is put in another of Cypreſs Wood cover'd with black Cloth. The Corpſe is carried " in a Coach, accompanied with the Rector of the Pariſh and the Chaplains of the De- " ceaſed, who go by Torch-Light to the Church where he is to be interr'd.

[a] Aimon, ubiſup.

" MOST

" Most Cardinals who die in Rome are generally buried in the Church of their Title, " unleſs he were a Roman of an exalted Condition, and had deſired to be interred in " the ſame Vault with his Anceſtors; or ſome foreign Cardinal, who chuſes to be buried " in the Church in Rome belonging to the Clergy of the Nation.

" Four of the Cardinals are always buried with greater Pomp and Magnifi- " cence than the reſt, viz. the Dean of the apoſtolic College, the Grand Penitentiary, " the Vice-Chancellor, and the Camerlingo. The following Order is obſerved at this " Ceremony.

" After that the Office of the Dead has been ſung in the Preſence of the Cardinals, " they withdraw, and the Proceſſion begins. It opens with the Orphans call'd Illitera- " ti; after them ſeveral Fraternities march, the Penitents whereof have lighted Tapers in " their Hands. They are cover'd with their Copes or Hoods, and clothed in large Par- " ty-colour'd Robes, according to their Inſtitution: Some are red, others black, white, " purple, blue, yellowiſh, of an Olive-Colour; and ſeveral others of the moſt odd and " fataſtic Colours.

" After theſe Fraternities come the religious Mendicants, and others, according to " their Rank. Afterwards the ſecular Clergy belonging to the Pariſh of the deceaſed " Cardinal, and thoſe of the Church where he is to be buried, when they are not Re- " gulars.

" If the deceaſed Cardinal was Archprieſt of one of the three great Churches of " Rome, the Chapter aſſiſts at his Funeral; alſo at the Interment of a titular Cardinal " of St. Laurence in Damaſo, or St. Mary's on the other Side the Tyber.

" After this Proceſſion, the Corpſe advances forwards, dreſs'd in pontifical Veſt- " ments according to the Rank the Deceaſed held in the ſacred College; but tho' he " were only a Cardinal-Deacon, he nevertheleſs has a Mitre on his Head. In this man- " ner he is carried on the Shoulders of his tall Lacqueys, ſurrounded by his Houſhold " all in Mourning, viz. his Footmen, who walk before the Corpſe; and his Almoner, " Gentlemen, and Officers, following after. On each Side of the Corpſe a File of the " Pope's Swiſs Guards walk, with Halbards in their Hands; and in the Rear, Part of " the Pope's Houſhold in Cavalcade, the Captain of the Swiſs Guards, the Pope's Mace- " Bearers, a Maſter of the Ceremonies with his Major-Domo, the aſſiſting Biſhops, " the apoſtolical Prothonotaries, the Chaplains, the apoſtolical Equeries, and the Cham- " berlains without the Walls.

" When a Cardinal who is a Prince, or of a very illuſtrious Family, dies, the Pope " generally ſends all his Houſhold to grace the Funeral, as alſo to the Obſequies of the " four Cardinals in the exalted Stations above-mentioned.

" The Morning after the Corpſe of the Cardinal is carried into the Church where it " is to be interr'd, a ſolemn Maſs is ſung in the Preſence of the whole ſacred College, " for the Repoſe of his Soul; and on this Occaſion all the Ceremonies are obſerv'd which " are uſed at the Interment of a Pope; excepting that for the Sovereign Pontiff, there " are five aſſiſtant Cardinals clothed in their pontifical Veſtments; but at that of the Car- " dinal, five Biſhops perform the Ceremony of Sprinkling, of Incenſing, and the uſual " Prayers ordained in the Ritual for this Office.

THE Roman [a] Ceremonial takes notice of the nine Days Devotion which is made for the deceaſed Cardinals. On the firſt and laſt Day thereof, an hundred and fifty Maſſes muſt be ſaid, when a little Piece of Money and two ſmall Candles are given to each officiating Prieſt. The other ſeven Days an hundred are ſaid. The reſt of the Ceremonies being the ſame with thoſe uſed at common Maſſes of the Dead, we ſhall not here repeat what has been already ſaid thereupon in treating of Maſſes of the Dead, and of Burials in general.

The INTERMENT of a POPE.

WE are now going to ſee his Holineſs laid in the Grave. [b] He, who by his Power and Dignity is ſuperior to the reſt of Mankind, who binds and looſes every Thing upon Earth, is yet too weak to break the Bands of Death when his fatal Hour is come. 'Tis in theſe Moments the holy Father muſt call to Mind, that when he was raiſed to the Holy See, all the Glories of the Sublunary World were repreſented to him as the Smoke which vaniſhes away. We ſhall not give the Particulars which relate to the Preliminaries of his Death. He muſt recollect himſelf, examine his Conſcience, make his Confeſſion, [c] deſire his Confeſſor to give him a plenary Indulgence, make ſome Reparation to thoſe he has offended in his Life-Time; afterwards receive the Viaticum, aſſemble the Sacred College, make a Profeſſion of Faith before them, and beſeech their Eminencies to forgive him [d] for all thoſe Things in which he may have offended any of them during his Pontificate. The Roman Ceremonial, among other Particulars, enjoins his Holineſs, when he finds his laſt Hour approaching, to recommend to the Cardinals the chuſing a worthy Paſtor for his Succeſſor; but this is ſuperfluous, ſince the Cardinals never aſſemble to elect a Sovereign Pontiff but they firſt beſeech the Holy Spirit to aſſiſt them in their Choice.

[e] "WHEN the Pope is at the laſt Gaſp, his Nephews and Domeſtics ſtrip the Palace "of all its Furniture. Immediately after his Holineſs is expired, the Officers of the apo- "ſtolic Chamber come to ſeize the Goods; but the Pope's Relations take care that they "find nothing but bare Walls, and the Corpſe lying on a Straw Bed, with an old wooden "Candleſtic, in which there is only the Snuff of a Taper burning.

"AT the ſame Time the Cardinal Camerlingo comes in purple Veſtments, accom- "panied with the Clerks of the Chamber in Mourning, to inſpect the Pope's Corpſe. "He calls him thrice by his Chriſtian Name; and finding he gives no manner of An- "ſwer, or diſcovers the leaſt Sign of Life, he cauſes a Inſtrument of his Death to be "drawn up by the apoſtolical Prothonotaries. He takes from the Maſter of the Pope's "Chamber, the Fiſherman's Ring, which is the Pope's Seal, made of ſolid Gold, and "worth an hundred Crowns. He breaks it to Pieces, and gives them to the Maſters of "the Ceremonies, whoſe Perquiſite they are. The Datary and Secretaries, who have "the reſt of the Seals of the deceaſed Pope, are obliged to carry them to the Cardinal "Camerlingo, who cauſes them to be broke in Preſence of the Auditor of the Cham- "ber, the Treaſurer, and the apoſtolic Clerks, and none of the other Cardinals are al- "lowed to aſſiſt at this Function.

Immediately the Camerlingo ſends a Body of " Guards to ſecure the Gates of the City, the Caſtle of St. Angelo, and other Poſts. " The Caporioni, or Captains of the Diſtricts, patrol Night and Day with their " Guards, to prevent thoſe who are caballing for the Election of a new Pope from rai- " ſing any Sedition.

" AFTER the Camerlingo has thus provided for the Security of Rome, he comes out " of the apoſtolical Palace, and goes round the City in his Coach, accompanied with " the Swiſs Guards, and the Captain of the Guards, who uſually attended upon the " deceaſed Pope. When this March begins, the great Bell of the Capitol is rung, " which is never heard but at the Death of the Pontiff, to give notice thereof to the " Citizens.

" AT this Signal, the Rota and all the Tribunals of Juſtice are ſhut up, as likewiſe " the Datary, purſuant to the Bull of Pius V. in eligendis. No more Bulls are now " given out; the ordinary Congregations are likewiſe ſuſpended, inſomuch that none " but the Cardinal Camerlingo, and the Cardinal Grand Penitentiary continue in their " Employments.

" As the Popes have made choice of St. Peter's Church for the Place of their Inter- " ment, when they die at Mount Quirinal (now Monte Cavallo) or in ſome other " of their Palaces, they are carried to the Vatican in a [a] large open Litter, in the Middle " of which is a Bed of State, on which the Corpſe of the Pope is laid, clothed in his " pontifical Veſtments.

" THE Litter is preceded by a Vaunt-Guard of Horſemen and Trumpets who ſound " mournfully, furl'd with purple and black Crape: Theſe Trumpets march at the " Head of the firſt Company, mounted on dapple Horſes, the Houſings whereof are " of the ſame Colour with the Streamers fix'd to the Trumpets; but thoſe of the Vaunt- " Guard are black Velvet, with Gold and Silver Fringe. Theſe Horſemen have their " Lances revers'd; each Squadron has a Standard before it, ſurrounded with the Kettle- " Drums, which are beat in a mournful Sound.

" NEXT advance ſeveral Battalions of the Swiſs Guards; half of theſe Swiſs have Muſ- " kets, and the reſt Halbards, revers'd. Theſe are followed by twenty four Grooms, " each leading a Horſe cover'd with ſable Houſings, that trail on the Ground. Seve- " ral of the deceaſed Pope's tall Lacqueys walk, without Order, between the led Horſes, " with lighted Torches of yellow Wax in their Hands.

[a] See the laſt Compartment of the Plate. The Reader will obſerve that this Deſcription is corrected from the Figure which was drawn at Rome.

" THEN

" THEN the twelve Penitentiaries of St. Peter's advance forward, with each a Flam-
" beau in his Hand, and ſurrounded with Swiſs Guards armed with Backſwords and " Halbards, and having the Pope's Litter in the midſt of them. Immediately before
" the Litter comes the Croſs-Bearer mounted on a tall Horſe, with a Capariſon of Wire
" all in Net-Work, like a Horſe prepar'd for Battle. Behind the Bed of State, on which " the Pope's Body lies, is ſeen the chief Groom on a black Horſe, whoſe Ears are cropp'd,
" and whoſe Harneſs conſiſts only of ſeveral Stripes of Linen Cloth, a Piece of white " Satin, and a grand Plume of Feathers, in three Ranges one above the other, on his " Head, and ſome gaudy Tinſel.

" AFTERWARDS twenty four more Grooms come forward, leading black Mules with " white Houſings, and twelve tall Lacqueys with white Horſes cover'd with black Vel" vet. After theſe a Company of Light Horſe advance, the Perſons who mount them " being all clothed in Purple. Then come a Company of Cuiraſſiers, and laſtly the reſt
" of the Swiſs Guards, whoſe March is cloſed with a Company of Carabineers, who " guard a few Pieces of Braſs Cannon gilt, drawn on their Carriages.——

" IN caſe the Pope died in the Vatican, his Body is immediately carried, by the " Back Stairs, into Sixtus V's. Chapel. After it has lain there twenty four Hours, 'tis
" embalm'd, and the ſame Day it is carried [a] to St. Peter's Church, attended only by " the Penitentiaries, the Almoners, and other Eccleſiaſtics, who follow the Pontiff's
" Corpſe as far as the Portico of the great Church. The Canons of the Church come " and receive it, ſinging the uſual Prayers appointed for the Dead, and afterwards car" ry it into the Chapel of the Bleſſed Trinity, where it is expoſed for three Days on a " Bed of State raiſed pretty high, to the Sight of the People, who croud to kiſs his Ho-
" lineſs's Feet thro' an Iron Rail, with which this Chapel is encloſed.

" THREE Days after, the Corpſe, being again embalm'd with freſh Perfumes, is " laid in a leaden Coffin, at the Bottom of which the Cardinals whom he had pre-
" moted lay Gold and Silver Medals, on one Side of which is the Head of the deceaſed
" Pope their Benefactor, and on the Reverſe his moſt remarkable Actions. This Cof" fin is afterwards encloſed in another made of Cypreſs Wood, and is depoſited within " the Wall of ſome Chapel, till ſuch Time as a Mauſolæum is erected in his Honour in " St. Peter's, or any other Church, in caſe he himſelf had not given Ordes for the e" recting of one during his Life-Time; which is ſometimes done.

" BUT when his Holineſs declares by his Laſt Will, or by Word of Mouth, that " he chuſes not to be buried in St. Peter's, but in ſome other Church he names, then " his Body muſt not be tranſlated till after he has lain a whole Year in ſome of the " Chapels of that Church; and in this Caſe the Corpſe cannot be removed till a large Sum " of Money is paid to the Chapter of St. Peter; it ſometimes coſts upwards of a Mil" lion, in caſe the Pope whoſe Corpſe they are deſirous of removing, was famous for " his Piety, and that there are any Grounds to preſume he will one Day be cano-" niſed.

" THE apoſtolic Chamber defrays the Expences of the Pope's Burial, which are

A DISSERTATION ON THE HIERARCHY of the CHURCH.

PART II.

IN the firſt Part of this Diſſertation we treated of the Pope as Head of the Church Militant, and deſcribed the Ceremonies of his Election; we have alſo conſider'd him as the chief Miniſter of the Church, which engaged us in the Deſcription of ſeveral auguſt Ceremonies, by which he appears to be the ſovereign Monarch of the Kingdom of Chriſt, rather than the Servant of the Servants of the Lord. We have likewiſe ſeen him deſcend from our Saviour's Throne upon Earth to the Grave. In this ſecond Part we conſider him with regard to his exalted Dignity, but ſhall not touch upon the Temporalities thereof. We ſhall repreſent him to the Reader only in his ſpiritual Reign, and ſhall mention only ſuch Particulars thereof as have already been taken notice of by Writers of known Veracity.

The POPE'S Vicar-General.

THE Pope conſider'd as a Biſhop, has a Dioceſe ſubordinate to him; in this Quality he appoints for his [a] Vicar-General a Biſhop, who, ever ſince Pius IV. is always a Cardinal. This Employment of Vicar-General is for Life, and he is by his Office the proper Judge of all Eccleſiaſtics both Secular and Regular, of both Sexes, as alſo of all the Jews and Curtezans at Rome, and in its Dependencies. He confirms and confers all ſacred Orders. He is impower'd to inſpect and viſit all Churches, Monaſteries, Hoſpitals, and other pious Houſes, thoſe of foreign Nations excepted, which are all exempt. He has a Vicegerent, who is always a Biſhop, to aſſiſt him in his epiſcopal Functions. He has likewiſe a Lieutenant, who is a Prelate, but under the Rank of Biſhop; a Referendary of both Signatures, who takes cognizance of all civil Cauſes heard at his Court; and a Judge Criminal, who is a Layman, to judge all Crimes committed by Clerks and Regulars: But that which makes the Poſt of Grand-Vicar very conſiderable and profitable, is the Power he has of deciding all Differences that ariſe relating to Matrimony.

THE apoſtolic Chamber pays him proviſionally, excluſive of the Profits ariſing from his Courts, twelve hundred Crowns of Gold annually. He has four Notaries, or Regiſters, a Provoſt, and a Company of Bailiffs and Sergeants.

As we have already taken notice of the Penitentiary, we ſhall not mention him in this Place, by a needleſs Repetition of what has been already ſaid.

The POPE'S Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor.

THE Chancellor wrote formerly, in the Pope's Name, all the Reſcripts, Doubts, and Scruples with reſpect to Faith, which Biſhops and others propoſed to him; inſomuch that he executes the Office of Secretary of State, of the Briefs, and that of Chancellor. The firſt mention we find made of this Officer, is in St. Jerom's Epiſtle to Gerontius; and 'tis ſuppoſed that he himſelf exerciſed that Office under Pope Damaſus.

THIS Office, till the Pontificate of Gregory VIII. in 1187, had always been conferred either on a Biſhop or a Cardinal; but this Pope, who himſelf had exerciſed it before he was raiſed to the Pontificate, tho' he was only Cardinal of Santa Ruſina, cauſed it, after he was raiſed to the Popedom, to be exerciſed by a Canon of St. John of Lateran, who aſſum'd the Title of the Pope's Vice-Chancellor, as did alſo five or ſix other Canons of the ſame Church, who exerciſed it after him. But Boniface VIII. having reſtor'd it to the College of Cardinals, thoſe who have exerciſed it ſince that Time, have contented themſelves with the Title of Vice-Chancellors, tho' they are in reality Chancellors, and act with much the ſame Authority as the Chancellors of France, and thoſe of the other Potentates of Europe.

THIS Dignity is purchaſed, and coſts an hundred thouſand Crowns; it yields abou [b] ten thouſand Crowns per Annum to the Incumbent, and is for Life. The Juriſdiction of the Cardinal Vice-Chancellor extends to the iſſuing out all apoſtolical Letters and [b] 14000 Roman Crowns, according to Lunadoro, ubi ſup.

Bulls,

Bulls, as alſo to all Petitions ſign'd by the Pope, except thoſe expedited by Brief, under the Fiſherman's Ring. All the Officers of the Chancery, whereof mention will be made hereafter, aſſemble thrice a Week, viz. on Tueſdays, Thurſdays, and Saturdays, in the Vice-Chancellor's Palace.

We find, in the Bulls iſſued out by the Pope's Chancellors and Vice-Chancellors, ſeveral Titles which ſavour very much of Pride: As for inſtance, we read in a Reſcript of Pope Nicolas III. quoted in the ninety ſixth Diſtinction of the Canon Law, that 'tis manifeſt the Roman Pontiff cannot be judg'd by any Perſon, becauſe he himſelf is God. And in a Bull of Pope Gregory IX. inſerted in the Decretals under the Title of Primacy, we read the following Words: God has made two great Lights for the Firmament of the univerſal Church; i. e. he has inſtituted two Dignities, viz. the Pontifical Authority, and the Royal Prerogative; but that which preſides over the Day, i. e. over ſpiritual Affairs, is greater, and that which preſides over material Things, leſs: whence we muſt confeſs, that there is as much Difference between Pontiffs and Kings, as between the Sun and Moon.—— We affirm that every human Creature is ſubject to the Roman Pontiff; and that, by Virtue of his Plenitude of Power; and ſovereign Authority; he may diſpenſe with Laws both Human and Divine. As we find it expreſſed in the Gloſſary in the ſame Place.

The Regent, Prelates, and Regiſters of the Pope's Chancery.

The Regent of the apoſtolic Chancery is eſtabliſh'd by the Vice-Chancellor's Patent, by which he is empower'd to commit all Appeals to the Referendaries, and Auditors of the Rota; and theſe he diſtributes to them by Order, purpoſely that each of them may be employ'd, and get Money in their Turns. There are twelve Referendaries, who are all Prelates, and are called Regiſters of the High Court; they are clothed in a long purple Robe. Theſe Employments are purchaſed, and the Vice-Chancellor has the Nomination of ſix, the others being in the Pope's Gift. The Poſt of Regent is purchaſed at thirty thouſand Crowns, and the annual Produce amounts to three thouſand. Thoſe of the Prelates Referendaries of both Signatures who are Regiſters of the High Court, ſell for thirteen thouſand Crowns, and produce each twelve hundred Crowns annually. Theſe thirteen Prelates have their Seats when the Pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the Office, but the Regent never appears there in that Quality, to prevent any Diſputes about Precedency.

The Regiſters of the High Court draw up the Minutes of all Bulls, from the Petitions ſign'd by the Pope, and collate them after they are written in Parchment; they afterwards ſend them to the Regiſters of the Lower Court, who, with the Regiſters or apoſtolical Writers, tax them. All theſe Employments would not be worth ſo much, nor produce ten per Cent. Profit, were the Bulls which collate to rich Benefices iſſued out gratis; but nothing is ever purchaſed from the apoſtolical Chancery, without paying Sums proportionable to the Value of the Benefices, or other Grants.

The

The POPE's Secretary of State, and Under-Secretaries.

THE Cardinal-Nephew, if the Pope has any, or another Cardinal in his Default, is always the Pope's principal Secretary of State; for this Poſt is never given to any Perſon under the Dignity of Cardinal; and notwithſtanding there are ten other Secretaries of State, between whom the Provinces of the eccleſiaſtical State are divided, they nevertheleſs are in ſuch Subordination to him, that they do nothing without his Participation, ſo that, properly ſpeaking, they are no more than Under-Secretaries of State.

THE Cardinal-Secretary ſigns, by the Pope's Order, all Letters directed to Princes, Nuncio's, Vice-Legates, Governors, Prefects; and the Patents of all thoſe who are appointed for the Government and Adminiſtration of Juſtice, in the whole Territory of the eccleſiaſtical State: But the Proviſions or Patents of Governors of Cities, and large Towns ſurrounded with Walls; thoſe of Legates, Vice-Legates, and Preſidents, are drawn up by Brief, under the Fiſherman's Ring or Seal; and all thoſe who are raiſed to theſe Employments, Cardinals excepted, take an Oath before the Cardinal Camerlingo, in Preſence of a Notary of the Chamber, and ſwear on their own Briefs, and the Abſent do the ſame by Proxy.

ALL the Ambaſſadors of Princes, after having had Audience of the Pope, come and viſit the Cardinal-Secretary, before they wait upon any of the Magiſtrates of Rome, becauſe the Poſt of Superintendant of the eccleſiaſtical State is annexed to his Secretaryſhip. Theſe two Poſts are for Life, and the Pope generally beſtows them gratis; but ſometimes, in caſe he be in an urgent Neceſſity for Money, he ſells them: They produce fifteen thouſand Crowns annually.

THE Under-Secretaries of State, are, by their Office, obliged to draw up all the Minutes which the Cardinal-Secretary may want, and to write over fair all the Letters and Patents he is to ſign. Theſe Employments are frequently given to the Secretaries of the Conſultation, or of the Congregation of good Government, as alſo to the Maſter of the Chamber, and the Pope's Auditor, who take in Memorials and Petitions, by which the Pope is deſired to do Juſtice, (or grant any other Favour) when the Magiſtrates eſtabliſh'd for that Purpoſe refuſe to do it. All theſe Employments are in the Pope's Gift, who turns out any Perſon whenever he thinks proper: They produce above fifteen hundred Crowns annually, without reckoning the By-Profits, which ſometimes amount to four or five hundred.

THE Secretary, whom we may call the Pope's particular Confident, is generally a Cardinal; but ſometimes the Pope chuſes another Prelate, who has more or fewer Under-Secretaries, according to the Expence the reigning Pope is willing to be at, and the Court he is deſirous of keeping. They wear purple Habits, and aſſiſt at the Pope's Chapel with the Camail and Rochet: They have Apartments in the Vatican, as alſo in Monte-Cavallo, when the Pope reſides there for any Time, which he never fails to do in Summer, to avoid the violent Heats and unwholſome Air of the lower City. Theſe ſeveral Employments, which the Pope beſtows on none but ſuch Prelates as he judges capable of keeping inviolably whatever Secrets he ſhall entruſt them with, are neither purchaſed, nor for Life; and nevertheleſs, thoſe who are raiſed to them gratis are never diſpoſſeſſed of them, unleſs it be to be removed to a higher Poſt, becauſe that in caſe the Pope were to turn them out with the leaſt Ignominy, or even under any Pretence whatſoever, they would take occaſion from thence to reveal a great many Particulars, which might do his Holineſs the utmoſt Prejudice.

THERE

THERE are none of these Secretaries but have at least twelve hundred Crowns a-Year, and are obliged to six Months Attendance only; and during that Time they have very little Trouble, their whole Employment being to write a few little Notes in the Pope's Closet; to transcribe a few Letters, the Minutes whereof they receive from him, and to keep certain Registers, being a kind of Journal of all the Pope says or does in the Presence of any Person, and whatever he meditates or resolves upon in private, which he is desirous of committing to Paper. 'Tis from these Journals that the famous Platina compiled his History of the Lives of the Popes; and from thence all the Intrigues of the several Conclaves are taken, and afterwards publish'd.

EVERY Pope has not the same Number of Secretaries to draw up the tax'd Briefs, or Letters so call'd, when they are issued out under the Fisherman's Ring, which is one of the Pope's three Seals. Sometimes twenty four Secretaries are employ'd in writing these Briefs, one of whom the Pope chuses for his domestic Prelate and Referendary; he likewise allows him an Apartment in his Palace, and a Table in the same Manner as his private Secretaries.

THESE twenty four Employments are all saleable, and cost nine thousand Crowns each. Every Secretary clears eight hundred Crowns at least annually; but as these Places are vacant at the Decease of a Pope, and that the Incumbent can exercise them no longer, nor sell them, it sometimes happens that there is no Person found who will disburse eight thousand Crowns for the Purchase thereof, since they are to enjoy the Profits of their Posts no longer than the Pope lives, who is always old, and daily threatened with Death; for this Reason, all who offer to purchase these Employments, are allow'd to tax the Briefs which they draw up, in such a Manner that they not only soon get the Money they lay out for the Purchase, but also a very handsome Profit.

No Briefs are purchased so dear as those by which the Pope grants plenary Indulgences, and perpetual Privileges to Altars, which are granted only to those Chapels where seven Masses are said daily. Hence it is, that most of such Churches as have not Priests sufficient for the saying of so many Masses, enjoy their Privileges only for certain Days in the Week, during a fix'd Term of Years; at the Expiration of which, the Titulars or Patrons of such Chapels whose Indulgences are expired, are obliged to [a] have Recourse to the Pope, in order to renew them.

THE Secretary of the Briefs dispatches such as are given him by the Cardinal-Nephew, and in his Default by the Cardinal-Patron, who is first Minister, or by the Secretaries of State. These are call'd Secret Briefs, because the Minutes which are made of them, are never seen by any Body, nor sign'd by the Cardinal-Prefect of the Briefs; but the Extracts thereof, which are given to those whom they concern, by the Grants which are made them therein, are sign'd and seal'd by the Cardinal-Patron, who keeps the Minutes thereof, till the Pope's Death; and the Moment the pontifical See is vacant, he sends them to the Archives of the Castle St. Angelo, together with all the Registers and Memorials that have pass'd through his Hands during his Administration. The other Secretaries and Ministers of the deceased Pope, are also oblig'd to send at the same Time to the Archives, all Writings and Papers which relate to the Affairs of State that came under their Cognizance.

THE Post of Secretary of the secret Briefs is in the Pope's Gift, and the Person who is collated to it depends on no one but the Pope; and he communicates his Minutes to such Persons only as his Holiness commands him to do: He has an annual Pension of eleven thouſand Crowns. Theſe ſecret Briefs conſiſt uſually of ſuch Diſpenſations or Privileges as the Pope grants to Princes, or other illuſtrious Perſons, for whom he has a peculiar Regard.

[a] Notwithstanding that these Briefs are tax'd, there is nevertheless the Words Gratis pro Deo inserted in the Middle of the Title, that the World may not know they were purchased.

The PREFECT of Aſſeſs'd Briefs, the PREFECT of the Signature of Favour, the PREFECT of the Signature of Juſtice, and the PRELATES REFERÈNDARIES of both Signatures.

THE Prefect of the Briefs is always a Cardinal, whoſe Poſt is purchaſed, and is for Life: It coſts twenty thouſand Crowns, and produces annually two thouſand five hundred Crowns, excluſive of the extraordinary Perquiſites which he receives from all thoſe whoſe Briefs he diſpatches. By his Office he is obliged to review all the Minutes, and ſign all the Copies of aſſeſs'd Briefs; but he is neither impower'd or commiſſion'd to view the ſecret Briefs. He is generally deputed by his Holineſs, with other Prelates (of whom mention will be made in the Sequel) to aſſiſt at the Signature of Grants which is made in the pontifical Palace. His Poſt is very honourable and profitable; for he has a Seat in the Pope's Palace near the Datary; and when he reviſes the Briefs, he may add or cut off any Clauſes; whence the Secretaries, who all in their ſeveral Turns aſſeſs theſe Briefs, rate them either higher or lower, according as they are deſirous of favouring thoſe who are to have them diſpatch'd; for which Reaſon, all who come on theſe Occaſions, aſſiduouſly make their court to this Prefect, and endeavour to bribe him to their Intereſt by ſome Preſent, proportionable to the Advantages granted by thoſe Briefs.

THE Office of Prefect of the Signature of Favour, is never given to any Perſon under the Dignity of Cardinal, who receives from the apoſtolical Chamber a yearly Penſion of twelve hundred Crowns, ſo long as, by the Pope's Favour, he enjoys this Poſt, who removes him whenever he pleaſes. The chief Employment of the Cardinal-Prefect is to preſide over all thoſe Prelates who aſſiſt at the Signature of Favour made every Tueſday before the Pope, or on the Saturday, in caſe Tueſday be a Feſtival, all Vacations excepted. He likewiſe ſigns all the Petitions which are preſented to this Aſſembly, in which twelve Cardinals at leaſt always meet by his Holineſs's Order, one of whom, together with the Pope, and the Prefect of the Signature of Favour, is generally the Cardinal-Prefect of the Signature of Juſtice.

THERE are likewiſe in this Aſſembly, twelve Prelates Referendaries, who have each their Vote in the Signature of Juſtice; the Auditor of the Cauſes of the apoſtolic Chamber goes thither likewiſe, with one of his Lieutenants, and another Lieutenant civil of the Cardinal-Vicar; and after theſe the Treaſurer-General, an Auditor of the Rota, an aſſiſtant apoſtolical Prothonotary, a Clerk of the Chamber, a Regiſter of the high Court, and the Regent of the Chancery. All the laſt mention'd have no active Voice in ſuch Affairs as relate to the Signature of Favour, but are the Deputies of ſeveral Judicatures or Chambers of Juriſdiction, each of whom come hither to preſerve and defend therein, the Rights of his reſpective Tribunal.

THE Juriſdiction of the Prefect of the Signature of Juſtice extends to judge the Cauſes of ſuch Perſons as think themſelves injur'd by any Sentence given by the ordinary Judges. Every Thurſday twelve Prelates aſſemble at his Houſe, and theſe are the moſt antient Referendaries of the Signature, and have an active Voice. All the other Referendaries are allow'd to aſſemble there alſo, and propoſe two litigious Cauſes each Seſſion, but they have no active Voice. The reſt who enjoy that Privilege with the Cardinal-Prefect, are always exactly inform'd of the Grievances of the Appellants before they come thither. Four are to examine the Inſtruments and other Writings produced in each Proceſs; four others take Information of the Facts under Debate, and the remaining four are learned in the Laws, by which thoſe Suits are to be judged.

THERE are likewiſe in this Aſſembly an Auditor of the Rota, and the Cardinal-Vicar's Lieutenant civil, whoſe Province 'tis to maintain the Rights of their Tribunal; but theſe have no active Voice. I have no more to add with regard to this Prefect of the Signature of Juſtice, except that his Holineſs never fills up this Poſt with any Perſon under the Dignity of Cardinal, to whom the apoſtolical Chamber allows a yearly Salary of fifteen hundred Crowns.

As his Decrees are diſpatch'd, ſome by Letters ſign'd under his Hand, and others by Briefs, there are two Officers employ'd for that Purpoſe; the one call'd the Prefect of the Minutes, who after having drawn them up, and ſign'd them, gives them to the other call'd the Maſter of the Briefs, becauſe he draws up the Briefs from the Minutes he has receiv'd, and afterwards ſends thoſe which are tax'd to be ſign'd by the Secretary of the Briefs. The firſt of theſe Offices is worth twelve thouſand Crowns, and produces about twelve hundred annually. The ſecond is purchaſed for thirty thouſand Crowns, and produces yearly three thouſand at leaſt, and ſometimes more. The Popes have, within theſe twenty Years, likewiſe annex'd to theſe Offices, three Reviſors of the Commiſſions of the Signature of Juſtice, who muſt be Prelates, and purchaſe their Poſts for ſix thouſand Crowns each, and each produces five hundred Crowns yearly.

THE College of the Prelates Referendaries is not limited as to the Number, and the Employments are not purchaſed, but are only Titles of Honour, which the Pope beſtows on Perſons of high Birth and Learning, as a Step towards the moſt conſiderable Employments of the Court of Rome. A Perſon before he can be thus promoted, muſt firſt have the Nomination of the Cardinal-Patron, and the Pope's Conſent. The Cardinal-Prefect of the Signature of Juſtice orders afterwards one of his Officers to make proper Informations and Enquiries, purſuant to the Conſtitution of Sixtus V. by which it is enacted, that every Candidate muſt prove he is Doctor of both Laws, that he has been an Inhabitant of Rome for two Years, that he is twenty five Years of Age, and that he has Wealth ſufficient to ſupport the Prelature with Honour.

THESE Formalities being over, the Cardinal-Prefect gives to the Candidate who has the above-mention'd Qualifications, a Commiſſion to report two Suits of Proceſſes in Signature; and in caſe he acquits himſelf in a proper Manner, his Nomination is approv'd, and he is receiv'd in the Manner following: The Cardinal-Prefect, having made him take an Oath that he will adminiſter Juſtice according to his Conſcience, clothes him with the Veſtments of the Prelature, i. e. with the Caſſoc trailing on the Ground, and a ſhort Cloke that deſcends a little lower than his Girdle, and has a Slit in it, to put his Arms through. Theſe Veſtments are black; for according to the Grant of Paul V. none but the twelve moſt antient Referendaries are allow'd to wear Purple, like all other Prelates.

THE twelve moſt antient Referendaries are call'd votanti di ſignatura, becauſe they have an active Voice in all Aſſemblies, and the others are call'd proponenti, i. e. Relaters or Reporters, and theſe have not an active Voice; which Rule is alſo obſerved in all the other Tribunals of Rome, where the Relaters lay down only the juſt Pretenſions of each Party, without declaring their Opinion concerning them.

THE Referendaries are impower'd to propoſe Commiſſions and Petitions both of Rigour and Favour, to the Signatures of Juſtice, and of Favour and to take Cognizance of ſuch Cauſes as daily come on, not exceeding the Sum of five hundred Crowns of Gold; for thoſe of larger Sums are tried at the Rota.

The POPE's Datary, and other Officers of that Court.

THE Pope's Datary and Chancery Courts were formerly one and the ſame Thing, but the Multitude of Affairs to be tranſacted therein, obliged him to divide it into two Tribunals, which are ſo nearly related to one another, that the Chancery does no more than diſpatch all that has paſs'd through the Datary Court.

THE Officer called Datary, is a Prelate, and ſometimes a Cardinal deputed by his Holineſs to receive all ſuch Petitions as are preſented to him, touching the Proviſions for Benefices. By this Poſt the Datary is impower'd to grant, without acquainting his Holineſs therewith, all Benefices that don't produce upwards of twenty four Ducats annually; but for ſuch as amount to more, he is obliged to cauſe the Proviſions thereof to be ſign'd by the Pope, who admits him to Audience every Day. In caſe there be ſeveral Candidates for the ſame Benefice, he is at Liberty to beſtow it on whomſoever of them he thinks proper, provided he has the Qualifications requiſite. The Datary has a yearly Salary of two thouſand Crowns, excluſive of the Perquiſites which he receives from thoſe who addreſs him for any Benefice. The Reader, in order to have a perfect Idea of this Office, muſt have Recourſe to the Sequel.

THE Pope's Sub-Datary is a Prelate whoſe Employment is given him in the ſame Manner as the Datary, and has almoſt as much Credit with the Sovereign Pontiff, who allows him a yearly Penſion of a thouſand Crowns, but he is not allow'd to confer any Benefice, without firſt acquainting him or the Cardinal-Datary of it. In order to give a better Idea of theſe two Employments, we ſhall deſcribe regularly the Formalities which are obſerv'd in iſſuing out a Bull, or Diſpenſation.

WHEN any Benefice is vacant by the Death of the Incumbent, the Candidate muſt addreſs himſelf to the per obitum, who is as it were the Datary's Subſtitute by Commiſſion, whoſe Poſt alſo produces a thouſand Crowns per Annum. In all other Caſes, and for all other Grants of that Nature, ſuch as Reſignations, Permutations, acquiring of Benefices, and ſuch like, the Datary and Sub-Datary muſt be addreſs'd; but the beſt Way to ſucceed in any Affair of this Nature, is to preſent the Petition to the Pope himſelf, by the Mediation of ſome Cardinal or Ambaſſador, a Relation or Friend of the reigning Pontiff, who afterwards ſends it to the Datary, and orders him to diſpatch the Petitioner.

AFTER he has got the Pope's Conſent, and that the Datary has ſubſcribed the Petition in the following Manner; Annuit ſanctiſſimus, i. e. the moſt holy Father conſents to it, a ſecond Petition muſt be drawn up in due Form, with the Cauſes and Reſtrictions which any Perſon may deſire to be inſerted and expreſſed at Length in the Bull. After this has been duly performed, 'tis carried to the Sub-Datary, who writes at the Bottom in few Words, the Summary of the whole, and gives it to the Datary, to whom he gives a freſh and perfect Account of the State of the whole Affair.

THIS being done, the Datary carries the Petition to the Pope, who ſigns it, and gives his Conſent by the following Words, Fiat ut petitur, i. e. Let the Terms of the Petition be granted. Then the ſaid Datary, or his Deputy, conſigns the ſame Petition to the Prefect of the Compoſitions.

THE Prefect of the Compoſitions is an Officer whoſe Buſineſs it is to aſſeſs the Petitions, which pay more or leſs, according to the Nature of the Buſineſs, and Importance of the Caſe. When the Sum agreed upon, or the Aſſeſſment which has been made on the Petition, is paid, at the Bottom of which the Prefect of the Compoſitions muſt write a Diſcharge, 'tis given to an Officer of the petty Dates, whoſe Buſineſs is to take notice of the Day it was ſign'd, and to ſet it down underneath. This Officer muſt likewiſe be paid ſo much per Cent. according to the Value of the Benefice. He who ſigns it does not put any Date, in order to give another Perſon an Opportunity of gaining Something alſo, by going to enquire of him, who thus omitted it; and by this Means they get Cuſtom to the Officers of the petty Date. This Petition being ſign'd and dated in the Manner above-mention'd, goes afterwards through the Hands of the Reviſors and other Perſons.

THERE are four Reviſors belonging to the Datary, nominated by the Pope, who are diſmiſs'd at Pleaſure, they exerciſing their Employments only by Commiſſion. The chief of the Reviſors eraſes and corrects whatever he thinks proper in ſuch Petitions as are tranſmitted to him by the Maſter of the petty Dates. From the chief Reviſor they paſs to the ſecond, who altars, corrects, and ſometimes retrenches, what the chief Reviſor had writ, in caſe it be not in due Form.

THE Buſineſs of the third Reviſor is to get all Petitions ſigned for Diſpenſations within the Degrees of Conſanguinity and Affinity, and to correct matrimonial Diſpenſations. The fourth reviſes all Petitions by which Monitories are deſired, and Excommunications for getting any Thing reveal'd.

AFTER their Petitions have been corrected and reviſed, they are carried to the Regiſters, who inſert them in the Regiſter, and afterwards conſign them to the chief Regiſter, who collates them Word by Word, and afterwards puts his Name on the Back of each, in the Center of a large R, to ſhew they have been regiſter'd.

THERE are twenty Regiſters, who each purchaſe their Employments for four thouſand Crowns, and they produce about three thouſand five hundred Crowns annually, excluſive of the extraordinary Profits.

AFTER the Petitions have been regiſter'd, they are again carried to the Datary, who dates them in theſe Words; Datum Romæ apud S, &c. Given at Rome in the pontifical Palace, &c. expreſſing at the Vatican, or Monte Cavallo, or wherever the Pope reſides, with the Day and Date of the Year, which is ſet down on each Petition; and thence comes the Name of Datary.

THESE Petitions are afterwards put into the Hands of an Officer call'd De Miſſis, or of Diſpatches, who carries them up to the Chancery, whence they cannot return, unleſs by Favour, into the Hands of the Officers of the Diſpatches.

ALL Diſpatches of the Datary are put into the Hands of the Regent of the Chancery, who is impower'd to diſtribute the Petitions to one of the Prelates call'd Regiſters of the high Court, in order to have the Minutes of the Bull drawn up; and he alſo gives leave to correct them if erroneous, and to direct the Execution thereof whereſoever he thinks proper.

THIS Prelate draws up, or cauſes to be drawn up by his Deputy, the Minutes of the Bull, which is ſent to one of the hundred apoſtolical Writers, who writes it at Length on a Skin of Parchment with his own Hand; and the whole Body of Writers aſſeſs the Sum that is to be paid to them, according to the Value of the Benefice, or the Importance of the Affair. Their Aſſeſſment ſerves as a Standard to the reſt that follow them. Then the Bull is carried to other Officers, who have no other Power, and make no farther Uſe of this Bull than to band it about to one another, in order to ſqueeze the Petitioners. The Number of theſe Extortioners is ſo great, that it would require a Volume to mention the Particulars relating to them, and the Affairs they are employ'd about; for which Reaſon we ſhall content ourſelves with giving a Liſt in this Place of the ſeveral Employments that are purchaſed by a hundred Candidates each.

THE Bulls which are iſſued out of the Datary go thro' the Hands of upwards of a thouſand Perſons, who have fifteen different Offices, where Money muſt be carried them in proportion to the Sum given the hundred apoſtolical Writers. Theſe Officers are eſtabliſhed under the Names following.

AN hundred apoſtolical Grooms, or Gentlemen of the Bed-Chamber, which Poſt is purchaſed for 1700 Crowns, and produces annually to each 170 Crowns.

AN hundred apoſtolical Eſquires; the Employment purchaſed for 1300 Crowns, and yields annually to each 130 Crowns.

AN hundred Knights of St. Peter; each Poſt valued at 1500 Crowns; yearly Produce to each 150 Crowns.

AN hundred Knights of St. Paul; each Employment purchaſed for 1600 Crowns; yields the annual Sum of 160 Crowns.

AN hundred Knights of the Lilly; each Poſt purchaſed for 1500 Crowns; the annual Produce 150 Crowns.

AN hundred Knights Laurerani; each Employment ſells for 1400 Crowns; produces annually 140 Crowns,

AN hundred Janizaries; each Poſt purchaſed for 1700 Crowns, and produces yearly 170 Crowns.

AN hundred Writers of Briefs; each Employment valued at 1200 Crowns, and yields every Year 120 Crowns.

FOURSCORE Regiſters of the High Court; each Office valued at 2000 Crowns, produces annually 200 Crowns.

EIGHTY Regiſters of Bulls; each Employment worth 3400 Crowns; produces 340 Crowns annually to twelve of them, who have no other Salary; but the twelve ſenior Regiſters have almoſt half as much more Salary. And theſe Officers regiſter all Bulls after they have gone thro' the ſeveral Offices above-mention'd.

AFTER theſe there are ſix Maſters in Chancery, whoſe Buſineſs is to collate the Bulls, and each Employment is purchaſed for 6000 Crowns, and produces annually 600.

THESE

THESE ſix Maſters are ſubordinate to the Maſter of the Rolls, who keeps the Regiſters of all Bulls. This Place is purchaſed for 2000 Crowns, and produces yearly 300.

FINALLY, there is an Accomptant and a Receiver, whoſe Buſineſs is to draw up the Extracts of all Bulls, to which he puts the leaden Seal. This Place is purchaſed for 3000 Crowns, and produces yearly 600, excluſive of the extraordinary Profits, which amount to double that Sum.

EVERY one of the Officers above-mentioned, gains twice his Salary by the By-Profits: Now theſe Poſts are always bought for ten Years Purchaſe; whence the Reader may judge how much every Bull coſts before it has gone through ſo many Hands, and the great Sums that go into the Office of the Datary, particularly when the Proviſions are iſſued from thence for Biſhoprics, and other rich Benefices.

The Maſter of the POPE'S Palace, and other chief Officers of his HOUSHOLD.

A DOMINICAN Friar, of the Order commonly call'd the Preaching Brothers, is always Maſter of the Pope's Palace, ever ſince the Founder, who was canoniz'd by the Name of St. Dominic, was raiſed to that Dignity by Honorius III. in 1216. He preaches once a Month in the public Chapel of the Palace, or appoints one of his Brethren to do it for him. He has a Seat in the Pope's Chapel next to the Deacon, or moſt antient Auditor of the Rota. He has no fix'd Salary, becauſe, by the Statutes of his Order, he is not allowed to have any Mony he can call his own; but he is allow'd a Table at Court with his Companions and Servants, and a Coach is kept for him.

HE is the Judge in ordinary of all Printers, Engravers, and Bookſellers, who are not permitted to publiſh or ſell any Work without his Permiſſion firſt obtain'd. All Books that come to Rome are examined by him, or his Officers, who confiſcate all that are prohibited by the Index of the Council of Trent; however, Ways are found out to import great Numbers without their Knowledge.

THE other chief Officers that reſide in the pontifical Palace, and near his Holineſs's Perſon, are the Major-Domo, or Maſter of the Houſhold; which Officers, in the Courts of other Princes, are call'd High Stewards. The Pope's Maſter of the Houſhold ſuperintends all the Domeſtics of the apoſtolical Palace; but the Pope won't allow the Perſon who exercoiſes that Function in his Palace to bear the Title of High Steward. Beſides, the Major-Domo and Grand Maſter above-mentioned, he employs the chief Steward of the Hoſpital of the Literate Orphans, to furniſh him with Proviſions, and the Hoſpital has proper Fees allow'd to it.

THERE are always two Gentlemen near the Pope's Perſon, who have the Title of Maſter of the Chamber. The chief Cup-Bearer, who is call'd Coppiero, becauſe he preſents the Glaſs to his Holineſs, with a Salver which he holds before him, kneels on both Knees when the Pope drinks. The Officer whoſe Buſineſs it is to ſee the Diſhes brought in Order to the Pope's Table, is call'd in Italian Scalco. The Carver who cuts up the Victuals before the ſovereign Pontiff, the chief Harbinger who regulates the Apartments of the Pope's Houſhold, and all the other Officers above-mentioned, are Prelates, who wear purple Veſtments, and have each two Deputies to officiate in their Abſence.

THERE

THERE are likewiſe ſeveral Privy-Chamberlains, all Prelates, who are clothed in long purple Caſſocs with Sleeves trailing to the Ground, but have no Cloke. Among theſe, eight are declared Partakers, and divide among themſelves whatever Preſents are made them; and of theſe the Pope chuſes one to be his Privy-Treaſurer, whoſe Buſineſs it is to diſtribute ſuch Alms as his Holineſs beſtows privately.

ANOTHER of theſe Privy-Chamberlains is appointed Maſter of the Wardrobe. He is entruſted with all the Plate, whether of Gold or Silver; all the Jewels and Shrines for Relics, as alſo the Agnus Dei's, which he diſtributes daily to Pilgrims and Strangers at a certain Hour. The Popes's Phyſician in ordinary is alſo a Privy-Chamberlain, but not the other two, who are Phyſicians of his Houſhold.

The fix'd Penſion of each Privy-Chamberlain amounts to a thouſand Crowns annually; and the Partakers have at leaſt double that Sum, ariſing from the Preſents made at the Creation and Death of every Cardinal. The Chamberlain who diſtributes the Agnus Dei's receives more than all the reſt, particularly when any extraordinary Solemnity draws Foreigners to Rome, ſuch as the Years of the Jubilee, an Embaſſy, a holy Canonization that makes a great Noiſe in the World; any famous Miracle, and ſuch like; for in that Caſe he has ſeveral thouſand Crowns given him, for thoſe little conſecrated Images of Wax.

THE Pope's Privy-Chaplains have the ſame Salary as the Chamberlains. 'Tis they who aſſiſt in ſaying the Office of the Breviary, and wait upon him at Maſs, when he celebrates it in private. One of theſe carries the Croſs before his Holineſs when he goes abroad, and in caſe he goes on Foot another of them ſupports his Train.

WHEN the Pope aſſiſts at ſolemn Maſs, and in Proceſſions, his Chaplains carry the Mitres and Triple Crowns enrich'd with precious Stones, which they diſplay in a very pompous Manner, holding them aloft with both their Hands, to ſhew them to the People as his Holineſs walks along. There are alſo Chaplains belonging to the Guards and Grooms, who ſay Maſs every Morning in the Guard-Room, &c. theſe are call'd common Chaplains; their yearly Salary amounts to no more than fifty Crowns, but then they are paid (over and above that Sum) for whatever Maſſes they celebrate.

THE Pope's Aſſiſtants and Valet de Chambres have five hundred Crowns a Year, and ſeveral other very conſiderable Profits; not to mention that as they have a freer Acceſs to his Holineſs than the reſt of his Domeſtics, they never fail of Benefices.

THERE are likewiſe honorary Chamberlains, who are Prelates of the firſt Quality, among whom the Pope generally makes choice of a Frenchman, a German, and a Spaniard. The Chamberlains of the Bouſſole, who are as ſo many Uſhers, becauſe they always keep a Guard at his Holineſs's Chamber-Door. The Chamberlains without the Walls are ſo call'd becauſe they follow the Pope without the Vatican, and attend upon him in all his public Cavalcades, with the Chamberlains Eſquires, clothed in red Cloth, and cover'd with a large Cope of the ſame Colour, furr'd with Ermin. Each of theſe do Duty in the apoſtolical Palace, and have their diſtinct Office; but the honorary Chamberlains never mount the Guard, nor appear in the Pope's Anti-Chamber but when they pleaſe; and theſe generally are employ'd by the Pope to carry the red Cap to any newly elected Cardinals, who are not in Rome at the Time of their being raiſed to that Dignity; and upon theſe Occaſions they have always a conſiderable Preſent made them.

THE Pope has alſo another Maſter of the Houſhold, or Scalco, in the Vatican, and on Mount Cavallo, and another Carver different from the above-mention'd, whoſe Office it is to prepare the Banquet he ſometimes makes for Cardinals, on certain extraordinary Occaſions, and on ſolemn Feſtivals; another Scalco, and Carver, for the Ambaſſadors, and other diſtinguiſhed Foreigners, whom the Pope entertains in a ſplendid manner; laſtly a fourth Scalo, whoſe Office is to prepare the Dinner given to the thirteen poor Pilgrims, to ſerve up the firſt Diſh at their Table, and to treat them in a magnificent manner every Day, in imitation of Pope Clement VIII. who reſtored this Cuſtom, firſt introduced by Gregory the Great, and which has ſince been obſerved by all the Popes. Theſe Officers are clothed in Purple.

THE Pope always makes choice of a Native of Rome for the Maſter of his Stables; he not allowing any Perſon to bear the Title of Maſter of the Horſe, as other Princes do; for which Reaſon this Officer bears the Name of Cavilarizzo, to denote that he ſuper-intends all the Horſes in the Pope's Stables.

THE Harbingers above-mentioned, who aſſign the Apartments to the Pope's Houſhold, have Deputy-Harbingers and their Aſſiſtants, who are entruſted with the Hangings, Ornaments, and other Furniture of the pontifical Palace. They are likewiſe employ'd to adorn the Apartments when either a Conſiſtory, Signature of Favour, or Congregation is held.

THERE are likewiſe Footmen called Grooms, who keep Guard in the Halls of the Pope's Palace, and are very numerous, becauſe the Pope beſtows this Place on all thoſe who were his Grooms when he was Cardinal; and moreover, he likewiſe gives thoſe Places to all the Chiefs of the Grooms that are in the Service of the Cardinals and Embaſſadors who are preſent at Rome at the Time of his Creation. Their Clothing is a red flowered Sattin; and whenever they go out, they have a blue Cloth Cloke and a Sword, the Hilt whereof is of Silver gilt.

THE Pope has twelve Officers, who have each a red Wand, and twelve others, who carry Silver Maces, and walk before him in a ceremonial Habit, every Time he appears in Public, with his Mitre and Cope on. When the Conſiſtory is held, they guard the Door, wait upon his Holineſs when he is going in or coming out from thence. Theſe twenty four Poſts are all purchaſed, for 600 Crowns each, and produce about fifty annually.

The Prefect of the POPE'S Sacriſty.

THE Pope's Sacriſtan, who takes the Title of Prefect, is always a Friar of the Order of the Hermits of St. Auſtin: He is made a Biſhop in partibus infidelium, as he is ſtyl'd in Italy, i. e. He has an honorary Title of one of thoſe antient Biſhoprics in Aſia which are now poſſeſſed by the Infidels. This Prefect is entruſted with all the Ornaments, Gold and Silver Veſſels, Croſſes, Cups, Thuribles, Shrines for incloſing Relics, and other valuable Things belonging to his Holineſs's Sacriſty.

IT is he prepares the Hoſt, and inſpects the Bread and Wine, when the Pope celebrates Maſs pontifically, or in private. Whenever his Holineſs aſſiſts ſolemly at Maſs, his Sacriſtan places himſelf among the aſſiſting Biſhops, above the Dean, or the ſenior Auditors of the Rota; and obſerves to take off, or put on the Pope's Mitre, as often as is required by the Rubric of the Roman Pontifical.

HE diſtributes the Relics, and ſigns the Memorials of thoſe Indulgences which Pilgrims deſire for themſelves and Relations. We ſhall make two Remarks on this Head: The firſt, that Indulgences are never granted to any Pilgrims but ſuch as are actually upon a Journey, and appear perſonally before the Pope's Sacriſtan.

THE ſecond Particular obſerv'd with regard to thoſe Indulgences which Perſons who go to Rome deſire for their Relations, is not to grant them to them but when they are in their expiring Moments, i. e. that the Pope grants by Briefs, addreſſed to certain Perſons, for whoſe Names Blanks are left, a Power of making choice of what Confeſſor ſoever they ſhall think proper, when at the Point of Death, to be abſolved by him from all their Sins in general, and particularly all reſerv'd Caſes, of what Nature ſoever; with a full Power to this Confeſſor, of remitting to the Perſon to whom this Brief is given, all the Puniſhments which God might otherwiſe have inflicted on him for his Sins, whether in this Life or after his Death, in Hell or in Purgatory.

THERE are other Briefs importing, that whoſoever ſhall, in his expiring Moments, have this Patent ſign'd by the Pope in his Hands, and ſhall not have Time or Opportunity to confeſs himſelf, in caſe he pronounces thrice the Name of JESUS and MARY, all his Sins ſhall be remitted to him, with the Puniſhment due to them; ſo that his Soul ſhall, without going a round-about-way, be immediately wafted into Paradiſe. The two particular Clauſes following are inſerted in theſe Briefs in order that the Prefect of the Sacriſty may ſell a greater Number of them; viz. The Pope declares expreſly, that whoever has obtained this Privilege, may either keep it for himſelf, in caſe of an urgent Neceſſity, or give it to any other Perſon; but in caſe a third touches it, or that it is put into ſuch Perſon's Hand, or given to him, it can be of Service to that Perſon only; and in caſe it is given to another Perſon afterwards, it will be of no farther Service to any Body. The ſecond Clauſe imports, that whoever has once made uſe of one in any Fit of Sickneſs, or when he was in Danger of dying, and has procur'd his Abſolution by Virtue thereof, or by pronouncing the Name of Jeſus and Maria, with an Intention to apply this plenary Indulgence of the ſovereign Pontiff to himſelf, cannot make uſe of it any more when dying, in caſe he ſhould happen to recover from that Fit of Sickneſs in which he had employ'd it.

FORMERLY the Chancellor ſuperintended the Pope's Library; but in latter Ages 'tis an Office a-part, which yields twelve hundred Crowns in Gold a Year to the Poſſeſſor. The Pope never beſtows it on any Perſon under the Dignity of a Cardinal, who aſſumes the Title of Librarian of the Vatican. He has two Sub-Librarians, whereof the firſt is generally one of the Pope's Domeſtic Prelates, and has ſix hundred Crowns a Year, with an Allowance of Bread and Wine for the whole Year. The ſecond has four hundred Crowns, and the ſame Proviſion as the former.

WE may with Truth affirm, that theſe three Places are always fill'd with Perſons of very great Learning, and who to the Knowledge of other Tongues, add the Oriental Language in particular. The Librarian has the Direction of a noble Printing-Houſe, where nothing is printed without his Permiſſion firſt obtain'd: It abounds with Types of all the known Tongues in which the learned are converſant.

The

The POPE's Maſters of the Ceremonies.

HIS Holineſs has ſix Maſters of the Ceremonies, whereof two are called Aſſiſtants, and the other four Supernumeraries. The two Aſſiſtants receive of every newly created Cardinal two hundred and twenty four Crowns of Gold, which they divide equally among themſelves; and of the Heirs of thoſe who die, an hundred Crowns, which Sum they likewiſe equally ſhare. Their Employments bring them in, beſides the Sum mentioned, ſeven hundred Crowns yearly. The other four Supernumeraries receive forty-eight Crowns of Gold a-piece, to be equally divided among themſelves, from each newly created Cardinal, and four hundred Crowns from the apoſtolic College, where they are employ'd on certain Days of the Year. The Senior of theſe four laſt mention'd, and the two Aſſiſtants, have alſo over and above what we before-mention'd, a Table allow'd them in the Vatican, whereof they are reputed Domeſtics; however, they are all ſix conſidered as Maſters of the Pope's Ceremonies. They have an equal Authority to regulate all pontifical Functions, acquaint the Cardinals with their Duty, and iſſue Orders to all Perſons belonging to the Court.

THEY all have Admiſſion into the Conclave, and likewiſe in the Congregation of Rites, but one only goes to the ceremonial Congregation. Whenever the Pope ſends any Cardinal à Latere out of Rome, he deputes one of theſe ſupernumerary Maſters of the Ceremonies to attend upon him. They are generally clothed in purple Caſſocs, with black Buttons and Facings, and Sleeves trailing on the Ground; in the Papal Chapel they wear a red Caſſoc as the reſt of the Cardinals, and Rochets like the Prelates. When they appear in this ceremonial Habit, they do not give Precedency to any of the Pope's Officers or Domeſtics, the Major-Domo, the Maſter, or firſt Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber, and the chief Cup-Bearer excepted.

The CAMERLINGO, or TREASURER of the College of Cardinals, the national Secretary and Clerk, and the Accountant of the ſaid College.

THE Cardinals elect annually one out of their Body, who reſides at Rome, for the Camerlingo or Treaſurer of their Body, which differs from the Pope's Camerlingo, the latter being for Life, and the former for a Year only, at the End of which he is ſucceeded by another, who enjoys it for the ſame Term; the Election is made according to Seniority, and none but thoſe who actually reſide in the Pope's Court, are allowed to be Candidates for it. The Perſon who enjoys this Poſt of Camerlingo, has a Right of receiving all the Revenues which belong in common to the College of Cardinals, and to diſtribute them at the End of the Year, by equal Portions to the Cardinals who are then in Rome; for all thoſe who are abſent have no Share therein, after they have been ſix Months from Court.

THERE is an Accountant who alſo keeps an exact Account, and a Counter-Account or Check of all the Camerlingo receives for the Cardinals, eſpecially of Annates, Biſhoprics, and other Benefices, whereof the greateſt Part of the Revenues of the College conſiſt; and in caſe this Accountant receive any Money in the Abſence of the Camerlingo, as he is empower'd to do, he gives him an Account thereof at reſigning his Poſt, which he enjoys a Year in the ſame manner as the Treaſurer.

THE Cardinals have a Secretary whoſe Office is for Life, and he is always an Italian; and an annual Under-Secretary, call'd the National Clerk, becauſe he is alternately a Frenchman, a German, and a Spaniard. By his Poſt this laſt is oblig'd to ſupply the Place of the Secretary in his Abſence, and to be in the Conſiſtory, and in the Congregations of the Cardinals, in red Veſtments like thoſe of the Secretary, who will be mentioned hereafter. The National Clerk receives from each Cardinal, upon his Creation, fifty Crowns of Gold, and the like Sum from the Heirs of a Cardinal deceaſed.

THE Secretary of the College of Cardinals, is, by his Employment, obliged to enter into the Conclave whenever the See is vacant, and to write the ſeveral Letters diſpatch'd in the Name of the ſaid College, and ſigned by three Cardinals, Heads of Orders, who each give him a Seal with which he forms them. He aſſiſts likewiſe at the general Congregations of the Cardinals, and at thoſe which are made at the three Seniors of each Order, i. e. Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, where he ſets down all the Reſolutions in Writing, all the Decrees of their Eminencies, as likewiſe all the Propoſals and Debates which are made in the Conſiſtories both private and public, whereof the Cardinal Camerlingo furniſhes him with all the Minutes, becauſe he is oblig'd to leave the Conſiſtory at the extra omnes, i. e. when all, who are not Cardinals, are commanded to leave it. When he enters into the Conſiſtory, he is clothed in a red Robe that trails upon the Ground, made of a woollen Stuff, either heavier or lighter according to the Seaſon.

The TRIBUNAL of the ROTA of Rome, and its particular Magiſtrates, compoſing together a kind of Papal Parliament.

THE Rota is one of the moſt auguſt Tribunals of Rome, and is compoſed of twelve Prelates, whereof one muſt be a German, another a Frenchman, and two Spaniards. The Sovereigns of theſe three different Nations name each Prelate, who bears the Name of his Crown. The other eight are Italians, three whereof muſt be Romans, one Boloneze, a Ferraran, a Milaneze, a Venetian, and a Tuſcan. Each Auditor has four Notaries or Regiſters, and the ſenior Auditor performs the Function of Preſident.

THEY meet in the apoſtolical Palace every Monday and Friday, except during Vacations; but when the Pope reſides in the Palace of Mount Quirinal, the Aſſemblies are held in the Chancery.

THEY take Cognizance of all ſuch Suits in the Territory of the Church as are brought in by way of Appeal, as alſo of Matters Beneficiary and Patrimonial: This Tribunal does not judge a Cauſe at once; but pronounces as many Sentences, call'd Deciſions, as there are Points conteſted in a Suit. And after theſe Sentences are given, the Party may get his Cauſe reviſed again by the Pope himſelf, at the Signature of Favour above-mentioned, which is a kind of Civil Petition. The Place of theſe Auditors produces but a thouſand Crowns yearly to each, and they receive no Fees; but then they are generally created Cardinals by way of Reward for the Pains they have been at.

THE Vacation of this Tribunal begins the firſt Week in July, and when they aſſemble for the laſt Rota, the Pope gives them a magnificent Dinner in the apoſtolical Palace, and preſents to each of them an hundred Crowns of Gold, and two hundred to the Dean. The Vacation continues till the firſt of October, when the Rota opens with great Magnificence, the two laſt Auditors of this Tribunal going thro' the City mounted ponpontifically on Mules, and followed by a very numerous Cavalcade; all Cardinals Embaſſadors, and Princes, ſending to each of them two Gentlemen mounted on the fineſt Horſes in their Stables, to do them honour; and theſe are join'd by all the Counſellors, Notaries, Regiſters, Attornies, and other Practitioners.

THE Name of Ruota comes from the Latin Rota, which ſignifies a Wheel. This Tribunal has been eſtabliſh'd by the Popes, in imitation of that which the antient Romans had in an open Place, on a round Terras ſurrounded with a Rail, and ſupported by two great Circles of Metal, which form'd a Gallery, whence the Orators uſed to ſpeak, and the Magiſtrates publiſh Laws.

THE ſeveral Auditors of the Rota have a Right of conferring Doctors Degrees in both the Canon and Civil Law, to all thoſe whom they judge qualified for it.

THE Poſt of Judge, call'd Confidencia of the Rota, is purchaſed, and coſts four thouſand Crowns, which produce ſeven or eight per Cent. yearly. This Officer is impower'd to take Cognizance, whether in any Reſignations or Permutations of Benefices, there be any Confidence, i. e. any ſimoniacal Covenant or Agreement, and condemns or obſolves the Incumbents, according as they may have acted. He ſometimes ratifies Permutations, and frequently annuls Reſignations; but whenever he finds that the Parties have entred into ſimoniacal Contracts, he confiſcates their Benefices, in caſe the Charge be lawfully and clearly prov'd againſt them; and whenever there are not Proofs ſufficient according to Law, as when there is but one Evidence, he condemns the Perſon who is thus accuſed to pecuniary Fines, which are raiſed on the Revenues of the Benefice in Queſtion.

THIS Judge wears the purple Habit of Prelates, with the Rochet, and has a Seat in the Papal Chapel under the aſſiſting Prothonotaries.

THE Poſt of Auditor of the Objections of the Rota is of conſiderable Antiquity. It is purchaſed for four thouſand Crowns, though it produces nothing; but then it has ſeveral very conſiderable Privileges and Exemptions annex'd to it, and is always a Step to the moſt exalted Dignities; for this Auditor may hold ſeveral Benefices at the ſame Time, and alſo permute, or reſign them to whomſoever he thinks proper, and have his Option with regard to others, without being liable to be proſecuted by the Judge of the Confidences, or have any Charges or Affidavits made to the ſaid Judge againſt him, in order to convict him of Simony. This Poſt gives him an honourable Rank among the Prelates, when the Popes aſſiſts ſolemnly at Maſs, and in Cavalcades.

THE Corrector of the Objections of the Rota, purchaſes his Place for twelve thouſand Crowns, and it produces him at the Rate of ten per Cent. and ſometimes more; by which Means it yields twelve hundred Crowns at leaſt yearly. He has the ſame Honours paid him as the Auditor whoſe Deputy he his, and places himſelf, in purple Veſtments, among the Prelates, in all public Solemnities. His Buſineſs is to correct ſuch Bulls as have gone thro' the Hands of the Auditor, and to reviſe exactly all the Proceedings and Pleas of the contending Parties; as likewiſe to take care that all Acts, and other Pieces which are to be permitted as Proofs before the Judge, are authentic; and whether there be not ſome Satisfaction, Gratuity, or ſomething in the Matter or Form, that may make them juſtly ſuſpected. He takes very particular Informations on all thoſe Heads, and annexes them to the reſt of thoſe Pieces that are to be ſubſervient to the definitive Judgment of the principal Fact.

THE Tribunal of the Rota gives four hundred Crowns to a Councellor, and two hundred and fifty to a Lawyer, who for that Penſion, are obliged to write, plead, give Counſel, and do every Thing that may be neceſſary for ſupporting all Cauſes in forma pauperis; and alſo of thoſe Perſons, who, tho' not poor, are nevertheleſs oblig'd to carry on ſuch Suits, as would entirely ruin them, were they oblig'd to pay the Counſellors and Sollicitors according to the Rates fix'd for that Purpoſe.

THIS Councellor and Sollicitor are alſo oblig'd to write gratis, to defend and carry on all Cauſes in forma pauperis, before all the other Tribunals of Rome; but thoſe who are oblig'd to employ theſe People, and have not Money to fee them, find their Affairs move on very heavily, and ſeldom ever ſee an End of their Suits; for as theſe Deputies have a multitude of Affairs upon their Hands, they never fail of one Pretence or other, and indeed often give very good Reaſons, why they cannot anſwer the Expectations of many indigent Perſons who are continually ſolliciting their Aſſiſtance. The greateſt Abuſe that is crept into this charitable Inſtitution, is, that oftentimes poor and miſerable Wretches, who are naturally of a wrangling Temper, are made Plaintiffs in an Action by ill-deſigning Knaves, who oblige them to take out an Action againſt any Perſon whoſe Ruin they are meditating, by the great Charges ſuch Perſons muſt be oblig'd to be at to carry on their Suits, while they themſelves are but at a trifling Expence, acting by Proxies, who take Advantage of the Service which the Councellor and Sollicitor above-mentioned are oblig'd to do gratis for thoſe who plead in forma pauperis.

The Apoſtolical Chamber, and its Officers.

THIS Council has the Direction of all the Pope's Demeſnes, the Finances whereof conſiſt in what is call'd the Revenues of the apoſtolic Chamber. It conſiſts of the Cardinal Great Chamberlain, who is at the Head of it, of the Governor of the Rota, who is the Vice-Chamberlain, of a Treaſurer-General, an Auditor, a Preſident, an Advocate-General, a Sollicitor-General, a Commiſſary, and twelve Clerks of the Chamber; whereof four are, firſt the Prefect of the Plenty of Grain; a ſecond the Prefect of Proviſions, and ſuch like Commodities; the third the Prefect of the Priſons; and the fourth the Prefect of the Streets: The remaining eight are deputed to take Cognizance of various Cauſes, each privately in his Chamber.

FORMERLY the Pope uſed to depute ſix Clerks of his Houſhold for the Direction of his Revenues, whence thoſe who have the Management of them receive their Names. Sixtus V. ordered that their Employments ſhould be purchaſed, and encreaſed their Number to twelve. They meet every Monday and Friday in the Pope's Palace, and their Juriſdiction extends to all Things relating to the Pope's Demeſnes.

EACH Clerk of the Chamber takes immediate Cognizance of all Cauſes that are ſent up from the apoſtolical Chamber by Appeal. None of the Places of Clerk of the Chamber are purchaſed for leſs than fourſcore thouſand Crowns, nor yield leſs than eight or ten per Cent. and conſequently ſeven or eight thouſand Crowns annually.

THE Vacation of the apoſtolical Chamber is at the ſame Time with that of the Rota, i. e. from the Beginning of July to the firſt of October. The laſt Friday in June, which is the laſt Day that the Magiſtrates of this Chamber meet, the Pope entertains them very ſplendidly at Dinner. The Cardinal Great Chamberlain entertains them alſo the firſt of Auguſt. They aſſemble in the apoſtolical Palace the Eve of of St. Peter, to receive the Tribute of the ſeveral Feudatories of the Church, and they apply to the Profits of the Chamber all Duties paid in ready Money; but thoſe Duties that are paid in Plate, in what Manner ſoever wrought, belong to the Treaſurer-General, and the Clerks of the Chamber divide among them thoſe which are paid in Wax. Upwards of twenty Millions comes that Day into his Holineſs's Coffers.

THE Arch-Deacon, or Chief of the Deacons, had antiently the Direction of the Temporalities of the Church, and this continued till Anno 1100; when the Popes thought themſelves obliged to take that Employment from them, becauſe it inveſted them with too great a Power, and even made them formidable to his Holineſs himſelf. Inſtead of theſe, a Cardinal was ſubſtituted, call'd the Great Chamberlain, and Coadjutors were appointed him, call'd Clerks of the Chamber; and ſome Differrence happening afterwards to ariſe, they added to them a Treaſurer, an Auditor, and a Preſident.

THE Treaſurer-General takes Cognizance of all Cauſes relating to the Aſſeſſment of Prieſts, and of Revenues unjuſtly received; as alſo of all unlawful Traffic. He has the immediate Direction of all Exactions of the Rent and Revenues of the Chamber. He inſpects the Accompts of the Miniſters and Officers; preſides at all the Sums total that are made, both of the Chamber, and of particular Lords; he only being impower'd to make the Extractions when Debtors are for paying their whole Debts, or a Part only, by reimburſing the Annuitants. In a Word, he aſſiſts in all Affairs wherein the Intereſts of the apoſtolic Chamber are concerned.

THE Poſt of Treaſurer is purchaſed at ſeventy thouſand Crowns, and produces annually about ten or twelve thouſand: The Pope beſtows it on whatever Prelate he thinks proper.

THE Power of Auditor of the apoſtolical Chamber is very great, for he is immediate Judge in ordinary of the Court of Rome, viz. of all Curtezans ſubject to the Pope, and of Foreigners, ſuch as Cardinals, Patriarchs, Biſhops, Princes, Embaſſadors, Barons, and other Perſons of Quality. He is alſo Judge of all Merchants, and of all Cauſes belonging to the Territory of the Church, when he is appeal'd to. He has a Right, excluſive of any other, to diſtrain the Goods of thoſe who are indebted by Bond to the apoſtolic Chamber. He has the ſame Power, jointly with the Officers of the Chamber, over every Thing that relates to the apoſtolic Letters, all Inſtruments paſſed authentically, and bare Promiſes made between Man and Man.

THE Auditor has alſo a great Authority, and the Right of Prevention in all criminal Cauſes, and has under him a Provoſt with ſeveral Sergeants. Subordinate to him are two Lieutenants Civil, who are always Prelates, and a Lieutenant Criminal, with two Judges or Aſſeſſors. He employs ten Secretaries or Regiſters, and they purchaſe their Places at fifteen or twenty thouſand Crowns. Theſe have their ſeveral Offices apart, and have each twenty young Clerks under them at leaſt.

THE Poſt of Auditor of the Chamber is purchaſed at fourſcore thouſand Crowns, and yields a fix'd annual Penſion of thirteen thouſand, beſides three or four thouſand from extraordinary Profits.

THE Poſt of Preſident of the apoſtolical Chamber, is the ſame with that call'd in moſt other States of Europe, the Comptroller-General.

THIS

THIS Officer audits all the Accompts relating to the Pope's Revenues, and is impower'd to ſettle them; this Place is purchaſed for thirty thouſand Crowns, and yields annually two thouſand five hundred. 'Tis never ſold to any but a Prelate, who wears purple Veſtments, and enjoys a honourable Rank in the Papal Chapel, and in the public Solemnities, in which he precedes the Commiſſioner we are now going to mention.

SUCH as are acquainted with the Nature of the Employment of Attorney-General in the Parliaments of France, may frame to themſelves an exact Idea of that of the Commiſſioner of the apoſtolical Chamber, becauſe thoſe two Poſts are almoſt the ſame; for the above-mention'd Commiſſioner gives his Concluſions in all Things relating to the apoſtolical Chamber, and defends all Matters which concern the Pope's Intereſt, before all the Tribunals of the Eccleſiaſtical State, in all civil Affairs relating to the Revenues: Moreover, he aſſiſts jointly with the Treaſurer-General at the Reviſal of all Accompts, whereof he is a kind of Comptroller, notwithſtanding that there is an Accomptant for the ſame Purpoſe; but both of them are no more than the Pope's Deputies, and their Places are not purchaſed. That of Accomptant yields about a thouſand Crowns annually, and that of the Commiſſioner twelve hundred, excluſive of what he gains by proving the Accompts of Gabels and Impoſts, thoſe of the Granaries of Annona or Abundance; and by keeping a Regiſter of whatever comes in or iſſues out of the Chamber where Money is coin'd in the Pope's Name. The three laſt-mentioned Employments yield the Commiſſary of the apoſtolic Chamber as much, at leaſt, as all his other Places; ſo that his Salary is generaly worth two thouſand four hundred Crowns annually, excluſive of the extraordinary Profits, which are as great as thoſe of any Employment in the Revenue.

THE Advocate and Fiſcal-Attorner defend, the former according to Law, the latter to Fact, all the Intereſts of the apoſtolic Chamber, in all kind of Matters, and in all Courts, in Conjunction with the Commiſſioner, the Treaſurer, and the Accomptant above-mention'd.

THE Poſts of Advocate and Fiſcal Attorney are purchaſed; the Rate fixed by the Pope is fifteen thouſand Crowns each, and they produce at leaſt eight per Cent. annually. Beſides this fix'd Sum, there is no Place in the Chamber, or apoſtolic Chancery, that yields more extraordinary By-Profits, and that becauſe the chief Diſputes concerning Fiefs, relate to the Emperor of Germany and the Princes of Italy.

WE ſhall refer the Reader to the ſecond Part of this Diſſertation, for thoſe Ceremonies which relate to the manner of appointing and holding Conſiſtories. There are never more than twelve conſiſtoral Advocates in Rome; theſe are nominated by his Holineſs, who either gives away, or ſells theſe Places as he thinks proper. Theſe Advocates plead in Conſiſtories, whether public, private, or half public. The apoſtolical Chamber pays them ten Ducats for every Speech. They ſupplicate the Pall for all newly created Archbiſhops, in the ſecret Conſiſtory, in a kind of Plea, for each of which they are allowed ten Ducats, which are paid them by thoſe who receive the Archepiſcopal Mantle.

THEY have the Privilege of creating Doctors in the Canon as well as Civil Law, when aſſembled in their College Della Sapienza. They were a long Robe of black Wool, the Tail whereof is purple, lined with red Silk, and a Cape falling down between the Shoulders, of the ſame Colour, and lined with Ermin: But their ordinary Habit is a Caſſoc bound with black Serge, and a Cloke of the ſame, trailing on the Ground, with Slits to put the Arms thro'.

ONE

ONE of theſe is Rector of the College Della Sapienza; he is to receive all the Rents which are appropriated to it; and to pay the Penſions of the public Readers, whoſe Chairs are fill'd by a Congregation of Cardinals deputed by the Pope for that Purpoſe.

THE ſeven ſenior conſiſtorial Advocates have each a yearly Penſion of ſeven hundred Crowns, and the five laſt but three hundred; but the Preſents they receive from the Doctors they create, make their Poſt as profitable as that of the chief Advocates of the College Della Sapienza.

Apoſtolical Prothonotaries, Aſſiſtants to the POPE's Conſiſtory, call'd Participanti.

THE College of apoſtolical Prothonotaries is fixed for twelve; their Place is purchaſed for ſeven thouſand Crowns of Gold, and yields about ten per Cent. per Ann. excluſive of the extraordinary Profits, which are ſometimes very conſiderable; ſo that they have at leaſt twelve hundred Crowns yearly. Theſe pretend to be the Succeſſors of the Notaries, eſtabliſh'd by Pope Clement I. and afterwards by Pope Fabian, who appointed them to record the Acts of the Martyrs.

THEY are Prelates, and very often Referendaries of the Signature of Favour, and of Juſtice, whereof mention has been already made. They are clothed in Purple, with the Camail, the Rochet, and a Doctor of Law's Sleeves. They have a Seat in the Pope's Chapel, a Place in Cavalcades, and other public Ceremonies, immediately before all Abbots, and Eccleſiaſtics both Secular and Regular under the Dignity of Biſhops. Theſe Prothonotaries have the Name of Participanti, to diſtinguiſh them from the apoſtolical Prothonotaries ad Honores, who are created by the Favour of Cardinal Legates, and who are not allowed to perform the Office of Participanti, nor wear a purple Veſtment, or the Camail, but in thoſe Places only where they uſually reſide, and in the Territory of the Church, where they are eſpecially deputed for ſome extraordinary Affair, whereof his Holineſs is deſirous of keeping an authentic Inſtrument in his Archives.

ALL the apoſtolical Prothonotaries, as well Participanti as ad Honores, are impower'd to receive the laſt Wills of Cardinals, to make all Informations and Proceedings neceſſary for the Canonization of Saints, and all ſuch Acts as are of great Conſequence to the Papacy, and the Territory of the Church; and for this Purpoſe they have the Right of Entrance into all Conſiſtories, whether public or half-public. They attend on the Pope whenever he performs any extraordinary Ceremony out of Rome; as when Clement VIII. went to Ferrara, to pronounce the Nuptial Bleſſing to Philip III. of Spain, and Margaret Arch-Dutcheſs of Auſtria.

The CONGREGATIONS.

SEVERAL Cardinals are obliged to aſſemble in theſe Congregations, ſome of which conſiſt of twenty four. Each Congregation has its Chief or Preſident, its particular Secretary, who regiſters all the Debates, and writes Letters to all Places where it may be neceſſary, agreeable to the Decrees of the Congregation he ſerves. The Inſtruments which are diſpatch'd, and the Letters that are writ in the Name of any Congregation, are ſign'd only by the Cardinal who is at the Head of it, or who preſides in it; and the Secretary only ſets the Seal of the Perſon who has ſubſcrib'd his Name.

POPE Sixtus V. inſtituted this Congregation; whoſe Province 'tis to prepare the moſt difficult beneficiary Matters, which are afterwards to be debated in the Conſiſtory, in the Pope's Preſence; for which Reaſon it is called the Conſiſtorial Congregation.

THE Cardinal-Deacon, when he reſides at Rome, is chief of this Congregation, and when abſent from it, the Pope chuſes whomſoever he thinks proper out of the apoſtolical College, to preſide therein pro tempore; that is, for a certain determin'd Time; after the Expiration of which, he either makes choice of another, or confirms this anew.

THIS Congregation is compoſed of ſeveral other Cardinals, and of ſome Prelates and Divines elected by the Pope, whoſe Number is not fixed, no more than the Time and Place where they are to meet; though it is uſually held ſome Days before the Conſiſtory, at the Dean's Palace, or that of ſome other of the ſenior Cardinals of this Congregation.

THE Affairs generally treated in it, are the erecting of new Archbiſhoprics and Cathedral Churches, Re-unions, Suppreſſions, and Reſignations of Biſhoprics, Coadjutorſhips, the Alienations of the Church Wealth; and laſtly, the Taxes and Annates of all Benefices to which the Pope collates. The other Matters relating to Religion, or the Affairs of the Territory of the Church, are examined in other Congregations, of which mention will be made in the Sequel.

The Congregation of the Holy Office.

THE Congregation called the Holy Office, was inſtituted by Pope Paul III. at the Deſire of Cardinal Caraffa, who being afterwards raiſed to the Pontificate by the Name of Paul IV. enlarged the Privileges thereof, to which Sixtus V. added ſundry Statutes, which render'd this Tribunal ſo powerful and formidable that the Italians declared openly at that Time in Rome, Il ſummo pontiſice Sexto, non la pardonnareb' a Chriſto, i. e. Pope Sixtus would not pardon Chriſt himſelf,

THIS Congregation conſiſts generally of twelve Cardinals, and ſometimes many more, as alſo of a conſiderable Number of Prelates and Divines of different Orders, both Secular and Regular, who are call'd Conſulters, and Qualificators of the Holy Office; whereof there is always one long-ſleev'd Cordelier, and three Jacobnis, viz. the Maſter of the ſacred Palace, the Commiſſary of the Holy Office, and the General of the Order of the above-ſaid Jacobins, founded by the Name of St. Dominic. There is alſo a Fiſcal of the Holy Office, with his Aſſeſſor, whoſe Buſineſs is to make a Report of Cauſes; he is generally a domeſtic Prelate, or one of the Pope's honorary Chamberlains.

THIS Congregation takes Cognizance of Hereſies, and ſuch new Opinions as claſh with the Doctrine of the Catholic Church; as likewiſe of Apoſtaſy, Magic, Witchcraft, craft, and other kinds of Incantation; the Abuſe of the Sacraments, and the Condemnation of pernicious Books. For this Purpoſe an Aſſembly is held every Wedneſday at the Minerva, at the General of the Jacobins, and every Thurſday before the Pope, who is the Head thereof; the ſenior Cardinal of the holy Office is always Secretary thereof, and its Seal is in his Cuſtody.

NONE but Cardinals have an active Voice in this Congregation; and when they vote in the Minerva, and in the Pope's Palace, they cauſe all ſuch as are not of their College, or come to conſult them upon any Affair, to withdraw. It is proper to obſerve in this Place, that the Judges of theſe Tribunals are not ſo formidable as they are ſuppoſed to be, by thoſe who know them only by Hearſay; and that they are neither ſo rigorous, nor ſo ſevere at Rome as in Spain, Portugal, and all other Countries where the Inquiſition is eſtabliſh'd.

THE Palace of the holy Office is inhabited by the Aſſeſſor, the Commiſſary, the Notary, and other Officers of the ſame Congregation. In it likewiſe are impriſon'd all ſuch as are accuſed or ſuſpected of Crimes whereof this Tribunal takes Cognizance, till the Proſecution is ended; when, if they are declared innocent, they are ſet at Liberty; but in caſe they are found guilty, they are deliver'd over to the ſecular Arm: But this ſeldom happens unleſs they are found obſtinate, or have relapſed; for they ſeldom go farther than the puniſhing them with perpetual Impriſonment, as was obſerv'd at the Cloſe of the laſt Century, in the Sentence pronounced againſt the famous Michael Molinos, who has made ſo much Noiſe in the World by his Hereſy of Quietiſm; for which he receiv'd no other Puniſhment than to be deprived of all civil Commerce with his Diſciples. There is another Maxim obſerved by the Judges of this Tribunal, which is, that they abſolve all thoſe who come and accuſe themſelves of whatever might otherwiſe make them be conſidered as Criminals, and they are clear'd for a ſlight Penance, without being depriv'd in any manner of their Liberty; ſo that from that Time, no Man is allow'd to moleſt them in any manner upon that Account; but if any Perſon defers to do this till he is accuſed and impriſoned, he is treated with the utmoſt Rigour.

ALL Officers and Commenſals of the holy Office, whoſe Number is very great, recognize no other Judge, either natural, civil, or criminal, but their Aſſeſſor in the firſt Place; and afterwards by Appeal, ſuch Cardinals as have Employments in the Inquiſition.

THERE is another Congregation held in the Palace of the holy Office every Monday, to prepare all Matters on which the Cardinals are to pronounce a deciſive Sentence in their Aſſembly of the Inquiſition. None of their Eminencies aſſiſt in this preparatory Congregation, and it is compoſed only of Divines and Conſulters, or Qualificators of different Orders.

The Congregation de propaganda Fide.

THE College of the Congregation of the Propagation of the Faith having been founded by Gregory XV. this Pope inſtituted a Congregation to ſuperintend it. 'Tis compoſed of eighteen Cardinals, one of the Pope's Secretaries of State, an apoſtolical Prothonotary, a Referendary, an Aſſiſtant or Judge lateral, and a Secretary of the holy Office.

ALL

ALL theſe Prelates and Officers meet the firſt Monday of every Month in his Holineſs's Preſence, and ſeveral Times every Week, when the Affairs of the Congregation de propagandâ Fide make it requiſite, in order to examine whatever may be of Advantage to Religion, to ſearch out Expedients for the bringing over thoſe of a different Communion; and to weigh and conſult all ſuch Methods as can be thought of, or are propoſed by the Miſſionaries and others, who labour under the Direction, and at the Expence of this College in all Parts of the World, where it ſends Commiſſioners, whenever any Controverſies, Diſputes, &c. are to be determin'd.

The Congregation for explaining the Council of Trent.

AFTER the ending of the Council of Trent, Pope Pius IV. deputed certain Cardinals who had aſſiſted in it, and conſequently were acquainted with the Spirit with which it was actuated, to put an End to the Doubts which might ariſe touching the Execution of its Decrees; moreover, commanding that they ſhould be obſerv'd in the literal Senſe, and prohibiting all Gloſſes that might be made on the Tenets eſtabliſhed therein; for he reſerv'd to himſelf alone all ſuch Interpretations thereof as might afterwards be neceſſary.

SIXTUS V. fix'd this Congregation, and impower'd it to interpret all Points of Diſcipline, but not thoſe relating to Faith, without firſt acquainting him therewith.

THIS Congregation meets once a Week, on Thurſday or Saturday, at the Palace of the ſenior Cardinal (the whole Aſſembly being compoſed of Perſons of that Dignity) but he is not the Chief or Prefect thereof; for this Poſt is given by his Holineſs to ſome Perſon in their Body, to whom he is willing or deſirous of procuring a large Penſion, without derogating from the Honour he would always have paid to the ſenior Cardinal, in cauſing the Aſſembly to meet at his Houſe.

EVERY Inſtrument is diſpatch'd from this Congregation gratis, and is ſign'd by the Head thereof, who alſo cauſes the Seal, whereof he is the Keeper, to be ſet to it; and this Employment with that of Prefect, is worth to him twelve hundred Crowns of Gold yearly; which are paid him out of the Monies of the apoſtolic Chamber. The other Cardinals have no fix'd Salary for aſſiſting at this Congregation, but 'tis an Honour to them to be made choice of for explaining the moſt important Matters relating to Religion.

THE Fathers of the Council of Trent, conſidering the great Number of pernicious Books publiſh'd ſince the Invention of Printing, and thoſe which claſh with the true Doctrine, whether written in the primitive Ages and the ſucceeding ones, or ſince Calvin's Reformation, deputed certain Cardinals, with ſeveral other Prelates and Divines, to examine ſuch of theſe Books as wanted Correction, or others which ought not to be read indifferently by all Catholics; or laſtly, ſuch as deſerv'd the Flames, and to be entirely ſuppreſſed.

THESE Deputies drew up a Liſt thereof, divided into ſeveral Claſſes; and the Council gave Orders afterwards for the correcting, in a ſecond Impreſſion, whatever had been expung'd by theſe Examiners in the Books of that Claſs, in which ſuch Works happen'd to to be rang'd. 'Tis here to be obſerv'd, that at that Time they only mark'd on the Tables of the Books thoſe Paſſages, which in the Body of the Writings contain'd any Thing contrary to the Tenets and Worſhip of the Catholic Church; all which was done by a Dele.

SEVERAL Books were inſerted in the Claſs of thoſe they were reſolv'd to ſuppreſs entirely. However, great Numbers of theſe continue unalter'd to this Day, as likewiſe ſome Copies which have not been reviſed and corrected, purſuant to the Reſolution of this Council; and that becauſe 'twas impoſſible for the Deputies of this Congregation of the Index to get them all into their Hands, or to perſuade or force ſuch as had them already in their Libraries, to make the ſame Additions or Dele's, whence ſeveral Editions of the ſame Authors differ very much from one another.

SUCH Books as by this Council were forbid to be read, were as numerous as thoſe of all the other Claſſes; and theſe Fathers made a Decree, by which they pronounced Anathema againſt all who ſhould read them, or keep them without their expreſs Leave firſt obtain'd, which is now given in Writing to all whom this Congregation thinks fit to grant it, either with certain Reſtrictions, or without any, either of Time or Place; wherein there is this Difference between the Permiſſion which the Maſter of the ſacred Palace gives alſo to read prohibited Books, viz. that the latter grants it to none but ſuch as live actually in Rome, and can grant it to no other Perſons; but the Deputies of the Congregation of the Index are impower'd to grant it to all Members of the Catholic Church, in any Part of the World.

POPE Pius V. confirm'd the Eſtabliſhment of this Congregation, and impower'd it to examine all ſuch Books as were ſuſpected to contain any pernicious Tenets, written ſince the Council of Trent, and all ſuch as ſhall be publiſh'd hereafter; by which the Power of that Congregation is greater than that of the Inquiſition, which is authoriz'd to condemn ſuch Books only as are written againſt the Faith, but not thoſe which relate to Manners, the Diſcipline of the Church, or civil Society, which the Deputies of the Index have a Privilege to do.

THIS Congregation is compoſed of ſeveral Cardinals, and a Secretary of the Order of St. Dominic. Several Divines are alſo admitted into it, under the Name of Conſulters, who have each of them Books given them in order for Examination, the Reſult of which they afterwards report to the Congregation, but have no active Voice therein. The Congregation is ſometimes held before the Pope, and at other Times before the ſenior Cardinal; but it ſeldom aſſembles, except on Affairs of the higheſt Importance.

The Congregation of Immunities.

THIS Congregation was eſtabliſh'd by Pope Urban VIII. in order to obviate the Difficulties and Diſputes which aroſe in the Judgments of ſuch Suits as were carried on againſt Churchmen for various Matters, whether civil or criminal, the Cognizance whereof might belong equally to the ſecular and eccleſiaſtical Magiſtrate, and conſequently create Diviſions among them, which were frequently of very fatal Conſequence.

THIS Congregation is compoſed of ſeveral Cardinals nominated by his Holineſs, but their Number is not fix'd. They have alſo an Auditor of the Rota, a Clerk of the Chamber, and ſeveral Prelates Referendaries, one whereof is the Secretary of this Aſſembly.

THIS Court takes Cognizance of all eccleſiaſtical Immunities and Exemptions; of all Tranſgreſſions in Prejudice of the Clergy, and the Knights of Malta, whether from ſecular Magiſtrates, or the Biſhops themſelves, which is a kind of Appeal againſt Abuſes. It is held at the Palace of the Cardinal-Dean, on all Tueſdays. The Prefect, who is likewiſe Keeper of the Seals, receives two thouſand Crowns annually for his Table, from the apoſtolic Chamber.

BEFORE Pope Urban VIII. made this Inſtitution, the Cognizance of eccleſiaſtical Immunities belong'd to the Congregation of Regulars, which we ſhall now mention.

The Congregation of the Biſhops and Regulars.

POPE Sixtus V. in the Beginning of his Pontificate, re-united two Congregations under the Name above-mention'd. It is compoſed of a certain Number of Cardinals, fixed according to his Holineſs's Pleaſure, and of a Prelate who is the Secretary thereof, and has ſix Writers under him.

THIS Congregation is impower'd to regulate all ſuch Diſputes as ariſe among Biſhops and their Dioceſans, and the Regulars of all monaſtic Orders. The Cardinals of this Aſſembly are alſo obliged to give their Opinion Viva Voce, or in Writing, whenever it may be neceſſary, to all Biſhops, Abbots, Prelates, and Superiors of Churches, or Monaſteries, who have Recourſe to them; and to anticipate them, in caſe of Neceſſity, by wholeſome Counſel, in order to prevent their taking any falſe Step in the Exerciſe of their Employments, and their miniſterial Functions.

THE Writers and Secretary of this Congregation are maintain'd at the Expence of the apoſtolical Chamber, becauſe they diſpatch every Thing gratis for the Churchmen above-mention'd; and thoſe Cardinals who dictate them in a full Aſſembly, every Friday at the Cardinal's Palace, who is the Chief thereof, are not allow'd any Thing for it.

The Congregation for the Examination of Biſhops.

GREGORY XIV. being at the Council of Trent, where ſome Divines inſiſted on the Neceſſity there was of ſetting ſuch Paſtors over Churches, as were capable of governing them well, he was no ſooner raiſed to the Pontificate, than he inſtituted this Congregation, to examine all ſuch Churchmen as were nominated to Biſhoprics.

'TIS compoſed of eight Cardinals, ſix Prelates, ten Divines of different Orders, both ſecular and regular, ſome of whom muſt be Doctors of the Canon Law. Theſe Examiners are choſen by the Pope, who cauſes them to aſſemble in his Palace every Tueſday or Friday, when any Affair is to be examin'd.

ALL Italian Biſhops are obliged to ſubmit to this Examination before they are conſecrated, and for this Purpoſe they preſent themſelves upon their Knees before his Holineſs, who is ſeated in an eaſy Chair, and continue in this Poſture on a Cuſhion at his Feet; during which the Examiners ſtand round, interrogate them on ſuch Heads of Divinity and the Canon Law, as they think proper; to all which the Candidates are obliged to make categorical Anſwers.

THE Examination being ended, ſuch as are judged capable, are order'd by the Pope to give in their Names to the Secretary; who inſerts them in the Regiſter, and afterwards gives them an Extract of the Debates of the Examiners, in order for their making uſe of them whenever they are tranſlated to another See, or have the Archbiſhop's or Patriarch's Pall given them; for when once a Perſon has paſſed Examination by this Congregation, he may not only be tranſlated from one See to another, but be raiſed to the chief Dignities of the Church, without being obliged to undergo any other Examination.

SUCH as are raiſed to the Cardinalate before they are created Biſhops, are diſpenſed from this Examination to qualify them for taking Poſſeſſion of a Biſhop's See, or Patriarchate, and even to be raiſed to the Pontificate. All Cardinal-Nephews are likewiſe exempt, which is a very diſtinguiſhing Favour, and worthy of Remark.

The Congregation of the Morals of Biſhops.

AS Doctrine alone is not ſufficient to render a Churchman worthy of the Epiſcopate, unleſs it be heighten'd by Virtue and the ſoundeſt Morals, Pope Innocent XI. obſerving that Favour and Intereſt had too great a Share in the Election of Biſhops, inſtituted this Congregation of ſound Morals, in order that no Churchmen who had not led virtuous and regular Lives, might be raiſed to the epiſcopal, or any other eminent Dignity in the Church.

THIS Congregation is compoſed of three Cardinals, two Biſhops, four Prelates, and a Secretary, who is the Pope's Auditor. It is held in the Palace of one of theſe three Cardinals alternately, and ſometimes in the apoſtolical Palace; but in what Place ſoever theſe Deputies aſſemble, they examine very exactly the Certificates of the Life and Manners of the Candidates for a Biſhop's See, and never come to a Determination, till ſuch Time as it is evidentl proved, that the whole Conduct of their Lives has been irreproachable, otherwiſe they are not admitted to the Epiſcopacy: Several are nevertheleſs made Biſhops, notwithſtanding they have led irregular Lives, and that becauſe they frequently find an Opportunity to elude the Examination of this Congregation, none being obliged to appear in this Court but thoſe whoſe Promotion is oppoſed by Perſons of great Probity and Diſintereſtedneſs, who either make their Complaints, or give their Oppoſitions in Writing, in Purſuance of the three Bans, which are publiſh'd in thoſe Places, where ſuch Churchmen as are raiſed to the epiſcopal Dignity have laſt reſided for ſeveral Years; to the End that ſuch Perſons as have been Eye-Witneſſes of their Conduct, may make a ſincere Declaration thereof, and tranſmit it to the Deputies of this Congregation: And this is the Standard by which Biſhops examine all ſuch Clerks as come for Prieſts or Deacons Orders, as alſo all Miſſionaries.

The Congregation for the Reſidence of Biſhops.

THE Cardinal who is the Pope's Vicar-General, is generally the Prefect of this Congregation, which is impower'd either to force or diſpenſe with, (as may be expedient or neceſſary) all Biſhops and Abbots in Italy, to reſide in their ſeveral Dioceſes or Communities.

IN this Congregation there are three Cardinals, three Prelates, and a Secretary. They aſſemble at the Prefect's Palace, but having very little Buſineſs, they meet but very rarely, ly, and that only at the Requeſt of ſuch Biſhops and Abbots as deſire to abſent themſelves from their Churches, for certain Reaſons or Affairs mention'd in their Petitions. This Congregation anſwers them, by granting the Requeſts of thoſe they judge to have a juſt Occaſion to abſent themſelves for a Time limited by them, at the Expiration whereof they indulge them a longer Time, when ſuppoſed neceſſary; but whenever they refuſe any Perſon the Liberty of abſenting himſelf, in caſe ſuch Perſon infringes their Order, he is deprived of all his Benefices, during the Time he abſents himſelf; and if any Biſhop or Abbot refuſe to return to his Dioceſe or Abby, immediately after this Congregation has order'd them ſo to do, it may ſuſpend them from all their Functions, till ſuch Time as they are reſtored by his Holineſs or his Vicar-General, who never do it without the Conſent of the Deputies of this Congregation.

The Congregation for ſuppreſſing Monaſteries.

AMONG the great Number of rich Monaſteries in Italy, in caſe the Temporalities of any of them happen to be ſunk, or ſo far diminiſh'd, that the Remainder is not ſufficient for the maintaining of ſix Religious, they ought to be ſuppreſſed, or at leaſt united to others that have Revenues ſufficient for maintaining a greater Number of Friars than thoſe of their Community.

POPE Innocent X. obſerving that theſe poor Monaſteries grew every Day more burthenſome to the Public, firſt inſtituted this Congregation, and commanded the Deputies thereof to enquire into the State of theſe Monaſteries, and to name ſuch as were to be ſuppreſſed. One would imagine that after this Inquiry was ended, this Congregation would have been aboliſh'd; but as ſome Difficulties have always ariſen on that Head, the Succeſſors of Innocent X. have continued it to this Day.

'TIS compoſed of eight Cardinals, and divers Friars of all the Orders, deputed by the Provincials, on whom ſuch Monaſteries depend, to take care of their Intereſt. This Aſſembly regulates the Pretenſions of Founders and Benefactors, and thoſe of their Heirs, who require Reſtitution to be made of ſuch Monies as had been bequeath'd to thoſe Houſes or Abbeys, inaſmuch as the Cauſe for which ſuch Legacies had been left ſubſiſts no longer. But this Congregation does not always cauſe ſuch Wealth to be reſtored to the Succeſſors of the Legatees; they often finding their Demands unjuſt, eſpecially when there is any Likelihood of their being one Day reſtored. Meanwhile, they order that what remains of the Temporalities of ſuch abandon'd or ruin'd Houſes, ſhall be employ'd for the moſt important Exigencies of the Church; and, among other Things, to aſſiſt the Chriſtian Armies that fight againſt the Infidels.

THE ſaid Congregation examines alſo the Petitions of ſuch Communities and Cities, whoſe Inhabitants deſire Liberty to rebuild or found a-new any Monaſtery, for Reaſons alledged by them, and on which they judge in this Aſſembly, whatever is proper to be granted to the Petitioners, by making ſuch Ordinances as are comformable to the Concluſions there taken by Plurality of Voices; and Inſtruments thereof are given gratis, ſign'd by the Prefect, and ſeal'd by the Secretary, who deliver them to all that want them.

The

The Congregation of the Apoſtolical Viſitation.

THE Pope, without any way derogating from the Dignity of univerſal Biſhop, is poſſeſſed in a particular Manner of the Archbiſhopric of the City of Rome, and in that Quality is oblig'd to make the paſtoral Viſitation of ſix Biſhoprics, Suffragans to this Metropolis of his Patrimony. But as he is inceſſantly employ'd in a Multitude of State-Affairs, of the greateſt Importance to the Chriſtian World, he has inſtituted this Congregation of the Apoſtolical Viſitation, which nominates Commiſſioners to viſit Churches, and Monaſteries of both Sexes, both in City and Country; and theſe Viſitors at their Return give in a written Report to the Congregation, concerning the good State, or the Irregularities they meet with in them, in order that they may be remedied.

THIS Congregation is compoſed of the ſame Cardinals and Prelates as thoſe of the Monaſteries to be ſuppreſſed, mentioned in the preceding Chapter; but this has over and above the Pope's Vicar-General, and the Cardinal-Vicegerent, without whoſe Conſent the Deputies of the Congregation for the Monaſteries of Regulars, never ſend any Commiſſioner, to make the Apoſtolical Viſitation of ſuch Churches as are within the Juriſdiction of the patriarchal Archbiſhopric of Rome.

The Congregation of Relics.

THE Congregation of Relics is compoſed of ſix Cardinals and four Prelates, among whom are the Cardinal-Vicar, and the Prefect of the Pope's Sacriſty. Theſe Deputies united, ſuper-intend the Relics of thoſe antient Martyrs, that are frequently found in Catacombs, and other ſubterraneous Places in Rome.

WHEN theſe ſeveral Cardinals and Prelates are met together in their Congregation, they examine the Informations given in by ſuch of their Brethren as went upon the Spot, to ſee whether there were any certain Marks to diſtinguiſh the Bones, Shrines, or Tombs of Martyrs, from thoſe of the Heathens, or other Perſons who were buried undiſtinguiſh'd, in theſe ſubterraneous Caverns.

[a] THERE are three Tokens which are generally look'd upon as ſo many infallible Teſtimonies of the Martyrdom of thoſe in whoſe Graves they are found, viz. Firſt, little glaſs Phials, in which there are any Drops or Marks of Blood left, which thoſe who buried the Bodies of Martyrs obſerved always to put into ſuch Glaſſes. Secondly, any Pieces of the Inſtruments which had been employ'd in their Execution; as for Inſtance, of a Scymitar, a Lance, a Sword, or Knife, &c. And, Thirdly, ſome Inſcription engraved on Bricks, Flints, or Stones.

WHENEVER there are any of theſe Marks, and they are allow'd to be antique and genuine, according to the ſeveral Circumſtances expreſſed in the Informations made on the Spot, by Commiſſioners deputed for that Purpoſe, all the Prelates of the Congregation give their Votes thereupon; and in caſe there is no Perſon to prove and demonſtrate that theſe Marks are falſe and ſuppoſititious, the Prefect of the Aſſembly declares the Relics in queſtion worthy the Honour and Veneration of the Faithful: He gives whatever Names he thinks proper to ſuch Bones as cannot be known by any Inſcription, or particular Circumſtance of the moſt antient Martyrologies; in which very few Martyrs are named, but after mentioning thoſe only who were moſt eminent, this Form of Words is generally uſed: The ſame Day ſeveral other faithful Chriſtians were martyr'd, and buried with theſe, and ſuffer'd Death upon the ſame Account.

AFTER the Congregation has pronounced Sentence on the Validity of any Relics, and has given ſuch Names as it thinks proper, it conſigns theſe Relics to the Vicar, and the Pope's Sacriſtan, who diſtribute them to ſuch as deſire them; and at the ſame Time give them Certificates, or authentic Letters of their being genuine, making all ſuch as they favour with any Portion of this inexhauſtible Treaſure, to ſign a kind of Receipt, and a Compliment of Thanks, at the Bottom of their Regiſters.

The Congregation of Indulgences.

THIS Congregation, the Number of whoſe Cardinals and Prelates is not fix'd, muſt aſſemble in the Palace of the moſt antient of thoſe Cardinals deputed by the Pope, and which the Court of Rome has thought proper to have aſſembled, ever ſince the holding of the Council of Trent, in order to examine whether the Cauſes and Motives of all thoſe who ſue for Indulgences are juſt and lawful. All Petitions are granted in this Congregation in the Pope's Name only, who ſhews by all the Formularies which the Deputies of this Aſſembly make uſe of, that he pretends to be the only Depoſitary, and the ſovereign Diſpenſer of what he calls the Spiritual Treaſures of the Church. We refer our Reader to what was obſerved on this Head, when we treated of tax'd Briefs.

THE Regiſter of this Congregation ſends the Minutes and Concluſions of Petitions to the Secretary of the Briefs, who diſpatches them gratis under the Fiſherman's Seal, thoſe excepted which are deſired in perpetuum, and which are expedited by Bulls, the leaſt of which coſts a Piſtole, and others more, according as the Clauſes are more or leſs beneficial, or the Formalities obſerved in iſſuing out the Inſtruments more or leſs numerous.

The Congregation of Rites or Ceremonies of the Church.

POPE Sixtus V. founded this Congregation to regulate the Ceremonies and Rites of the new Offices of Saints, which are added to the Roman Calendar, whenever any Perſon is canoniz'd, whereof it takes Cognizance, and conſequently has a Right to the Examination of all Informations, and Verification of all Enquiries, Acts, and Proceedings, relating to this Matter.

IT has the Authority to explain the Rubrics of the Maſs-Book and Breviary, when any Difficulties are ſtarted, or any Perſon deſires any Inſtruction on that Head. Finally, its Power extends to pronounce Sentence, from which there is no Appeal, on all Diſputes relating to the Precedency of Churches.

THIS Congregation is compoſed of eight Cardinals and a Secretary, who is one of the College of the Prelates Referendaries. Two Maſters of the Ceremonies of his Holineſs are likewiſe admitted into it. Theſe ſeveral Deputies aſſemble once a Month at the Palace of the ſenior Cardinal, who is the Prefect thereof, and who is impower'd to call them together oftner, whenever a Multiplicity of Buſineſs requires it.

WHEN-

WHENEVER any Saint is to be canoniz'd, the three ſenior Auditors of the Rota are preſent in this Aſſembly, as Perſons ſuppoſed to be well verſed in the Canon Law, together with an Aſſiſtant apoſtolical Prothonotary, and the Proctor of the Faith, who is generally the Fiſcal Advocate of the apoſtolical Chamber. Several Conſulters are alſo admitted into it, who are Divines, and Monks profeſs'd of different Orders, among whom is the Maſter of the ſacred Palace, and the Prefect of the Pope's Sacriſty.

ALL theſe Judges Aſſiſtants, together with the Deputies in ordinary of this Congregation, examine the Proofs of the Sanctity of thoſe who are to be canonized; and in caſe they are found good and valid, his Holineſs afterwards pronounces Sentence in their Favour, on the judicial Acts and Proceedings of this Congregation, by ordering their Names to be inſerted in the Catalogue of the Beatified, in caſe they were not before; and if they have been canoniz'd by a Sentence anterior to this, then his Holineſs's Ordinance is made in Form of an Edict, by which he enjoins and commands, by his abſolute Authority, that the Names of theſe beatified Souls be inſerted in the Diptycs of the Saints, in order that they may be invoked by all Chriſtians in the public Service of Religion, and that the Sacrifice of the Maſs be offer'd in their Honour.

THE Pope does not pronounce this Edict till after he has made a previous Declaration in a ſecret Conſiſtory, and with the Advice of all the Cardinals, Biſhops, and Abbots, as are then in the City of Rome, and who together form a kind of Council which differs very much from the General Aſſemblies of the Clergy, as they are uſually call'd.

THE Proofs which the ſeveral Members of this Aſſembly, or conſiſtorial Congregation, look upon as valid and ſufficient, in the Acts and Proceedings of all Canonizations, are, Martyrdom, undiſputed Miracles, Teſtimonies of a virtuous Life, and the heroic Virtues of thoſe who are to be canoniz'd.

THE following Maxim is now obſerv'd, though it has not been follow'd in this Congregation above a Century, viz. Not to enter upon the Enquiries prior to Canonization, till fifty Years at leaſt after the Death of the Perſon to be canonized, or, in the Style of the Vatican, to be declared a beatified Soul; and the Reaſon of their deferring it ſo long, is, in order to take away all Suſpicions which might otherwiſe be entertain'd, that the Relations of ſuch as are to be canoniz'd would give falſe Teſtimonies in their Favour, either out of Intereſt or Self-Love, were any ſuch alive, and living in the Places where thoſe Inquiries and Informations of the Life and Conduct are made; all which are Circumſtances that ought chiefly to be conſidered in Proceedings relating to Canonizations.

The Congregation for the Building of Churches.

POPE Clement VIII. founded this Congregation, purpoſely that they might take a more immediate Care of the building of St. Peter's Church adjoining to the Vatican, which by this Means is become the largeſt and moſt magnificent, and moſt wealthy Church in Chriſtendom. And notwithſtanding that this Congregation has ſuperintended the Building of other Churches in Rome, which are very beautiful and numerous, they are nevertheleſs employ'd to this Day, in repairing and beautifying this Cathedral of St. Peter's more than any other; for which Reaſon this Aſſembly bears only the Name of that Church.

THERE

THERE are eight Cardinals and four Prelates deputed to regulate all the Concerns of this Fabric. Their Aſſiſtants are the Auditor and Treaſurer of the apoſtolic Chamber, an Auditor of the Rota, a Steward, a Fiſcal, a Secretary, and ſome Attorneys. All theſe aſſemble twice every Month, at the Palace of the ſenior Cardinal of their Congregation, on the Monday or Saturday neareſt to the Beginning and Middle of each Month.

THIS Tribunal takes cognizance alſo by Appeal, of all Diſputes that ariſe with regard to the Building of St. Peter's, whether of ſuch Tradeſmen as furniſh Materials, the Workmen, or other Perſons; as alſo of all clandeſtine Practices, Frauds, or Embezzlements, which may have been committed by thoſe who have the Direction of it; for this Purpoſe they have a Judge, who takes immediate Cognizance of any Thing of this Nature. But the greateſt Privilege theſe Deputies are inveſted with, is the Power of changing the laſt Wills of thoſe who bequeath Sums to be employ'd in pious Uſes; or made in Favour of Perſons unknown, of Vagabonds, Exiles, or Perſons deceaſed; and, in general, of all ſuch as imply a Contradiction, and which cannot be executed purſuant to the Will of the Teſtators; for in theſe Caſes thoſe Deputies apply it to the Profit of St. Peter; and in caſe the Heirs or Legatees prevail to have the Will of the Teſtator executed, they then reſerve for the above-mention'd Fabric, whatever Rents or Intereſt may be due from the Death of the Teſtator, till the Day that the Decree paſt in their Congregation.

GREAT Numbers of People are, by way of Penance for their Sins, condemn'd by their Fathers Confeſſors to work very hard, on different Materials which are employ'd in the above-mention'd Fabric; as for Inſtance, to pound Flints and ſeveral other Things for the making of Mortar. Several Perſons of great Quality work at poliſhing of Marble, a certain Number of Hours daily; and in caſe they perform their Work well, they receive Abſolution at the Time preſcrib'd them.

THESE Puniſhments are very much a-kin to thoſe of Galley-Slaves, —— and are always enjoin'd for a Time, proportionable to the Enormity of their Crimes; but with this Difference, that none are condemn'd to the Gallies —— but ſuch as are legally convicted of any Crime; and that thoſe who are condemn'd by the above-mention'd Churchmen, are not judged to deſerve the Labours and Puniſhments they are made to ſuffer, but as they have made a voluntary Confeſſion of certain Sins to their Confeſſor in the Tribunal of Penance, in order to receive the ſacramental Abſolution.

WE ſhall here conclude the Deſcription of the Ceremonies of the Church of Rome, and whatever relates to the Hierarchy thereof.

BOOK I.

By Way of PREFACE.

Wherein is ſhewn how widely the Practice of the Church in antient Times, with regard to HERETICS, differs from that of the Tribunal of the Inquiſition in our Days: A Parallel between them; with the Juſtice of the former, and the great Injuſtice of the latter.

THE Spirit of Chriſt Jeſus and of his Church being a Spirit of Charity, of Gentleneſs, and Moderation, that aims not at the Death, but the Salvation of a Sinner, nothing appears to be more oppoſite to it than the employing Force, Violence, Tortures, and even Death, againſt thoſe who entertain ſuch Notions as claſh with the Purity of Doctrine, or the Precepts of the Goſpel. Beſides, as the Power of the Church is merely Spiritual in its own Nature, the Prelates thereof are no ways impower'd to inflict Puniſhment.

THE Keys which our Saviour has given to looſe and unlooſe, have no other Power than that of ſeparating Unbelievers from the Communion of the Church, in Things of an eccleſiaſtical and ſpiritual Nature, and not to deprive them either of Life, or their temporal Poſſeſſions. Thus we ſee, that during the three firſt Ages of the Church, the Apoſtles ſtles and their Succeſſors employ'd no other Methods than that of Exhortation, Admonition, and Cenſure, in order to bring back ſuch Chriſtians as had wander'd from the Paths of Faith: And in caſe they perſiſted in their Obſtinacy, they contented themſelves with ſeparating them from their Communion, agreeable to that Precept of St. Paul, Hæreticum hominem, poſt unam & alteram correptionem devita. But no ſooner were there Emperors who profeſſed the Chriſtian Religion, but they laid it down as a Duty incumbent on themſelves, not only for the Security of their Government, but for the better Support of the Catholic Religion, of which they were the Protectors, to enact Laws againſt Heretics, and to puniſh them. The Biſhops never arrogated this Authority, but addreſſed themſelves ſometimes to the Emperors, to deſire that certain turbulent Heretics might either be puniſhed, or a Stop put to their Proceedings by the Dread of Puniſhment. But then, agreeable to the Dictates of the Goſpel, they took the utmoſt care not to ſuffer Heretics to be puniſhed with Death; and all they deſired was, that they might be effectual in reclaiming them from their Errors, but were not for having them put to Death in a State of Impenitence. This they look'd upon with ſo much Horror, that notwithſtanding the Priſcillianiſts did, of all other Heretics, moſt juſtly deſerve Death, yet the Church looked on thoſe Biſhops that had accuſed them to Maximus the Emperor, who had condemned them to die, as guilty of ſo great a Crime, that the reſt of the Biſhops thought it incumbent on them to join no longer with them in Communion, nor with thoſe who did not ſeparate themſelves from them. And an antient Author, tho' he owns that the Priſcillianiſts had been juſtly puniſh'd, yet he cannot forbear looking upon their Condemnation, becauſe it had been procur'd by Biſhops, as an Example of a very dangerous Conſequence: [a] Hi homines luce indigniſſimi, peſſimo exemplo necati, aut exilio mulctati. St. Auſtin himſelf ſhews plainly enough in his Epiſtle to Donatus Proconſul of Africa, that he was of the ſame Opinion, when he declares to him, that in caſe he ſtill continued to put the Donatiſts to Death, the Biſhops were bound in Duty to conceal them from him for the future.

NOT but that Heretics may be reſtrained by temporal Puniſhments; but here, as in all other Things, a certain Decorum muſt be obſerved, as well as ſome Rules followed: And hereupon it may be ſaid, that the Cauſes for which Heretics may be puniſhed, are chiefly reducible to four.

THE firſt is grounded on a political Reaſon, viz. for the Peace of the Government, in order to prevent and put a ſtop to it, or even curb the Diſſorders or Diſſentions, that are almoſt inſeparable from Diſputes on religious Topics, as is but too manifeſt from Experience.

THE ſecond Reaſon is drawn from the Duty incumbent on a Chriſtian Prince, who is obliged to guard Religion with a vigilant Eye, and to exert himſelf as much as poſſible to maintain it in its Purity. And as this Purity is ſullied by Hereſies, corrupt Opinions, and pernicious Maxims, a Prince muſt not, when theſe prevail, look upon them with an Eye of Indifference; but is bound to root out every Thing that may have the leaſt Tendency to deprave Religion, with the ſame Care and Circumſpection as he employs to ſee the Civil Laws put in Execution.

THE third Reaſon for puniſhing Heretics, is ſometimes drawn from the Nature of thoſe Hereſies which they profeſs: For it is certain that there are ſome who advance Principles of ſo blaſphemous a Nature, and entertain Notions ſo highly injurious to the Divine Being, and the Myſteries of Religion, that to tolerate, and not endeavour to ſuppreſs them, would be Injuſtice. Can any Thing be more equitable than to chaſtiſe

ſeditious Spirits, when they diſcourſe on Topics injurious to the Prince, and obnoxious to the State? And ſhall we ſay that the Divine Majeſty is to be leſs reſpected than that of Kings and other earthly Governors; and that Men ſhall with Impunity be ſuffered to break out into contumelious Expreſſions againſt the former, and at the ſame Time puniſh the licentious Diſcourſes vented againſt the latter with the utmoſt Severity?

THE laſt Reaſon why Heretics may be proceeded againſt with Rigour, is not to force, but to incline them, by the Fear and Dread of the Laws, and the Puniſhments inflicted, to make proper Enquiries into the Truth, and through an inward Conviction to return to the Church which they had left. This Enquiry would never once enter into their Thoughts, were they not prevail'd upon to enter upon it from a deſire of living in Peace, and to eſcape thoſe Puniſhments to which Heretics are ſubject by the Laws. This Reaſon, which, perhaps, may appear to be the weakeſt here, did nevertheleſs prevail ſo far with St. Auſtin, that it made him change the Opinion he had once entertain'd, with Reſpect to the Puniſhment of Heretics.

IF we examine the firſt Reaſon, it muſt be owned that all ſuch Heretics as break in upon the Peace of the State, and raiſe Seditions, may, and often ought to be puniſhed capitally, as their Practices are more or leſs prejudicial to the Tranquillity of the Government. Thus the Church in St. Auſtin's Time, thought it ſelf impowered to implore the Protection of the Emperors againſt the Donatiſts; and it was from the ſame Principle that thoſe Monarchs, upon the Complaints made by the Church, puniſhed ſome with pecuniary Mulcts, others with Baniſhment, and others again with Death: And in all theſe Proceedings they acted with the higheſt Juſtice, as is manifeſt from Hiſtory.

THE ſecond Reaſon may juſtly authorize a Prince to puniſh Heretics. St. Auſtin is of this Opinion, and therefore ſpeaking of the Donatiſts, he ſays, "The Tribune whom "the Emperor has ſent, is not commanded to put you to Death, but only to reform "you; but in caſe you reſolve upon the contrary, and perſiſt in your Obſtinacy, you ſhall "be ſent into Exile, to the End that you may not hinder the reſt from becoming Con-"verts, and recanting their erroneous Principles."

THE third Reaſon is but too ſufficient to impower a Monarch to puniſh not only Heretics, but even Schiſmatics, Heathens, and Jews, if any ſuch are in his Dominions. The Puniſhments inflicted ought to be either gentler or more ſevere, proportionable to the Flagrancy and Blaſphemy of the Doctrine. Such Princes as were informed with a Spirit of Piety (as is manifeſt from the Example of the Emperor Juſtin and St. Lewis,) never ſuffered Blaſphemers to go unpuniſhed. According to the divine Law, they ought to be puniſhed capitally; it cannot therefore be diſputed but that a Chriſtian Prince may in that Particular regulate his Conduct by the Law of the Creator; tho' at the ſame Time it is certain, that he is at Liberty to puniſh with a leſs ſevere Hand if he thinks proper.

As to the fourth Reaſon, viz. the bringing Heretics over to the Church, either by a Dread of Puniſhment, or from the Puniſhmments themſelves, it muſt be owned, that when this is the only Reaſon for chaſtiſing them, they ought to be proceeded againſt with the utmoſt Prudence and Circumſpection. For, not to mention that a truly Chriſtian Prince does all that lies in his Power to prevent the Effuſion of his Subjects Blood; ſo on the other Side, the Converſion of Heretics, which is the Thing aimed at, cannot be effected by theſe Means: For when once we have put a Heretic to Death, we thereby cut off all farther Hopes of his Converſion. On this Occaſion therefore we are to employ negative Puniſhments rather than poſitive ones, if I may ſo expreſs my ſelf; i. e. they may be excluded the Enjoyment of thoſe Honours, Dignities, and Privileges, which the Catholics enjoy; or ſuch Burthens may be laid upon them, and they may be bound to ſuch Services, as the reſt are exempt from: Nay, farther, the Places where they meet together for divine Worſhip may be taken from them; they may be prohibited the public Exerciſe of their Religion, and their Paſtors may be ſent into Baniſhment. For as nothing contributes more to foment and keep up a Spirit of Schiſm, and a Diviſion in Religion, than a Variety of Worſhips, and the Diverſity of Aſſemblies and Paſtors; ſo on the other Side, nothing can poſſibly weaken them more than to deprive them of all theſe Advantages. This was the Conduct of the Chriſtian Emperors in St. Auſtin's Time; and the ſame Saint, who acquaints us with this Circumſtance, approves and applauds it, and confeſſes that the happy Effects which had reſulted from this Conduct, obliged him to change his Opinion, and to own that Heretics may, with great Juſtice, as well as Advantage to the State, be puniſhed with Gentleneſs and Moderation, provided their Converſion is the only Motive of ſuch a Procedure. But how juſt ſoever it may be to puniſh Heretics on certain Occaſions, it is nevertheleſs certain, that as to corporal and civil Puniſhments, the Church had nothing to do with them, but they were wholly inflicted by the Prince and the ſecular Magiſtrate. Though we were to read an hundred Times over all the Collections of Canons, by which the Church ſquar'd her Conduct for ſeveral Centuries together, we yet ſhall not meet with ſo much as one that inflicts corporal Puniſhment, not even on Eccleſiaſtics, tho' theſe in all Ages have been more immediately in Subordination to the Church than the Laity; which is an indiſputable Proof that the Church was in thoſe Days perſuaded ſhe was inveſted with no ſuch Authority.

THE Authority or Power therefore in the firſt Ages of the Church with reſpect to Hereſies, was confined only to Tenets; and this Power has indeed been its peculiar Prerogative in all Ages. Princes and civil Magiſtrates have never carried their Pretenſions ſo far; or in caſe they happen to have done it, as Juſtinian with regard to Origen, it has either happened but very rarely, or in Execution of the Church's Decrees. And if they ever attempted any Thing of this Nature from their own Authority, it was of no great Conſequence, and very little Regard was paid thereunto, till ſuch Time as it had receiv'd a Sanction from the final Deciſion of the Church.

HER Power extended indeed to the Condemnation of Heretics themſelves; but then the Puniſhments which ſhe inflicted by Virtue of her own Authority, went no further than the Excommunication of the Laity, and the Excommunication and Depoſition of the Clergy.

WHENEVER the Church was perſuaded that weightier Puniſhments were neceſſary for the reſtraining of Heretics, or even ſuch Catholics as were incorrigible, ſhe was ſo far from ordering the Execution of them, that on the contrary ſhe always addreſſed herſelf to Princes and civil Magiſtrates for that Purpoſe. The antient Biſhops of Africa generally follow'd this Maxim, as is manifeſt from ſeveral Teſtimonies of St. Auſtin: Thus the Council of [a] Vernon decrees, that the King muſt be addreſſed in order to inflict the Puniſhment of Baniſhment. The ſame Thing is enacted by the third Council of [b] Tours, whenever civil and corporal Puniſhments are to be inflicted.

[b] Canon iv.

THE Popes themſelves were once of the ſame Opinion, tho' their preſent Conduct is ſo oppoſite to it. Pelagius I. enacts that Recourſe ſhall be had to the civil Magiſtrate, to reſtrain Heretics and Schiſmatics: [a] He writes to this Purpoſe to Narſes the Patrician, Commander of the Emperor's Forces in Italy; and in his Letter to John the Patrician, has Words to the [b] ſame Effect.

ALTHO' Gregory IX. carried the Authority of the Church to a great Length, he nevertheleſs acknowledges that it belongs only to the civil Magiſtrate to impoſe pecuniary [c] Fines; and Celeſtin III. is of the ſame [d] Opinion.

AND this is what obliged Alcuinus, notwithſtanding he was a great Stickler for the Authority of the Church in other Caſes, to own, that there is this Difference between temporal and eccleſiaſtical Power, viz. that the former is wholly confined to the [e] inflicting of corporal Puniſhments, and the latter to ſpiritual [f] ones.

HOWEVER, it muſt ſtill be owned, that ſeveral Examples of conſiderable Antiquity might be brought to prove that the Church has the Power of inflicting bodily Puniſhments.

THE fifth Council of Rome, held under Pope Symmachus, condemns a Clerk to Baniſhment, and confiſcates all his [g] Goods.

ADRIAN V. ordains, that a falſe Accuſer ſhall have his Tongue cut out, nay, that he ſhall loſe his Head, in caſe his Accuſation be of ſo heinous a Nature as to deſerve [h] it.

URBAN III. condemns a Clerk, who had counterfeited the royal Signatures, to be depoſed, ſent into Baniſhment, and ſtigmatiz'd in the [i] Face.

ALEXANDER III. condemns all ſuch Laymen as ſhall have ſeduced and drawn away Women and young Lads, to the Scourge, and pecuniary [k] Mulct: Not to mention many other Examples which might doubleſs be quoted to ſtrengthen the ſame Aſſertion.

BUT it may be objected in the firſt Place, that the ſeveral Inſtances above-mentioned, do not any way relate to Heretics. Secondly, that it is taken for granted in theſe Determinations, that the eccleſiaſtical Judges had for that Purpoſe received from Princes ſpecial Power for inflicting civil Puniſhments. And indeed Alexander III. manifeſtly makes ſuch a Suppoſition, in the Affair relating to the Biſhop of Palermo, who had really a Power devolved on him by the King of Sicily, by Virtue of which he enacted civil Puniſhments, even with reſpect to the Laity.

IT may be farther ſaid, that theſe Decrees are made only to point out to the civil Magiſtrate the Puniſhment that is due to the Crimes mentioned in them; which however does no way infer that it is not their proper Buſineſs to exerciſe theſe Puniſhments

againſt ſuch Criminals. And this is the Manner in which the very Gloſs itſelf explains the Decrees of Adrian V. and of Urban III.

IN a Word, in what Senſe ſoever theſe particular Decrees are underſtood, it is impoſſible for them to over-rule the Authority of the Fathers, who are all unanimouſly agreed, that the Juriſdiction of the Church is wholly ſpiritual, that ſhe cannot make uſe of Force, and that temporal Puniſhments do not any way belong to her Province.

THIS, however, is to be underſtood of the Church, with regard to that Power alone which ſhe has received from our Saviour and his Apoſtles; for in thoſe Places where ſhe enjoys Sovereignty and temporal Authority, as in Rome, and ſeveral other Places, it is not to be doubted but that ſhe enjoys the ſame Rights and Privileges, and that they are as unlimited as thoſe of other Sovereigns.

FROM all that has been ſaid we may conclude, that nothing can poſſibly be more oppoſite to the Spirit and Practice of the Church for upwards of a thouſand Years, than what is now obſerv'd in thoſe Countries where the Inquiſition is eſtabliſh'd.

FOR upwards of ſix hundred Years together the Church behaved with the utmoſt Gentleneſs and Moderation towards all Heretics in general, and thoſe in particular who never raiſed any Commotions in the State, or perſecuted the Catholics; whereas in thoſe Countries where the Inquiſition prevails, they are now treated with the utmoſt Rigour and Severity, the moſt ſtrict Search is made after them, and the Proſecution never ceaſes till they are quite extirpated. The utmoſt Rigours of Impriſonment, Puniſhments, Racks, Tortures, in all their various Shapes, are employ'd againſt them; and ſo inflexible are the Proſecutors in the Puniſhments they inflict, that nothing can poſſibly ſoften or alleviate their Severity. And if the civil Magiſtrate, whoſe Aſſiſtance they implore when the Puniſhment is Capital, (which is ever the moſt rigorous, ſince it is no leſs than burning) ſhould go about to mitigate it, he himſelf would be ſuſpected to favour Heretics, and would at leaſt incur the moſt rigorous Cenſures of the Church, and be entirely cut off from it by Excommunication.

IN former Days the Church had neither Judges, Officers, Tribunals, Priſons, Dungeons, Executioners, or Tortures; the Spirit of Gentleneſs ſhe then breathed, did not ſuffer any Thing of this Nature ſo much as to enter into her Thoughts: She left all thoſe terrible Things to the Tribunal of Princes and the civil Magiſtrate, who are juſtly impower'd to imploy Compulſion, and who are frequently obliged to make uſe of it for the Peace and Safety of Governments; as alſo to reſtrain the Wicked, who would otherwiſe fancy they might indulge in all manner of Licentiouſneſs; and to force them to be Virtuous, at the leaſt in outward Appearance, if they will not be ſo in Reality.

BUT the Inquiſition, on the contrary, is ever ſurrounded with all theſe Objects of Terror, and employs them indifferently againſt all kinds of Heretics, and againſt all in general over whom its Authority extends, tho' of never ſo peaceable a Character, no leſs than againſt the moſt ſeditious and turbulent Offenders.

FORMERLY the Biſhops and their Officers were the only Inquiſitors; and whenever it was neceſſary to employ rigorous Penalties, and puniſh with Severity, they always addreſſed themſelves to the civil Magiſtrate for that Purpoſe, who in all Ages hath been inveſted with that Right.

BUT

BUT in thoſe Places where the Inquiſition now ſubſiſts, we find the very reverſe; Biſhops have but the leaſt and moſt inconſiderable Share in the Proſecution of Heretics, but are themſelves ſubject to the Tribunal of the Inquiſitors. Theſe Inquiſitors are generally, and in moſt Places, not only Churchmen, but Monks; whoſe Profeſſion is of a very ſevere Nature. As for the civil Magiſtrate, how neceſſary ſoever it may be for him to take Cognizance of the Sentences they pronounce, they nevertheleſs do not communicate any thing of them to him; and he has no more left of the Authority he antiently enjoy'd, than to be a mere Witneſs and Executioner of ſuch Sentences as are pronounced by the Inquiſition, but has no manner of Right to examine them.

ANTIENTLY it was the Cuſtom to judge Heretics in the ſame manner as other Criminals; there was no manner of Difference in the Formality, and the Methods of Procedure were exactly the ſame; they were allowed the ſame Means of defending themſelves, and of challenging or excepting againſt their Proſecutors, and an Opportunity of clearing themſelves was indulged them the ſame as other Criminals.

BUT in the Inquiſition it is the direct contrary; the Methods of Proſecution are different, and the Formalities entirely new; it is very eaſy to ruin a Perſon who ſtands impeached, but very difficult to juſtify one who is innocent.

IN former Days, whenever a Heretic repented of the Errors he had fallen into, and ſubmitted to the Penance and Correction of the Church, he was always received again into her Boſom, and reconcil'd to her with Joy:

BUT in the Inquiſition, when once a Pardon has been granted, all future Mercy is entirely cut off; and whenever a Perſon has been ſo unhappy as to come twice into its Clutches, the Crime is never expiated but with Life.

IN all other Courts of Juſtice Death puts an End to all farther Proſecution, and terminates all the Rigours that may be employed againſt a Criminal.

BUT here it is quite otherwiſe; the Proſecution extends even beyond Death, and the Inquiſitors are as cruel to the Bones, the Aſhes, and the very Pictures or Images of the Criminals, as they would have been to their Perſons, had not Death put an End to all their Torments. Time cannot obliterate any Circumſtance from the Memory of the Inquiſitors, and they ſhall as well remember the ſeveral Particulars of a Crime a great many Years after its being committed, as tho' it had been perpetrated but a few Days before.

A SON who conceals his Father, after whom Search is made in order to put him to Death, will not have ſuch an Action imputed to him as a Crime elſewhere; nor is a Wife who ſhelters her Husband in a caſe of imminent Danger, look'd upon as Criminal; ſo far from it, that all theſe good Offices are conſider'd as ſo many natural Duties, the Prohibition of which would be unjuſt.

BUT in thoſe Countries where the Inquiſition prevails, all theſe Duties are forbid, and no ſooner is a Perſon ſo unhappy as to be impeach'd before its Tribunal, but he is immediately abandon'd by all. A Son does not dare give Refuge to his Father, a Father to his Son, nor a Wife to her Husband; and if any one ſhould be convicted of doing this, he would immediately be proſecuted by the Inquiſition as a Fautor of Heretics.

IN all other Places, any Perſon who has been unjuſtly accuſed, has ſuffered falſe Impriſonment, or has been undeſervedly tortured, is allow'd to publiſh his Innocence to the World, and by that Means come off with Honour; he is at Liberty to vent his Complaints, which are ſo far from being look'd upon as a freſh Crime that may impower a Court to call him again to Account, that, on the contrary, the Judges themſelves generally make no Difficulty to own they were impoſed upon, and are the firſt to proclaim the Innocence of thoſe who are really ſo.

BUT in the Inquiſition it is quite the reverſe; ſuch Favours are never granted by the Inquiſitors; they never own their Miſtake, but are always in the Right, and inſiſt that every Thing had been done as it ought to be. And if ever an innocent Perſon who has eſcaped their Snares, ſhould preſume to proclaim his Innocence to the World, and value himſelf upon it, he would certainly be again arreſted, and afterwards puniſhed for ſlandering the Holy Office.

THESE Particulars will ſcarce appear credible, eſpecially in France, and the other Kingdoms whoſe Inhabitants are not ſubject to the Rigours of that Tribunal; but thoſe who have either inhabited or frequented thoſe Countries where the Inquiſition is eſtabliſhed, are fully perſuaded of the Truth of all that is here aſſerted. The very Inquiſitors themſelves do not mince the Matter very much, ſo far has Prejudice and Cuſtom perſuaded them that they are in the Right to act in this manner: And on the other Side, they are of Opinion it is ſo much their Intereſt to be feared, and to over-awe every one, not excepting even Kings, that they are very deſirous thoſe Things ſhould be known, tho' at the ſame Time all that paſſes in the Inquiſition itſelf is kept inviolably ſecret.

OUR publiſhing them therefore in theſe Memoirs cannot be deemed either a raſh or novel Attempt, they being borrowed from ſeveral Roman Catholic Authors, whoſe Principles were Orthodox, and the greateſt Part of whom were Eye-Witneſſes of all we ſhall here relate with the utmoſt Exactneſs as well as Sincerity.

WE ſhall confine ourſelves only to what relates to the Hiſtory, the Practices, and Proceedings of the Tribunals of the Inquiſition, as it is eſtabliſhed in our Days; together with the various Employments of the Inquiſitors, their manner of judging, how cruelly they treat thoſe who are ſo unhappy as to be ſeiz'd and ſhut up in their Priſons, the Torments inflicted on thoſe who are accuſed, the Pomp and Solemnity with which they execute the ſeveral Sentences pronounced in the Acts of Faith; and to make all theſe ſeveral Particulars ſtill more conſpicuous, we have thought proper to annex to theſe Memoirs, ſome genuine Relations of a very particular Nature, which alone will be capable of raiſing the Reader's Abhorrence for a Tribunal, from which one would imagine the Managers had laid it down as a Law, to baniſh every Thing that has the leaſt Appearance of Juſtice or Humanity.

BUT before we enter upon theſe Matters, we beg leave to congratulate the Happineſs and Felicity of thoſe People that are not obliged to live under the Governments of ſuch [a] Princes, as under a Pretence of maintaining the Laws of this dreadful Tribunal, are forced, as it were, to lend their Authority to Actions of ſo cruel a Nature, that they are looked upon by all Nations with Horror, at the ſame Time that their Adminiſtration is had in the utmoſt Deteſtation.

INQUISITION.

BOOK II.

CHAP. I.

The Origin, Eſtabliſhment, and Progreſs of the INQUISITION.

THE Church, after the Diviſion of the Empire into the Eaſtern and Weſtern, had long enjoyed an uninterrupted Calm in the weſtern Parts of the World; or in caſe it had been ſome Times diſturbed, neither Heretics or Hereſies had been the Cauſe thereof; for very few Hereſies had ſprung up, and ſuch as did, no ſooner peep'd abroad, but they either ſunk of themſelves, or were cruſhed by the Vigilance of the ſovereign Princes and the Prelates. The Harmony that always ſubſiſted between the Prieſthood and the Empire, did not a little contribute to the maintaining of Religion in its Purity.

BUT this Union being once diſſolv'd by the furious Diſputes which aroſe about the Middle of the eleventh Century, between the Emperors and the Popes, both Parties carrying Things to the utmoſt Length for upwards of fifty Years, a Door was by that Means open'd to all kinds of Hereſies.

IT was ſcarce poſſible for Things to have taken another Turn: For as the Popes had a great Number of Adherents, who ſtretched the Authority of the Church beyond its due Limits; ſo, on the other Side, the Emperors had their Partizans, who weaken'd it as much as poſſible, and confin'd it to much narrower Bounds than it might juſtly claim. This it was that occaſioned the Starting up of Hereſies, which afterwards gave Riſe to the Eſtabliſhment of the Inquiſition. Hitherto they had all gone no farther than to attack the Myſteries of Religion; but afterwards, leaving the Myſteries, they levelled all their Obſtinacy againſt the Morality, the Diſcipline, and particularly the Authority of the Church.

THE Church being attacked in ſo tender a Part, was far from over-looking ſuch dangerous Enemies; but then they were ſo numerous, and the Support which moſt Princes gave them clandeſtinely ſwell'd their Authority to that Height, that ſhe was often reduced to the Neceſſity of winking at them, for want of Means ſufficient to cruſh them.

As the extirpating of theſe Hereſies concern'd the Popes more than any Body elſe, ſo they did all that lay in their Power to root them out; and for that Purpoſe they left no Stone unturned, but inſtigated all thoſe who were immediately ſubordinate to them, and were continually writing to Biſhops, to Princes and Magiſtrates, exhorting them to do their utmoſt to extirpate the Enemies of the Church.

BUT

BUT whether it were that Princes and civil Magiſtrates were not willing to deſtroy a Multitude of People, who ſeemed to weaken the Authority of the Church from no other View than to heighten their own, or that they did not believe them to be ſo criminal as they were repreſented, or that Policy, which ſometimes changes with the Times, and aſſumes a Face according to the Variety of Intereſts, made them of Opinion that the tolerating them would be advantageous to the State, it is certain that they were not very zealous in reſtraining them. On the other Side, the Biſhops, whether it were that they were not powerful enough to ſtem the Impetuoſity of this Torrent, or that buſied in other Branches of the miniſterial Function, they had not Time ſufficient to purſue this Affair with the Vigour it naturally required, it is certain that they did not firſt oppoſe it with ſo much Rigour, or at leaſt Succeſs, as might have been wiſhed.

BY this Means theſe Heretics grew at laſt ſo formidable as to find themſelves able to make head againſt the Popes themſelves. The Followers of Arnold of Breſcia who were of this Number, reduced them to the greateſt Streights: They forced them more than once to leave Rome, and to ſeek an Aſylum elſewhere, in order to ſhelter themſelves from their Fury; and had it not been for the Puniſhment which was inflicted on the Ring-Leader, who, having been executed publicly in Rome for Hereſy and Sedition, ſtruck the whole Party with Dread and Terror, it would have been impoſſible for the Popes to have maintain'd their Authority in that City.

THE Vaudois and the Albigenſes, their Succeſſors, were equal Enemies to the Authority of the Church, and as vigorous in attacking it; and that which made them ſtill bolder, as well as more formidable, was the Protection they met with from Raymond Count of Toulouſe, and the Count of Foix and of Comminges. It was therefore thought proper to employ more violent Methods, than had hitherto been made uſe of againſt Heretics.

THESE Methods reſulted at laſt to the publiſhing a Cruſade againſt them; an Expedient which the Popes had formerly, on other Occaſions, employ'd with ſo much Succeſs. Pope Innocent III. a Man of a bold and enterpriſing Temper, and ſucceſsful in all his Attempts, reſolved to try what this would do. However, he at the ſame Time thought proper to apply Lenitives, and to ſee whether Preaching and Diſputation would not prove effectual in converting theſe Heretics; and for this Purpoſe he ſent ſeveral Miſſionaries into Languedoc, with St. Dominic, and the bleſſed Peter of Chateauneuf, at their Head. But as theſe did not meet with a Succeſs anſwerable to their Zeal, and the above-mention'd Peter having been cruelly maſſacred near Toulouſe, Anno Dom. 1200. the Pope reſolved to employ temporal Weapons againſt them; and having himſelf been a famous Lawyer, he by a Quirk of Law, made theſe Heretics be conſider'd as Mahometans, becauſe they had this in common with them, viz. were equally Enemies to the Church.

UPON this Foundation the Pope granted Indulgences to St. Dominic, and his Diſciples were ordered to publiſh them in all Places under their Juriſdiction in the following Senſe: That all who either by their Credit or Money ſhould contribute to the Extirpation of Heretics, ſhould obtain them as fully as though they themſelves fought againſt them. Upon which a powerful Army of choſen Soldiers was ſoon levied.

As Raymond Count of Toulouſe was the moſt powerful Protector of the Albigenſes, the Pope was reſolved to fall upon him firſt [a]; but he not finding himſelf able to withſtand ſo formidable a Power, ſubmitted himſelf to the Pope, withdrew his Protection from the Al- bigenſes,

bigenſes, and delivered up ſeven of the principal Cities of Provence and Languedoc, by way of Security for the Performance of his Promiſe.

THUS the Army of the Cruſados having done their Buſineſs with the Count of Toulouſe, who, as we juſt now obſerved, had ſubmitted himſelf, they turned off towards Beziers, where the Albigenſes had ſtrongly intrenched themſelves. They beſieged the City in Form, which not being able to withſtand an hundred thouſand Cruſados, was taken, and burnt to the Ground. They cut to Pieces all the Men, Women, and Children they found in the Place; a general Maſſacree enſued, wherein no Regard was had to Age or Sex: They did not pardon ſo much as one ſingle Perſon; and the Roman Catholics themſelves, a ſmall Number of whom were in that City, fell undiſtinguiſhed among the reſt.

THIS Example which had been made of Beziers, though a dreadful one, did not yet hinder the Count of Beziers, who enjoy'd the ſame Sovereignty over Carcaſſone, from withdrawing into this latter City, which he defended to the laſt Extremity. He himſelf was a Roman Catholic; but whether it were that he was offended at the little Regard that had been paid to his Mediation, in the Endeavours he had uſed to ſave Beziers; or that he could not bear to ſee his Territories laid waſte, and his Subjects, whom he thought it his Duty to protect and defend, cut to Pieces in this Manner, under a Pretence of Religion; or that he could not perſuade himſelf that Religion was the only Motive for raiſing this bloody War, he took a Reſolution to oppoſe the Attempts of the Cruſados, and to defend Carcaſſone; firmly reſolv'd either to ſave it, or bury himſelf under its Ruins.

IN this Place he was ſoon hemm'd in by the Cruſados, whoſe Army at that Time conſiſted of three hundred thouſand Men; for ſince the taking of Beziers, it was increaſed by a numberleſs Multitude of People, who crowded to it from all Parts; as alſo a great Number of powerful Noblemen, who came to the Rendezvous on very different Motives.

HOWEVER, this prodigious Multitude of Enemies did not in the leaſt terrify the undaunted Count of Beziers. He publiſhed a Manifeſto, in which he declared he had no other Intention than to perſevere to the laſt Gaſp in the Profeſſion of the Catholic Faith; that this however ſhould not hinder him from protecting his Territories and his Subjects, of what Perſuaſion ſoever, and that becauſe he thought himſelf obliged to it from the Law of Nature, which of all others ought to be preſerved moſt inviolably, and by the mutual Promiſe he and they had made not to abandon each other: That he did not look upon this as a religious War, but as a Project concerted purpoſely to deprive him and the Counts of Toulouſe, Foix, and Comminges, of their reſpective Dominions; he therefore exhorted them to unite with him, and to be at laſt ſenſible of their true Intereſts, which were inſeparable from his; but though they ſhould not conſpire with his Reſolutions, he was however reſolutely bent to riſque alone all the Danger that might enſue from this War: That ſince his Enemies were reſolved upon his Deſtruction, let him act how he would, it were better to die couragiouſly, Sword-in-Hand, than to ſurvive the Loſs of his Poſſeſſions, the Ruin of his ſtrong Holds, and the Slaughter of his Subjects. For the reſt he called Heaven and Earth to witneſs his Innocence, with regard to all the Evils which the War muſt inevitably draw after it, ſince he would never have engaged in it but from the unavoidable Neceſſity he was under of defending himſelf againſt thoſe who were reſolved to deprive him of his Poſſeſſions by the moſt unjuſt Methods.

THE Cruſados made no manner of Anſwer to this Manifeſto; ſo that a vigorous Attack was immediately prepared on one Side; and on the other a fixed Reſolution was taken, to hold out to the laſt Extremity.

THE City of Carcaſſone was then, as in our Days, divided into two Parts; the firſt, which was called the City, ſtood on a Hill that was ſtrongly fortified; the other was called the Borough, and was built at ſome Diſtance from the City, which being weak was eaſily taken; when, as before had happened at Beziers, all the Inhabitants were put to Fire and Sword, and no Diſtinction made of Age, Sex, or Quality.

THIS cruel Treatment was ſo far from intimidating thoſe who fought in the upper Town, with the Count of Beziers at their Head, as they had flattered themſelves it would, that it ſerved rather to confirm them in the Reſolution they had taken of ſelling their Lives at the deareſt Rate.

WHILE Matters [a] were thus carrying on, the King of Arragon arrived at the Camp of the Cruſados, and immediately interceded for the Count of Beziers; but all he could obtain from the Pope's Legate, who in reality was the chief Commander in this Enterprize, was, that the Count himſelf, with nine Aſſociates, ſhould have free Liberty to retire whereſoever he ſhould think proper; but that all the Inhabitants ſhould ſurrender at Diſcretion, ſhould come ſtark naked out of the City, and in that Condition ſubmit themſelves to the Legate's Mercy.

BUT the Count de Beziers rejected the Offer with the utmoſt Deteſtation, and reſolved to ſuffer the worſt that might happen. The Inhabitants following his Example, fought like ſo many Deſperadoes, and a great Number of the Cruſados loſt their Lives under the Walls of Carcaſſone.

AT length the Legate deſpairing to carry by Force a Place defended by ſo brave a Man, and ſeconded by the Inhabitants of equal Intrepidity with himſelf, reſolved to make himſelf Maſter of it, though by the moſt infamous Methods; and imagining he might ſtop at Nothing, provided he only came off victorious, he diſpatched a Gentleman to the Count, who prevailed upon him to come out of the City, ſwearing the moſt horrid Oaths, that they would not hurt a Hair of his Head, and making the moſt ſpecious Promiſes that the Legate would enter into Articles with him with the utmoſt Sincerity; but no ſooner was he come before him, than he was ſeized, and made Priſoner of War.

THE Inhabitants of Carcaſſone, in the deepeſt Affliction for the Impriſonment of their Count, loſt the Courage they had diſplay'd all the Time he had continued at their Head, and which perhaps would at laſt have ſaved them. But now they thought only of ſecuring themſelves by Flight, in which they were favoured by a ſubterraneous Paſſage, which extended to three Leagues Diſtance from the Camp. In this Manner they eſcaped the Fury of the Cruſados, who in all Probability would have given them no better Treatment than the Inhabitants of Beziers, and thoſe of the lower Town, had met with from them.

THE Legate having made himſelf Maſter of Carcaſſone, fixed his Head Quarters there, and made it his Place of Arms againſt the Albigenſes. Count Simon of Montfort had the Title of General of the Church beſtowed upon him; and in order to engage him more firmly in her Service, upon the Count de Beziers dying in Priſon of Grief, or

ſome other Calamity, he had ſeveral fine Tracts of Ground given him, of which the other had been diſpoſſeſſed; and at the ſame Time was aſſured, that whatever Conqueſts he might gain over the Albigenſes, a conſiderable Part of them ſhould be his own.

THIS new-created General of the Church, although animated by Preſents of ſo valuable a Nature, and by Promiſes that flattered equally his Intereſt and Ambition, was, nevertheleſs, ſome Time before he attempted any Thing; by which means the Albigenſes had an Opportunity of recovering and fortifying themſelves. He was a brave Man, had great Experience, was active, and, to crown all, was attended by good Fortune; but the Cruſados, who had made a Vow to ſerve only forty Days, withdrew themſelves at the Expiration of that Time.

THE [a] Year following, his Lady and his Adherents brought a ſtrong Body of Cruſados to his Aſſiſtance: Theſe he employ'd with great Conduct and Succeſs, and by their Help reduced all ſuch Places as refuſed to ſubmit to him. The ſtrong Caſtle of Menerbe, which had firſt dared to reſiſt the Power of his Arms, was the firſt that was carried by Force, and all its Inhabitants were put to the Sword. The City of Lavaur met afterwards with the ſame Fate; it was beſieged, taken, and ſacked, and the Slaughter here was as general as at Menerbe. Count de Montfort ſucceeded in all his Enterprizes, Victory followed him wherever he went, and all Things ſeem'd to conſpire the Ruin of the Albigenſes, when two very unexpected Events had like to have recovered them all they had loſt, and to have ruined the Catholic Party.

RAYMOND Count of Toulouſe was gone to Rome, in order to reconcile himſelf to the Pope, which he effected. Among other Conditions, he was required to drive the Albigenſes out of his Territories. This he gave his Word to do; but being returned to his Dominions, and called upon to perform his Promiſe, he firſt had Recourſe to Delays; but afterwards finding he had no farther Excuſe to make, he declared in expreſs Terms, he could never prevail upon himſelf to do it, ſince he ſhould thereby be forced to depopulate his Country.

UPON this Refuſal the Pope's Legate excommunicated him, and commanded Count de Montfort to declare War againſt him. Count de Foix was included in the ſame Declaration, and Promiſe was made to the General of the Church, that he ſhould be inveſted with the Demeſnes of thoſe two Princes, in caſe he could diſpoſſeſs them thereof.

COUNT de Montfort encouraged by theſe mighty Promiſes, which were capable of ſatisfying a yet more ambitious Mind than his, ſince they tended to make him abſolute Sovereign of the greateſt Part of the South of France, immediately took the Field. He ſoon became Maſter of every Hold or Place that was not capable of making a vigorous Defence. He forced the two Counts to quit the Field, and to throw themſelves into the ſtrong Holds, in order to defend them; but as the beſt fortified Place muſt at laſt ſurrender when unaſſiſted by an Army in the Field, the Ruin of theſe two Princes was inevitable, had it not been prevented by an unforeſeen Accident.

THE King of Arragon, who hitherto had either endeavour'd to mediate a Peace between both Parties, or ſided with the Cruſados; whether it were that he could not bear to ſee the Count of Toulouſe his Brother-in-Law ſtripp'd of his Dominions, or that he thought it his Duty not to ſuffer the Count de Foix, who was his Vaſſal, to be oppreſſed; or from an inward Diſcontent, at his having been forgot in the Diviſion propoſed to be made of the Spoils of theſe two Princes; declared in their Favour, at a Time when it was leaſt expected, and abandoned Count de Montfort.

THIS

THIS Proceeding of the King of Arragon put a ſtop to all the Succeſſes of the Cruſados, and happily reſtored the Affairs of the Albigenſes; ſo that in a little Time they brought an Army of an hundred thouſand Men into the Field, compoſed of Arragonians, Languedocians, and Provencals. And as they imagined themſelves ſtrong enough to attempt any Thing, they did not ſtay for Count de Mountfort's coming up to them, but marched forward to meet him, and boldly preſented him Battle.

HOWEVER Count de Montfort was no way terrified, either by the Multitude of the Enemy, or the good Order in which they advanced, but accepted of the Battle that was preſented him. Both Sides fought with all the Animoſity with which Religion united to Intereſt is uſed to inſpire two oppoſite Parties; but the King of Arragon having loſt his Life in the Heat of the Engagement, the Albigenſes were ſeized with a panic Fear. This threw them into a Diſorder, which was unhappily followed by their Defeat; for Count de Montfort taking Advantage of their Surprize, fell upon them on all Sides with ſo much Vigour, that he put them to Flight, after having killed twenty thouſand of them upon the Spot.

THE Albigenſes being routed in this Manner, Count de Montfort employed all his Thoughts in making the beſt Advantage of the Victory he had gained. He preſented himſelf before Toulouſe, which immediately ſurrendered at Diſcretion. He next made himſelf Maſter of Narbonne; and during the four Years that Count de Montfort ſurvived this Victory, his Arms were continually attended with Succeſs.

BUT at laſt, by an unexpected Turn of Fortune, Count Raymond recovered Toulouſe in 1215. towards which Place Count de Montfort advanced with an Army of an hundred thouſand Cruſados, and beſieged him in it. And now Providence changing the Fate of War, all the Cruſados were routed; and Count de Montfort, after having received a Wound in his Thigh with a Sword, was killed by a Shot from a Croſs-Bow diſcharged from the Rampart.

THE Death of this Nobleman had like to have intirely ruined the Affairs of the Roman Catholics; for the Counts of Toulouſe, of Foix, and of Comminges, ſoon recover'd all they had been diſpoſſeſſed of, and for ſome Time preſerved all thoſe ſeveral Advantages, when the Death of Count Raymond again changed the Face of Things.

YOUNG Raymond, his Son, having ſucceeded him in 1220. and continuing the War with a Force inferior to that of his Enemies, met with a continual Series of ill Succeſs, ſo that he was at laſt obliged to ſurrender, and was afterwards carried Priſoner to Pavia. To recover his Liberty, he was obliged, in 1223. to agree to and ſign ſuch Articles as his Enemies were pleaſed to make, and, among the reſt, ſeveral very ſevere Edicts againſt the Albigenſes.

ON the other Side, the Counts of Foix and of Comminges, finding themſelves unable to oppoſe the Power of ſo many Enemies as were continually attacking them on all Sides, ſurrendered upon the beſt Terms the Enemy would grant them. Thus ended the War of the Albigenſes, after it had coſt more Blood and Treaſure than would have been employed in conquering an Empire.

CHAP. II.

The Wars raiſed on account of the Eſtabliſhment of the INQUISITION.

TO this War which had been carried on openly againſt the Albigenſes, ſucceeded that of the Inquiſition, which completed the Ruin of the unhappy ſurviving Heretics. It had been eſtabliſhed ſome Time before, by the Authority of Innocent III. and the Care of St. Dominic.

THIS Pope conſidering that how much ſoever the Power of the Albigenſes might be weakened by open Force, yet great Numbers of them would ſtill ſurvive, who would perſiſt in the ſame Opinions, and profeſs the ſame Doctrine in private, thought it neceſſary, in order to put a ſtop to this and every other kind of Hereſy, to eſtabliſh a ſtanding Remedy, viz. a Tribunal compoſed of Perſons whoſe ſole Buſineſs ſhould be the detecting and puniſhing of Heretics.

To effect this, it was abſolutely neceſſary that theſe Perſons ſhould be wholly dependent on the Court of Rome, and entirely devoted to its Intereſt; that they ſhould not be diſtracted by other Buſineſs, or taken off by other Avocations: It was proper for them to be mean and inſignificant, in outward Appearance, to the End that they might look upon an Employment as honourable, which, in thoſe Days, was wholly confined to the detecting of Heretics: It was neceſſary they ſhould be Perſons of Rank, of Birth, and bound by no manner of Ties of Relation, to the End they might not have the leaſt Regard or Conſideration for any Perſon whatever; that they ſhould be hard-hearted, inflexible, and of a Breaſt uninform'd with Pity and Compaſſion; foraſmuch as they were intended to compoſe the moſt ſevere and rigorous Tribunal that had ever been eſtabliſh'd. In a Word, it was neceſſary they ſhould be very zealous for Religion, of no great Parts or Learning, but ſuch whoſe Intereſt obliged them to do all that lay in their Power to extirpate Heretics.

POPE Innocent being unſatisfied with the Conduct of the Biſhops and Officers of their ſeveral Courts, whoſe Zeal againſt the Heretics appear'd to him faint and languid, thought he ſaw in the Religious of the newly inſtituted Orders of St. Dominic and St. Francis, all the Qualities neceſſary for his Purpoſe.

THESE Monks were inviolably attach'd to the Intereſt of the Court of Rome; the Solitude and Retirement they profeſſed, and which, as afterwards appear'd, began to grow tedious to them, allow'd them Time ſufficient for purſuing this laudable Work. The Meadneſs of their Dreſs and of their Monaſteries, ſo different from what we find them in our Days, and above all, the Cuſtom of begging up and down, and the great Humility they openly profeſſed, muſt naturally make them conſider the Poſt of Inquiſitor, as an Employment perfectly well adapted to ſooth thoſe Remains of Ambition they might have ſtill left. The general Renunciation they made, even of the Names and Families from which they were deſcended, was a great Step towards their being inſenſible to all thoſe Senſations, which the Ties of Nature, as well as thoſe of civil Life, de uſually inſpire. Beſides, the Auſterity of their Rule, and the Severities which they practiſed on themſelves, was far from informing them with the leaſt Compaſſion or Senſibility for their Neighbour, ſince they had not the leaſt Tenderneſs for themſelves. In a Word, they were very zealous, as all Profeſſors of newly eſtabliſhed Religions are generally found to be, and learned according to the Genius of that Age, i. e. very well verſed in the Learning of the Schools, and the Knowledge of the new Canon-Law; not to mention that they were more immediately prompted to do all that lay in their Power to extirpate Heretics, becauſe theſe were eternally exclaiming againſt them, and left no Stone unturned in order to ruin them in the Minds of the People.

THE Pope therefore having found in theſe Monks all the Qualities he judged requiſite for thoſe he intended for Inquiſitors of the Faith, made no Difficulty to confide that Employment to them; and they on the other Side acted their Part ſo well, as fully anſwered all the Pope, or the Court of Rome expected from them.

BUT as the moſt important Eſtabliſhments whatſoever do not immediately arrive at Perfection, and that ſomething is continually adding, either from Seaſons or Occaſions, which at laſt carries them to their greateſt Height, theſe Inquiſitors were not at firſt inveſted with the great Authority they have ſince enjoyed, and in which they now triumph. Their Power was at firſt confined to labour only at the Converſion of Heretics, by the ſalutary Methods of Preaching and Inſtruction; to admoniſh Princes and other Magiſtrates, to puniſh alſo ſuch capitally as ſhould perſiſt obſtinately in their Errors; to get Information of the Number and Quality of Heretics, and of the Zeal which Roman Catholic Princes and Magiſtrates might diſcover in proſecuting them, and of the Care and Diligence which the Biſhops and their Officials uſed in ſearching after them. They uſed to ſend theſe Informations to Rome, where they were ſubmitted to the Judgment of the Pope, who acted therein as he thought proper; and 'tis from theſe Informations and Inquiries, that the Name of Inquiſitor is borrowed.

SOME Time after, their Authority was enlarged, and they were impower'd to grant Indulgences, to publiſh Cruſades, to foment the Spirits of the People and of Sovereign Princes; to head the Cruſados, and to lead them on to extirpate Heretics: And for about fifty Years things continued in this State, i. e. till the Year 1250.

IN 1244. the Emperor Frederick II. very much encreaſed their Authority, by four Edicts which he publiſhed in Pavia, whereby he received the Inquiſitors under his Protection, impowering Eccleſiaſtics to take Cognizance of all Matters relating to Hereſy, and leaving to the ſecular Judges the Authority of proſecuting Heretics, after that the Churchmen had paſſed Sentence on their Tenets. He commanded that all obſtinate Heretics ſhould be burnt, and even condemned to perpetual Impriſonment all who ſhould repent of their Errors.

THE Quarrels and Animoſities which have interven'd between ſovereign Princes and the Roman Pontiffs, have always, in the long run, proved fatal to Heretics; whether it were that thoſe Princes who engaged in ſuch Diſputes, were really animated with a true Zeal for Religion at the ſame Time; and that they themſelves abſtracted from all political Views, have from their own proper Impulſe been inclined to protect it; or that their Aim was, by theſe outward Marks of their Adherence to the Roman Catholic Faith, to keep the Populace up to their Duty, who are but too naturally apt to be ſcandaliz'd on ſuch Occaſions, FREDERICK was ſo much the more obliged to ſhew himſelf zealous for Religion, as the Popes, his bitter Enemies, in order to ruin him in the Minds of the People, and to ſtir up all the Chriſtians againſt him, had accuſed him in all the Catholic Courts of Europe with a Deſign of quitting the Chriſtian Faith, and of turning [a] Mahometan.

[a] Mat. Paris, ad Ann. 1230.

This

This probably might be the occaſion of his acting with greater Vigour againſt the Heretics than any of his Predeceſſors had done; for he was the firſt that ever pretended to condemn all Heretics to Death without Diſtinction.

BUT whatever might be the Motives that prevail'd on that Prince to act with ſo much Severity againſt them, it is certain, that tho' he might find his private Advantage in it, yet it was of real Prejudice to his Succeſſors, and the Authority he then devolved on the Inquiſitors, has been ſince employ'd with great Advantage in Italy, againſt the Friends of the Empire. Care was always taken to encreaſe their Authority, to render them more formidable, and to employ them ſtill more efficaciouſly, under a Religious Pretence, againſt thoſe who ſhould dare to oppoſe the temporal Authority of the Pope. This Truth is ſo notorious, that it would be a downright Folly to contradict it.

IN 1322. John XXII. cauſed the Inquiſitors to take out Informations againſt Matthew Viſconti, Sovereign of Milan. Accordingly he was declared a Heretic, and this Declaration was followed by a moſt ſevere Bull, by which he prohibited all Princes of Italy from holding the leaſt Correſpondence with either him or his Subjects. It is nevertheleſs notorious, that the Hereſy which was laid to his Charge was only another Name given to the Zeal he had, and which it was his Duty to have, in Quality of a Vaſſal of the Empire, for the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria's Party, whom the Pope, though on very ill-grounded Pretenſions, had reſolv'd to regard as an Enemy.

THE ſame Year Guy Rangon Biſhop of Ferrara, and Brother Bon the Iuquiſitor, after having taken out an Information againſt the Princes of the Houſe of Eſte, and declared them Heretics, publiſhed a Monitory, by which all Perſons of what Quality ſoever, were forbid to hold the leaſt Correſpondence of what kind ſoever, with either them, their Adherents, or Subjects. And yet all their Crime was for having recovered Ferrara, which the Pope had ſeiz'd.

IN 1355, Innocent VI. gave no better Treatment to the Matataſti, to Francis Ordelaſe, and William Manfredi. He went farther, and publiſh'd a Cruſade againſt them, as though they had been ſo many Infidels and Heretics; and that for no other Reaſon, but becauſe the former had ſeiz'd upon Rimini, and the latter from Faenza, of which the Pope pretended to be the only lawful Sovereign. And indeed, without changing either their Opinions or their Doctrine, they at once ceaſed to be Heretics, the Moment they agreed to hold thoſe Cities in Quality of his Holineſs's Vicars.

BUT without going ſo far for Examples, it is well known that towards the Cloſe of the laſt Century, ſo long as the Diſputes between Paul IV. and Philip II. of Spain ſubſiſted, which was carried on merely from ſecular Views, the Pope did not make the leaſt Scruple to declare publicly, both in the Conſiſtory, in Preſence of his Embaſſadors, or upon any other Occaſion, That the King of Spain and the Emperor Charles V. his Father, were both Heretics. But as he was not in a Condition to prejudice ſo powerful a Prince by this Accuſation, theſe Reproaches had no other Effect than to prove, that whoever oppoſes the temporal Intereſt of the Court of Rome, is properly looked upon as a Heretic by all the Pope's Creatures.

IT is from the ſame View of ſupporting and increaſing Pretenſions merely of a civil Kind, and no ways relating to Religion, that the Inquiſition is employ'd to cenſure as heretical all ſuch Books as extend too far (according to the domineering Spirit of the Court of Rome) the Rights and Prerogatives of temporal Princes. This, among other Things, was done in the Beginning of this Century, when the Diſpute broke out between Paul V. and the Republic of Venice. Theſe Diſputes, as every one knows, were founded only on temporal Pretenſions, wherein Religion was no ways concerned. For the ſupporting them ſeveral Writers were employed on both Sides; but whatever was writ in Favour of the Republic, was cenſured as heretical by all the Inquiſitions in Italy, notwithſtanding that the Doctrine therein contained was pure and ſound, and approved by all learned Men in the other States of Chriſtendom. It was even pretended, that all whom they ſuſpected to be the Authors of thoſe Pieces againſt the Rights of the Roman Pontiff, ought to anſwer for them before the Inquiſition, i. e. be condemned by that Tribunal as Heretics; and indeed all thoſe were ſo who were ſilly enough to ſubmit themſelves to it.

IN Conſequence of theſe Pretenſions, Cardinal Bellarmine wrote about the ſame Time in favour of the Pope's Authority. In this Treatiſe he aſſerts, That all Chriſtian Princes are ſubject to the Pope, not only in Spirituals, but in Matters purely Temporal: And does not ſcruple to treat all thoſe as Heretics, who maintain that Princes, even in temporal Affairs, are ſubject to God only. There is room to believe, that the Cardinal did not believe what he himſelf writ, ſince he had too much Learning not to know that the Doctrine which he condemned as heretical, was that of the antient Church, and of all the Roman Catholic Churches in his Time; thoſe excepted which were immediately ſubject to the Eccleſiaſtical State.

HENCE it is evidently manifeſt, that Frederick II. when he increaſed the Authority of the Inquiſitors, did not know his true Intereſts; or in Caſe he knew them, that he neglected to purſue them.

NEVERTHELESS this Law which Frederic had enacted ſo much in favour of the Inquiſitors, and ſo prejudicial to the Heretics, had little or no Effect for ſeveral Years. This was owing to the Diſputes and Quarrels that all along ſubſiſted between the Pope and the Emperor, and which both Sides carried to the utmoſt Height.

THEY were firſt ſtarted in the Reign of Innocent III. who had been Frederic's Guardian, and were continued under Honorius III. Succeſſor to Innocent; but upon Gregory the Ninth's ſucceeding Honorius, no Meaſures were kept by either Party. Frederick was excommunicated three different Times; all Lombardy, and Part of Germany, were ſtirred up againſt him; the ſame Cruſade was publiſhed againſt him as if he had been an Infidel Prince, or a profeſſed Heretic; nay, ſome [a] Hiſtorians do not ſcruple to ſay, that his own Son was excited to rebel againſt him.

BUT the Emperor triumphed over all theſe Enemies, and Gregory IX. who had been as much his Foe as Gregory VII. had been that of Henry IV. departed this Life before him. Pope Celeſtine IV. his Succeſſor, had ſo ſhort a Reign, that he had not Time to renew the Quarrel. After his Death the holy See continued vacant two Years, and was at laſt filled by Cardinal Sinibaldus, who aſſumed the Name of Innocent IV.

IT was now the general Opinion, that his Election would put an End to theſe great Diviſions, and reconcile the Papacy and the Empire; becauſe the Pope, when Cardinal, had profeſſed the utmoſt Friendſhip for the Emperor: But Ambition diſſolves the ſtricteſt Ties; nor was it poſſible for them to be of the leaſt Force, in Intereſts that were of ſo delicate a Nature, as thoſe between his Holineſs and his Imperial Majeſty.

BUT Innocent would not give up the leaſt Pretenſion which his Predeceſſors had claimed of the Emperor, and thereby plainly ſhewed, that the Court of Rome always

puſhes directly forward to the Object in View, and that nothing can ever make them recede when they are once embarked in any Enterprize, in which they think their Glory and Intereſts are the leaſt concerned.

ON the other Side, Frederick was reſolved not to give up the ſmalleſt of his Rights, or do any Thing derogatory to the Majeſty of the Empire. The Diviſions broke out again with the utmoſt Fury; as uſually happens when Friends ceaſe to be ſo any longer, and that Hatred ſucceeds to Friendſhip.

AT firſt Matters were carried on very briskly, and with great Succeſs on the Emperor's Side: And being perſuaded that the late Acceſſion of this Pope to the Pontificate was a Circumſtance he ought to make his Advantage of, that it would be proper to reduce him before he had amaſſed any conſiderable Sums, and raiſe up new Enemies againſt him, he accordingly fell upon him with ſo much Fury, that he forced him to abandon Italy.

BUT the Pope, notwithſtanding the Emperor's great Succeſs, could not be induced to abandon the ſmalleſt of his Pretenſions; but withdrawing to France, he ſtopt at Lions, becauſe of its advantageous Situation, which furniſhed him with an Opportunity of holding a Correſpondence with Italy and the other States of Europe, and there he ſummoned a General Council, in order to debate upon excommunicating and depoſing the Emperor.

THE Kings of France [a] and England ſollicited in his Favour, but to no Purpoſe; nor did Frederick himſelf, who plainly foreſaw the unhappy Conſequences of it, leave one Stone unturned in order to divert the Storm. He ſubmitted to ſuch Conditions as could not poſſibly be more grievous to an Emperor, or more ſatisfactory to a Sovereign Pontiff; for he promiſed to march with a powerful Army into the Holy Land, and never to return from thence, provided he might only be ſuffered to enjoy the Title of Emperor unmoleſted.

HOWEVER the Sollicitations both of France and England were fruitleſs and ineffectual, the Emperor's Offers were rejected, and he was ſolemnly excommunicated and depoſed from the Empire.

THE Excommunication and Depoſition of Frederick were attended with all thoſe fatal Conſequences he had foreſeen, and which he had done his utmoſt to divert; for the greateſt Part of Germany roſe up againſt him; his Depoſition made in the Council of Lions was ratified, and Henry Landgrave of Turinge and of Heſſe was elected Emperor in his Room. However he did not enjoy the Empire long, but loſt it ſome Time after with his Life, in a Battle fought againſt Conrard Son of Frederick, who was carrying on the War in Germany, at the ſame Time his Father was proſecuting it with great Succeſs in Italy.

ONE would have thought that the Death of the Landgrave would have put an End to the Schiſm in the Empire, but it happened otherwiſe; for the Pope had ſo much Credit in Germany, that he got a Succeſſor appointed to him, who was William Count of Holland.

THE new Emperor was at firſt as unſucceſsful as the former had been; Conrard beat him wherever he came up with him, and always came off with Advantage: But the

[a] St. Lewis, and Henry III.

Death of Frederick, which happen'd ſome Time after, viz. in 1250, and the indiſpenſable Obligation which Conrard his Son, who had now aſſumed the Title of Emperor, was under to leave Germany, in order to preſerve the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, of which his Enemies were endeavouring to diſpoſſeſs him, gave Count William an Opportunity of enjoying the Empire for ſome Years, with a Tranquility altogether unexpected, and indeed much greater than the State of Affairs in Germany ſeemed to promiſe him.

AFTER his Death the Princes of the Empire, whoſe Intereſt it was to heal all former Sores, in order to give the Germans an Opportunity of recovering their great and frequent Loſſes, had freſh Diviſions among themſelves. They elected two Emperors, but theſe reigned very few Years, and were indeed even nominally ſo. Their Death was follow'd by an Interregnum of about twenty Years, whereof the Princes of the Empire were the Occaſion; for they, during that Time, were divided into different Factions; and being very much exaſperated againſt one another, could never agree in the Choice of an Emperor.

IT was impoſſible but ſo long a Vacancy of the Imperial Throne, and at ſo unſeaſonable a Juncture, muſt be attended with the moſt fatal Conſequences: And indeed worſe could not have happened; for during all the Time the Interregnum laſted it was torn to Pieces by the moſt bloody Civil Wars.

BUT whilſt the Popes and Emperors bent all their Thoughts on proſecuting the War, and that the Princes and Biſhops of their reſpective Parties had no longer the leaſt Regard for Religion, the Heretics made their Advantage of ſo favourable a Juncture. The Progreſs they made in a very little Time ſurprized the Pope, whom it affected more than all the reſt together. He therefore reſolved to apply ſuch a Remedy to it as he thought the moſt effectual, and accordingly reſumed the Deſign of the Inquiſition, and of eſtabliſhing a perpetual and independent Tribunal, whoſe only Buſineſs ſhould be to take Cognizance of heretical Matters.

THE Interregnum ſtill continued, and the Pope, who during the preſent unhappy Poſture of Affairs in Germany, was able alone to put an End to it by electing an Emperor, was very far from attempting any Thing of this Nature, as he gain'd two very conſiderable Advantages thereby. The firſt was, that during the Vacancy of the Imperial Seat, he claimed ſo many Rights in the Empire, that it would have been impoſſible for the moſt juſtly elected Emperor to claim more: The other was, that the Interregnum gave him an Opportunity of acting in Lombardy, as though he had been abſolute Sovereign thereof; and gave him, in Reality, the abſolute Diſpoſal of all Affairs in Italy. Innocent was too cunning not to make his Advantage of ſo many favourable Circumſtances; and the two Orders of St. Dominic and St. Francis, had done him ſuch Service, and diſplay'd ſo much Courage againſt the Heretics, by expoſing themſelves to the greateſt Dangers in the Execution of their Employments of Inquiſitors, that it was natural for him to confide to no other Perſons the Tribunal of the Inquiſition, which he was reſolved to ſet up in Italy, and in other Places, where he might have Authority ſufficient to procure its Eſtabliſhment.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

The Difficulties that oppoſed the Eſtabliſhment of the INQUISITION.

THIS Affair being debated, the Pope's Council immediately foreſaw two Obſtacles which it would be no eaſy Matter to ſurmount: The firſt was, that all Biſhops would not fail to oppoſe the Erection of the Inquiſition, ſince that could not be effected without bereaving them of the Power of taking Cognizance of heretical Matters, which they juſtly claimed as their Right, and of which they had always been, and were ſtill, in Poſſeſſion. That they would not fail to aſſert, that they were as fit to judge Heretics, as a Company of Monks, whoſe Inſtitution was of a very modern Date, and who had neither their Authority, nor the Means of putting it in Execution; and that ſufficient Prejudice had been already done them in withdrawing thoſe Friars from their Juriſdiction, to which they were ſubject by all the antient Canons, and the conſtant Practice of the Church; without going ſtill greater Lengths, and eſtabliſhing them Judges over their Flock, and perhaps over themſelves, in an Article of ſo delicate and extenſive a Nature as that of Doctrine and Belief; that from all theſe Conſiderations, they had ſcarce Room to hope the Biſhops would conſent to the ſetting up of this Tribunal. That if an Attempt ſhould be made to ſet it up againſt their Wills, they ſhould be obliged to employ ſuch Methods as would be too rigorous. That tho' ſuch a Reſolution ſhould be taken, and they be certain of the Succeſs of it, it yet would be impoſſible for this Eſtabliſhment to ſubſiſt, and that the Biſhops would at laſt deſtroy it entirely. That indeed the greateſt Veneration was paid to the Holy See, but at the ſame Time an equal Reſpect was ſhewn to the epiſcopal Function; an indiſputable Proof of which was manifeſt from the ſupreme Authority of the Church, which all Chriſtians in general aſcribed to œcumenical Councils. In a word, that the See of Rome owed the greateſt Part of its Credit and Authority to Biſhops, they having known how to exert it on all proper Occaſions; that they had given up Part of their own Authority for its Sake; and that all Things are commonly beſt preſerved by employing the ſame Methods which have been uſed in acquiring them, it was of the greateſt Importance to the Holy See, to continue in the ſtricteſt Union with the reſt of the Biſhops; conſequently that the Wounding them in ſo tender a Part, would prove fatal to the Pontificate.

THE ſecond Obſtacle, which was full as ſtrong and equally difficult to ſurmount, was, That it would be impoſſible to eſtabliſh the Inquiſition in the Manner projected, without depriving at the ſame Time the Lay-Judges of the Power they have always enjoyed of proſecuting Heretics, and which had been confirmed to them by the laſt Ordinances of Frederick II. And indeed this Emperor, at the ſame Time that he enlarged the Authority of the Inquiſitors, and taken them under his Protection, had nevertheleſs ordained, that the civil Magiſtrate ſhould proceed to the Condemnation and Execution of Heretics, after the Inquiſitors had made their Report to him.

HENCE it was eaſy to conclude, that they would oppoſe with no leſs Vigour than the Biſhops, the ſetting up of a Tribunal, which muſt inevitably ruin a Part of their Juriſdiction. Further, it was natural for them to imagine, that all the Sovereigns of Chriſtendom would think it no leſs their Intereſt to prevent the Eſtabliſhment of the Inquiſition, ſince on one Side they were obliged to ſupport the Magiſtrates in the Authority they they had devolved upon them; and on the other, that in caſe they conſented to it, they would thereby yield to divide the Sovereign Authority, to which the Power of Life and Death, which the Pope intended to beſtow on the Inquiſitors, was inſeparably annexed.

THESE Obſtacles, which at firſt Sight appeared inſurmountable, would have made them quite lay aſide the Deſign of erecting the projected Tribunal, at leaſt upon the Foot it was then intended to have been ſet up, had not the Pope, who was not eaſily prevailed with to lay aſide any Deſign he had once taken in Hand, and who was paſſionately deſirous of eſtabliſhing it, hit upon two Expedients, which clear'd up, at leaſt in outward Appearance, the two Difficulties that had been ſtarted.

THE firſt of theſe Expedients, was to declare that Biſhops ſhould jointly with the Inquiſitors be Judges over Heretics; that nothing ſhould be undertaken without their Privity, and that they ſhould aſſiſt at theſe Trials as often as they ſhould think proper; taking care at the ſame Time ſo to manage Matters afterwards, by Expedients, which Time never fails to furniſh, that the chief Authority might be entirely lodged in the Inquiſitors, and that the Shadow of it only ſhould be left to the Biſhops, who were to reſt ſatisfied with the bare Name of Judges. Whence it would come to paſs, that the Biſhops, moſt of whom were more concerned for the Honour than the Duties of their Function, would either reſt ſatisfied with whatever Share ſhould be indulged them; or perceiving that the ſmalleſt Part of a Juriſdiction was allowed them, the whole of which juſtly belonged to them, they would at laſt reſign it entirely to the Inquiſitors, who by that Means would be left at Liberty to act in the moſt arbitrary Manner, and be wholly dependent on the Court of Rome.

THAT as to the ſecond Obſtacle, viz. the ſeveral Princes and Magiſtrates to whom they were ſubordinate, they might ſo much the more eaſily be prevail'd with not to oppoſe the Deſign of the Pope, as he enjoy'd an almoſt abſolute Authority in all Italy; that it was neceſſary, though they employ'd the moſt vile Methods, to make their Advantage of ſo happy a Train of Circumſtances, which if let ſlip, might poſſibly be never recover'd. However, that ſince to build this Eſtabliſhment on a ſolid Foundation, the prevailing on them not to oppoſe it, would not ſufficiently ſerve their Purpoſe, but that their Conſent would be neceſſary, it would conſequently be proper to ſatisfy them in outward Appearance, in the ſame manner as the Biſhops. In purſuance of this, they ſhould leave to Magiſtrates the Power of diſpoſing of the lower Employments of the Inquiſition, which ſhould not be allowed to make uſe of any but thoſe whom they ſhould appoint. That they ſhould have Liberty to appoint an Aſſiſtant to the Inquiſitors, in their Viſitations of all Places within the Juriſdiction of the civil Magiſtrate; and that a third Part of the confiſcated Eſtates of all who had been condemned, might be applied to public Uſes. Laſtly, That according as they ſhould meet with greater or leſs Oppoſition, with more or leſs Difficulties, they might give up or refuſe ſeveral other Points of little Conſequence, by which the Magiſtrates would ſeem to ſhare the Authority of the Inquiſition, but at the ſame Time would be no more than the mere Executioners of its Orders.

THESE Difficulties being got over, a new one ſtarted up, which was ſo much the ſtronger as Intereſt was the Object of it; and this was to find out ſome Method for defraying the ſeveral Expences of the Inquiſition, ſuch as the Salaries of the Inquiſitors, the Wages of the inferior Officers, the Guarding the Priſons, the Subſiſtence of the Priſoners, the Execution of the Sentences, and other Matters, for all which it was abſolutely neceſſary to make a proper Fund, to enable the Inquiſition to ſubſiſt with Honour, and in ſuch a Manner as might anſwer the ſeveral Ends of its Eſtabliſhment, and the Advantages they intended to draw from it.

SE-

SEVERAL Methods were propoſed upon this Head; but at laſt it was reſolved, that the Corporations in the ſeveral Places ſhould be prevailed with to furniſh Sums for this Purpoſe; and that in order to engage them to come more readily into it, they ſhould be allowed to diſpoſe of Part of the Monies ariſing from Fines and Confiſcations.

MATTERS being thus ſettled, they diſpatched crafty Perſons of undoubted Fidelity into the ſeveral Provinces; whoſe Buſineſs was, if poſſible, to engage their Favour for the new Eſtabliſhment they intended to ſet up in them; and the Religious of St. Dominic were appointed Inquiſitors in Lombardy, Romania, and Marca Anconitana.

As it was impoſſible for them to have ſet the Motives for eſtabliſhing the Inquiſition in a more ſpecious Light, the dire Effects that would reſult from it not having yet been felt, or ſo much as foreſeen, it was received with very little Difficulty. This furniſhed the Pope, who knew admirably well to make advantage of any Circumſtance that might forward his Deſigns, with an Opportunity of directing a Bull to the ſeveral Magiſtrates, Heads of Colleges, &c. and to the Corporations of thoſe Cities where the Inquiſition had been ſet up.

THIS Bull contained thirty one Chapters, which were as ſo many Statutes for the ſettling of the Inquiſition. To theſe the Pope added two very expreſs Orders. The firſt, that the Statutes ſhould immediately be regiſter'd in all the public Offices where the Rolls are kept, notwithſtanding any Oppoſition to the contrary, reſerving to himſelf only the Power of judging of the Validity of thoſe Oppoſitions. The ſecond impowered the Inquiſitors to ſuſpend all ſuch Places from having divine Service performed in them, and to excommunicate all Perſons who ſhould refuſe to obey theſe Statutes.

HOWEVER, as the Pope, how daring ſoever he might be in all theſe Attempts, was particularly careful not to endanger his Authority, he, for that Reaſon, eſtabliſhed the Inquiſition in the above-mention'd Provinces only. The Reaſon he gave for it, was, that as thoſe Provinces lay nearer to Rome, and farther having a greater Affection for them than the reſt, he was therefore bound in Duty to preſide over them with a more than ordinary Care. But the true Reaſon was, that he had more Authority in theſe Provinces than in any other, as they were either ſubject to no other Prince than himſelf, or being Fiefs of the Empire, the Interregnum gave him an Opportunity of exerting the ſame Authority over them, as if he had been their lawful Monarch; or, laſtly, that as the Cities of theſe Provinces were independent on one another, and govern'd by their municipal Laws, they were thereby ſo much the weaker, and leſs able to make head againſt ſo great a Power as the Roman Pontiff enjoyed at that Time. Beſides, as in the laſt Wars which the Emperors had carried on in Italy, the Pope had always ſided with moſt of thoſe Cities, he therefore had a ſtrong Party in each, who were inviolably attach'd to his Intereſt, and were as able to put all his Commands in Execution as if he had been their immediate Sovereign.

NEVERTHELESS, what Authority ſoever the Pope might enjoy in theſe Provinces, yet the Bull above-mention'd was ſo much oppoſed, both in his Life-Time and after his Death, that Alexander IV. his Succeſſor, was obliged to revive it [a] ſeven Years after, but not without ſeveral Reſtrictions, which would never go down in the Beginning. And yet, neither the Lenitives, or Cenſures, which the Inquiſition was impower'd to thunder out againſt all Offenders, or thoſe who ſhould oppoſe it, could prevent its meeting with freſh Oppoſition, which gave occaſion to Clement IV. to revive them [b] ſix Years after, but with little better Succeſs. The four Popes, his Succeſſors, ſet every Engine at work to get them received; but the Oppoſition ſtill continuing, they were at laſt obliged to moderate ſeveral Particulars.

THOSE Oppoſitions were grounded on the exceſſive Severity of the Inquiſitors, which was ſo much the more grievous, as People had never been accuſtomed to it. Complaint was likewiſe made of the uncommon Rigour they ſhewed in levying the ſeveral Revenues which had been aſſigned them; and they were even accuſed of having extorted ſeveral Sums of Money under this Pretence, inſomuch that the Public was reſolved to bear theſe Impoſitions no longer.

THESE Complaints were ſeconded by a Declaration of the ſeveral Cities and Corporations, by which they proteſted in expreſs Terms, that they would no longer furniſh the Sums required for the Support of the Inquiſition, its Officers, &c. without which it would be impoſſible for that Tribunal to ſubſiſt.

THE Ground of this Proteſt was their Inability to pay ſuch large Exactions; and to corroborate it, they took notice of the Wars they had been obliged to maintain in favour of the See of Rome againſt the Emperors. They affirmed that thoſe Wars had drained the public Treaſury; that they had even been obliged to mortgage Part of theſe Revenues to ſeveral private Perſons, who otherwiſe would never have furniſhed the Sums, without which it would have been impoſſible for the War to be carried on; that it was abſolutely neceſſary the Money for which thoſe had been mortgaged, ſhould be firſt paid; that this could not be done without levying freſh Taxes, to which the People would never have given their Conſent, but for the Advantage they hoped to reap by the Recovery of the public Revenues; that to levy freſh ones, would infallibly alienate Men's Minds from the holy See, make them rebel againſt the Inquiſitors, and perhaps againſt their own Magiſtrates.

BUT whether it were that theſe Oppoſitions, and the Complaints on which they were grounded, were thought juſt, or that there was no other Method left to ſupport the Inquiſition, which the Popes conſidered as their Maſter-Piece, it was reſolved they ſhould forego ſome Things, the better to accuſtom the People by inſenſible Degrees, to the new Burden they were going to lay upon their Shoulders.

IT was therefore declared, that in all Places where the Inquiſition ſhould hereafter be received, as well as thoſe which had already admitted it, the Inhabitants ſhould not be obliged to furniſh the Sums neceſſary for the Support of the Inquiſition; but that it ſhould be maintained by other Methods than at the public Expence; and that by this Means the Complaints which were made againſt the pretended Extortions of the Inquiſitors would immediately ceaſe.

AND as to the Complaints of the exceſſive Rigour the Inquiſitors uſed in the Diſcharge of their Employments, a Remedy was applied thereto, by allowing Biſhops, in the Proſecution of the Inquiſition, a little more Power than had before been indulged them.

THE Court of Rome drew two conſiderable Advantages from their Condeſcenſion on this Occaſion: The firſt was, that as the Inquiſitors depended no longer on the People for their Subſiſtence, they conſequently would be more attached to the papal Intereſt, and alienated from any other. The ſecond, which was of no leſs Conſequence, was, that the Inquiſition was by this means received without Oppoſition in Lombardy, Romania, Marca Anconitana, Tuſcany, the States of Genoa, and in all Parts of Italy, the Kingdom of Naples, and the Republic of Venice excepted.

BUT

BUT the Venetians did not abſolutely reject it; but foreſeeing they ſhould at laſt be forced to receive it in ſuch a Manner as to be dependent on the Inquiſition of Rome and the ſovereign Pontiff, they thereupon ſet up one by their own Authority. This Inquiſition conſiſts both of eccleſiaſtical and ſecular Judges; it enjoys its own particular Laws, different from thoſe of the reſt of the Inquiſitions of Italy, and is not near ſo rigorous; but as we ſhall treat of it in particular in the Sequel of this Work, it would be needleſs to make any farther mention of it in this Place.

As for the Kingdom of Naples, the Inquiſition has never been received therein, which was owing to the almoſt uninterrupted Conteſts that happened between the Popes and the Sovereigns of Naples. And ever ſince the Kings of Spain have been Maſters of this Kingdom, though there was the utmoſt Harmony between them and the Court of Rome, Things have always continued upon the ſame Foot, and that for a very odd Reaſon, viz. that the Popes themſelves oppoſed it.

THE Pontiff's Motive for this was, becauſe the Kings of Spain have at all Times pretended, that the Inquiſitors of the Kingdom of Naples ſhould be ſubject to the Inquiſitor-General of Spain, and ſhould no way depend on the general Inquiſition of Rome, as all the Inquiſitions of Italy do.

BUT this the Court of Rome would never conſent to, and has always oppoſed it from a Pretenſion of a quite contrary Nature, viz. that as the Kingdom of Naples holds of the See of Rome, conſequently the Inquiſition which ſhould be eſtabliſhed in that Kingdom ought to be ſubordinate to that of Rome, and not to that of Spain. But both Parties could never be brought to agree upon this Head; ſo that the Biſhops of this Kingdom have ſtill the Power of judging Heretics. Nevertheleſs the Pope, in certain Caſes, deputes extraordinary Commiſſioners into that Kingdom, with Power to take Cognizance of heretical Matters; but beſides that theſe Caſes are very rare, the Commiſſioners cannot take one Step in the Proſecution, till after having firſt obtained the Viceroy's Leave for that Purpoſe.

CHAP. IV.

The INQUISITION erected in ſeveral Parts of Italy.

ANNO 1544. Don Peter of Toledo, Viceroy of Naples for the Emperor Charles V. attempted to ſettle the Inquiſition in that Country. But the People mutiny'd for ſeveral Days; great Numbers of the Spaniards were killed, and they would in all Probability have been drove out of this rich Kingdom, without any Likelihood of their ever returning back into it, had they not ſecured themſelves in the Caſtles of the Country whereof they were Maſters, and held out with Vigour againſt the Inhabitants, who did all that lay in their Power to force them out. The Mutineers were even reſolved to throw themſelves into the Hands of the French, and for that Purpoſe diſpatch'd an Expreſs to du Mortier, the Ambaſſador of Francis I. at Rome, deſiring him to ſend them a bold Man to head them. Du Mortier, who was of a pacific Temper, like moſt of the Gentlemen of the long Robe, anſwered, that he would write to the King about it. Nevertheleſs he let ſlip the Opportunity, and that of recovering the Dutchy of Milan, an Article his Maſter had very much at Heart. This ſhews how neceſſary it is for Princes to make choice of military Officers for Ambaſſadors; for had du Mortier been

one,

one, he himſelf might have headed the Mutineers, as Termes the French Ambaſſador at Rome did afterwards. He quitted his Character to go and defend Parma and Mirandola, which had declared againſt the Emperor, and preſerved them, though he was oppoſed by all the united Forces of Spain, and the See of Rome.

SINCE that Time the Fear of a freſh Inſurrection, which would certainly break out, and the repeated Oppoſitions of the Court of Rome, have prevented the Spaniards from ever attempting to re-eſtabliſh the Inquiſition in that Kingdom; however, they have not laid aſide all Thoughts of ſucceeding in it one Time or other; nor the Court of Rome that of ſetting inſurmountable Obſtacles in their Way, unleſs the Kings of Spain permit it to be ſubject to the general Inquiſition at Rome, like that of the Dutchy of Milan, notwithſtanding the King of Spain enjoys as great Sovereignty over this laſt Place, as over Naples and the reſt of his Dominions.

THE Example of the Inquiſition at Milan has been often alledged, in order to perſuade the King of Spain that it would be no way diſadvantageous to ſet that of Naples upon the ſame Foot; but as the Inquiſition was eſtabliſhed there before he was Maſter of it, and that he was obliged to leave Things in the ſame State in which he found them, there is not the leaſt Room to hope that this Example will prevail with him, and make him conſent to its being ſettled at Naples after the ſame Manner.

BUT after that the erecting of the Tribunal of the Inquiſition had been reſolved upon in the City of Milan, Cardinal Charles Boromeo Archbiſhop of that City, who was afterwards canonized, being upon his Viſitation of certain Places in his Dioceſe, which were ſubordinate to him in Spirituals, and to the Proteſtant Switzers in Temporals, he judged it highly neceſſary for him to make ſeveral Ordinances for the Good of thoſe Churches, as is cuſtomary for Biſhops to make in the Courſe of their Viſitations.

BUT the Switzers thought it but juſt for them to take Umbrage upon that Account. However, as they were perſuaded this pious Cardinal would pay but very little Regard to their Remonſtrances, they ſent to the Governor of Milan, deſiring him to reſtrain the Archbiſhop from continuing his Viſitation of thoſe Places which were ſubject to them; and at the ſame Time aſſured him, that in caſe he did not comply with their Deſires, the good Harmony which their Maſters were ſo deſirous of preſerving, would certainly be interrupted.

THE Ambaſſador upon his Arrival at Milan went and lodged at the Houſe of a rich Merchant of his Acquaintance. This no ſooner came to the Ears of the Inquiſitor of Milan, than, regardleſs of the Law of Nations, and the fatal Conſequences which would inevitably attend upon ſo outrageous an Inſult, he went to the Ambaſſador's Lodgings at the Head of all his Officers, and commanding him to be put in Chains in his Preſence, he afterwards threw him into the Priſon of the Inquiſition. Though every one was ſtruck with Horror at this villainous Attempt, yet no Man dared oppoſe it. However the Merchant did not abandon his Friend, but waited upon the Governor of Milan, and acquainted him with the ill Treatment the Ambaſſador had met with. The Governor ſent immediately for the Inquiſitor, and obliged him to take the Ambaſſador out of Priſon, after which he paid him the greateſt Honours, and complied with all his Deſires; ſo that the Switzers no ſooner heard of the Impriſonment of their Ambaſſador, but News was brought of his being releaſed, which happened very a propos for the Cardinal; for the Switzers were reſolved to arreſt him, and to treat him after the ſame Manner they had done their Ambaſſador.

THE Governor of Milan wrote afterwards to the Cardinal, and told him, that it was for the Intereſt of his Catholic Majeſty, whoſe Subject he was in Quality of Archbiſhop of Milan, that he ſhould diſcontinue his Viſitation. The holy Cardinal, who had Art enough to ſuit his Zeal to the Peace of the State, complied with all the Governor's Deſires. Thus the Switzers were appeas'd, and all Things continued peaceable.

FROM this Example it appears, that an ill-guided Zeal may ſometimes occaſion great Diſorders; conſequently that 'tis the Duty of every Prince, who has the Peace and Tranquillity of his Subjects at Heart, to have a watchful Eye over all Things, and particularly ſuch wherein Religion is concern'd, ſince theſe naturally make a greater Impreſſion on the Mind, and are more eaſily abuſed.

THE Inquiſition is likewiſe ſettled in Sicily and Sardinia; but as this has been only ſince the uniting of theſe two Iſlands to the Crown of Spain, 'tis ſubject to the Inquiſitor-General of that Kingdom, and is no way dependent on the Inquiſition of Rome.

AFTER the Inquiſition had been thus eſtabliſhed in Italy, the Court of Rome, who were deſirous of introducing it into all the States of Chriſtendom, attempted to eſtabliſh it in Germany; but the exceſſive Rigour of that Tribunal not ſuiting the generous Temper of the Germans, they oppoſed it with ſo much Bravery, that the Pope was obliged to lay aſide his Deſign. However, the Court of Rome were perſuaded, that Time, and the Artifices which might be uſed, would at laſt give Succeſs to their Endeavours. But Time only taught them, that the Germans would never ſubmit to ſuch a Yoke; and of this they had the ſtrongeſt Proof, by the Inquiſition's being baniſhed out of ſeveral Cities, where the utmoſt Pains had been taken to ſet it up, notwithſtanding that the Inquiſitors had treated the Inhabitants with much greater Lenity than they had ever exerciſed before in any other Place.

HAVING therefore loſt all Hopes of eſtabliſhing it in Germany, they attempted to ſettle it in France, and ſucceeded therein in Part; for it was received in Languedoc, and ſome of the neighbouring Provinces, upon account of the Vaudois and the Albigenſes, whom they imagin'd this Tribunal only could extirpate. But they likewiſe found, that the free Temper of the French, ſo abhorrent of Violence and Conſtraint, would no more ſubmit to the Yoke than the Germans had done. Accordingly the Inquiſition was baniſhed out of ſome Cities by popular Inſurrections, and the Inquiſitors left ſeveral others for want of Employment; or rather becauſe they, ſo far from meeting with Reſpect, which they are ſo vaſtly fond of, were, on the contrary, univerſally hated and abhorred, and juſtly ſuppoſed it would be impoſſible for them ever to overcome the Averſion of thoſe People.

THE Houſes of the Inquiſition at Carcaſſone and at Toulouſe are ſtanding to this Day; and there are ſome Dominican Friars in thoſe Cities, who ſtill enjoy the Title of Inquiſitors; but then indeed it is no more than a mere Title, nor have they any Buſineſs. They nevertheleſs pretend, that in caſe a new Sect of Heretics were to ariſe, to whom Liberty of Conſcience had not been granted, they would have a Right to proſecute them; but it does not appear on what this Right is founded, ſince the Biſhops in France have an incontroulable Power of judging Heretics, and the civil Magiſtrates that of condemning them, and putting their Sentence in Execution.

BE this as it will, theſe are the only Footſteps now remaining in France of the Inquiſition; and there is not the leaſt Reaſon to believe it will be ever re-admitted into that Kingdom, ſince both King and People have an equal Abhorrence of Violence and Conſtraint; not to mention that they have other Expedients to preſerve and reſtore the Purity of Faith in that Kingdom. Theſe Expedients, though of a more gentle Nature, and better ſuited to the Genius of the Nation, and the Spirit of the primitive Church, are not leſs efficacious upon that Account.

CHAP. V.

The Eſtabliſhment of the INQUISITION in Spain.

AT laſt the Inquiſition being baniſhed France, recovered more in Spain than it had loſt in that Kingdom. The Kings of Arragon received it, and eſtabliſhed it in the ſeveral Dominions ſubject to that Crown. This Example, contrary to the Pontiff's Expectation, was not followed. Attempts were made to get it received in the other States of this weſtern Part of Europe, but to no Purpoſe. It was oppoſed in all Places with a Reſolution, which, though agreeable to the Genius of the Nation, was not in the leaſt expected. But it did not long preſerve its Authority in Arragon, but became, as in France, the Object of the Contempt and Averſion of the Grandees and People; and in all Probability would ſoon have been drove out of that Kingdom with as much Ignominy, had not Ferdinand of Arragon, and Iſabella of Caſtile, who had united almoſt all the States of Spain under one Monarchy, reſtored it to its priſtine Authority in Arragon, and afterwards in all Parts of Spain, Portugal excepted. Thus, properly ſpeaking, Spain was not wholly ſubject to the Inquiſition till about the Year 1484.

WE may with Juſtice affirm, that its Eſtabliſhment here was entirely owing to John de Torquemada, a Dominican, Confeſſor to Queen Iſabella, and afterwards Cardinal. He had obliged that Princeſs to promiſe him, before ſhe came to the Crown, that in caſe Heaven ſhould think fit to raiſe her to the Throne, ſhe would do all that poſſibly lay in her Power to extirpate Heretics and Infidels; and indeed ſhe afterwards ſucceeded to the Crown of Caſtile, which ſhe brought to Ferdinand King of Arragon for her Dowry.

SUCH an Increaſe of Power made theſe Princes reſolve upon the Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Granada, and to oblige the Moors, who had ſo often made Spain tremble, and had conquered the greateſt Part of it, to return back into Africa.

THIS Deſign met with better Succeſs than had been even hoped for. The Moors were ſubdued, were diſpoſſeſſed of every Thing they held in Spain, and were at laſt obliged to ſubmit themſelves, or to croſs back again into Africa. And ever ſince that Time they have been ſo taken up either with foreign or inteſtine Wars, as has prevented them from ever being able to return again into Europe.

NEVERTHELESS, although the greateſt Part of the Moors had been forced back into Africa, yet great Numbers of them remained ſtill in Spain. What detained them in that Kingdom, was either the Marriages they had contracted, the various Settlements they had in theſe Kingdoms, their Trade, or laſtly, the landed Eſtates they poſſeſſed therein, which it was impoſſible for them to tranſport into any other Country.

FERDINAND

FERDINAND and Iſabella, who plainly ſaw they could not force them out of Spain, without depopulating the Dominions they had lately conquered, conſented to their ſtill inhabiting it. However, they at laſt obliged both them and the Jews, who were very numerous in Spain, to renounce their Religion, and embrace Chriſtianity.

THESE unhappy People being indiſpenſibly obliged to receive whatever Laws the Conqueror ſhould ſubject them to, conſented to every Thing; that is, they turned Chriſtians in outward Appearance, though the greateſt Part of them ſtill adher'd in reality to the Religion of their Forefathers. But as it is no eaſy Matter to ſeparate the inward Senſations of Religion from the Worſhip thereof, they did not lay aſide, or refrain from the latter, whenever they judged they might do it with Impunity.

TORQUEMADA foreſeeing how prejudicial this Hypocriſy would at length prove to Religion and the Government, took occaſion from thence to ſollicit the Queen to perform the Promiſe ſhe had made him, of perſecuting the Heretics and Infidels, whenever ſhe ſhould be in a Capacity to do it.

HE repreſented to her, that ſhe was as much engaged to it from Motives of Policy as thoſe of Conſcience; that ſo long as the Moors and Jews ſhould adhere to their old Religion, they would preſerve a ſecret Inclination for their former Sovereigns; that this ſecret Inclination would at laſt be infallibly followed by their Correſpondence with foreign Powers, and inteſtine Conſpiracies, and finally break out into open Inſurrections, which would not fail to be ſupported by the Moors of Africa; that they had too much Intereſt to return back to Spain, not to take advantage of any Opportunity that might be favourable to it; that the Means of making them irreconcileable, would be to oblige them to change their Religion in good earneſt; that as there was no Room to hope they would ever do it by their own Impulſe, ſo on the other Side it could not be doubted but violent Methods would be neceſſary; that this indeed would leſſen the Number of her Subjects, but that it were better to have a few inviolably attach'd to her Religion and Government, than a greater Number whoſe Fidelity might be ſuſpected; that laſtly, the Union between the Church and the State was ſo great, that whoever was wanting in Affection for the one, muſt certainly have as little Value for the other.

THESE Reaſons having made an Impreſſion on the Queen's Mind, he remonſtrated to her, that the beſt Means of giving Succeſs to what he had propoſed, was to cauſe the Inquiſition to be received in all the States that were ſubject to the Crowns of Arragon and Caſtile; that this Method was indeed ſlower than an open War, but then it was ſafer; that it would be a perpetual Remedy to an Evil, which in all probability would not be brought very ſoon to a Period; that Italy was obliged to the Inquiſition for the Purity of its Faith. Laſtly, that the moſt glorious Circumſtance of her Reign would be, that ſhe had not only done her utmoſt Endeavours, during her Life-Time, for the Support of the true Religion, but had alſo left behind her the moſt infallible Methods of preſerving it in its utmoſt Purity, as long as the Monarchy ſhould endure.

THE Queen won by theſe Reaſons, promiſed Torquemada that ſhe would do all that lay in her Power to perſuade the King to eſtabliſh the Inquiſition in all his Dominions; and indeed his Reaſons wrought as much upon the King as they had before done upon the Queen; inſomuch that they jointly obtained Bulls from Pope Sixtus IV. in 1483. for the ſetting up of the Inquiſition in the Kingdoms of Arragon and Valentia, and the Earldom of Catalonia. It was afterwards erected in Caſtile, and in all the Dominions of Ferdinand and Iſabella. In Portugal it was not received before the Year 1557. by John II. as will be ſhewn in the Sequel.

TORQUEMADA

TORQEMADA had done too much Service in this Affair not to be rewarded for it; accordingly the Pope created him Cardinal, and their Catholic Majeſties appointed him Inquiſitor-General. He fully anſwered the Opinion the People had of him, viz. that there was not a Man in all Spain fitter for that important Employment, ſince that during his fourteen Years Adminiſtration in the Inquiſition, he had proſecuted upwards of an hundred thouſand Perſons, of whom ſix thouſand had been condemned to the Flames.

SINCE theſe Days the Inquiſition roſe with the Spaniſh and Portugueſe Names, and ſhared as it were in their Conqueſts. And indeed the Spaniards and Portugueſe having gained very conſiderable ones in both the Indies, they ſet up the Inquiſition in all thoſe Places, after the ſame Methods, and under the ſame Regulations that it had been erected in their Dominions in Europe.

GREAT BRITAIN and the Low Countries were now the only Places where they had not attempted to introduce the Inquiſition. As for the former, the Temper of its Inhabitants, ſtill more abhorrent of all violent Remedies, and more inclined to Inſurrections than either the Germans or the French, appeared ſo oppoſite to the Inquiſition, that they thought all Endeavours for that Purpoſe would prove ineffectual, and even that though the Pope, who had more Authority there than in the reſt of the States in Chriſtendom, ſhould have Intereſt ſufficient to get it received in that Kingdom, it yet would be impoſſible for it to maintain itſelf long therein. They therefore laid aſide all Thoughts of attempting it, but with the more Reluctance, as the Engliſh, being a People who love moſt to deliver their Thoughts freely and openly, and the moſt uſed to dogmatize, they were perſuaded they had ſo much the greater Occaſion for ſuch an Eſtabliſhment.

CHAP. VI.

The Attempts made to ſettle the INQUISITION in the Low-Countries occaſion Wars and Inſurrections.

AS to the Netherlands, the Conformity of the Temper of its Inhabitants with thoſe of the Germans and French, between whom they are ſituated, having given occaſion to conclude that either it would be impoſſible to introduce the Inquiſition among them, or that it would never be long ſupported therein, was the Cauſe that no Attempt was made for that Pnrpoſe, or that they did not carry it to any great Lengths. Thus the Biſhops continued in Poſſeſſion of the Right of judging Heretics, and the Magiſtrates in that of condemning them, and putting their Sentences in Execution.

BUT after the Riſe of the Lutheran Hereſy, a great Number of Heretics having ſettled in thoſe ſpacious Provinces, under Pretence of carrying on their Traffic, the Emperor Charles V. who was not loved by them, and who perhaps hated them in his Turn, or at leaſt was afraid of them, was apprehenſive leſt they ſhould at laſt get the upper Hand in the hereditary Countries. This Apprehenſion, added to the Negligence of the Magiſtrates, who had bern obliged to ſlacken their Proſecutions, becauſe of the great Number of Heretics that had ſhelter'd themſelves in thoſe Provinces, occaſioned his publiſhing publiſhing an Edict in 1550. by which the Inquiſition was ordered to be eſtabliſhed in all the Provinces of the Low-Countries, in the ſame Manner as in Spain.

THIS Edict was promulgated; but Mary Queen of Hungary, Siſter to the Emperor, and Governeſs of thoſe Provinces, having remonſtrated to him, that in caſe that Edict ſhould be put in Execution, all the foreign Merchants, and great Numbers of the Natives of the Country, would immediately abandon it, in order to ſeek for Liberty of Conſcience elſewhere; and their Trade, which at that Time was the moſt flouriſhing of any in Europe, would infallibly be ruin'd: this prevailed with the Emperor to publiſh two Declarations, by which all Foreigners were exempted from the Juriſdiction of the Inquiſition, and the Severity of its Proſecutions very much mitigated with reſpect to the Natives of the Country.

HOWEVER, notwithſtanding the Emperor's Edict was publiſhed with theſe Reſtrictions, it yet was not put in Execution; whether it were that that Monarch, who was not always for having thoſe Things carried on, which he ſeemed, in outward Appearance, to promote, was not urgent to have it put in Execution; or that the People, the Biſhops, and Magiſtrates, whoſe Intereſt being chiefly concerned therein, did therefore foreſee the Conſequences that would reſult from it, better than any other Perſon, and who moreover were very ſenſible that the Emperor was not able to force them to ſubmit to this Yoke againſt their Wills, ſecretly oppoſed it: Be this as it will, the Inquiſition was not eſtabliſhed in the Low-Countries during the Reign of Charles V. and Things continued in their former State with reſpect to Heretics.

AFTER the Death of ihis Emperor, which happened in 1599. Philip II. his Son, who was now Sovereign of the Netherlands, attempted all Methods poſſible to ſet up as rigorous an Inquiſition therein, as that of Spain. The States at firſt oppoſed it by the ſtrongeſt as well as moſt reſpectful Remonſtrances: But Philip II. reſolving to be obeyed, had not the leaſt regard to them; upon which the People, who could not bear to be forced in an Article of ſo extenſive and delicate a Nature as that of Religion, broke out into an open Inſurrection.

THIS Inſurrection in the Low-Countries gave occaſion to the Riſe and Eſtabliſhment of the Commonwealth of Holland. No Inſurrection ever laſted longer, or was carried on with greater Obſtinacy; for the War continued upwards of threeſcore Years with unparallelled Animoſity, but various Succeſs. The King of Spain had frequent Opportunities of eſtabliſhing a greater Authority in thoſe Countries than any of his Predeceſſors had ever enjoy'd; and on the other Side, the Flemmings were in open Rebellion, were frequently on the Point either of changing their Maſter, or of wholly recovering their Liberty, by ſetting up a popular Government, almoſt after the Model of that of antient Rome.

AT length both Parties grew weary of a War, which had been carried on for ſo many Years, coſt ſo much Blood, and had ſo much weakened and drained them of ſo many Sums; and thereupon a Peace was concluded; but it coſt the King of Spain the moſt valuable Part of the Low-Countries, I mean that Part of it which now forms the Commonwealth of the ſeven United Provinces; and he found himſelf obliged to acknowledge it a free and independent State. Nor would he have preſerved the reſt, had he not ratified and enlarged the Privileges of the Provinces, one of which was, that for the future no mention ſhould be made of ever eſtabliſhing the Inquiſition therein; and that all heretical Cauſes ſhould be judged by the antient Laws, and in the uſual Forms.

THUS ended the long War which had been carried on in the Netherlands, whereof the Inquiſition was either the real or pretended Cauſe. It has not made any Progreſs ſince that Time. Such Places as had received it, are ſtill ſubject to it; and thoſe where it had been refuſed, have been ſo happy as to keep it out; inſomuch that it is now confined to Italy, and the Dominions ſubject to the Crowns of Spain and Portugal. However, its Juriſdiction is not confined to ſuch narrow Bounds, but it ſtill flouriſhes in a greater Tract of Ground than all Europe.

CHAP. VII.

The INQUISITION ſet up in Venice.

NOTWITHSTANDING the City of Venice boaſts a great Antiquity, and has from its Infancy, by a particular Favour of Heaven, profeſſed the Chriſtian Faith, it yet preſerved itſelf unſullied with Hereſy, till about the Year 1232.

WE need no other Proof of this than the Inſtrument itſelf by which James Thiepolo was raiſed to the Dignity of Doge. We here ſee the Methods appointed to be made uſe of in the Puniſhment of Criminals; a great Number of Crimes, and of different Sorts, are there named, but no mention is made of Hereſy; a Proof that this City, and the Places in its Dependence, were at that Time wholly free from it.

IN the 1232, the above-mention'd Doge publiſh'd a Declaration on the ſame Subject, viz. the Puniſhments of various Crimes, among which he mentions ſeveral which indeed are very near a-kin to Hereſy, ſuch as Witchcraft and Incantations; but does not make the leaſt mention of Hereſy, which plainly proves it was not known in thoſe Days; for otherwiſe he would certainly have enacted the Puniſhments due to Hereſy, as well as other Crimes.

BUT after Pope Innocent IV. had quarrelled with the Emperor Frederick II. as has been already ſhewn in the ſecond Book of this Hiſtory, Italy being divided into two Factions, whereof the one ſided with the Pope, the other with the Emperor, the Heretics, under Pretence of ſiding with his Imperial Majeſty, inſinuated themſelves every where. Venice was more crouded with them than any other Place, and that becauſe as its Government is leſs ſevere than any other, they flattered themſelves they ſhould be indulged a greater Liberty in that City.

BUT the Doge and Senate juſtly fearing that ſo great a Concourſe of Perſons, infected with a Variety of heretical Tenets, would at laſt corrupt the Religion which they had endeavour'd for ſo many Ages to preſerve in all its Purity, they, in 1249, began to conſult upon Methods how they might beſt preſerve themſelves from ſo great an Evil.

IN purſuance of this, ſeveral Perſons of great Ability, and zealous for the Catholic Religion, were impowered to ſearch after Heretics. It was afterwards enacted, that they ſhould be impeach'd before the Patriarch of Grado, and the other Biſhops in the Venetian Territories, whoſe Right it was to judge Heretics; and that all ſuch as ſhould be found guilty of Hereſy by the Biſhops, ſhould be put into the Hands of the ſecular tular Judge, and by Plurality of Voices be condemned to the Flames by the Doge and his Council: Theſe Statutes were made under the Adminiſtration of the Doge Moroſini Anno Dom. 1249.

BUT leſt the Proſecution of Heretics ſhould be ſuſpended by a Biſhop's Death, the Doge James Contarini enacted, in 1275, that the Vicar-Generals, during the Vacancy of the See, ſhould have the ſame Authority as the Biſhops in judging and condemning Heretics.

THE Statutes were executed in all the Venetian Territories with the utmoſt Exactneſs, eſpecially as they agreed in all Points with the civil and eccleſiaſtical Law, which had been practiſed from Time immemorial in the Empire; and each Party was by this means fully ſatisfied in all their Pretenſions, by the eccleſiaſtical Judges being impowered to take Cognizance of thoſe Matters with reſpect to Law, and the lay Judges that of the Fact, and the Condemnation of them.

BUT neither the Doge or his Counſellers have ever pretended, as we ſhall hereafter find the Court of Rome does, to be the mere Executors of eccleſiaſtical Sentences: This is plain from the expreſs Words of the Law enacted by the Doge Moroſini, viz. that all ſuch as have been convicted of Hereſy by the Sentence of the Biſhops, ſhall be condemned to the Flames by the Doge and his Counſellors by Plurality of Voices; but this can be ſaid only of ſuch Judges as have an active Voice, which thoſe who only execute another's Sentence cannot be ſaid to have.

THINGS did not long continue in this State, before the Court of Rome, who have always a watchful Eye over their Intereſts, endeavour'd to get the Inquiſition eſtabliſhed at Venice, as they had already done in moſt of the States of Italy, by the Methods above related.

BUT the Venetians, who are as ſenſible as any People in the World of their true Intereſt, and ſo judiciouſly foreſee the Conſequence of Things, could never be prevailed with to conſent to it: Innocent, Alexander, Urban, Clement, and the ſeven Popes their Succeſſors, ſet every Engine at Work to compaſs their Deſign; but to no Purpoſe.

THE Inquiſition did itſelf contribute to the obſtinate Reſiſtance it met with, when attempted to be ſet up in Venice; all Places rang with the Diſorders and Tumults occaſioned by the Sermons, as well as the fiery and imprudent Conduct of the Inquiſitors. For theſe Mock-Zealots, would, upon the firſt Whim that came into their Heads, publiſh Cruſades againſt the Heretics; and theſe new-made Cruſaders, inſtead of being ſerviceable to Religion, thought of nothing but revenging themſelves upon their Enemies, and to diſpoſſeſs a numberleſs Multitude of innocent Perſons of their Eſtates, upon Pretence of their entertaining heretical Principles, when at the ſame Time all ſuch were the fartheſt from their Thoughts.

MILAN and Parma had like to have been ruined by the Tumults which had been raiſed on theſe Occaſions, and all Italy cry'd aloud againſt the Inquiſition and its Officers. The Senate of Venice took Advantage of theſe Diſorders, by making it a Handle to juſtify their having always refuſed to ſuffer the Inquiſition to be erected in the Territories of Venice.

HOWEVER, all theſe fruitleſs Attempts could not prevail with the Popes to deſiſt from their Deſign; and Nicholas IV. at laſt obtained what his Predeceſſors had ſo long ſollicited in vain. The Senate, in compliance with the Requeſt of his Holineſs, reſolv'd to receive the Inquiſition; but then it was with all the Precautions neceſſary for preventing the Scandal and Diſorder it had occaſioned in almoſt all the Places where it had been hitherto received.

IT was therefore agreed, that no other Officers but thoſe of the Republic, ſhould be ſuffer'd to execute the Proſecutions of the Inquiſition; that, in order to prevent all Burdens and Impoſitions, the Revenues neceſſary for the Maintenance of that Tribunal ſhould not be raiſed by its Officers; that the Republic ſhould aſſign a Fund for that Purpoſe, and ſhould nominate a Perſon to receive the Monies ariſing therefrom; that it ſhould pay the Salaries of the Inquiſitors and their Officers, and defray all the neceſſary Expences; and that all Fines, Confiſcations, and all Profits ariſing from the Condemnation of Heretics, ſhould be put into the Hands of the Inquiſitors, for which it ſhould be accountable to the Senate, to be employ'd by them as they ſhould judge proper. All which is very different from the Practice of the Inquiſition in other Places, where all the Money goes to the Inquiſitors.

THE Senate having thus reſolved to receive the Inquiſition, an Inſtrument was immediately drawn up for that Purpoſe, in the moſt authentic manner, and ſent to the Pope. And altho' his Holineſs was not pleaſed with the Reſtrictions made by the Senate, and would have been glad the Inquiſition had been received at Venice without the leaſt Limitation, as in the other States of Italy, he nevertheleſs thought fit to agree to this Inſtrument, and accordingly confirm'd it by a Bull dated the 28th of Auguſt. In this manner the Tribunal of the Inquiſition was eſtabliſhed at Venice.

ALTHO' it was pretty much reſtrained in its Authority, nevertheleſs the Court of Rome thought they had done great Matters in having procured its Eſtabliſhment there; particularly as they flatter'd themſelves that they ſhould at laſt force the Venetians to acquieſce in all things, and to ſuffer the Inquiſition to reign as deſpotic there, as in all the other States of Italy.

HOWEVER, their Hopes were afterwards blaſted; for the Senate, who probably were perſuaded they had been too condeſcending in receiving the Inquiſition, tho' upon their own Terms, were firmly reſolved not to ſuffer the leaſt Innovation, and to keep Things on the ſame Foot in which they had been firſt eſtabliſhed. So far from giving their Conſent to the repealing of any of the old Statutes, they have enacted new ones from Time to Time; all which together, compoſe the thirty nine famous Chapters or Statutes, by which the Inquiſition, in all the Venetian Territories, is governed to this Day.

INQUISITION.

BOOK III.

Of the Laws, Proceedings, and Magiſtrates of the INQUISITION.

CHAP. I.

A Deſcription of the INQUISITIONS of Rome and Spain.

ALL the Inquiſitions of Italy, thoſe of the Republic of Venice, and of the Land of the Church excepted, wherever ſituated, are ſubordinate to that of Rome, whereof the Pope is Head. It is he who nominates the Cardinals that compoſe the Congregation of the Holy Office; for by this Name the Inquiſition is called. He alſo appoints all the Inquiſitors of the ſeveral Inquiſitions in Italy, and the Land of the Church. Theſe Inquiſitors are liable to be turned out of their Places whenever the Pope pleaſes; and that without his being obliged to proſecute them, or ſhew Cauſe for their being diſmiſſed: However, they enjoy their Employments as long as they pleaſe, if they have but Intereſt enough to keep themſelves in.

THE Inquiſition of Rome, and the Congregation of the Holy Office, which is the ſame Thing, has a ſupreme Authority over all particular Inquiſitions: An Account is given to them of all Affairs of Importance: They are always conſulted upon any conſiderable Occaſion; and its Orders and Anſwers are obſerved with the utmoſt Punctuality. It regulates the Proceedings, preſcribes the Forms of judiciary Sentences, aboliſhes old Laws, and enacts new ones, whenever it judges neceſſary. As the Inquiſitors are independant one on the other, it judges all Diſputes that may ariſe between them, receives all Complaints made againſt them; and when they find it impoſſible to conceal their Faults and irregular Proceedings, it appoints condign Puniſhment, and from their Judgment lies no Appeal. In fine, the leſſer Inquiſitions are as ſo many inferior Courts, with reſpect to the ſuperior ones.

THE Inquiſition of Rome is compoſed of Cardinals, who ſit as Judges, and of Conſulters, moſt of whom are Doctors of the Canon Law, and Regulars or Monks; theſe are as ſo many Counſellors, whoſe Buſineſs it is to examine the Books, Tenets, Opinions, and Actions of all Perſons impeached to the Tribunal of the Inquiſition. It is from their Opinions that the Cardinal Inquiſitors form their Sentences and Decrees. There are beſides two Secretaries, and a kind of Attorney-General, who are the only Perſons known to thoſe who are impeached. There is a prodigious Number of inferior Officers; becauſe as all the Officers of the Inquiſition have very great Privileges, and can be judged by that Tribunal only, they by that Means ſecure themſelves from the ordinary Forms of Juſtice, which are very ſevere.

IN Spain and Portugal there is a ſupreme Council of the Inquiſition, which enjoys the ſame Authority as that of the Congregation of the Holy Office at Rome. All the leſſer Inquiſitions eſtabliſhed in the Countries ſubject to theſe two Crowns, are ſubordinate to theſe, thoſe of the Dukedom of Milan excepted, which are ſubject to the general Inquiſition of Rome.

THE ſupreme Council conſiſts of the Grand Inquiſitor, who is nominated by the King of Spain, and confirmed by the Pope. This is the only Right the Pontiff has over that of Spain; for when he has once confirmed him, he has no farther to do with that Inquiſition. The Inquiſitor-General being thus nominated and confirmed, is impowered to nominate all the Officers of the Inquiſition in the ſeveral Dominions ſubject to the King of Spain, and conſequently muſt be one of the moſt conſiderable Perſons in the Government.

BESIDES the Inquiſitor-General, the ſupreme Council conſiſts alſo of five Counſellors, whereof one muſt be a Dominican Friar, by the Privilege granted by Philip III. of a Fiſcal, or Attorney-General, a Secretary of the King's Chamber, two Secretaries of the Council, and an Alguazil or Sergeant-Major, or a Receiver; of two Relators, and two Qualificators: The Number of Familiars and inferior Officers is, as at Rome, very great; and that becauſe they enjoy ſtill greater Privileges, and are ſubject to no other Tribunal than that of the Inquiſition, which exempts them from the ordinary Forms of Juſtice, which are ſtill more ſevere in Spain than in Italy. Theſe Privileges are ſo conſiderable, that the greateſt Noblemen in Spain think it an Honour to be Officers of the Inquiſition.

THE ſupreme Council of the Spaniſh Inquiſition enjoys a plenary Authority over the reſt of the Inquiſitions, who cannot make an Act of Faith, or general Execution, without its Leave firſt obtained. Of all the Tribunals of the Inquiſition, this only has the Privilege to have no Appeals lie from its Decrees. It may enact new Laws whenever it judges them neceſſary, determines all Law-Suits of whatſoever Nature, that are carried on between the Inquiſitors, puniſhes all Miniſters and Officers of the Inquiſition, receives all Cauſes lodged by Appeal; in a word, its Authority is ſo great, that there is not a Man in all the Dominions of the King of Spain, but trembles at the bare Mention of its Name; nor would the King himſelf dare to interfere with its Authority; and indeed, whoever has made ſuch Attempt has always ſmarted for it.

EVERY one has heard of the Severities which Don Carlos, Prince of Spain, Don John of Auſtria, and the Prince of Parma, met with upon this Account: For Philip II. to pleaſe the Inquiſitors, was forced to keep them a very long Time from Court, tho' the firſt was his only Son, the ſecond his Brother, and Son to Charles V. and the laſt his Nephew, whom we ſhall have occaſion to mention in the Sequel. And when all came to all, their only Crime was their having broke out into ſome paſſionate Expreſſions againſt the Inquiſition, tho' upon a very juſt and lawful Account.

PHILIP II. was ſo ridden by the Inquiſition, as Turquet informs us in his Hiſtory of Spain, P. 1405, that he did not preſume to undertake any Affair without asking their Advice, never failing to follow it.

THE Leſſer Inquiſitions ſubordinate to that of the ſovereign Tribunal of Spain, are thoſe of Sevil, of Toledo, Granada, Corduba, Cuenca, Valladolid; of Murcia, Lerma, Longrono, St. James, Saragoſſa; of Valentia, Barcelona, Majorca, Sardinia, Palermo, Carthagena, and Lima.

THESE ſeveral Inquiſitions conſiſt of three Inquiſitors, three Secretaries, an Alguazil or Sergeant-Major, and three Receivers, Qualificators, or Conſulters.

THE Leſſer Inquiſitors of Italy, in each conſiderable City whereof there is one, have much the ſame Officers; and indeed the Inquiſition of Spain was formed after the Model of that of Italy.

THESE Officers are an Inquiſitor, a Vicar, an Attorney-General, a Notary, ſeveral Conſulters, one or more Jailors, beſides a great Number of inferior Officers.

ALL the Officers of the Inquiſitor are obliged to give Proofs of Caſa Limpia, i. e. of their being deſcended of antient Chriſtians, and that none of their Anceſtors have fallen under the Cenſure of the Inquiſition, either for Infidelity or Hereſy. Beſides this, they are bound to obſerve an inviolable Secrecy with regard to the Tranſactions of the Inquiſition, upon any Pretence whatſoever. Neither Promiſes nor Threats are admitted as Excuſes upon this Head; and whoever tranſgreſſes in this Caſe is ſure to be obnoxious to its Rigours.

CHAP. II.

Of Caſes and Perſons ſubject to the INQUISITION.

THESE are reducible to three Heads. Firſt, To Caſes and Perſons ſubject to the Inquiſition. Secondly, Its Methods of proceeding. And, Thirdly, The Manner of putting its Sentences in Execution.

AS to the firſt Head: There are ſix principal Caſes ſubject to the Judgment of the Inquiſition. The firſt, Hereſy; the ſecond Suſpicion of Hereſy; the third, Protection of Hereſy; the fourth, the Black Art, Witchcraft, Sorcery, and Inchantment; the fifth, Blaſphemy, which either ſuppoſes ſome Hereſy, or ſomething related to it; the ſixth and laſt, any Reſiſtance made to the Inquiſition, or to its Members or Officers, in the Execution of its Orders.

IN this manner the Inquiſition is impowered to judge ſix ſorts of Perſons: Firſt, Heretics; ſecondly, thoſe who have given any Suſpicion of Hereſy; thirdly, the Promoters, or thoſe who protect or favour them in any manner whatſoever; fourthly, Magicians, Wizards, Conjurers, and thoſe who uſe Incantations; fifthly, Blaſphemers; ſixthly and laſtly, thoſe who reſiſt the Officers of the Inquiſition, and interfere with the Juriſdiction thereof in any manner whatſoever.

ANTIENTLY [a] the Inquiſition uſed to judge of theſe ſix kind of Perſons only. But within theſe hundred Years, Gregory XIII. Pius V. Clement VIII. and Gregory XIV. have enlarged its Juriſdiction, and extended it to all Jews, Mahometans, Infidels of what Religion ſoever, and to all in general who any way prejudice the Members and Officers of the Inquiſition, either in their Perſons, Honours, Poſſeſſions, or any Thing that belongs to them, though abſtracted from the Exerciſe of their ſeveral Employments.

THESE Caſes which are ſubject to the Inquiſition, are of greater Extent than might at firſt be imagined. For in the firſt Place, as to what relates to Heretics, all are by the Inquiſition comprehended under that Name, who have either ſpoken, writ, taught, or preached any Thing contrary to the Scripture, the Apoſtles Creed, the Articles of Faith, and the Traditions of the Church. Thoſe who have alſo abjured the Chriſtian Faith for the ſake of embracing any other Religion whatſoever; or thoſe who, tho' they don't go ſo far as to change their Religion, do yet commend the Cuſtoms and Ceremonies uſed in others, or who practiſe ſome of theſe, or maintain that a Man may be ſaved in any Religion, provided he profeſſes it with a pure and ſincere Heart.

IF the Inquiſition went no farther, there would be nothing very extraordinary in all this; but as they likewiſe comprehend under the Title of Heretics all who diſapprove any Ceremony, Uſage, or Cuſtom, received not only in the univerſal Church (a Circumſtance that would juſtly merit Cenſure) but even in thoſe particular Churches where the Inquiſition is received, how difficult ſoever it would be to prove ſuch People Heretics, from the Principles of ſound Theology, they are nevertheleſs looked upon by the Inquiſition as Perſons ſuſpected of Hereſy.

THEY alſo include among theſe, all who hold, declare, or teach, any Principles contrary to thoſe received at Rome and in Italy, with reſpect to the ſovereign and unlimited Authority of the Popes, their Superiority over even General Councils, and their Power over temporal Princes; as alſo thoſe who hold, declare, teach, or write, any Thing in oppoſition to the Deciſions made by the Pope on any Subject whatever. In this Senſe there would be a great Number of Heretics in France; and indeed 'tis certain that moſt of the French and Germans, not excepting the very Roman Catholics among them, are conſider'd as Lutherans in thoſe Countries where the Inquiſition prevails.

THE Suſpicion of Hereſy is ſtill of greater Extent; for if a Man happens only to advance any Propoſition that offends thoſe who hear it, or even forbears to impeach thoſe who advance any ſuch, he is ſure to be obnoxious to it.

THOSE are likewiſe ſuſpected of Hereſy who abuſe the Sacraments, or any Thing of a holy Nature; who deſpiſe, inſult, or pull down Images; who read, keep, or lend to read, any Books condemned by the Inquiſition.

IT is alſo a ſufficient Handle for falling under this Suſpicion, to deviate from the common Practice of Catholics in Matters of Devotion; ſuch as ſpending a whole Year without either going to Confeſſion, or receiving the Communion, the eating Fleſh on prohibited Days, and the neglecting to go to Maſs on ſuch Days as are appointed by the Church.

THOSE alſo are ſuſpected of Hereſy, who not being Prieſts, are yet ſo wicked as to celebrate Maſs, or hear Confeſſions; or who, having that Character, celebrate Maſs

without conſecrating it, or repeat ſuch Sacraments as are not to be repeated; or who, after having taken holy Orders, or taken the Habit in ſome religious Order, attempt to marry; as thoſe likewiſe who marry two or more Wives.

In fine, any Perſon is ſuſpected of Hereſy who has been preſent, tho' but once, at any Sermon preach'd by a Heretic, or any other of their public Exerciſes; to neglect to appear before the Inquiſition when ſummoned, or to get one's ſelf abſolved within the Year after one has been excommunicated; to receive a Heretic into one's Friendſhip, to entertain him in one's Houſe, to make him Preſents, or even to pay him a Viſit; and above all to prevent his being impriſoned in the Inquiſition, or aſſiſt his Eſcape from thence, tho' grounded on the ſtrongeſt Motives of Friendſhip, Duty, Gratitude, Pity, Alliance or Kindred.

And to ſo great Lengths is this Matter carried in the Inquiſition, that the giving Shelter to a Heretic is not only prohibited, but a Perſon is even obliged to impeach any ſuch, tho' it were a Brother, Father, Husband or Wife, and that upon Pain of being excommunicated, or incurring on one's ſelf the Guilt of Hereſy, and being expoſed to all the Rigours of the Inquiſition, as a Fovourer of Heretics.

This is the third Head ſubject to the Judgment of this Tribunal; under this Name are comprehended all thoſe who any way favour, defend, or give Advice, or any kind of Aſſiſtance, to thoſe whom the holy Office has begun to proſecute; thoſe alſo, who knowing a Perſon to be a Heretic, or to have eſcaped from the Priſons of the Inquiſition; or, who having been ſummoned, refuſe to appear before it; who either harbour, conceal, or furniſh any Heretic with Advice or Aſſiſtance, to prevent his being taken; or who, upon his having been impriſoned, aſſiſt him in breaking out of Jail, or furniſh him with any Inſtrument for that Purpoſe, or oppoſe, either by Threats, or otherwiſe, the Officers of the Inquiſition in the Execution of their Office; or who, without perſonally oppoſing them, do yet aid and aſſiſt others in it. Thoſe likewiſe are looked upon as Fautors of Heretics, who ſpeak to ſuch as are impriſoned in the Inquiſition without Leave; or who write to them, either to adviſe them in any Matter, or merely to comfort them in their Misfortunes. Thoſe alſo who bribe the Witneſſes with Money or otherwiſe, to oblige them to hold their Tongues, or favour the Accuſed in their Depoſitions; or who either conceal, ſteal, burn or get Poſſeſſion, in any manner ſoever, of Papers relating to the Affairs of the Inquiſition.

Finally, and which is the moſt extraordinary Circumſtance, is, that all Correſpondence in general with the Heretics, tho' upon Account of Traffic, is ſufficient to incur Suſpicion of Hereſy; nor can any Perſon ſend them either Goods, Money, or any kind of thing; nor even write to, or receive any Letters from them, without falling under this Suſpicion. Nor is it poſſible for any Man to eſcape it, who knowing a Perſon to be a Heretic, or even ſuſpected of Hereſy, does not go and impeach him in the Holy Office, whatever Reaſons or Motive he may have to the contrary.

The fourth Head, which includes Magicians, Wizards, Conjurers, Southſayers, and ſuch like, is ſtill of greater Extent, particularly of Italy, whoſe Inhabitants are very Superſtitious, and the Female World more inquiſitive and credulous than in any other Nation: Not to mention that Perſons of the greateſt Underſtanding among them, eaſily give Credit to all the ridiculous Stories that are told of Conjurers; the Extravagancies of their nocturnal Meetings, and the great Power and Influence which the Devil is, by ſome, ſuppoſed to have over the Actions of Men. We ſhall not trouble the Reader with the ſeveral Accuſations that may be brought upon this Head; ſince, that excepting certain enormous Crimes, which, as they are the ſame in all Countries, are therefore well enough known; the reſt conſiſt only of certain ridiculous ſuperſtitious Practices that flow from a crazy Imagination and a groveling Credulity, rather than a depraved Will and a corrupt Heart.

ALL we ſhall obſerve, is, That of the ſeveral Caſes ſubject to the Judgment of the Inquiſition, none gives them a greater Opportunity of filling their Priſons with Women of all Conditions; and that judiciary Aſtrology, when employ'd to pry into Futurity, is alſo ſubject to it.

ALTHO' Blaſphemy, which is the fifth Head, be very common, and is one of the greateſt Crimes a Perſon can poſſibly be guilty of, yet the Inquiſition takes Cognizance of that kind of it only which comprehends ſome heretical Tenet. Of this we ſhall not quote any Inſtances, becauſe it is much better to be ignorant of theſe Things than to know them.

AND altho' Jews, Mahometans, and other Infidels, are not ſubject to the Inquiſition in a great many Reſpects, they nevertheleſs come under its Cognizance with regard to all ſuch Crimes as any way offend the Chriſtian Religion. Theſe Crimes are, firſt, ſuch as a Chriſtian may commit, as the favouring of Heretics, Blaſphemers, Conjurers, &c. or the oppoſing the Officers of the Inquiſition in the Execution of their Orders. All ſuch Crimes are no more tolerated in Jews, and other Infidels than in Chriſtians.

MOREOVER, all thoſe are likewiſe ſubject to the Inquiſition, who either publiſh, write, or advance, in what manner ſoever, any Principle that claſhes with the Articles of Faith which Chriſtians hold in common with them. Thus, were a Jew or a Mahometan to deny the Unity of God, or his Providence, the Inquiſition would call him to Account for it, and puniſh him as a Heretic.

THEY alſo are ſubject to the Inquiſition, when they hinder any of their Religion to turn Chriſtians, or perſuade or prevail with a Chriſtian to quit his Religion and embrace their Principles, or any way favour them in ſuch a Change.

THEY are alſo forbid to ſell, put off, or even keep by them, the Talmud, and other Books prohibited by the Inquiſition, or any which pretend to refute the Chriſtian Religion, or treat it in a contemptuous Manner.

IN a Word, the Jews are not allowed to have Chriſtian Nurſes, nor to perform the leaſt Action in Contempt of the Chriſtian Religion. The Inquiſition takes Cognizance of all theſe Caſes, and puniſhes them with ſo much the more Severity, as theſe unhappy Wretches are frequently prevailed with to change their Religion, in order to eſcape the Puniſhment to which they are condemned.

As one of the chief Maxims of the Inquiſition is to ſtrike Terror into all, and to make itſelf dreaded by all who are ſubject to it, it puniſhes with great Severity ſuch as offend its Agents or Officers in any manner ſoever: And in this Caſe nothing is looked upon as a ſlight Offence, but every Crime is conſider'd as capital; nor can Birth, Character, Employment, Rank, or Dignity, ſecure any Perſon from its Violence; and the leaſt Threat againſt the moſt inferior Officer of the Inquiſition, its Informers or Witneſſes, would be puniſhed with the utmoſt Rigour and Severity.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

The Manner in which the Tribunal of the INQUISITION proceeds againſt all Perſons impeached.

THUS we have given in few Words, an Account of all ſuch Caſes as are ſubject to the Inquiſition. Theſe comes generally under its Cognizance by four different Methods; either by public Report, by which a Perſon is accuſed of one or more of the Crimes above-mentioned; or by the Depoſition of thoſe Witneſſes by whom he is impeach'd; or by the Diſcovery of the Spies of the Inquiſition, who are ſpread up and down in all Places; or, laſtly, by the Depoſitions of the Criminals themſelves, who, for fear others ſhould inform againſt them, and in the Hopes of meeting with leſs ſevere Treatment, ſometimes impeach themſelves of Things of which they know they might be convicted.

WHEN the Inquiſitors have diſcovered a Criminal by one of the four Methods above-mentioned, or even on a bare Suſpicion, which often is very ſlight, he is thrice ſummoned to appear with the uſual Formalities; after which, in caſe he does not come forth, he is excommunicated, and fined proviſionally in large Sums, which, however, does not exempt him from a more ſevere Puniſhment, in caſe he be catch'd again.

THE ſureſt Method is to obey the firſt Summons; for the longer this is delay'd, the greater Guilt is incurred; nay, tho' a Perſon were really innocent, yet a Refuſal to obey the Orders of the Inquiſition, is itſelf a Crime: All Delays and Put-offs on this Occaſion, only heighten the Prejudice which may be entertained againſt a Perſon impeached; and they take it for granted, they have Proofs ſufficient againſt him, and that he is diffident of the Merits of his Cauſe, from the firſt Moment he diſcovers the leaſt Reluctance to appear before his Judges. When this is the Caſe of a Perſon accuſed, he has no other way left to ſecure himſelf than by a voluntary and perpetual Baniſhment. Nothing is forgot in this Tribunal; no Crime is wiped away by Time, nor do they allow of any ſuch a Thing as Preſcription.

IT is yet no eaſy matter to ſucceed in this violent Extreme, and 'tis almoſt impoſſible to eſcape the Search of the Inquiſitors; for no ſooner has an impeached Perſon made his Eſcape, but all the Inquiſitions have ſpeedy Notice of it. They purſue him every way, and ſeldom fail to catch him again. The ſame is obſerved with regard to thoſe who break out of the Priſons of the Inquiſition; if they are catched again, they are utterly undone, and the moſt gentle Puniſhment they are to expect, is Impriſonment for Life.

IT is ſtill more difficult for a Perſon to make his eſcape in Spain; for, not to mention that the Inquiſition is more ſevere and exact there than in any other Country, the Hermandad is ſo vigilant in its Purſuits, that it is impoſſible not to fall into its Clutches. Theſe are a kind of Societies eſtabliſhed in all Parts of Spain, whoſe Cities, Towns, and Villages ſwarm with them. They are ſo many indefatigable Spies, who liſten, and obſerve all that paſſes; but they are chiefly employ'd in purſuing ſuch Criminals as fly from Juſtice, and for this they ſpare neither Care, Labour, nor Expence. Theſe Fellows are at the Heels of a Criminal wherever he flies; and when they find him, in caſe they are not ſtrong enough to ſeize him openly, they ſet every Engine at work in order to get him again; and for this Purpoſe they ſtrike up a Mock-Friendſhip with him, invite him frequently to Entertainments, make him Preſents, and lend him Money; they they likewiſe aſſiſt in caſe of Sickneſs, or any other Misfortune. They diſguiſe their Sentiments, and feign to have exactly the ſame Notions with him: In a word, they ſwear a thouſand Oaths that they have the ſincereſt Frindſhip for him. Thus when they think they have work'd themſelves into his Confidence, they allure him to ſome Place, where he is immediately ſeized and hurried away, by Perſons ſuborned for that Purpoſe. If the Perſon who is thus purſued keeps, as ſometimes happens, ſo much upon his guard as to defeat all their Stratagems, they then will find ſome Opportunity to engage him inſenſibly in ſome Party of Pleaſure, either on board a Ship, a Boat, or in a Coach in the Country; when, to his great Surprize, he ſhall find, that the People of the Ship, of theBoat, or Coach, had been all bribed: And being thus enſnar'd, they immediately carry him off to Spain. In this manner ſeveral Perſons have been decoy'd, even from Conſtantinople.

ALTHO' the Hermandad is no way allied to the Inquiſition, it nevertheleſs employs thoſe Wretches to a very good Purpoſe, whenever any Perſon refuſes to ſubmit to the Sentence of that Tribunal, or endeavours to eſcape it by Flight. And as the Inquiſition is more eſteemed and reſpected than any other Tribunal in Spain, ſo the Hermandad are inviolably devoted to its Service.

THERE is another Body of Men, called the Cruſade, or la Cruciata in Spaniſh, from whom the Inquiſition receives no leſs Service. The Buſineſs of this Society is not like the above-mentioned, to purſue Criminals; but only to have an Eye over the Behaviour of all Roman Catholics, and to impeach them in caſe they omit any Duties of the Chriſtian Profeſſion. This Society is vaſtly rich, and as powerful as wealthy; for the Biſhops, the Archbiſhops, and moſt of the Grandees of Spain, are Members of it. Theſe are another kind of Spies, who are to be met with every where; they inſinuate themſelves into every Body's Affairs, and ſuffer nothing to eſcape them. The Spaniards are perſuaded, that had it not been for the Inquiſition and the Cruſade, their Kingdom would have been over-run with Heretics, who had like to have made themſelves Maſters of the other Kingdoms and States of Europe.

IT being therefore, as was juſt now ſaid, ſo difficult a Matter to eſcape the Claws of the Inquiſition, it is certain that no wiſe Man will ever attempt it, unleſs he is infallibly ſure of Succeſs; and that in caſe he be ſummoned, it will be beſt for him to be forthcoming as ſoon as poſſible.

IT often happens that the Inquiſitors, either when they have ſufficient Witneſſes, or that the Crime of which the Perſon impeached is accuſed, is of an enormous Nature; or, laſtly, when they are afraid of his eſcaping from them, and not ſtaying till they ſummon him in form: In theſe Caſes, I ſay, they ſhall immediately give Orders for his being arreſted whenever they ſhall meet with him. A Perſon impeached has no Aſylum nor Privilege, nor can ſuſpend the Proſecution one ſingle Moment, or mitigate the Rigour of it.

IT is ſurpriſing to conſider the forlorn Condition of a Perſon who is thus unhappy. He is ſeized in the midſt of his Friends, and in the very Boſom of his Family; a Father ſtanding by his Son's Side, a Son in the Company of his Father, and a Wife in that of her Husband, without ſo much as any one's daring to make the leaſt Reſiſtance, or even to ſtop a Minute, to ſettle any Affairs tho' of the utmoſt Conſequence, or to ſpeak one ſingle Word in favour of the Perſon impeached.

BUT when the Inquiſition have once got him into their Hands, he is treated in a ſtill more rigorous Manner. In this Caſe no one is allowed either to viſit him, to give him Advice, to write to, or ſolicit for him, or even to attempt to prove his Innocence. In an Inſtant he cut off from all Correſpondence, and the unhappy Wretch finds himſelf friendleſs, without Kindred, Advice, Support, or even the leaſt Conſolation; abandoned to his Judges, and to himſelf, and frequently to his greateſt Enemies, without being able to tell what will become of him. Even Innocence itſelf, in theſe Caſes, is a very weak Support, ſince nothing is eaſier than to ruin an innocent Perſon, as will be ſhewn in the Sequel.

No ſooner have the Inquiſitors got a Perſon in their Clutches, than they ſearch him very ſtrictly, in order, if poſſible, to find Something about him that may be of uſe to convict him; or for any Inſtrument, with which he may kill himſelf, in order to eſcape the Tortures of the Inquiſition. We have Inſtances of Perſons who have laid violent Hands upon themſelves on theſe Occaſions, and a great many who were impriſoned in the Inquiſition, have been drove to that Deſpair, as either to poiſon, or to kill themſelves with Stilletoes, which they had concealed in their Hair, or the moſt ſecret Parts of their Body; or daſh out their Brains againſt the Walls, when they had no other Way left to deſtroy themſelves.

THE Inquiſitor, accompanied by his Officers, goes afterwards to the Houſe of the Accuſed, where a very exact Inventory is taken of his Books, Papers, Effects, and every Thing they find in it, which they annex to that they had before taken of the Things found upon him. No Perſon dares to oppoſe them therein, or conceal the leaſt Trifle. To this Inventory they often add an Attachment or Seizure of all, or Part of the Goods, to ſerve, in caſe it be needful, as a Security for the Coſts and Fines which the Perſon impeached may be condemned to pay; for it very ſeldom happens that a Perſon gets out of the Inquiſition without being half ruined, unleſs he happens to be very rich.

THINGS being carried on thus far, the Proſecution immediately begins, but is carried on very ſlowly; for a Criminal is frequently impriſoned for ſeveral Months, and not one Word is mentioned about carrying him to Audience.

THESE Priſons are dreadful, and nothing can be more capable to ſtrike a Priſoner with Terror, and diſpoſe him for appearing before the moſt dreadful Tribunal in the World, than the diſmal Dungeons into which theſe unhappy Wretches are immediately thrown.

THE Dungeons are under Ground, and ſtink wretchedly; they are ſituated in Places far remote from all human Communication; the Way to them is by a great many Turnings and Windings, for fear leſt the Cries and Complaints of the miſerable Tenants of thoſe Places ſhould be heard, and move any Perſon with Compaſſion. Day-Light is for ever ſhut out from theſe gloomy Habitations, to hinder thoſe who are impriſoned therein from reading, or any Employment but the Reflection on their Puniſhment, and the ſad Thoughts of the Evils which are prepared them. In this diſmal Condition they are not allowed either to ſee or ſpeak to any Perſon. And in caſe the Proximity of one Dungeon to another ſhould give the Priſoners an Opportunity of converſing together, they are abſolutely forbid to attempt it; and in caſe they happen to be over-heard, either ſpeaking to one another, or to themſelves, the Officers immediately ruſh in upon them, and whip them with the utmoſt Severity. We are told, that theſe unhappy Wretches, not daring to converſe with one another from their ſeveral Dungeons, have invented a Method of ſpeaking with their Fingers, by ſtriking a certain Number of Times upon the Wall, according to the numerical Order of the Letter which they would expreſs in the Alphabet. As for Inſtance; ſuppoſe they had a Mind to expreſs the Word Bread, as the firſt Letter thereof is the ſecond Letter in the Alphabet, they ſtrike two Blows on the Wall, and in the ſame manner for the reſt. This gives them ſome Employment, for Converſation muſt neceſſarily be carried on but very ſlowly by ſuch Methods, and a conſiderable Time is taken up in expreſſing only a few Sentences. 'Tis certain, that were it in the Power of their Jailors to deprive them even of this ſad Conſolation, they would not fail to do it.

AFTER a Criminal has ſpent ſeveral Days, and ſometimes Months, in this Manner, without ſo much as knowing either the Crime of which he is accuſed, or the Witneſſes who have depoſed againſt him, the Jailor is order'd to acquaint him, that he may deſire to be admitted to Audience; but this he ſeems to do from his own proper Impulſe, and out of Compaſſion, and not by order of the Judges; for 'tis a fixed Rule in this Tribunal, that the Priſoner muſt always petition for every Thing.

THE firſt Time the Priſoner appears before his Judges, they ask him, juſt as though they did not know him, or had had the leaſt Information of his Crime, Who he is? or, What he wants? and, If he has any Thing to ſay? The ſafeſt, at leaſt the leſs dangerous Method, is for a Perſon to plead guilty, notwithſtanding his Innocence, of every Article that is laid to his Charge. A Priſoner is never put to Death the firſt Time of his being impeached to the Inquiſition. However, this ſtamps the whole Family with Infamy, and this firſt Sentence diſables all ſuch Perſons from enjoying any Employments either in Church or State.

THERE is another Method for a Perſon to get out of the Hands of the Inquiſition the firſt Time he is impeached therein, which is always to affirm he has nothing to ſay, and is not conſcious of the leaſt Guilt; for in this Caſe, if the Proofs are not very ſtrong, the Priſoner is acquitted.

BUT this generally is of little Service; for the Inquiſitors ſet two or three of their Spies, who are called Familiars, at his Heels. 'Tis ſcarce poſſible to expreſs how cloſe theſe Fellows will ſtick to him; they follow him wherever he goes, obſerve every Step he takes, all he ſays or does; nothing can eſcape them; and indeed they generally pretend to be his Friends, and ſet every Engine at work to inſinuate themſelves into his Confidence; nay, they are ſometimes his own Servants, or his neareſt Relations.

UPON the leaſt Hint, or the ſlighteſt Suſpicions, they again lay hold of him, when all Things are carried on as before, except that they now proſecute him with greater Rigour; then indeed it may be truly affirmed, that the unhappy Wretch is inevitably loſt; for the Inquiſition never grants a Pardon twice.

EVERY one has heard of the Treatment Mark Anthony de Dominis met with upon this Occaſion. This Gentleman was deſcended from a very illuſtrious Family in the Venetian Territories: He was firſt a Jeſuit, and was afterwards made Biſhop of Segni, then Archbiſhop of Spalatro, and Primate of Dalmatia. This Dignity, though very great in itſelf, was not yet what gain'd him univerſal Reſpect both in Church and the Public. Mark Anthony de Dominis was look'd upon as the moſt learned Man of any of his Age, particularly in Divinity and Hiſtory, both ſacred and profane. No Man in the World had read more, or forgot leſs. He was conſulted on all kinds of Subjects, and anſwered each ſingle one in ſuch a manner, as if he had never applied himſelf to any other.

YET

YET his unbounded Knowledge could not ſecure him from being tainted with the Tenets of the Lutherans and Calviniſts. He maintained them with the utmoſt Vigour in his voluminous Work of the Eccleſiaſtical Republic; and at the ſame Time diſcovered ſo great a Spirit of Rancour againſt the Pope and the Court of Rome, that it would have been impoſſible for its greateſt Enemies to write more ſharply againſt them.

THE ſtrong Deſire he had of publiſhing this Work in his Life-Time, and the little Likelihood there was of his being able to continue in Italy after its Publication, engaged him to withdraw into Germany firſt, and afterwards into England, whither he had been invited, with Promiſe of great Preferment, by King James I. As that Monarch was himſelf very learned, he employ'd all his Endeavours to engage Perſons, from every Part of Europe, who were famous for Genius and Learning, to come over into his Kingdom. Dominis met with the moſt obliging Reception from the King; he provided him an honourable Subſiſtence ſuitable to his Dignity, and did all that lay in his Power to engage him to break off intirely from Rome and the Roman Catholic Church.

ON the other Side, the Court of Rome, whether it were that they were reſolved not to ſuffer a Perſon of his Character to continue among their Enemies, or were unwilling to be oppoſed by a Man of his Learning and Talents; or rather, as afterwards appeared, that they were bent upon Revenge, and reſolved to make an Example of him: Be this as it will, they left no Stone unturned to make him return to his former Principles, and for that Purpoſe got all his beſt Friends and neareſt Relations in Italy to write to him; and at laſt Don Diego Sarmiento de Acuna, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador at the Engliſh Court, made him ſuch advantageous Offers, as firſt ſhook his former Reſolutions, and afterwards prevailed on him to accept them.

THIS unhappy Prelate, to his utter Ruin, forgot on this Occaſion, the Maxims he had ſo often repeated in his Works, viz. That whoever offends the Court of Rome, is ſure not to eſcape being puniſhed for it; that they don't know what it is to pardon an Affront; and that when a Man has once drawn his Sword againſt them, he muſt immediately throw the Scabbard away.

HE ſet out for Rome in ſpite of all the Arguments his Friends in England could uſe to diſſuade him from it, who were continually ſetting before his Eyes the ill Fate that would inevitably attend him, and which he ought to have foreſeen better than any Body elſe. But no ſooner was he arrived in Italy, than he was thoroughly ſenſible, but too late, of the Error he had committed. They did not keep their Word with him in one ſingle Circumſtance, but forced him to abjure publicly the ſeveral heretical Tenets that were ſpread up and down his Writings. However, they gave him his Liberty in outward Appearance, but at the ſame Time ſet ſo many Perſons over him, who watched him ſo narrowly, that they either really diſcovered, or pretended to have diſcovered, that he held a ſecret Correſpondence with the Engliſh. Upon this the Inquiſition immediately laid hold of him; but as the Proſecution of this great Man was carried on very ſlowly, he died in Priſon, either through Grief for the wrong Step he had taken, or from his Dread of the ſhameful and cruel Puniſhment he knew he could not poſſibly eſcape; or, as is the Opinion of many, by Poiſon, which had been ſent him by ſome officious Friend or Relation, who knowing he was inevitably loſt, was willing to reſcue him from the Infamy and Rigour of a Puniſhment which would attend his illuſtrious Family.

BUT to return to my Subject. When a Perſon is fallen a ſecond Time into the Clutches of the Inquiſition, after having languiſhed ſeveral Months in Priſon, in the rigorigorous Manner above-mention'd, they again inſidiouſly prompt him to beg to be admitted to Audience as before, which, after ſome Days Delay, he obtains.

ALTHOUGH all the Houſes of the Inquiſition are very magnificent, and that no Coſt is ſpared either for Marble or rich Ornaments of Architecture, yet the Priſoners ſee none of theſe, and every Object they behold ſtrikes them with Terror. The ſeveral Places where they appear have an Air of dreadful Gloom; and the Inquiſitors and their Officers put on ſo ſad and ſevere a Countenance, as does not leave the Priſoner the leaſt Hopes of moving his Judges to Compaſſion.

WHEN the Priſoner is brought before the Inquiſitors, they tell him, the Jailor had informed them that he deſired to be heard. The Priſoner anſwers, he deſires to be heard, in order that he may be cleared, in caſe he be found innocent. Upon this the Inquiſitors preſs him earneſtly to confeſs his Crime. If he denies it, they remand him back to Priſon, and tell him they do ſo in order to give him Time to reflect upon it, and to recollect every Circumſtance thereof. After he has continued a long Time in this Manner, in caſe they cannot prevail with him to make any Confeſſion, they oblige him to ſwear on the Crucifix, and the holy Goſpels, that he will ſpeak the Truth to all the Queſtions that ſhall be put to him. If he refuſes to take the Oath, they immediately pronounce Sentence upon him, without any other Formality; becauſe they, by this, either ſuppoſe he is not a Chriſtian, ſince he refuſes to perform ſo authentic an Act as that of an Oath required of him by thoſe who are his lawful Judges; or, that he is afraid of forſwearing himſelf, and conſequently is guilty of all they lay to his Charge.

BUT in caſe he takes the Oath, they queſtion him in numberleſs Circumſtances of his paſt Life, from his Birth to that Time, and even that of his Anceſtors, in order to ſift out of him, whether ſome of them may not have come under the Cenſures of the Inquiſition. Though Crimes of this Nature are merely perſonal, they yet prejudice the Judges very ſtrongly againſt him; they ſuppoſe he has imbibed the Notions of his Progenitors with their Blood; and that, as he had been educated by them, it was impoſſible but he muſt have imbibed their erroneous Tenets, a Circumſtance they imagine they muſt neceſſarily have had moſt at Heart.

HITHERTO he is not ſuffered to know the Crime of which he is accuſed, nor the Perſons who have ſworn againſt him. They, as yet, are only endeavouring, by a thouſand Stratagems and artful Windings, to get Something out of him, that may ſeemingly authorize them to pronounce his Condemnation.

THIS Snare is laid with prodigious Cunning, and can hardly be eſcaped; for as on the one Side People are arreſted on vain and idle Reports, or on Proofs inſufficient to condemn them, 'tis certain that the Judges themſelves would frequently be very much puzzled, if the Priſoners did not by their own Words pronounce their Condemnation.

BUT on the other Side, as the Inquiſitors promiſe to treat them with greater Gentleneſs, and ſometimes to pardon them, if, before they are condemned, they acknowledge their Crimes, and give, by ſuch a Confeſſion, the moſt ſenſible Tokens of a ſincere Repentance, theſe unhappy People, not knowing whether they really have, or have not, Circumſtances ſufficient to convict them, and, moreover, flattered with the agreeable Hope of being ſoon ſet at Liberty, they by that means often acquaint them with more than they either do, or poſſibly could ever know, had they not made thoſe haſty and imprudent Confeſſions.

BUT

BUT in caſe the Priſoner either is innocent, or too cunning to fall into their Snares, and ſtill continues to deny what they alledge againſt him, his Accuſation, compoſed by the Inquiſitors, is delivered to him; in which they intermix a great Number of pretended Crimes, and of the moſt enormous Nature, with thoſe whereof he is juſtly accuſed.

THIS Compoſition of Truth and Falſhood, is another Trap for this unhappy Wretch; for as he ſeldom fails to exclaim againſt the horrible Crimes they lay to his Charge, they take an Occaſion from thence to conclude, that thoſe of which he makes but little Complaint are true. Although ſuch a kind of Proof is a very equivocal one, it nevertheleſs is fatally ominous to a Priſoner.

AFTER having in this Manner delivered the Accuſation to the Priſoner, they allow him a Counſellor, that is, they nominate certain Perſons to him, of one of whom he makes choice to defend his Cauſe. This Counſellor does him but very little Service; for he is not only forbid giving the Priſoner any Advice, but is not even allowed to ſpeak to him but in Preſence of the Regiſter and the Inquiſitors, or to make uſe of him to defend his Cauſe; for as all Citations in this Tribunal are perſonal, and that no one is allowed to appear by Proxy, ſo a Priſoner is forced to defend himſelf againſt unknown Accuſers; for they never tell him ſo much as the Names either of his Accuſers or Witneſſes. The Proſecutor is indeed known well enough, ſince it is always the Attorney-General of the Inquiſition; but Informers are never allowed to proſecute, becauſe they always appear as Witneſſes.

SOME Days after they have given the Priſoner a Copy of his Indictment, he is ſent for to Audience, with his Counſellor; but he might as well be without him, ſince the Counſellor is not allowed to ſpeak, or, in caſe he does ſpeak, he muſt firſt adviſe with the Inquiſitors what it will be proper for him to ſay, and only be very urgent with the Priſoner to make a Confeſſion of a Crime whereof he is often innocent.

'TIS to no Purpoſe for him to inſiſt upon knowing the Names of the Perſons who have depoſed againſt him; for they are ſure to keep him in the dark in that reſpect: All they allow him, is to gueſs if they are not ſuch and ſuch Perſons; but to this they either make no Anſwer at all, or ſuch an one as they pleaſe, but never right. They afterwards go on with the Examination; and in caſe he ſtill continues to plead not guilty, he is remanded back to Priſon.

AT laſt, after having thus carried an unhappy Wretch, for ſeveral Years together, from the Jail to Audience, and from Audience to Jail, his Trial is prepared in good Earneſt. It opens with his Appearance before the Inquiſitors: Then they give him, for the firſt Time, the true Depoſitions; (for the former Indictment which had been put into his Hands, had been drawn up by the Judges, and was made up both of true and falſe Accuſations.) Then the true Depoſitions which the Witneſſes had made, but very much curtailed, are ſhewn him; for all ſuch Circumſtances relating to Places and Perſons are ſuppreſſed, as might inform the Priſoner who thoſe were that had ſworn againſt him.

MOREOVER, in caſe there are any Circumſtances in the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes which may contribute to the Priſoners being acquitted, they indeed are not razed from the Original, but then they are not inſerted in the Copy they put into his Hands, ſo that theſe Depoſitions, ſuppoſing they were true, are after of no other Uſe but to perplex and to confound the Priſoner

AFTER theſe Depoſitions have been thus communicated to the Priſoner, in caſe he will not, or cannot, except againſt his Witneſſes, and give in his Anſwers immediately, they allow him three or four Days to conſider of it, and remand him back to Jail.

UPON this he muſt fall a queſtioning, and endeavour to hit upon the Perſons who have been his Accuſers and Enemies; for they perſiſt in refuſing either to let him ſee them, or even to tell him their Names.

WHEN the Time which had been allowed him for challenging his Witneſſes is expired, he is recalled, and is heard in whatever he has to except againſt Perſons, whoſe Names and Qualities are equally concealed from him; conſequently, if he happens to gueſs their Names, and makes any juſt Exceptions againſt them, ſo much the better for him; but then the Judges ſhall give them what Weight they pleaſe in the Trial, and often reject them, tho' very juſt; or, to explain this farther, nothing that a Priſoner may alledge in challenging Witneſſes is of any effect, but the proving them to be profeſſed Enemies. This however does not invalidate their Depoſitions, but then it weakens them; for any Exceptions with reſpect to Crimes, tho' of the blackeſt Dye, ſignify nothing.

IT may not be improper to take notice of certain particular Rules with regard to Witneſſes, which are obſerved in the Inquiſition, and in no other Tribunal. 1. A Priſoner is ſeldom or never told the Names of the Witneſſes who have ſworn againſt him, which is done either to prevent his bribing or terrifying them, or to take from him the Opportunity of hitting upon the Exceptions he might otherwiſe make; or, laſtly, that the Promiſes which are always made to Witneſſes, of never having their Names divulged, may encourage Impeachments. 2. For the ſame Reaſons Witneſſes are not obliged to prove their Depoſitions. 3. For the ſame Reaſon alſo, Witneſſes are ſeldom or never confronted. 4. In this Tribunal, all Witneſſes, becauſe of the heinous Nature of Hereſy, are accepted, whence ſoever they come, and how black and ſcandalous ſoever their Characters may be; the Depoſitions of foreſworn Wretches, People of the vileſt Reputation, Heretics, Jews, or Mahometans, are all received as valid on theſe Occaſions; and the Teſtimonies of ſuch Miſcreants as theſe, though ſo unworthy of the leaſt Credit, are yet ſufficient to ruin a Man, and cauſe him to be condemned to the Flames. 5. Two Witneſſes by Hear-ſay, are equivalent to one who is both an Ear and Eye-Witneſs, and ſufficient to make a Perſon be put to the Torture, which is extremely ſevere in the Inquiſition. 6. Informers themſelves are received as Witneſſes, which is the Reaſon why they are not ſuffered to proſecute. In ſhort, a Son is allowed to appear as Evidence againſt his Father, a Father againſt his Son, a Servant againſt his Maſter, a Husband againſt his Wife, a Wife againſt her Husband; by which means the Laws are overturned, and a Door opened to a numberleſs Multitude of Actions of the moſt treacherous and revengeful Nature.

CHAP. IV.

In what Manner Priſoners are put to the Torture in the INQUISITION.

AFTER a Priſoner has made his Exceptions, and given in his Anſwers, if they are not ſatisfactory, or that his Crimes be not ſufficiently proved, he is condemned to the Torture. Of theſe there are three kinds, all which are extremely ſevere and cruel. The firſt is that of the Rope, the ſecond that of Water, and the third that of Fire.

IN the Torture with the Rope, the Priſoner has his Hands bound behind him with a Rope; after which he is raiſed from the Ground to the Top of the Cieling by means of a Pulley; when, letting him hang for ſome Time in this Manner, they let him fall within half a Foot of the Ground, but with ſuch ſudden Jerks as put all his Limbs out of Joint, and force him to cry out in a moſt dreadful Manner. In this Manner he is tortured for an Hour, and ſometimes more, according as the Inquiſitors, who are preſent, think proper, or the Vigour and Strength of the unhappy Sufferer.

BUT if this kind of Torture does not prevail, they then have recourſe to that of Water, which is done in this Manner: They force the Priſoner to ſwallow down a great Quantity of Water; after which he is laid along a Form or Bench that has a Cavity in it, which ſhuts up, and ſqueezes at Pleaſure. A Stick or Piece of Wood runs croſs this Bench, which keeps the Priſoner's Body ſuſpended, as it were, and breaking his Back-Bone, puts him to incredible Pain.

BUT the moſt rigorous Torture is that of Fire: For a great Fire being lighted, the Soles of the Priſoner's Feet are rubbed with Bacon, or ſome other unctuous or cumbuſtible Subſtance; which being done, he is laid on the Ground with his Feet turned towards the Fire, and is held down in that Poſture, till ſuch Time as he has confeſſed all the Inquiſitors deſire to know. The two laſt mentioned kinds of Torture continue, as the firſt, for the Space of an Hour, and ſometimes more.

WHEN therefore a Priſoner is condemned to the Torture, he is carried to the Place appointed for that Purpoſe, which is called the Place of Torments. This is a ſubterraneous Cavern, to which one goes down by a numberleſs Multitude of Turnings and Windings, in order to prevent the dreadful Cries of thoſe miſerable Wretches from being heard. In this Place there are Seats only for the Inquiſitors, who are always preſent when any one is put to the Torture, and for the Biſhop of the Place, or his great Vicar, or his Deputy. It has no other Light than that of two Torches, which burn but faintly, but ſtrong enough to let the Priſoner ſee the Inſtruments with which he is to be tortured, and one, two, or more Executioners. Theſe Executioners wear a Habit very much like that of Penitents, i. e. thoſe who do Penance, being a long Robe made of black Buckram; their Heads and Faces are covered with a kind of black Cowl, having Holes in it at the Eyes, Noſe, and Mouth.

IMMEDIATEY the Priſoner is ſeiz'd by one of theſe Spectres, who ſtrips him ſtark naked, the Pudenda excepted. The Inquiſitors, before he is put to the Torture, ſtrongly exhort him to confeſs the Crime whereof he is accuſed. But if theſe prove ineffectual, and he perſiſts in proteſting his Innocence, he is put to the Torture to which he had been condemned in one of the three Manners above-mentioned. This is ſometimes ſo violent, that it reduces the Sufferer almoſt to his laſt Gaſp; on which Occaſion they ſend for the Phyſician of the Inquiſition, to know whether it will be poſſible under for him to bear up any longer under it.

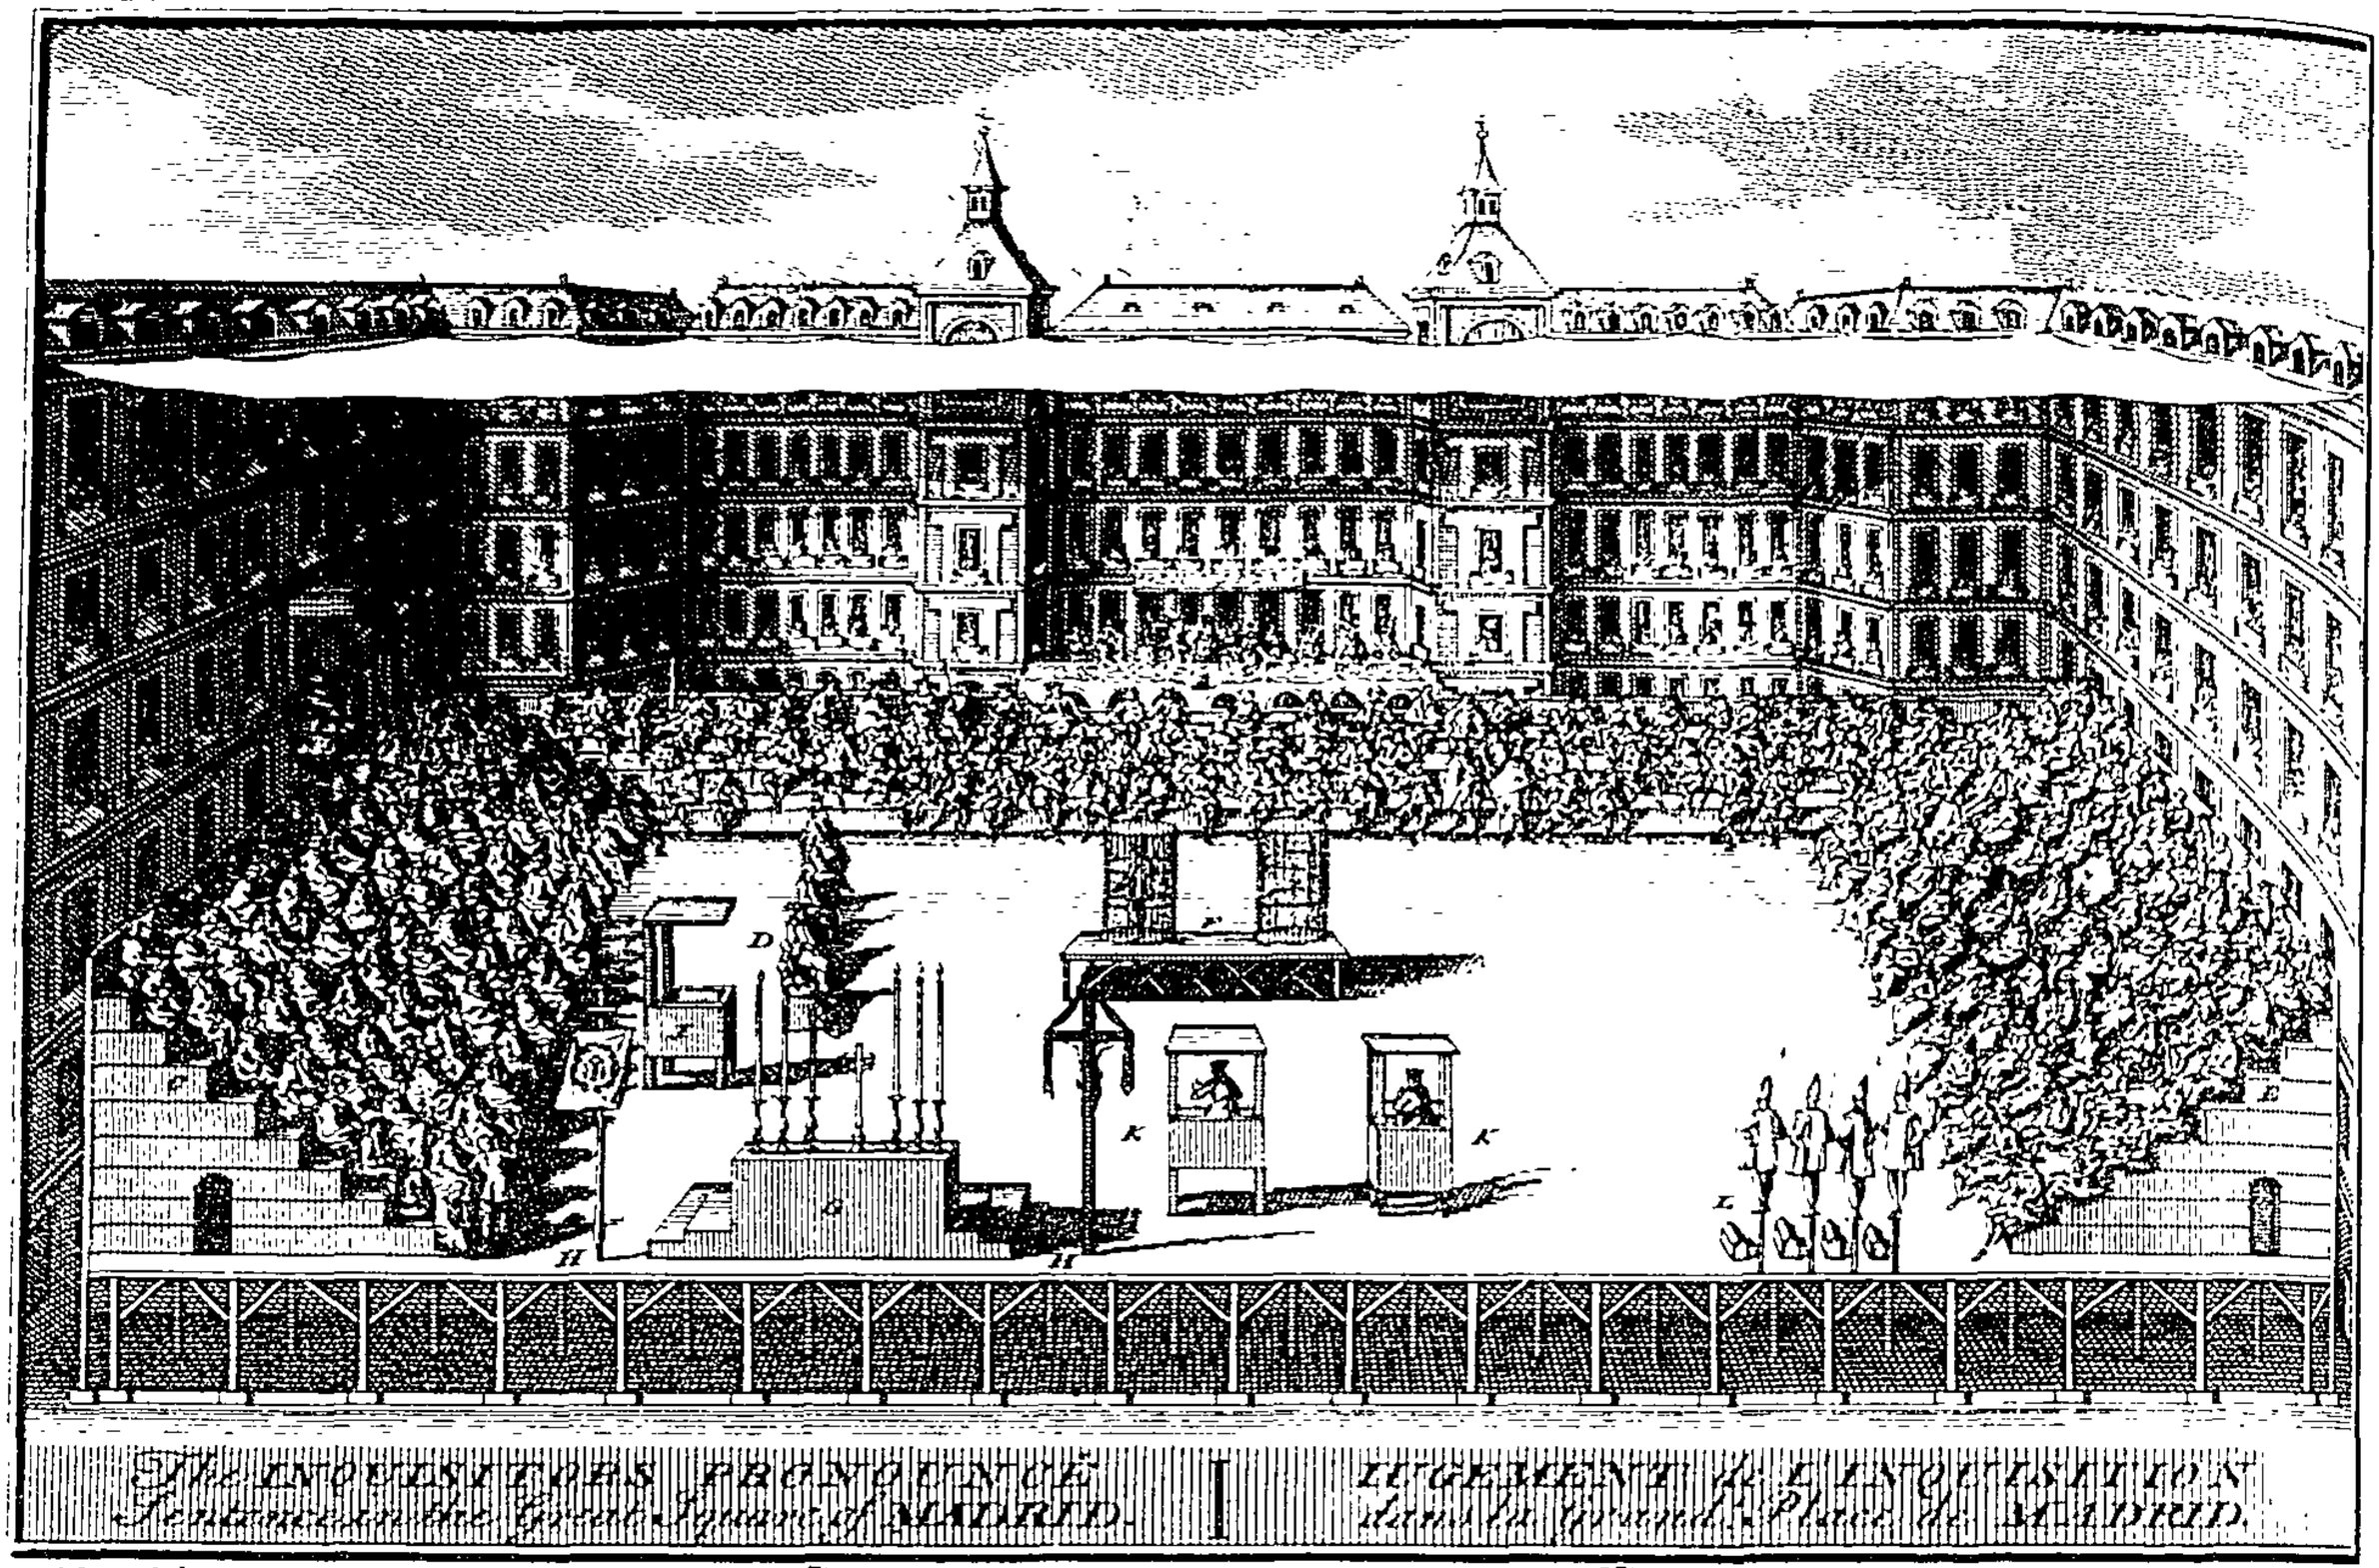
AFTER that, by the Violence of the Torments, they have forced from the Priſoner's own Mouth all they deſired to know, i. e. Things whereof he is wholly innocent, and others of which he is guilty, they yet do not ſtop here; for he muſt be put a ſecond Time to the Torture, in order to force him to declare the Motives which had induced him to commit the Crimes whereof he owns himſelf guilty. As for inſtance: In caſe a Man has married two Wives, or a Wife two Husbands; or a Monk, or Nun, has entred into the Marriage State, after having taken the Habit. Thus after a Criminal has, by the Violence of the Torture, owned himſelf guilty of ſome Crime, tho' it appear never ſo evident that he was excited to the Commiſſion of them, from a Deſire of gratifying ſome violent Paſſion, or out of Intereſt, he yet is put to the Torture a ſecond Time, in order to make him confeſs whether he did not believe Marriage to be a Sacrament; whether Vows are not binding; or, that it is not poſſible to lead a Life of perfect Continence. Thus after the unhappy Wretch, who generally is more actuated upon from the Violence of the Torture than Reaſon, has confeſſed more than he really knows, he is forced to ſubmit to the Torture a third Time, to force him to reveal his Accomplices, or thoſe who had either aided or aſſiſted him in his Crimes.



THUS, after having extorted from him all they deſire to know, the only Conſolation the poor Wretch receives, is to be carried back to thoſe horrible Dungeons we before deſcribed; where he is left a Prey to his Deſpair, and all the gloomy Reflections that may ariſe from the Pain which the Torments may have left behind them.

BUT in caſe the Violence of theſe Tortures cannot extort any Confeſſion, he is carried back to Priſon, when the Inquiſitors have recourſe to Artifices and Snares. Accordingly, ſeveral Fellows ſuborned for that Purpoſe are ſent to him, who under a Pretence of comforting and aſſiſting him, or telling him that they are Priſoners and Criminals as well as himſelf, exclaim againſt the Inquiſition, affirming it to be an inſupportable Tyranny, and the greateſt Scourge that ever God afflicted Mankind with; and by this means draw him into the Snare, which is ſo much the more unavoidable, as it is very difficult for a Perſon in Diſtreſs, to guard againſt pretended Friendſhip or Compaſſion, when masked with the Appearance of Sincerity.

THE Inquiſitors themſelves ſecond theſe inhuman Artifices to the utmoſt of their Power, by adminiſtring Conſolation to the unhappy Priſoner, and pretending to be touched with his Misfortunes; that they do not intend his Ruin, but Converſion; and that the ſmalleſt Confeſſion to them in private, which at the ſame Time they promiſe never to reveal, would ſecure him from any Torture, and reſtore him to his Liberty.

THE Reſult of all this, is, that in caſe the Priſoner ſtands convicted, either by the Sentence of the Inquiſitors, by the Depoſitions made againſt him, or by his own Confeſſion, he is condemned purſuant to the Heinouſneſs of his Guilt, either to Death, to perpetual Impriſonment, to the Gallies, to be whipped, or ſome ſuch Puniſhment.

BUT when the Inquiſitors are reſolved to put him to a cruel and ignominious Death the ſooner he ſuffers it the better, ſince the ſeveral Moments which paſs between Condemnation and Execution, are ſo many Deaths; which tho' it be only in Imagination, is yet yet not leſs ſevere upon that Account: And for this Reaſon the moſt ſevere Tribunals have always taken care to make the Time between the Condemnation and Execution as ſhort as poſſible.

But this Indulgence, how weak ſoever it may be in its own Nature, is yet never practiſed in the Inquiſition, and the Execution ſhall often be ſuſpended a Year or more, after Sentence of Condemnation has paſſed; and the Reaſon of this Cruelty, is, that by putting to death a great Number of Criminals at the ſame Time, the Execution may be the more dreadful, and conſequently a greater Example. The Sight of ſo many Criminals condemned in this Manner to die, without any regard to Age, Sex, or Quality, is thought to confirm the People in the Roman Catholic Religion; and the Inhabitants of thoſe Countries where the Inquiſition prevails, are perſuaded, that this alone has prevented the Spreading of Hereſies among them, at a Time when they infected all other Parts of Europe. This is one Reaſon why that Tribunal is called the Holy Office, and has obtained ſo unbounded an Authority in all thoſe Countries where it is eſtabliſhed.

CHAP. V.

The Ceremonies uſed in executing the Sentences of the Tribunals of the INQUISITION; extracted from a Narrative publiſhed at Madrid the 3*th of* May 1680, and executed the 29*th of* June of the ſaid Year; printed at Paris, au Bureau d'Adreſſe, the 22*d of* Auguſt 1680.

THE general Acts of the Inquiſition, which in all other Countries are conſidered only as a mere Execution of Criminals, are, in the Places where it is eſtabliſhed, looked upon as a religious Ceremony, in which they pretend the moſt illuſtrious and public Proofs of a religious Zeal are given; and are therefore call'd Acts of Faith. Theſe are generally exhibited in Spain at the Acceſſion of their Monarchs to the Throne, at their coming to Age, upon their Marriage, at the Birth of a Succeſſor to the Crown, in order to give them a more ſolemn Air. The laſt was ſolemniſed the Year his Catholic Majeſty Charles II. was married, before which there had not been one ever ſince 1632, viz. in the Beginning of the Reign of Philip IV.

But as there are always Perſons condemned from Time to Time, we thence may judge how many Years theſe unhappy Wretches ſpend in the moſt miſerable Manner before their Execution. And as the Ceremonies practiſed on theſe Occaſions are pretty near the ſame in all Places, I ſhall therefore relate only thoſe of the laſt Act or general Execution of the Inquiſition, the Year that Charles II. of Spain was married.

A Month before the general Execution, the Officers of the Inquiſition, preceded by their Standard, rode with great Solemnity from the Palace of the Holy Office to the open Square, where, in the Preſence of a numberleſs Multitude of People therein aſſembled, they proclaimed, by Sound of Trumpets and Kettle-Drums, that on that Day Month, an Act of Faith or general Execution of the Inquiſition would be exhibited.

As there had not been one for fifty Years before, great Preparations were made to make theſe Ceremonies as ſolemn and magnificent as poſſible.

A SCAFFOLD fifty Foot in Length was erected in the large Square at Madrid, which was raiſed to the ſame Height with the Balcony made for the King to ſit in. At the End, and along the whole Breadth of this Scaffold, at the Right of the King's Balcony, an Amphitheatre was raiſed, to which they aſcended by twenty five or thirty Steps; and this was appointed for the Council of the Inquiſition, and the other Councils of Spain. Above theſe Steps, and under a Canopy, the Great Inquiſitor's Roſtrum was placed, that he was raiſed much higher than the King's Balcony. At the Left of the Scaffold and the Balcony, a ſecond Amphitheatre was raiſed of the ſame Extent with the former, for the Criminals to ſtand in.

IN the midſt of the great Scaffold, another very ſmall one was built, in the Shape of a long Square, which ſupported two little Places made like Cages, and open at Top, wherein the Priſoners were to be placed while Sentence was pronounced upon them.

THREE Pulpits were alſo erected on the great Scaffold, two whereof were for the Relaters, or thoſe who read the Sentence, and the third for a Preacher; and, laſtly, an Altar was raiſed not far from the Amphitheatre, where the ſeveral Councils ſat.

THE Seats on which their Catholic Majeſties ſat, were ranged in ſuch a Manner, that the Queen was at the King's Left Hand, and at the Right of the Queen-Mother. The reſt of the whole Length of the Balcony on each Side, was fill'd with the Ladies of Honour of both the Queens. Balconies were likewiſe erected for the Ambaſſadors, the Lords and Ladies of the Court, and Scaffolds for the People.

A MONTH after Proclamation had been made of the Act of Faith, the Ceremony opened with a Proceſſion, which proceeded from St. Mary's Church in the following Order. The March was preceded by a hundred Coal-Merchants, all armed with Pikes and Muskets; theſe People furniſhing the Wood with which the Criminals are burnt. They were follow'd by Dominicans, before whom a white Croſs was carried. Then came the Duke of Medina-Celi, carrying the Standard of the Inquiſition, a Privilege hereditary in his Family. The Standard is of red Damask, on one Side of which is repreſented a drawn Sword in a Crown of Laurels, and the Arms of Spain on the other.

AFTERWARDS was brought forward a green Croſs covered with black Crape, which was followed by ſeveral Grandees and other Perſons of Quality, Familiars of the Inquiſition, with Clokes powdered with white and black Croſſes, edged with Gold Wire. The March was cloſed by fifty Halbardiers, or Guards belonging to the Inquiſition, clothed with black and white Garments, and commanded by the Marquiſs of Pouar, hereditary Protector of the Inquiſition in the Kingdom of Toledo.

THE Proceſſion having marched in this Order before the Palace, proceeded afterwards to the Square, when the Standard and the green Croſs were placed on the Scaffold, where none but the Dominicans ſtayed, the reſt being retired. Theſe Friars ſpent part of the Night in ſinging of Pſalms, and ſeveral Maſſes were celebrated on the Altar from Day-break to ſix in the Morning.

AN Hour after, the King and Queen of Spain, the Queen-Mother, and all the Ladies, appear'd in the Balconies.

AT

AT eight a Clock the Proceſſion began, in like Manner as the Day before, with the Company of Coal-Merchants, who place themſelves on the Left of the King's Balcony, his Guards ſtanding on his Right. Afterwards came thirty Men carrying Images made of Paſte-Board, as big as the Life. Some of theſe repreſented thoſe who were dead in Priſon, whoſe Bones were alſo brought in Trunks, with Flames painted round them; and the reſt of the Figures repreſented thoſe, who having eſcaped out of the Hands of the Inquiſition were outlawed. Theſe Figures were placed at one End of the Amphitheatre,

AFTER theſe came twelve Men and Women with Ropes about their Necks, and Torches in their Hands, with Carocas, or Paſte-Board Caps, three Foot high, on which their Crimes were either written or repreſented in different Manners.

THESE were followed by fifty others, having Torches alſo in their Hands, and clothed with a yellow San-benito, or Great-Coat without Sleeves, with a large St. Andrew's Croſs, of a red Colour, before and behind. Theſe were Jews, who, (this being the firſt Time of their Impriſonment) had repented of their Crimes; theſe are uſually condemned either to ſome Years Impriſonment, or to wear the San-benito; each Criminal of the two Orders were led by two Familiars of the Inquiſition.

NEXT came twenty Jews of both Sexes, who had relapſed thrice into their former Errors, and were condemned to the Flames. Thoſe who had given ſome Tokens of Repentance were to be ſtrangled before they were burnt, according to the uſual Practice; but the reſt, for having perſiſted obſtinately in their Errors, were to be burnt alive. Theſe wore Linen San-benito's, having Devils and Flames painted on them, and Caps after the ſame Manner: Five or ſix among them, who were more obſtinate than the reſt, were gagged, to prevent their uttering any blaſphemous Tenets.

SUCH as were condemned to die, were ſurrounded, beſides the two Familiars, with four or five Monks of different Orders, who were preparing them for Death as they went along.

THESE Criminals paſſed in the Order above-mentioned, under the King of Spain's Balcony; and after having walked round the Scaffold, were placed in the Amphitheatre that ſtood to the Left, and each of them ſurrounded with the Familiars and Monks who had attended upon them. Some of the Grandees who were Familiars, ſeated themſelves on two Benches, which had been prepared for them at the loweſt Part of the other Amphitheatre.

THE Clergy of St. Martin's Pariſh coming forwards, placed themſelves near the Altar; the Officers of the ſupreme Councils of the Inquiſition, the Inquiſitors, the Qualificators, the Officers of all the other Councils, and ſeveral other Perſons of Diſtinction both ſecular and regular, all of them on Horſe-back, with great Solemnity arrived afterwards, and placed themſelves on the Amphitheatre towards the Right Hand, on both Sides the Roſtrum, in which the Grand Inquiſitor was to ſeat himſelf. He himſelf came laſt of all, in a purple Habit, accompanied by the Preſident of the Council of Caſtile; when being ſeated in his Place the Preſident withdrew.

THEN they began to celebrate Maſs, in the midſt of which the Prieſt who officiated went down from the Altar, and ſeated himſelf in a Chair which had been placed for him. The Grand Inquiſitor came down from his Seat, and having put on his Cope and ſet the Mitre on his Head, after having ſaluted the Altar, he advanced towards the King's King's Balcony: He there went up the Steps that ſtood at the End of the Amphitheatre, together with certain Officers of the Inquiſition who carried thither their Croſs, the Goſpels, and a Book containing the Oath by which the Kings of Spain oblige themſelves to protect the Catholic Faith, to extirpate Hereſies, and to ſupport all the Proſecutions of the Inquiſition to the utmoſt of their Power.

THE King of Spain, ſtanding up and bareheaded, having on one Side of him a Grandee of Spain holding the Royal Sword with the Point upward, ſwore to obſerve the Oath, which a Counſellor of the Royal Council and that of the Inquiſition had juſt before read. He continued in this Poſture till ſuch Time as the Grand Inquiſitor was returned back to his Seat, where he took off his Pontifical Veſtments.

THEN one of the Secretaries of the Inquiſition aſcended a Pulpit appointed for that Purpoſe, and read an Oath in the ſame Tenor, which he adminiſtred to the ſeveral Councils and the whole Aſſembly; after which a Dominican went up into the ſame Pulpit, and preached a Sermon ſtuffed with Praiſes of the Inquiſition.

ABOUT twelve a Clock they began to read the Sentences of the condemned Criminals. That of the Criminals who died in Priſon, or were outlawed, was firſt read. Their Figures in Paſteboard were carried up on the little Scaffold, and put into the Cages. Then they went on to read the Sentence to each Criminal, who thereupon were put into the ſaid Cages one by one, in order for all Men to know them.

OF theſe twenty Perſons who had been condemned to the Flames, ſix Men and two Women could never be prevailed with to confeſs, or repent of their Errors. A young Woman was remanded back to Priſon, becauſe ſhe had always made the utmoſt Proteſtations of her Innocence, and that they thought proper to re-examine her Proſecution.

LASTLY, they read the Sentences which had been pronounced againſt thoſe who were convicted of Bigamy, of Witchcraft, of having profaned holy Things, and of ſeveral other Crimes; as likewiſe againſt the penitent Jews: All which laſted till nine at Night.

AFTER this they finiſhed the Celebration of the Maſs, and the Grand Inquiſitor, clothed in his pontifical Veſtments, pronounced a ſolemn Abſolution to all who ſhould repent. Then the King being withdrawn, the Criminals who had been condemned to be burnt, were delivered over to the ſecular Arm, and being mounted upon Aſſes were carried in this Manner thro' the Gate called Foncaral. At three hundred Paces diſtance from it, they were executed after Midnight: Thoſe who perſiſted obſtinately in their Errors were burnt alive; but ſuch as repented were ſtrangled before they were thrown into the Fire. Thoſe who had been ſentenced to be whipt, being alſo mounted on Aſſes, were the next Day carried up and down the Streets, and were whipt thro' all the chief Streets and Places of public Reſort.

BESIDES theſe general Executions of the Inquiſition, there are ſeveral other private ones yearly about the End of Lent. The Inquiſition on theſe Occaſions are accompanied by the Magiſtrates, the Officers of Juſtice, and thoſe of the King, by the Governor, the Nobility, the Biſhop, and the whole Body of the Clergy both ſecular and regular; and the whole is performed almoſt with the ſame Ceremonies.

THERE

THERE is likewiſe performed about this Time every Year, i. e. every Good-Friday, in Spain and Portugal, a Ceremony, which, for its Singularity, the Reader will permit me to mention in this Place. This is a Proceſſion of Penitents, compoſed of all the religious Orders, both regular and ſecular, and the ſeveral Pariſhes of the City, and their Fraternities; of all the Tribunals and Corporations; of the ſeveral Bodies and Companies of Tradeſmen in the City. The Players are alſo obliged to aſſiſt at it, and to bear a Part with the reſt.

THE King is alſo often preſent at it, attended with his whole Court, which is very numerous. The Penitents walk each with a Sword by his Side, and a Wax Taper in his Hand. Every Nobleman is followed by a great many Footmen with Torches in their Hands. An Air of Gloom appears in every Part of this Ceremony; the ſeveral Companies of the King's Guards have their Arms in Mourning; and the Horſes are led by the Grooms of his Stable. There are alſo Men clothed in Black, and maſked, holding various muſical Inſtruments in their Hands, ſuch as Trumpets, Drums, Flutes, &c. The Drums are covered with Black, and beat the dead March, as at the Death of a General, and the Trumpets ſound in mournful Notes. The Croſſes and Banners of the ſeveral Pariſhes are alſo covered with black Crape. Heavy and cumberſome Machines raiſed on Scaffolds, are drawn along, being painted with Figures repreſenting the Myſteries of our Saviour's Paſſion, At this Solemnity all the Ladies appear at their Windows and Balconies, dreſſed as on their Wedding-Day, and leaning on rich and ſumptuous Carpets. All the Penitents or Self-Scourgers of the City, never fail of making a Part in this Proceſſion. They wear on their Heads a long lawn Cap, three Foot long and ſlop'd like a Cone, on which a Piece of Linen Cloth is fix'd that falls down before and covers their Faces.

IT may indeed be ſaid, that ſome of theſe aſſiſt at this devout Exerciſe from a true Spirit of Piety; but then great Numbers of them do it only to pleaſe their Miſtreſſes which is a new Species of Gallantry unknown to other Nations. Theſe Penitents or Self-Scourgers have white Gloves and Shoes, and wear a Waiſtcoat, the Sleeves of which are faſtened on with Ribbons. One of theſe Ribbons is fixed in their Caps, and tied to their Scourges, and of the Colour which is moſt pleaſing to their Miſtreſſes. They whip themſelves in Cadence, with a Scourge made of Whip-Cord, at the End of which are ſmall round Pieces of Wax, ſtuck full of pointed Bits of Glaſs. He who ſcourges himſelf with the greateſt Courage and Dexterity, is look'd upon as the braveſt Man; and ſuch as do otherwiſe are hooted by the Women, who are ſo uſed to this cruel and bloody Spectacle, that they cannot forbear breaking out into injurious Expreſſions againſt thoſe who do not whip themſelves as ſeverely as they would have them; and theſe Penitent have ſo little Devotion in them that they generally return the Reproaches that are caſt upon them, and even inſult the Spectators as they paſs along. Whenever they obſerve a fine Woman, they are ſo dextrous at Scourging, that they ſhall make the Blood ſpirt juſt upon them; and the Ladies who are thus diſtinguiſhed, never fail to thank their Gallants for the Honour. But they carry the Joke much farther when they are got before their Miſtreſſes Houſes, for then they lay on with ſo much Violence and Fury, that they almoſt tear the Fleſh from their Backs and Shoulders; and the Lady who ſees this from her Balcony, and knows that it is all done for her Sake, is highly pleaſed with it, and is ſure never to forget the Favour. Theſe Penitents are Perſons of all Degrees and Conditions, from thoſe of the higheſt Quality to the meaneſt Plebeian; and it is obſerved, that whenever ſuch of them as have annually uſed theſe Exerciſes, lay them aſide, they ſeldom fail of falling ſick. Some of theſe Penitents practiſe Auſterities of a much more ſevere Nature than thoſe above-mentioned. Theſe go barefooted, and have a Mat tied on tight about them, which covers their Arms, and part of their Body to the Waiſt. Some of theſe draw after them a Croſs of prodigious Weight; others carry drawn Swords fixed in the Back and Arms, which make very deep Wounds every Time they happen to ſtumble. Others being ſtript to their Shirts, have themſelves tied to a Croſs, at the Church-Doors, where they break out into long and doleful Lamentations. The Perſons who practiſe theſe Auſterities are always masked, as are the Servants who attend upon them, and who ſupport them in the Proceſſion, during which they often meet with Sweetmeats and other Refreſhments. However, whether theſe Penitents or Self-Scourgers whip themſelves from a Spirit of Penance or mere Gallantry, 'tis certain that theſe Mortifications are the Death of a great many of them every Year [a].

BUT to return to the Inquiſition: Notwithſtanding theſe Proceſſions and dreadful Executions, the Priſons are but very little thinn'd of its Tenents, but are ever ſtock'd with Perſons of both Sexes, and of all Conditions. Theſe are either ſuch whoſe Crimes could not be proved againſt them, or others who do not deſerve corporal or public Chaſtiſements. Theſe, before they are ſuffered to go out from their Priſons of the Inquiſition, are all obliged to abjure De Levi or De Vehementi, i. e. of a ſlight or ſtrong Suſpicion of Hereſy. Thoſe who after having abjured De Vehementi, happen to fall again under the ſame Suſpicion, are conſidered as Perſons relapſed, and are ſure to be put to Death. But ſuch as relapſe De Levi only, are not liable to be puniſhed capitally, tho' they ſhould again relapſe.

IN fine, all who abjure, particularly De Vehementi, are condemned either to wear the San-benito, as long as they live, or only for a certain limited Time. This is the blackeſt Mark of Infamy that Perſons, or even Families, can poſſibly be expoſed to.

THOSE who have not been quite plunder'd of their Eſtates by the Inquiſition, employ it, whenever they meet an Opportunity, to redeem themſelves from the Neceſſity of wearing ſo ſhameful a Habit.

BUT theſe kind of Diſpenſations are ſeldom granted; for, not to mention the great Difficulty there is to obtain them, they are purchaſed at an exceſſive Rate; and the leaſt Misfortune that can befal a Man who falls into the Hands of the Inquiſition, is the Confiſcation of all his Goods and Chattels; for in the firſt Place, they confiſcate all the Goods, &c. of thoſe who are condemned to die; and as for the reſt, as their Eſtates are ſeized the Moment they are impriſoned, the greateſt Part of them is conſumed, either by the Roguery of the Sequeſtrators, or by Fines and Confiſcations.

CHAP. VI.

Maxims of the INQUISITION and of the Inquiſitors.

SUCH are the Methods of Proceeding in the Inquiſition. But before we conclude, it may not be improper to take notice of ſome of its principal Maxims, by which we ſhall be as well enabled to judge of its Spirit and Conduct, as by any Thing we have before related on that Head.

[a] Extracted from the Fifth Volume of the Delights and Curioſities of Spain and Portugal, written by Don John Alvarez de Colmenar.

IT

It is an inviolable Maxim with the Inquiſitors, That a Heretic muſt never be diſputed with upon religious Matters, eſpecially in public; ſo that they are to be inſtructed by Compulſion, and not by Arguments. That all who either conceal, or favour, a Heretic, in what Manner, or in what Method ſoever, ought to be excommunicated, and cannot be received into the Number of Penitents, without firſt paſſing thro' the Hands of the Inquiſition. This Tribunal always conſiders ſuch Perſons as thoſe who may juſtly be ſuſpected of Hereſy, and that too in the ſtrongeſt Manner, as tho' it were impoſſible to aſſiſt a Perſon, and at the ſame Time preſerve one's ſelf from their Errors. A Heretic, though abſolved by the Pope himſelf, is nevertheleſs ſtill ſubject to the Inquiſition, and may be condemned to die. When a Heretic has been once condemned, he muſt never be ſuffered to ſpeak before the People. A Heretic, notwithſtanding he retracts his former Errors, muſt yet not be pardoned, becauſe otherwiſe there is no Heretic but would ſave himſelf by a pretended Recantation. The Inquiſitors in the Examination of a Priſoner who is impeached, muſt never interrogate him as tho' they were doubtful of his Crime, but muſt always ſuppoſe his Crime to be Matter of Fact, and examine him only with reſpect to the Circumſtances. In the Examination of a Heretic, Death muſt always be ſet before his Eyes; nor muſt they hope, nor ever attempt, to convert him, either by Scripture, or by Argument. A Promiſe muſt be made him in ambiguous Terms, that in caſe he confeſſes his Crime, he ſhall be pardoned; but they muſt not keep it after he has made his Confeſſion.

To theſe Maxims we may add the following: That the Poſſeſſions of a Heretic devolve by Right on the Inquiſition, in prejudice even of his Children, and the reſt of his Catholic Heirs.

That Death does not prevent a Criminal from being ſubject to the Inquiſition: That he muſt be proſecuted after his Death, and be executed in Effigie. That a Perſon becomes ſuſpected of Hereſy, and thereby ſubject to the Inquiſition, tho' he only happens to advance ſome heretical Tenets in a jocoſe way, or may have mimicked a Heretic merely for Jeſt Sake. That in Matters of Hereſy and Apoſtacy, there is no pleading Preſcription. That no Perſon ought to employ friendly Advice before he impeaches another to the Inquiſition. That no Conſideration, either of Kindred, Alliance, Gratitude, tho' even for having ſaved a Perſon's Life, ought to prevent a Man from impeaching a Criminal who is become ſubject to the Inquiſition. That a Perſon who is known to have favoured Heretics, ought after his Death to be denied Church-Burial.

That whoever has advanced any heretical Tenets, tho' it were thro' Ignorance, and without knowing them to be ſo, does nevertheleſs by that means become ſubject to the Inquiſition; and that, becauſe it is the Duty of every good Chriſtian to know whatever has been condemned by the Church. That the civil Magiſtrate is bound to aſſiſt the Inquiſition upon Pain of Excommunication. That in caſe a Magiſtrate, after having been excommunicated for refuſing to aſſiſt the Inquiſition, delays to get himſelf abſolved, he ſhall be condemned as a Heretic.

In a Word, the Inquiſition are perſuaded, that a mental Heretic, who does not reveal his Errors, and conſequently hurts no one but himſelf, ought to be impeached to the Inquiſition, and be condemned. That one who has relapſed, tho' he repent afterwards, ought nevertheleſs to be condemned to die. That a Heretic, who after having abjured his Errors, falls afterwards into another Hereſy, ought to be conſidered as one relapſed. That a mental Heretic, who was not looked upon as ſuch during his Life-Time, and is not diſcovered to be one till after his Death, ought to be condemned and executed in Effigie. And that a Perſon impeached, who owns that he formerly embraced ſome heretical Principle, imagining it to be orthodox, ought nevertheleſs to be put to the Torture, in order to ſqueeze out of him, whether his Aſſertion be true.

IF to this we add, That the Proſecutors and Informers are allowed as Witneſſes; that they are never named, or diſcovered to the Priſoner, in order to incapacitate him from excepting againſt them; that Perſons are ſcarce ever confronted; that perjured Perſons and Miſcreants of the blackeſt Character are received as Witneſſes; that Wards and Minors, at the Age of fourteen Years, may, without the Conſent of their Guardians, or Truſtees, depoſe as Witneſſes: If theſe Things, I ſay, are conſider'd, we ſhall be forced to own, that the Inquiſition is the moſt ſevere, the moſt barbarous, and moſt ormidable Tribunal upon Earth.

THE Inquiſitors themſelves own, that the Procedure of the Inquiſition is ſuch, that it is ſcarce poſſible but a great Number of innocent Perſons muſt ſuffer along with the Guilty; but this does not once give them the leaſt Uneaſineſs; for 'tis alſo one of their chief Maxims, that it were better to put to Death an hundred Catholics of unblemiſhed Reputation, than to let one Heretic eſcape. The following Reaſon which they give for it is neither valid nor convincing, viz. that by putting an innocent Catholic to Death, they only aſcertain him the Joys of Paradiſe, whereas was an Heretic ſuffered to eſcape, he might infect and deſtroy a great Number of Souls.

NOR are ſuch innocent Perſons as are unjuſtly oppreſſed, allowed to complain of the Injuſtice th at may have been done to them: To do this would be a freſh Crime, which the Inquiſition would puniſh with ſo much the greater Severity, as it would be a Means of caſting a Stain upon its Reputation; not to mention that the Inquiſitors never allow themſelves to h ave been miſtaken in their Verdict.

THEY muſt therefore content themſelves with the Conſolation which the Directory of the Inquiſition gives them in the following Words: Let no one ſay he has been unjuſtly condemned, or complain of the eccleſiaſtical Judges, or of the Judgment of the Church; but in caſe he be unjuſtly condemned, let him rejoice that he ſuffers for the Sake of Juſtice.

THEY pretend that this ſaid Conſolation ought to ſatisfy a Man, though he may have been diveſted of all his Poſſeſſions, or condemned to the Gallies, to Baniſhment, to perpetual Impriſonment, or even to the moſt cruel and infamous Death. It muſt indeed be owned, that what renders it ſomething the more tolerable, is, that the wretched Condition to which theſe unhappy Perſons are reduced, does not allow them to entertain any other. However, we may juſtly ſuppoſe, that the Inquiſitors themſelves would not be ſatisfied with it, though in Occaſions of a leſs cruel Nature.

CHAP. VII.

The Troubles and Difficulties that are met with in the INQUISITION. The Inhumanity, Injuſtice, and Cruelty, which this Tribunal exerciſes againſt all who are ſubject to it, not excepting their Kings.

WE may juſtly ſuppoſe that ſo ſevere a Tribunal as that of the Inquiſition, forces the People among whom it is eſtabliſhed to live in the utmoſt Conſtraint. Mariana, the moſt celebrated Spaniſh Hiſtorian, relates, That when it was firſt ſet up in Spain, the Inhabitants conſidered the Freedom they were deprived of, either of Speaking or Hearing, (becauſe of the Spies called Familiars of the Inquiſition, who are diſperſed up and down the Cities, the Towns, and the Countries) as the greateſt Slavery.

TIME, which makes the greateſt Evils ſupportable, has not yet been able to make the People ſit eaſy under this dreadful Tribunal. They look upon thoſe Nations with Envy who are not ſubject to it; and though Religion is apt to make the ſtrongeſt Impreſſion on the Mind, 'tis nevertheleſs certain they would give all they were worth in the World to rid themſelves of it.

IT muſt be owned, that the preſerving Religion pure and unſullied is a great Happineſs, and that it is as much the Concern of Politics as Piety, to prevent the Growth of all erroneous Doctrines from ſpreading. And further, it cannot be denied but that Jealouſies, Diſtruſts, treacherous Actions, and the moſt cruel Revenge which is exerciſed under a pretended View of Zeal and Religion, and the Ruin and Deſperation of a numberleſs Multitude of Innocents, are all of them Evils which cannot be too much guarded againſt.

IT might, however, be ſaid, that theſe would be in ſome meaſure ſupportable (for the moſt holy and moſt uſeful Inſtitutions have been ſubject to ſome Inconveniencies) if at the ſame Time that Religion is preſerved from that Impurity it might otherwiſe contract, by being incorporated with pernicious Opinions, were People but better inſtructed in the Faith, and the Maxims exhibited in the Morality of the Goſpel. But Experience plainly ſhews, that there are no Country in the World where the Inhabitants live more diſſolutely, than thoſe in which the Inquiſition is eſtabliſhed, where the People are leſs inſtructed in Matters relating to Faith, where more Hypocrites are to be found, or where leſs ſincere and ſolid Piety, which is the true Characteriſtic of a Chriſtian, is met with.

IT cannot be denied, but that the Inquiſition is the Occaſion of all theſe Evils; ſince it is certain, that the Dread People are under, leſt ſome Word ſhould eſcape them that might be conſtrued in a wrong Senſe, and which would thereby give an Opportunity of impeaching them to the Inquiſition, is the Reaſon why they never diſcourſe upon any religious Topic, nor ever employ their Thoughts upon it: And the Reaſon of this is, becauſe the Connexion between the Thoughts and Expreſſions is ſo great, that it would inſenſibly engage them to diſcourſe upon it, in caſe they were to beſtow any ſerious Reflections on that Subject.

ANOTHER Circumſtance that renders the Inquiſition ſtill more formidable, is, that whereas in all other Countries, Princes, and thoſe who by their Birth, their Character, and the Enjoyment of the principal Dignities, either in Church or State, are raiſed above the common Level, and therefore exempt from all public Proſecutions; or in caſe they ever are proſecuted, 'tis always done with the utmoſt Tenderneſs and Circumſpection; this Tribunal, on the contrary, in order to render itſelf more formidable, affects to ſpare no Body, and to ſtrike at Perſons of the moſt exalted Rank, not excepting crown'd Heads.

'TIS well known that the Inquiſition of Rome has often condemned Cardinals, although their Character is there looked upon to be of ſo ſacred a Nature, that 'tis pretended Kings themſelves cannot condemn ſuch of their Subjects to die, as are inveſted with that Dignity. But Henry III. having acted otherwiſe with relation to the Cardinal de Guiſe, though he had the moſt cogent, as well as moſt indiſpenſable Reaſons for ſo doing, ſince he might eaſily have convicted him of High-Treaſon; nevertheleſs, Sixtus V. took an occaſion from hence to excommunicate and depoſe him. We before related how he treated Mark-Anthony de Dominis, though an Archbiſhop and a Primate, and the moſt learned Man of his Age.

THE Inquiſition of Arragon went much farther; for it had the Impudence to arraign Don Carlos Prince of Vienna, eldeſt Son of John II. King of Arragon.

BUT that of Caſtile went ſtill farther; for it attempted to arraign the Memory of Charles V. and to condemn his laſt Will and Teſtament to the Flames as heretical, together with all thoſe who had had the greateſt Share in his Confidence and Friendſhip.

As this is an aſtoniſhing Incident, the Reader will undoubtedly be very well pleaſed to have it at full Length; I ſhall therefore give it him on the Authority of three Writers of great Credit, viz. Meſſieurs de Thou, Aubigné, and le-Labourcur.

AMONG the ſeveral Reports which had been ſpread concerning the Abdication of the Emperor Charles V. the moſt ſurprizing was, that the continual Correſpondence he had held with the Proteſtants of Germany, had inclined him in ſome meaſure to their Tenets; and that the Motive of his concealing himſelf in that Solitude, was, in order to enjoy the Liberty of ending his Days in ſuch Exerciſes of Piety as agreed with the ſecret Diſpoſition of his Mind.

IT was ſaid, that he could not forgive himſelf for the ill Treatment of thoſe brave Princes whom he had conquered. Their Virtue, which in their Diſtreſs tarniſh'd all his Laurels, had inſenſibly engaged him to have ſome Eſteem for their Tenets.

THIS Eſteem manifeſted itſelf by the Choice he made of Perſons ſuſpected of Hereſy for his ſpiritual Guides; ſuch as Doctor Caculla, his Preacher; of the Archbiſhop of Toledo; and, above all, of Conſtantius Pontius Biſhop of Dreſſe, and his ghoſtly Father.

AFTER his Death, the Cell in which he died at St. Juſtus, was found hung round with Papers written with his own Hand, upon the Topics of Juſtification and Grace, and in Terms that differed very little from the Notions of the Proteſtants.

BUT

BUT nothing corroborated this Opinion ſo much as his laſt Will. He left but very few pious Legacies, or Foundations for Maſſes; and the Puport of it differed ſo widely from thoſe made by zealous Catholics, that the Inquiſition thought they might juſtly take offence at it.

HOWEVER they did not dare to diſcover their Reſentments till the Arrival of Philip II. his Son, becauſe they were not yet ſufficiently acquainted with his Temper, and the Spirit with which he might be actuated. But this Prince having ſignalized his Arrival in Spain, by putting all thoſe to Death who favour'd the new Opinions; thus emboldened'd, the Inquiſitors, by the Example he ſet them, firſt fell upon the Archbiſhop of Toledo, Primate of Spain, Caculla, the Emperor's Chaplain, and, at laſt, on Conſtantius Pontius, his ghoſtly Father.

THE King having ſuffer'd all theſe three to be caſt into Priſon, the Spaniards look'd upon this Inſtance of his Patience as the higheſt Teſtimony of his Zeal for Religion; but 'twas with Horror the reſt of the World ſaw the Emperor's Confeſſor, in whoſe Arms he had reſigned his Breath, and who, as it were, had received that great Soul into his own Boſom, delivered up to the moſt cruel and moſt ſhameful of all Puniſhments, and that too by the Hands of the King his Son.

AND indeed the Inquiſitors indicting theſe three great Perſonages for having had a Hand in the Emperor's Will, had afterwards the unparallel'd Arrogance to condemn both them and the laſt Will to the Flames.

THIS Sentence made ſo much Noiſe in the World, that the King began to make ſome ſerious Reflection on it. At firſt indeed the Jealouſy he had of his Father's Glory, made him take ſome Pleaſure in ſeeing his Memory thus injured; but afterwards conſidering the Conſequences of this Inſult, he prevented the Execution thereof, by the moſt gentle as well as moſt ſecret Methods; in order not to anger the Inquiſitors, or any way wound the Authority of their Tribunal.

DON CARLOS, the King's only Son, did not act with ſo much Temper; his Reſentment upon that Account roſe proportionably to the Love he bore to the Emperor his Grandfather, and the extreme Veneration he had for his Memory.

As he was too young to know, that the moſt abſolute Monarchs have no Rights ſo ſacred in the Minds of the People as thoſe of Religion, he openly blamed the King's Weakneſs, and afterwards ſpoke publicly of the Arrogance of the Inquiſition, with a Warmth natural to his Youth and intrepid Bravery, and to an Inſult which was not to be parallel'd in Hiſtory. He even threaten'd to extirpate the Inquiſition one Day or other, and the Agents of ſo cruel a Tribunal, that arrogated to itſelf the higheſt Titles. This Heat, as we ſhall afterwards ſee, proved fatal to him; and the Inquiſitors were ſo highly offended at it, that nothing would ſatiate their Revenge but the Death of that generous Prince.

HOWEVER, this mighty Quarrel was made up; Caculla was burnt alive, with the Paſteboard Image of Conſtantius Pontius, who had died ſome Days before in Priſon. The Archbiſhop of Toledo appealed to Rome, and got clear of the Inquiſition by large Sums of Money and great Friends; and this being done, there was no further Talk of the Emperor's Will.

BUT notwithſtanding that the Reſentments of the Prince were mitigated by this Reconciliation, the Inquiſitors were far from being appeaſed. As it is one of their Maxims never never to forgive, they raiſed ſo much Uneaſineſs in the Minds of the People, that the King was obliged to ſend him from Court, as alſo Prince John his Brother, and the Prince of Parma his Nephew, who had joined with Prince Carlos in the juſt Indignation he had ſhewn againſt the Inquiſition.

BUT the cruel Revenge of this Tribunal did not ſtop here; for ſome Years after, making a Handle of the Troubles which had happened in the Low-Countries, they imputed the Compaſſion this Prince had ſhewn to theſe unhappy Wretches as a Crime. Religion, according to their uſual Cuſtom, was here brought in by Head and Shoulders, and made a Part in their Reſentments: They ſuppoſed, that as thoſe People were Heretics, 'twas impoſſible Prince Carlos ſhould have formed a Deſign of protecting them, without becoming an Accomplice in their Guilt. In ſhort, they had ſo great an Aſcendant over King Philip's Mind, as to prevail with this unnatural Father to condemn his Son to die. The only Favour they granted him, was the Choice of what Death he would die. He choſe the hot Bath, where the Veins of his Legs and Arms being opened, Life went from him by inſenſible Degrees.

MICHAEL DE MONTSERRAT, in his Treatiſe de[a] Cœna Domini, reproaching the Spaniſh Inquiſitors, among other Crimes, with abuſing the Privilege of the holy Office to that Degree, as to caſt into its Priſons all ſuch Wives and Maidens as refuſed to indulge them in their criminal Paſſions, and to have the Cruelty (after having carnally abuſed thoſe innocent Victims, under a Pretence of ſaving them) to condemn them to Death, addreſſes himſelf to them as follows: Amas eſſo mal hechores, come ne teneys verguenca ni honra, que deſpues de aver gozado las mugeres y donzellas que entran en vueſtro poder, deſpudes de averlas gozado las entregays al fuego: O impios peores que los viejos de Suſanna! "You are worſe than the moſt wicked Criminals; are you not aſhamed to "abuſe and ſeduce all ſuch Wives and Maidens as come into your Clutches; and not "contented with this, to condemn them afterwards to the Flames! O abominable! "O impious Wretches! more wicked than the old Lechers who accuſed the chaſte Su-
"ſanna!" We meet with Words to the ſame Effect in the Works of Cyprian de Valera.

THESE Inſtances have ſufficiently manifeſted, that the unjuſt and arbitrary Power of the Inquiſition is almoſt unlimited: It extends not only over all the Subjects, not excepting thoſe of the moſt exalted Rank, of thoſe Princes in whoſe Dominions it is eſtabliſhed, but even over the Kings themſelves; and the following Example will ſuffice to ſhew, to how great a Pitch of Inſolence this Tribunal dared to carry its Authority. Under the Reign of Philip III. King of Spain, two Cordeliers, or Franciſcan Friars, either from a Deſign of oppoſing the new Doctrines, which then were diffuſed in ſeveral Parts of Chriſtendom, or from other Motives, having perhaps proceeded too far in the Points controverted between the Proteſtants and Roman Catholics, were accuſed by the Inquiſitors, with having a Deſign to leave their Order and Habit, and to turn Proteſtants, and as ſuch were ſeized and carried to the Priſons of the Inquiſition; where, after having been tried according to the uſual Cuſtom, that is, without being heard in their own Defence, they were condemned to be burnt, as being guilty of holding heretical Opinions. This Affair made a great Noiſe in the World, and the People did not think them ſo guilty as the Officers of the Inquiſition pretended them to be. The Day of Auto da Fe, or Act of Faith, being come, the Proceſſion paſſed along before the King's Palace at Madrid, as was the uſual Cuſtom. The two Cordeliers, as they were going to Execution, gave Glory to God for enabling them to ſuffer Martyrdom for the Confeſſion of his Goſpel, and ſung Pſalms and Prayers with ſo loud a Voice as reached the King's Ears. He was in his Balcony, and being melted to Compaſſion at the Sight of them, he cried out, Surely thoſe two Men are very unhappy, to die for a Thing of the Truth whereof they are perſuaded. He had no ſooner uttered theſe Words, than a Familiar haſted and acquainted the Inquiſitors with them, who immediately ſent a Meſſenger to the King, and declared, that the Words he had repeated having given offence to ſeveral Perſons, and to the holy Office in particular, it was neceſſary he ſhould expiate this Crime by ſome exemplary Puniſhment. The King did not at firſt take much notice of it; but the Inquiſitor going up to him, told him, in a very ſerious Tone, that he muſt abſolutely ſubmit himſelf to ſome Puniſhment. They were a long Time conſidering what kind of Penance to enjoin the King, when at laſt it was agreed he ſhould ſuffer a Porringer of Blood to be taken from him, which ſhould be burnt by the Hands of the common Hangman; and accordingly it was executed in Preſence of the great Inquiſitor and his Officers. This Story is related in the Memoirs of the Count de Rouſſy, quoted in the Picture or Hiſtory of the Popes, printed at Collen in 1714. p. 335.

'Tis plain from theſe dreadful Examples, that the Inquiſition is a horrid Tribunal, and that Perſons of the greateſt Credit and Rank dread its Power as much as the meaneſt of the People. And indeed, when the Enemies of Duke Olivarez (who had as much Power and Authority in Spain as Cardinal Richelieu in France) had conſpired to deſtroy him, they thought the beſt Expedient would be to impeach him to the Inquiſition. Notwithſtanding the Favour and prodigious Credit of the firſt Miniſter of ſo formidable a Monarchy, they had the Impudence to ſeize upon his Perſon. Among the great Numbers whom he had loaded with Riches, and whoſe Intereſt was inſeparable from his, not one of them dared to make the leaſt Declaration in his Favour; inſomuch that this great Man died, after having been univerſally abandoned.

CHAP. VIII.

Conduct of the INQUISITION with regard to Books.

BUT as the Inquiſition is ſo rigorous againſt Perſons, 'tis no leſs ſevere with reſpect to Books this being one of the principal Branches of its Authority.

As there are always, among the Agents and Familiars of this Tribunal, a great Number of indolent lazy Fellows, the ſame as in Monaſteries, whoſe Monks are as much devoted to the Inquiſition as their own Agents, the Moment a Book is publiſhed, 'tis read and examined, but ever with the Prejudices which prevail in thoſe Places, and which frequently are received as ſound Maxims by all the World beſides. If they diſlike but the moſt trifling Circumſtance in a Book, the Inquiſition has immediate Notice of it, where 'tis examined a ſecond Time, but ſeldom without being cenſured. They are exceſſively rigorous in this Country on the Article of Books, and they often cenſure them for the moſt trifling Circumſtance.

This Cenſure may be conſidered under three Heads: Sometimes a Book is abſolutely condemned to all Intents and Purpoſes. At other Times it is condemned only till ſuch Time as it ſhall be corrected. Laſtly, an Extract is ſometimes made of the ſeveral Propoſitions condemned, all which are expreſly ſtigmatized.

AN Index or Table is publiſhed annually, containing a Catalogue of all the Book which have been condemned that Year. Here all the Books are met with which have been cenſured in any of the three Manners above mentioned. This Index is afterwards paſted or hung up in the moſt public Places of Reſort; after which no Perſon is allowed to keep them by him. One of the Caſes which ſubjects a Perſon to the Inquiſition, is either the reading or keeping ſuch Pieces by him; and if any Man ſhould be found to have one of theſe ſtigmatized Books, that alone would bring him into great Trouble.

HENCE we may judge what Treatment the Authors of them would meet with, were they to be diſcovered. For this Reaſon thoſe People take the utmoſt Care not to write any Thing that may be obnoxious; or in caſe a Man is over-run with the Itch of Scribbling, he never ſuffers any Perſon to be privy to it; and a Writer who cannot reſiſt the Impulſe of his Genius, is often obliged, for his own Security, to baniſh himſelf for ever from his own Country.

As to the Printer or Publiſher of ſuſpected Books, ſuch an one would think himſelf very happy, could he clear himſelf by a large Fine, or the Confiſcation of all the Copies. But he does not meet with the leaſt Favour on theſe Occaſions; no Compoſition is allowed, and they never leave him till they have completed his Ruin. It even often coſts him his Liberty, and he ſees himſelf reduced to ſpend a great many Years, and ſometimes his whole Life, in the Priſons of the Inquiſition.

NAY, they are ſo rigorous in the Inquiſition upon the Article of Books, that they have not even ſpared the Fathers of the Church. There are ſeveral of theſe extant, printed by the Inquiſition, wherein we find whole Pages caſtrated, becauſe they contained Sentiments or Paſſages different from thoſe which are received in the Countries where the Inquiſition is eſtabliſhed.

WE cannot comprehend what Excuſe can be brought for ſo extraordinary a Liberty, to give it the ſofteſt Name. However, we may affirm, that were it to be practiſed in thoſe Countries which are not ſubject to the Inquiſition, we ſhould thereby ſoon loſe all thoſe Proofs of Antiquity and Tradition ſo uſeful to prove Heretics guilty of Innovations in Matters of Religion; at leaſt we ſhould have none left but ſuch as might be juſtly ſuſpected. Could it be poſſible for the greateſt Enemies of the Church to give her a more dangerous Wound? Thus Zeal when unaſſiſted by Knowledge, has frequently an Effect quite different from what it propoſed to itſelf.

WE muſt own, that as nothing can be of worſe Conſequence than the Peruſal of ill Books, ſo, on the other Side, to prevent the Sale of ſuch as may corrupt either the Faith or Morals of People, cannot but be of the utmoſt Service.

ONE of the moſt eſſential Duties of all Chriſtian Princes and Magiſtrates, is, to have a watchful Eye on theſe Things; and ſuch Governments as have ſuffered themſelves to be deprived of this Branch of their Authority, have never perceived the Loſs it was to them till it was too late to remedy it.

THE Commonwealth of Venice is the only Republic that has ever had a juſt Notion of the Importance of this Maxim, and has not ſuffered the leaſt Diminution of its antient Rights. She ſtill aſſerts them with her uſual Spirit and Reſolution; and here Miniſters, to this Day, enjoy the Right of examining whatever Books are printed, to prevent their inſtilling any pernicious Doctrines. And as for thoſe which were formerly printed, printed, occaſioned by the too great Remiſſneſs of the Cenſors, ſhe prevents their being reprinted, in order to put a Stop to the Evil.

SPAIN, for many Years, follow'd what is ſtill practiſed at Venice. The Right of examining all Books written in oppoſition to Religion and the State, was lodged in the Prince's Miniſters, who alſo uſed to cenſure them; but the Court of Rome, ever upon the Watch to extend the Limits of their Power, got Poſſeſſion of this Right in a very artful Manner, upon the following Occaſion. In the Beginning of the laſt Century, Cardinal Baronius, in order to improve upon all the Attempts which had hitherto been made to enlarge the Juriſdiction of the Court of Rome, writ a Letter dated the 13th of June, 1605. to Philip III. King of Spain, in which he complained that his Miniſters hindred the Sale of the eleventh Volume of his Annals, in his Dominions of Naples and Milan. He advances boldly in his Letter, that the Pope is the ſole lawful Judge of Books; and that Princes, and their Miniſters, have no Power to condemn any Book that has once had his Holineſs's Sanction.

THE King of Spain immediately perceived what would be the Conſequence of theſe Maxims; but as he was unwilling to condemn what his Officers had done, who had acted by his Orders, or at leaſt agreeable to his Intentions, and did not care to fall out with a Cardinal of Baronius's Character, (which would inevitably have happened, had he anſwered Baronius's Letter) he took a Reſolution to take no notice of it; but as his Silence in ſo important a Juncture was not ſufficient, he ſuffered the Prohibitions which his Miniſters had iſſued out to continue, and be obeyed.

THE Cardinal, vexed at the ill Succeſs his Letter had met with, and joining his particular Reſentments to the Pretenſions of the Court of Rome, which he had engaged himſelf to maintain, though he thereby endangered the Character he had in the World of being an able Man (a Circumſtance that affected him very much) he yet improved upon the firſt Maxims he had publiſhed in the twelve Volumes of his Annals, printed in the Year 1607. He there ſays in expreſs Terms, in a Diſcourſe written purpoſely on that Subject, that it was ſcandalous and impious, for the royal Judges (Princes) to preſume to cenſure ſuch Books as had been approved by the Pope, and to prohibit all Bookſellers in their Dominions, to vend them; that this was robbing Peter of thoſe Keys which Jeſus Chriſt had given him, viz. that of diſcerning between Good and Evil; and, laſtly, that the only Reaſon why the Miniſters of Spain had prohibited his Book, was, becauſe he therein reproved the unjuſt Actions and Uſurpations of their Sovereigns.

BUT if the Cardinal got no Advantage by this Diſcourſe, ſo injurious to the Dignity of all Roman Catholic Kings, Princes, and Chriſtian Magiſtrates, it plainly diſcovered the fiery and paſſionate Temper of the Court of Rome, who think they may lawfully offend crowned Heads, and, under a religious Pretext, exclaim againſt their Government in the ſharpeſt Invectives, while at the ſame Time, they will not allow thoſe Princes to prevent the Sale of ſuch Writings in their own Dominions.

BUT there is no one but ſees the Miſchiefs that would enſue, in caſe the Approbation which the Popes, for their own Advantage, indulge to Books written purpoſely to invalidate the moſt lawful Authority of Kings, ſhould oblige Sovereigns to permit the diſpoſing of them in their ſeveral Dominions.

CAN any Thing be poſſibly more unjuſt, than to pretend that a Book, in which a King is inſulted with the opprobrious Names of Uſurper and Tyrant, or the Memory of

of his Anceſtors defamed, and wherein his Subjects meet with n othing but Arguments in Favour of Diſobedience and Rebellion, ſhould be publicly read and ſold in the Territories of ſuch a Prince?

HOWEVER Baronius pretended to all this; who, after having written in very harſh Terms againſt ſeveral Kings of Arragon, and Ferdinand the Catholic in particular, in his Diſcourſe of the Monarchy of Sicily, Volume the eleventh of his eccleſiaſtical Annals, thought that Philip III. did him a high Injury, in prohibiting the Sale of a Work which abounded with Calumny and Reproaches againſt his Predeceſſors and Anceſtors; and who, as if all his Aſſertions had been juſt, applied to himſelf theſe Words of the Goſpel, Bleſſed are thoſe that ſuffer for Righteouſneſs Sake. This Conſolation, which was only in his Imagination, came very ſeaſonably; for the Kings of Spain have always been of Opinion, that he merited no other Conſolation.

HOWEVER, as 'tis certain that any Work relating to the Catholic Faith, which has been approved by the Pope, cannot be condemned by the Laity; ſo, on the other Side, 'tis equally certain that all ſecular Princes and Magiſtrates may prohibit any hiſtorical or political Piece, though all the Prelates in the World had approved it.

As for the Expedient propoſed by Baronius, viz. that Recourſe ſhould be had to the Biſhops, for the ſuppreſſing any Work which the Miniſters of the Prince were apprehenſive would occaſion either Diſorder or Scandal, we have already ſhewn that ſuch a Remedy would be worſe than the Diſeaſe, ſince it would hereby give the Clergy an Opportunity of ſetting up for Judges in a thouſand Things, the Cognizance whereof does not any Way belong to them.

To this we might add, that a Government that had not Authority ſufficient in itſelf, to provide for whatſoever might be neceſſary for its well-being, would ſcarce merit the Name of a Government; or ſuch an one as ſhould be obliged to wait till ſuch Time as a Remedy ſhould be adminiſtred by thoſe, whoſe Intereſt it was to protract the Evil; or who even would never provide againſt it, but in ſuch a Manner as might beſt advance their own private Views, abſtracted from the Exigencies of the State, and the particular Advantage of the Monarch.

FOR this Reaſon a Sovereign ought never to depend upon the Diligence and Care of others, in Affairs wherein the Happineſs of his Subjects is concerned, ſince God has given him the Authority, and put ſuch Methods into his Hands as are effectual for performing the ſame. And in fact, he only has a juſt Idea of what may be fitting and advantageous to his People, and therefore has no Buſineſs to borrow thoſe Things from Rome which he has in his own Dominions.

THIS made John de Monluc Biſhop of Valentia to ſay, ſpeaking of the Wars that had been carried on in France upon a religious Account, "That it was very ridiculous "when the City of Paris was on Fire, to wait for the Waters of Tyber to extinguiſh it, "when thoſe of the Seine were ready for that Purpoſe."

THE Policy of Kings in particular, is directly oppoſite to that of Popes: Things that are advantageous to the Territories of the Church, are not ſo for the Dominions of another Prince; and ſuppoſing they were, no one could juſtly maintain, that ſuch a Government would be obliged to conform to them: Thus a Set of Tenets might be uſeful at Rome, which at Paris, Vienna, Madrid, Venice, and in all other Parts of the World, would be of pernicious Conſequence. The Reaſon of this is, becauſe the Views and Intereſts of Princes are different, conſequently the Pope's Approbation could not not deprive Princes of the Power of condemning ſuch Books as might occaſion any Troubles in their reſpective Dominions.

LET us now take notice of good Books. As the ſtudying of ſuch muſt neceſſarily be extremely uſeful, one cannot be too careful in diſtinguiſhing them from thoſe of a pernicious Tendency, nor be too cautious how we condemn them in common with bad ones.

'TIS indeed true, that to be able to pronounce juſtly on their ſeveral Merits, a Man muſt be endued with Learning, Penetration, a good Taſte, and above all, a certain Extent of Underſtanding, a Circumſtance ſeldom met with, and particularly in thoſe who are any way related to the Inquiſition. The ſeveral Members of this Tribunal have very little Notion of Learning, and are vaſtly confined in their Ideas; a good Taſte is quite out of the Queſtion; they are wholly ignorant of Antiquity; in a Word, they judge intirely from the Prejudices they have received, whether good or bad; and they boaſt of no other Learning than that of School-Divinity, or the new Canon-Law. Whatever does not agree with the Lights which theſe two laſt mention'd Branches of Knowledge are able to give, which are both confined within pretty narrow Bounds, is ſure of being diſapproved. What muſt be the Fate of a valuable Book, when ſuch Perſons as theſe are the Cenſors of it? Notwithſtanding this, the Inquiſitors pretend to be Judges in every Part of Literature; but then their Cenſure is generally advantageous to the Sale of a Book, and if it thereby becomes more ſcarce, 'tis the more valued upon that Account.

BUT of all the Countries where the Roman Catholic Religion is eſtabliſhed, there is none where the Cenſure of the Inquiſition againſt a Book, is leſs regarded than in France; nay, the French profeſs openly, that they will never ſubmit to it. A Book does not ſell the worſe for having been prohibited by thoſe Tyrants, nor do the Writers ſuffer in their Reputation upon that Account.

FOUR Circumſtances contribute to the little Regard that is paid to theſe kinds of Cenſures. 1. 'Tis ſaid that the Inquiſition, not excepting that of Rome, notwithſtanding the empty Title it aſſumes of Univerſal, has no manner of Authority in that Kingdom. 2. There are a great Number of Maxims in France, directly claſhing with thoſe of the Inquiſition; and as the French Maxims have been often condemned by the Inquiſitors, they have accuſtomed themſelves to deſpiſe whatever Sentences they pronounce. 3. The French are certain, that Policy, Intrigue, and Intereſt, are very often the chief Motives that occaſion Cenſure. And as the Politics of France do not always agree with thoſe of Rome, this is another Motive not to ſubmit to its Cenſures. 4. They are perſuaded of the bad Taſte that prevails in the Inquiſition; and the Genius and Qualities of the Members of it, are not unknown in that Kingdom. France, on the contrary, abounds with learned Men; the handſome Reception they there meet with, and the generous Reward that is commonly beſtowed on them, engages Perſons of all Nations to go thither. A great Penetration and a good Taſte ſeem to be ſpread univerſally in France. The French have a Value for Antiquity, they apply themſelves continually to the Search of it; and ſo far are they from caſtrating the Fathers in the above-mentioned Manner, (an Article of the moſt dangerous Conſequence,) that they enlarge them daily by new Diſcoveries, all which they communicate to the Public, and with ſo much Fidelity, that the moſt ſevere and eagle-eyed Critics have not yet been able to contradict them.

THE Liberty the French enjoy of ſpeaking or publiſhing their Thoughts, is as far different from the unbounded Licenſe that prevails in ſome neighbouring Countries, as from the tyrannical Conſtraint to which Perſons ſubordinate to the Inquiſition are ſubject. It is a well regulated Liberty, which, by the Wiſdom and Vigilance of the Monarch, is kept within ſuch Bounds as prevent its being any way prejudicial to the Public. As it is a difficult Matter to form the ſame Judgment, with Qualities of ſo oppoſite a Nature, we need not wonder that what is condemned by the Inquiſition, is often approved in France; and on the other Side, that the French pay ſo little regard to its Cenſures.

CONCLUSION.

SUCH was the Riſe and Progreſs of the Inquiſition. Policy had at firſt as great a Share in its Eſtabliſhment, as a Zeal for the Preſervation of Religion in its Purity. As it owes its Original to Policy, this has always been its Support ſince that Time, and raiſed it to that Height of Power and Authority, which make it ſo formidable at this Day. The Court of Rome conſiders the Inquiſition as the Maſter-Piece of its Invention, and the moſt ſubſtantial Support of its Power both Spiritual and Temporal.

THERE is nothing it attends to more, than the Preſervation of its Authority in both; and indeed the Inquiſitors have brought Matters to that Paſs in thoſe Countries that ſubmit to their Authority, that tho' they offer to ſtretch their Prerogative never ſo far, every one favours their Pretenſions, or at leaſt no Man dares to contradict them. And indeed on theſe Occaſions they go what Lengths they pleaſe; nothing is able to ſtop them, but all muſt ſubmit; the moſt extravagant Maxims are looked upon as indiſputable, and the moſt ill-grounded Claims, as juſt ones: Hence Infallibility with reſpect to Actions, the Superiority of Popes over General Councils, his Right to all the Poſſeſſions of the ſeveral Churches in the World, a Power of diſpoſing of them at Pleaſure, his pretended Power over the Temporality of Sovereigns, the unwarrantable Right which he aſſumes in depoſing them, of abſolving their Subjects from their Oaths of Allegiance, and diſpoſing of their Dominions to whomſoever he thinks proper, are all Maxims, which, if any Perſon preſumes to doubt of their Validity, in thoſe Countries where the Inquiſition prevails, they yet dare not oppoſe them, ſince they would thereby expoſe themſelves to the ſevereſt Rigours of this dreadful Tribunal.

THE blind and paſſionate Attachment of the Inquiſition, for all that concerns the Intereſt of the Court of Rome; the Warmth and Eagerneſs with which it ſupports all their Pretenſions, and its uninterrupted Endeavours to enforce the unlimited Authority which the Popes arrogate to themſelves; to theſe it owes its prodigious Authority and Privileges; it is this has rendered it ſo formidable, as to be even dreaded by thoſe very Princes that have received it into their Dominions.

THE Court of Rome are paſſionately deſirous of having it received in all Places that are yet free from it, and would ſpare no Pains, had they the leaſt Hopes of ſucceeding in ſuch Attempts; and indeed, could they once bring this to bear, we might juſtly affirm their Buſineſs ſhould be done.

BUT as the World is perſuaded, that Religion is able to ſupport itſelf, as it has hitherto done, and ſtill continues to do in many Countries, without employing ſuch violent Expedients; and that ſo powerful a Body as the Inquiſition, that has ſo great a Number of Agents and Perſons in its Dependence, ſo many Maxims which may interfere with the Rights, and ſo many Engagements directly oppoſite to the Intereſts of Sovereigns, and which moreover binds the People with the ſtrongeſt and moſt indiſſoluble Ties, viz. thoſe of Religion and Conſcience, would not fail whenever Opportunity offered, to interrupt the Tranquility of a Government; all theſe Things conſidered, it is highly probable it will not make a further Progreſs.

To this it may be anſwered, that it were an eaſy Matter to preſcribe Laws to it, to limit its Authority in ſuch a Manner, and to take ſuch juſt Meaſures as to render it ſerviceable to Religion, and at the ſame Time incapable of prejudicing the State.

But Experience ſhews, that on what Condition ſoever it may be received, and whatſoever Laws may be preſcribed to it, it at laſt obtains an unlimited Power. The Court of Rome, whoſe Intereſt it is to have it flouriſh, never fails to ſide with it, and are ever ſure to favour the Inquiſition, in oppoſition to ſovereign Princes: The moſt wiſely eſtabliſhed Laws, the due Execution whereof is of ſuch mighty Conſequence to the Peace of Kingdoms, are, in the Hands of the Inquiſition, ſo many inexhauſtible Sources for Quarrels and Diviſions; and theſe they never fail to make uſe of to curb the Authority of Sovereigns.

Extract of a Voyage to Spain, printed at Paris in 1669, relating to the Tribunal of the Inquisition, and the Prerogatives of the Familiars of the Holy Office.

There are ten Tribunals of the Inquiſition in Spain, viz. thoſe of Toledo, Granada, Sevil, Corduba, Murcia, Cuenca, Le Gronna, Lerena, Vallidolid, and the Principal, which is at Madrid. Mariana in his 24th Book, Chap. 17. ſays, That when theſe Inquiſitions were firſt eſtabliſhed, they were looked upon by Multitudes as very cruel and unjuſt; and D. Fernand del Pulgar, a Writer of that Age, proves in his Illuſtrious Men, that thoſe Crimes whereof the Inquiſitors have arrogated to themſelves the Cognizance, ought not to be puniſhed with Death; but as the greateſt Part of the Spaniards are very illiterate, and never read either the Scriptures or the Fathers, and conſequently are uninformed with the true Faith, or a ſolid Piety, and have only a languid and hypocritical Faith, which, according to them, conſiſts wholly in the Ceremonies of the Church, and in outward Worſhip, they give the utmoſt Scope to their Imaginations and irregular Paſſions. As the Dread of the Inquiſition deprives them of all Opportunities of inſtructing themſelves fully in their Religion, it thereby becomes a very neceſſary Curb to their Paſſions; and was the Liberty now indulged them, of examining into Things, they would imitate the Moors, who turn Chriſtians as often as they are ſeiz'd, and return to Mahometaniſm the Moment they recover their Liberty; or, in other Words, they are no more able to give a Reaſon why they profeſs Chriſtianity, than the Moors why they are Mahometans: And it may be juſtly ſaid of theſe People, that the only Reaſon of their being Roman Catholicks is, becauſe their Mothers and Nurſes are ſo.

The Preſident of the Inquiſition is called Inquiſitor General, and the Counſellors Inquiſidores. And as they have nothing elſe to do but to get Information of the wicked Lives and Principles of Perſons, and that every one of theſe inhuman Wretches endeavours to make the moſt of his Place, they have their Spies in all Places. If they ſpare Foreigners, it is certain they more than make amends for it by the cruel Uſage of the Natives. The Methods they employ, and their Manner of preparing Trials, are directly contrary both to the Formalities uſually obſerved in all well-regulated Go-

Governments, and to natural Equity, as well as Laws both divine and human. When Informations have been made againſt any Man or Woman, (which I will ſuppoſe have not been given Credit to, till after they have been confirmed in the moſt authentic Manner) they are immediately ſeized; and whereas in all Crimes, of what Nature ſoever, a Priſoner is told what his Judges have to lay to his Charge, and that a Criminal who accuſes himſelf is never believed; here, on the contrary, it is expected a Priſoner ſhould declare his Guilt. And tho' he does not accuſe himſelf of any Crime, they yet keep him in Priſon, nay ſometimes torture him, and put him to Death.

As it frequently happens that the Witneſſes, who give in their Evidence, are prompted to it from a Spirit of Hatred, or ſome private Grudge, and that the Priſoners might challenge them provided they knew their Names, the utmoſt Care is taken never to mention them to him, or to have the Witneſſes confronted. By this Means a Man finds himſelf arreſted, accuſed, tortured, condemned, and burnt, without being allowed to make his Defence.

THIS cruel Treatment extends itſelf even to Children, who are puniſhed for the Diſſoluteneſs, or other pretended Crimes committed by their Parents; for all their Goods and Chattels are Confiſcated, and afterwards ſold for the Profit of the Inquiſition. Thus by depriving Children or others of their lawful Inheritances, the Inquiſition ſeizes the Goods and Chattels of whomſoever it pleaſes.

IN order to induce the Nobility to ſupport theſe horrid Proceedings, great Privileges have been beſtowed on ſuch of them, as would ſo far degrade themſelves as to become Familiars of the Inquiſition. The King himſelf is the Protector thereof, and aſſumes that Title. The Buſineſs of the Familiars is, to aid and aſſiſt in the ſeizing all ſuch Perſons as are impeached, and to carry them to Priſon; and one remarkable Circumſtance in theſe Caſes is, that a Perſon is neither fetter'd, or any way bound, when he is carried either to Priſon or Execution; but then he is ſurrounded with ſuch a Multitude of theſe officious Gentlemen, that there is no Poſſibility of his eſcaping out of their Hands.

AND indeed theſe Gentlemen who condeſcend to be Familiars of the Inquiſition, find their Account in their cruel Employments; for they are allowed to commit the moſt enormous Actions: They may kill, aſſaſſinate, debauch, &c. without being once reprimanded for it. In caſe they happen to be proſecuted for any ſuch Crime, they either call upon the Inquiſition to aſſiſt them, or their Cauſe is compriſed, and immediately the other Courts ſtop their Proceedings, for fear of offending the Holy Office.

IN this Caſe the Inquiſitors undertake the Perſecution, and immediately the Familiar enters himſelf as their Priſoner; after which he has the Liberty to go wherever he pleaſes, and to act in all Things as though he was free.

IN the mean Time the Proſecution is ſpun out to a great Length, purpoſely that it may be made up. Such as have Money, and have got into an ugly Scrape, think themſelves happy to continue ten Years, and ſometimes all their Lives, Priſoners of the Inquiſition, when they meet with better Treatment than the reſt, and enjoy more Liberty. This was the Caſe of a Gentleman of Corduba, named Don Diego de Cabrera y ſoto Mayor, Chevalier del habito de Calatrava or de Santiago, who tho' a Priſoner of the Holy Office, was nevertheleſs at the Expedition of Elvas under D. Lewis.

AN-

ANOTHER Gentleman, a Familiar of the Holy Office of the above-mentioned City of Corduba, happened to kill a Man who had great Credit at Court, and was related to Perſons of the firſt Quality: Upon which he withdrew to the Priſons of the Inquiſition. The Inquiſitors were ſollicited ſo ſtrongly againſt him, that they could not help condemning him purſuant to the Laws; but the reſt of the Gentlemen Familiars, getting a Horſe ready for him, and a Sum of Money, let him privately out of Priſon. After this he kept himſelf concealed a long Time; the Relations of the Deceaſed were addreſſed to in his Favour; and the Affair having been ſpun out for a great many Years, was at laſt made up.

ANOTHER Gentleman of a very good Family, was ſeized and impriſoned in the Inquiſition De lo Grano, for having diſputed on Free-Will and Grace. He had ſtudied thoſe Subjects ſo much, that he underſtood them much better than the Inquiſitors, who at laſt ſet him at Liberty, after having admoniſhed him never to argue any more upon Religion, for that otherwiſe he would certainly be reprimanded and puniſhed by the Inquiſition. It is certain, that the Study of Religion is very much neglected in thoſe Countries where the Inquiſition prevails, and all their boaſted Virtue and Goodneſs is but mere Hypocriſy; and indeed moſt of thoſe who are impriſoned in the Inquiſition are accuſed of being either Moors or Jews; and ſuch as have been convicted, are carried, after Sentence has paſſed upon them, thro' the Streets with a Carocha upon their Heads, which is a kind of Cap of a great Length, pointed at the Top, and made of a red and yellow Paper, whence they are called Encarocados. The Council and the Officers of the Inquiſition walk firſt with Slippers on their Feet, and are followed by the Familiars, having the Criminals in mdiſt of them. They are carried in this Manner to the Church of the Dominican Friars, where a long Sermon is preached to them. Some of theſe are whipt thro' the Streets as Heretics relapſed; others clothed in a San-benito, a kind of a Stole, which they wear about their Necks, whence they are called San-benitos. The Names of all thoſe Perſons who have been taken and publiſhed throughout the Year, are written on the Walls of the Church, and marked with a St. Andrew's Croſs; and indeed moſt of the Churches are covered with them.

THERE is likewiſe another Tribunal called Santa Cruzada, i. e. Of the holy Cruſade, which is compoſed of a Commiſſioner-General, who is Preſident thereof, and of ſix Counſellors. It was firſt created in 1509, under the Pontificate of Julius II. The Cruſade, or the War which the King of Spain waged againſt the Infidels, was made uſe of as a Pretence for its Eſtabliſhment; and tho' the King of Spain is not at War with the Turks or the African Powers, he nevertheleſs takes from the Revenue of the Archbiſhopric of Toledo, which is very conſiderable, the Sum of fifty thouſand Ducats annually, to defray the Expences of the Gallies which are to be employed againſt the Infidels, and proportionably from all the other Benefices of his Kingdom. This Council takes an Account of all Subſidies which the Pope allows the King to levy on the Clergy and Laity, and in Conſequence thereof, allows them to eat during the whole Seaſon of Lent, De la groſſura, i. e. the Pluck, the Entrails, the Feet, Wings, and that which in French is called Abatis, of all thoſe Animals whoſe Fleſh is generally eaten.

THIS Cuſtom is authoriſed by a Bull of Pope Julius, and publiſhed in order to animate the Spaniards againſt the Infidels. It is fill'd with Indulgences, and is printed annually. It ſells prodigiouſly, every Perſon being obliged to buy it for fear of being look'd upon as a Jew or a Heretic, which would render him obnoxious to the Inquiſition. It is of no Value after the Year is expired, for which Reaſon an incredible Number are ſold off, all which goes to the Profit of the King, and brings in a very conſiderable Revenue. The loweſt Price it goes at, is three Rials de Vellon, and ſo in Proportion to the Rank or Dignity of the Purchaſer.

A BULL of the Cruzada granted by Pope Calixtus, is alſo ſold in Spain; and Mariana in the 18th Chapter of his 22d Book, relates after Alonzo de Palencia, that the Pope ſent this Bull at the Time that the Spaniards were engaged in War with the Moors; it was ſaid to be of prodigious Service both to the Living and the Dead. Its Virtue conſiſted in this, that whoever gave two hundred Marevedis towards carrying on the War in which the Spaniards were then engaged with the Moors, and carried that Bull about them, although they ſhould be ſeized with even a mortal Diſtemper, or that their Speech ſhould be taken from them, ſo that they could not confeſs their Sins, or, laſtly, though they were juſt expiring, they yet might be abſolved by the firſt Prieſt that ſhould come in their Way, and depend upon eſcaping the Torments of Purgatory.

HISTORICAL MEMOIRS

Relating to the

INQUISITION.

BOOK IV.

Containing the Eſtabliſhment of the INQUISITION in the Kingdom of PORTUGAL; extracted from Dellon's Voyages.

CHAP. I.

The INQUISITION is introduced into Lisbon, but is oppoſed by Don John. Its Re-eſtabliſhment after his Death, and his Excommunication pronounced by the Holy Office. His Corpſe is abſolved. Diſpute between the Parliament of Lisbon and the Officers of the INQISITION; with the Rigours and Cruelties of that Tribunal.

THE Inquiſition was introduced in Portugal under the Reign of John III. before 1557, by a certain Monk, who, as 'tis pretended, having procured a Bull or fictitious Brief, managed Matters ſo well, that he ſucceeded in the Deſign he had formed of eſtabliſhing the formidable Tribunal of the Holy Office in that Kingdom. However, his Fraud was at laſt detected; and it is univerſally agreed that he was condemned to the Gallies for Life upon that Account; which was accordingly executed.

BUT this did not hinder the Inquiſitors from carrying on their Proceedings: However, as their Maxims and their inflexible Severity towards thoſe unhappy People called led Chriſtianos Novos, or New Chriſtians, ſtruck the candid Part of Mankind with Horror, there were found ſome Miniſters at Court, who had ſo much Probity and Humanity, as to repreſent to their Sovereign the great Prejudice which accrued to his Subjects from this unprecedented Tribunal, and its frequent and bloody Executions.

THE King after having juſtly reflected on theſe Remonſtrances, procured privately a Brief from Rome, by which his Holineſs granted a general Pardon to all the Perſons accuſed of Judaiſm, with Orders to the Inquiſitors to ſet open their Priſons, and to diſmiſs all ſuch as ſhould be confined in them, without the leaſt Exception.

THE Officers of the Inquiſition were obliged to ſubmit to this Command; however they ſoon found a Pretext to ſet their Engines at work again, by which Means the Priſons of the Inquiſition were as much crouded as they had been before the Injunction.

THE Duke of Braganza being raiſed to the Throne of Portugal by the Name of John IV. would undoubtedly have aboliſhed the Inquiſition in his Dominions, had he either enjoyed a longer or more peaceable Reign. This judicious Prince was thoroughly ſenſible of the Abuſes which were committed under the Shadow of the inviolable Secrecy that is obſerved in the Holy Office: Beſides, he knew that the Inquiſitors were biaſſed by Pride and Avarice, inſtead of following the Dictates of Piety and Juſtice; and knowing that of the numberleſs Confiſcations which were made by the Inquiſition, but a very trifling Share came into his Treaſure, the Overplus being diſtributed among the Officers of the Inquiſition, he ordered that the Goods and Chattels of thoſe who ſhould be taken up, ſhould not be confiſcated for the future.

THIS Declaration aſtoniſhed and alarmed the Inquiſitors, as it took from them the moſt conſiderable Advantages of their Employments. This made them have Recourſe to every Expedient, in order to ſet Things upon their former Footing; and they play'd their Cards ſo well, that they at laſt obtained a Brief from the Pope unknown to the King, by which his Holineſs ordained, that all Confiſcations ſhould be made to the Benefit of the Inquiſition, in the ſame Manner as before the King's Declaration was publiſhed, upon Pain of Excommunication to be incurred by all ſuch as ſhould oppoſe the Execution of this Brief.

THE Inquiſitors having prevailed thus far, waited in a Body upon the King, as he was juſt returning from receiving the Paſchal Communion; when one of them in the Name of the reſt, beſought him to give them Leave to read his Holineſs's Brief before his Majeſty, and in the Preſence of his whole Court.

DON JOHN having liſtened to them with great Attention, immediately enquired, Who was to have the Benefit that would ariſe from the ſeveral Confiſcations? The Anſwer was, Himſelf. Since 'tis ſo, replied the King, and that there is no room to doubt but I may diſpoſe of my own in what Manner I ſhall judge proper, as a Teſtimony of my Obedience to the Pope's Orders, and the great Reſpect I have for his Commands, I conſent that you confiſcate the Goods and Chattels of thoſe who ſhall be ſeized by Order of your Tribunal; provided, however, that an exact Inventory be taken of ſuch Seizures: But I declare from this Inſtant, that I freely beſtow all ſuch confiſcated Effects on the Perſons ſo ſeized, and their Families; and my Will and Pleaſure is, that they ſhall be reſtored to them with the utmoſt Fidelity and Care, to what Puniſhment ſoever you may condemn them.

THO'

THO' the Inquiſitors were enraged at this Order, they nevertheleſs were obliged to ſubmit to it; and ſo long as Don John reigned, all Goods and Chattels confiſcated, were either reſtored to the Perſons to whom they belonged, or their lawful Heirs.

BUT no ſooner was the King dead, than the Heads of the Inquiſition repreſented to the Queen his Widow, that as the late King her Conſort had acted in direct Oppoſition to the Pope's Orders, he had thereby incurred the Sentence of Excommunication, with which all ſuch were threatened in the Pope's Brief, who ſhould oppoſe the Execution of it. This Princeſs, who was not informed with ſo much Reſolution as the King her Conſort, was ſo weak as to conſent that the Inquiſitors, clothed in their ſacerdotal Veſtments, ſhould perform the Ceremony of abſolving the dead Body of Don John from the pretended Excommunication, and that too in Preſence of Don Alphonſo and Don Pedro, her Sons.

THE Reader will eaſily ſuppoſe, that whatever was done by the Inquiſitors with regard to the Abſolution of the King's Body, was but a mere Trick, to frighten the Grandees of the Kingdom and the common People, and to ſupport the Authority of the Holy Office with all its Train of Terrors: For Don John had paid the utmoſt Submiſſion to the Pope's Briefs; and the generous Reſolution he had taken while it was read, to remit to his Subjects all ſuch of their Goods and Chattels as ſhould be confiſcated to his Uſe, as he had really given Orders, ſo far from deſerving ſo ignominious a Puniſhment as was inflicted on him after his Death, ought rather to have procured him the everlaſting Thanks of all his Subjects, and have made the Cruelty of the Inquiſition odious to the whole World.

BUT the Inquiſitors, encouraged by the Impunity they met with upon this Occaſion, continued to exerciſe their Rigours, or rather Cruelties, under the Reign of Don Alphonſo, and part of that of Don Pedro; in whoſe Regency, about Anno 1672, one of the Churches in Lisbon was robbed. The Thieves ſtole away the Pyx, and the reſt of the ſacred Veſſels, and ſcattered the conſecrated Wafers up and down.

THIS horrid Sacrilege was ſcarce known in the Morning, but the People flock'd in Crouds to the Church, and there was ſcarce one of the old Chriſtians but was firmly perſuaded that the new Chriſtians had committed this execrable Action.

THE Lords of the Relacam, or Parliament of Lisbon, immediately iſſued out an Order for ſearching the Houſes of all ſuch as could be ſuſpected of Guilt on this Occaſion; and this Order was executed with ſo much Severity, that they would know where all Perſons had been who had lain out of their Houſes that Night, the Reaſons they had to abſent themſelves, and the Company they had been in. A numberleſs Multitude of People of both Sexes, and of all Ages, were ſeized upon the moſt trifling Suſpicion, inſomuch that the Priſons of the Parliament were crouded. Theſe Perſons were examined with the utmoſt Strictneſs. However all their Care was ineffectual, and they found it impoſſible to diſcover who had perpetrated this horrid Action.

BUT the Inquiſitors were very much exaſperated againſt the ſecular Judges for taking Cognizance of this Affair; very lucky for the new Chriſtians, who would undoubtedly have ſuffered infinitely more, had the Inquiſitors carried on the Proſecution.

SUCH as hated the new Chriſtians, made this a freſh Handle to raiſe the Averſion of the People againſt them, who were before but too much prompted to hate and perſe-cute them. This Diſorder was carried to that Height, that ſcarce one of thoſe unhappy Perſons dared to appear in Public; nay, it was debated in Council before the King, whether it would not be proper to baniſh at once all the new Chriſtians out of the Kingdom.

In this Juncture, the Inquiſitors, who are the profeſſed Perſecutors of all thoſe who are called new Chriſtians, ſeemed to have ſuddenly ſuppreſſed their hatred and mock Zeal; inſomuch that they, ſo far from voting for their Baniſhment, oppoſed it as much as poſſible.

The Reaſon they gave for this extraordinary Behaviour, which ſurprized every one, was, that they could not in Conſcience ſend into foreign Countries, where every Man lives as he thinks proper, Perſons who are weak and unſtable in their Faith; who, as they would have no farther Curb to keep them in their Duty, would ſoon quit the Chriſtian Profeſſion.

However, all Men of Senſe plainly perceived that the Heads of the Inquiſition would not have acted in this Manner, had they not apprehended their Power would have ſunk, in caſe the new Chriſtians were drove out of the Kingdom; and that they would thereby have loſt the Opportunity of ſatiating their abominable Avarice; theſe unhappy Wretches being their moſt uſual Prey, and almoſt the ſole Object of their Perſecutions.

Be this as it will, the Inquiſitors gained their Ends, ſo that there was no farther mention made of the Expulſion of the pretended Jews. They ſatisfied themſelves with impriſoning a great Number of them daily, and examining them with the utmoſt Rigour.

Whilst the Parliament was thus employ'd in ſearching out the Wretch who had perpetrated the Crime above-mentioned, a Thief, one of the old Chriſtians, was ſurprized as he was robbing in a Village near Lisbon. He was immediately impriſoned in the City, and ſearching him, they found upon him the Crucifix of the Pyx which had been ſtolen ſome Months before. He was examined about the Theft, when the miſerable Wretch confeſſed that he only was guilty of it; that he had broke open the Pyx, of which he had only kept the Crucifix, and that as he had always carried it about him, it had by that means diſcovered him.

This ſacrilegious Wretch being thus diſcovered, at a Time when it was leaſt expected, he was tried, and puniſhed in a Manner ſuitable to his Guilt. Immediately all the new Chriſtians, who had been impriſoned by the Parliament upon that Account, were releaſed; whereby one would have concluded, that this Accident would have ſuſpended for ſome Time the Perſecution which had been carried on againſt them. But as this Incident had almoſt cured the People of the Prejudice which they entertained againſt the new Chriſtians, and that the Averſion they had hitherto bore to them now diminiſhed, the Inquiſitors, who had pretended to act in their Favour, when it was debated in Council whether they ſhould be baniſhed the Kingdom, now finding they had no Reaſon to apprehend any Thing of that Nature, they therefore began to perſecute them more than ever.

Those whom the Parliament had ſet at Liberty, and declared innocent, were firſt expoſed to the Fury of the Inquiſitors, inſomuch that theſe unhappy Wretches ſeemed to have got out of Scylla into Charybdis.

THE Cruelty and Rigour of the Inquiſitors, prompted ſeveral of the prime Nobility, as well as many Perſons of the greateſt Virtue about the Court, who were greatly concerned to ſee the new Chriſtians perſecuted with ſo high a Hand, to make their moſt humble Remonſtrances to Don Pedro upon that Account.

THESE were chiefly the Marquiſſes de Gonca, and de Marialva, Don Antonio de Mendoca, then Archbiſhop of Lisbon, Don Chriſtopher d'Almeida, Biſhop of the Martyrs, the Lord Ruſſel, Biſhop of Portalegro, the Marquiſſes of Tavora and de Fontes, Count de Villaflor, Don Sanches Manoel, and ſeveral other eminent Divines and Religious of different Orders. All theſe repreſented to the King, the irreparable Injury which the Inquiſitors did to his Subjects; and told him, that it would inevitably be followed with the utter Ruin of the Kingdom. The King was ſo ſtruck with the Reaſons they gave, that he commanded his Ambaſſador at Rome to ſollicit a Brief at that Court, by which the new Chriſtians ſhould have Leave granted them, to lay before his Holineſs the Reaſons they had to complain of the Proceedings of the Inquiſition. This Brief being granted, and Notice thereof given to the ſeveral Inquiſitions in Portugal, the Executions of that Tribunal were ſuſpended, and the new Chriſtians had leave to appoint Council to plead in their Name, both in Rome and in Portugal, and to pray his Holineſs to reduce the Formalities of the Inquiſition, to the Regulations preſcribed by the Canon and Civil Law.

ACCORDINGLY, their Council drew up ſeveral Petitions and Memorials, which they preſented to his Holineſs, praying them to order that the Originals of ſome antient Proſecutions of Perſons who had been condemned to the Flames by the Inquiſition, ſhould be ſent to Rome, particularly of ſuch as were put to Death by the Name of negative Convicts; in order that as his Holineſs would, by the Peruſal of theſe Inſtruments, be fully convinced of the Juſtice of their Complaints, he might therefore apply ſuitable Remedies.

HIS Holineſs liſtened attentively to their Grievances, and was greatly afflicted upon that Account: Whereupon he immediately gave Orders for diſpatching a Brief, by which he commanded the Inquiſitors, to ſend to him immediately the Originals of four antient Proſecutions.

THE Chief Inquiſitors plainly ſaw, that in caſe they ſhould be forced to ſend this Brief, they would inevitably be expoſed to the greateſt Danger; ſince in caſe it ſhould work its Effect, their Authority would either be loſt, or at leaſt conſiderably impaired.

IN this Dilemma, they at laſt took the Reſolution to obey the Pope's Orders: Upon which his Holineſs, by a new Brief, ſuſpended the Inquiſitor-General from his Employment, and excommunicated the reſt. He likewiſe commanded them to give up the Keys of the ſeveral Priſons of the Inquiſition into the Hands of the Ordinaries; but this they refuſed: And how urgent ſoever the Pope might be in his Demands, he was obliged, inſtead of the four Copies of Proſecutions, to be contented with thoſe which the Inquiſitors ſent him; and thoſe were ſuch as they were pleaſed to chuſe out, and as beſt ſuited their Purpoſe. However, his Holineſs abſolved them, upon their making him this ſlight Satisfaction; and tho' ſome Regulations were made, in order to ſoften the Rigours of this Tribunal, Matters have nevertheleſs always continued on the ſame Foot. Whatever is here advanced, is more than juſtified by a Brief of Pope Innocent XI. dated Auguſt 22, 1682.

THE Methods the Inquiſitors made uſe of to divert the Storm which threaten'd them, were firſt to repreſent to his Majeſty, that the only Motive of the Court of Rome's demanding the above-mentioned Copies, was to get an Opportunity thereby of aſcribing to themſelves the Cognizance of Matters relating to Portugal; that after the Pope had obtained ſo far, as that Appeals might be made to him from all Affairs relating to the Inquiſition, the Conſequence would be, that he thenceforwards would alſo take cognizance of all Cauſes eccleſiaſtical, and even civil; that this Procedure of the Court of Rome ſtruck viſibly at the Rights and Privileges of the Crown, and that it was of the utmoſt Conſequence, as well as incumbent upon him, if he had any Regard to his political Character, not to give the Pope a Handle on this Occaſion to infringe in Time to come the Rights of the Sovereign, who ought to acknowledge no other Superior but God himſelf.

DON PEDRO, who in the Beginning of his Reign had been very favourable to the new Chriſtians, but was now no longer prompted and ſupported by the Advice of thoſe faithful Miniſters who had inſpired him with Compaſſion and Tenderneſs with regard to thoſe who were oppreſſed by the Inquiſition, was now impoſed upon by theſe ſpecious Reaſons which the Inquiſitors had laid before him; and therefore, ſo far from continuing his Indulgence for that Party which he had before protected, he ſent freſh Injunctions to his Ambaſſador at Rome, with Orders to ſet every Engine at work, in order to hinder the Court from proceeding on the Deſign it had formed, to procure the Original of certain Proſecutions.

THE Inquiſitors, having obſerved from the very Beginning of that Affair, that the firſt Ambaſſador whom the King had nominated to ſue for Satisfaction at the Pope's Hands, with regard to the Grievances whereof his Subjects complained, acquitted himſelf very exactly of the Commiſſion with which he had been entruſted, were of Opinion, that it was abſolutely neceſſary they ſhould either bribe him to their Intereſts, or in caſe that fail'd, to get him remov'd.

IMMEDIATELY they tried to corrupt that Miniſter; but finding their Endeavours fruitleſs, they inſinuated to the King that it would be proper to recal him; which having obtained, they procured in his Room Don Lewis de Souſa, then Biſhop of——, afterwards Archbiſhop of Braga, immediately after Don Veriſſimo d'Alencaſtro had reſigned that eminent Dignity for that of Inquiſitor-General.

THIS new Ambaſſador, who was a Creature of the Inquiſition, pretended to ſerve his King and his Country, but in reality betrayed both; for he ſecretly oppoſed the good Reſolution the holy Father had taken, of putting a Stop to the horrid Injuſtice of the Inquiſition. He either concealed or weakened the Reaſons which the new Chriſtians alledged, gave notice to the Inquiſitors of all that was doing at Rome, and invented Artifices, by which they might elude whatever the Pope enjoined. In fine, they gave his Holineſs to underſtand, that ſuch of the Portugueſe who were Men of Honour and Honeſty, were highly offended to find that the Sanctity and Integrity of the Inquiſition in their Proſecutions, ſhould be ſo much as ſuſpected; and that in caſe the Court of Rome ſhould inſiſt upon ſeeing the Originals of the Proſecutions, 'twould tacitly introduce Judaiſm in the Kingdom of Portugal.

THAT in caſe the People ſhould mutiny, as there was but too juſt Reaſon to believe they would, the King would perhaps be forced to ſeek for ſuch a Remedy as might not be agreeable to the Court of Rome, ſince Matters might be brought to that Paſs, that they ſhould be obliged to create a Patriarch in Portugal; eſpecially ſince the Difficulty which the Pope had ſo long made, of granting his Bulls to ſuch Biſhops as were named named by his Majeſty, had already but too much prompted the People to a Change in that Particular.

THE Ambaſſador, by theſe and ſuch like Artifices, quite traverſed the Pope's good Intentions, who therefore was obliged to remain ſatisfied with two Proſecutions, and thoſe ſuch as the Inquiſitors themſelves had made choice of, inſtead of four, which his Holineſs had deſired; inſomuch that Matters, notwithſtanding all the Pope's Endeavours, have continued upon near the ſame Foot they were before.

CHAP. II.

The Treatment thoſe Perſons meet with who are impriſoned in the Portugueſe Inquiſitions.

'TIS no eaſy Matter to diſcover the Proceedings of the Inquiſitions in Portugal, or the Cruelties which are inflicted on thoſe who are impriſoned in them; in a Word, 'tis vaſtly difficult to exhibit the ſeveral Circumſtances of it. The inviolable Secrecy that is obſerved in the holy Office, and which indeed is the only Support of it, prevents thoſe who are the Victims of it, from knowing exactly the ſeveral Particulars thereof. However, we ſhall ſincerely inform the Reader whatever our own unhappy Experience may have taught us in this Matter, as well as what may be reaſonably conjectured concerning that Tribunal.

WE muſt firſt obſerve, that ſuch as have undergone theſe ſad Trials, are undoubtedly beſt able to give Light into this Affair. One may naturally ſuppoſe, that whatever is ſo zealouſly concealed, muſt certainly be of a horrid Nature, and that this dreadful Secrecy which is obſerved, is the greateſt Obſtacle to thoſe Remedies which might otherwiſe be applied to ſo many Evils with which the unhappy Wretches are oppreſſed; who being by that means almoſt abſolutely deprived of knowing thoſe Methods by which they might procure their Releaſe, are ſo dreadfully confuſed, that they are obliged to proceed inceſſantly blindfold, as it were, without being ſcarce ever able to gueſs the real Cauſe of their Misfortune. We are to obſerve, that Perſons are impriſoned on the Oaths of one, two, or three Witneſſes, who diſagree intirely in their Evidence; and who, at the ſame Time, bluſh with Indignation to think that any Credit ſhould be given to their Affidavits, ſince they themſelves are Priſoners, who have no other Method to extricate themſelves, but by accuſing their pretended Accomplices; and indeed their Depoſitions are ſeldom found to agree.

WHEN a Perſon is impeached, and the Indictment drawn up againſt him is approved by the Inquiſitors, Orders are iſſued out for ſeizing him; which being done, he is immediately treated as though he were found guilty of the Crimes which are laid to his Charge; ſo that his Wife and Children, in caſe he has any, are immediately thruſt out of Doors; his Houſe is ſhut up, and an Inventory is taken of all his Effects, by which means his Family is in an Inſtant reduced to Beggary.

THOUGH a Perſon happens to be releaſed from the Priſons of the Inquiſition, he ſeldom recovers any of his Effects, or but a trifling Part of them. His Creditors loſe all their Debts; and the royal Treaſury has but a very ſmall Portion of theſe Confiſcations, cations, the Inquiſitors having uſurped the Right of diſpoſing them as they ſhall think proper, which indeed they generally do to their own Profit.

WHEN a Man and his Wife are ſeized, their Children, in caſe they have any, are reduced to ſuch a deplorable Condition, that thoſe of not above three or four Years of Age, are ſometimes obliged to beg from Door to Door, and to ſhelter themſelves in a Church-Porch, &c. but the moſt melancholy Circumſtance is, that 'tis but too common for virtuous young Women, of a liberal Education, to proſtitute themſelves; forced to it either by Neceſſity, or the injurious Treatment they meet with upon theſe Occaſions. A numberleſs Multitude of married Women, of the ſtricteſt Virtue, have fallen into the ſame Guilt, after the Impriſonment of their Husbands. There are but too many Inſtances to confirm the Truth of what is here advanced, in all the Towns and Cities of the Kingdom, which it would be an eaſy Matter to name; but Humanity obliges us to conceal the Names of thoſe afflicted Perſons, that we may not be thought to inſult their Miſery, nor fill a great Number of Fathers, Mothers, and Husbands, with Confuſion.

WHEN a Familiar, who has been appointed by the Inquiſitors to ſeize a Criminal, has found him, he bids him follow him. All the Way they go, the Officer does whatever lies in his Power to perſuade the Priſoner to make an immediate Confeſſion of his Guilt, in order that he may return to his Family, and experience the Mercy which the Inquiſitors extend (as he ſays) to thoſe who diſcover the Sincerity of their Repentance by a ſpeedy and voluntary Confeſſion; but that if, on the contrary, he does not accuſe himſelf, he muſt not expect to be releaſed out of Priſon till after a very long Confinement, and then only to be burnt alive.

THE Delinquent being come to the Inquiſition, he is accoſted by the Secretary, who delivers him up to the Goaler, called in Portugueſe Alcaide; who, with two Followers, carries the Priſoner into the moſt retired Part of the Inquiſition, when they all exhort him a-new to make a ſpeedy Confeſſion, in caſe he expects Mercy; is deſirous of preſerving his Life, and of obtaining his Liberty.

THIS Artifice of the Officers of the Inquiſition prompts a numberleſs Multitude of innocent Perſons to accuſe themſelves of Crimes which they never committed.

THE Priſoner being come in, he is ſearched, and all the Gold and Silver he has about him is taken away, not excepting a Medal, or Image of our Saviour, or of any Saint. His Books, in caſe he has any about him, are alſo taken away; nor will they ſo much as allow a Layman to have his Prayer-Book, or a Clergyman his Breviary, purely to deprive them of every temporal and ſpiritual Conſolation. Though any of theſe unhappy Wretches, which is very often the Caſe, beg even with Tears, to get their Prayer and other holy Books reſtored to them, in order to ſooth their Affliction by the Peruſal of theſe ſpiritual Exerciſes, (it not being reaſonable, that as they are deprived of the Sacraments of Penance and the Lord's-Supper, and the Conſolation of hearing Maſs, they ſhould be denied the innocent Satisfaction of ſaying their uſual Prayers, or that they ſhould be treated like Turks and Infidels, when they are Chriſtians,) the only Anſwer they obtain, is, that in theſe Priſons no one has Occaſion for Books; and that ſuch as are confined in them, ought to employ their whole Time in examining their Conſciences, and revealing their Errors. That in caſe a Delinquent anſwers, that he acknowledges himſelf to be a grievous Sinner, and deſires a Confeſſor [a] may be ſent for, in order that he may cleanſe his Conſcience by the Sacrament of Penance; in this caſe no Anſwer is made him, and no manner of regard is had to his Intreaties: He is never allowed to confeſs himſelf, or to receive the leaſt Inſtruction; he is deprived of every Conſolation, and is not ſuffer'd to hear Maſs, or receive the Sacrament, for ſix, eight, or ten Years; in a word, he is treated like an Infidel, and not like one who was redeemed by the precious Blood of Chriſt. 'Tis true, indeed, that when a Priſoner is dangerouſly ill, he is allowed a Confeſſor, after the Phyſician has given him over; but then the ghoſtly Father ſtays but a ſhort Time in the Cell, becauſe of its Filth and horrid Stench; beſides as the Alcaide, the Turnkeys, and the Priſoners, who accompany the ſick Perſon, wait at the Door, the Confeſſor cannot allow half the Time that is neceſſary for making a Confeſſion ſuitable to the Exigencies of the ſick Perſon, who frequently has ſpent many Years without once approaching the holy Table. It ſometimes happens on theſe Occaſions, that weak and ignorant Perſons confeſs themſelves guilty of ſacrilegious Crimes; fearing, that in caſe they accuſe themſelves of having confeſſed Crimes they never committed, purely to ſave their Lives, that the Confeſſor ſhould divulge it to the Inquiſitors, and that this ſhould be a Prejudice to them in caſe they ſhould recover.

I KNOW the Reader will naturally ſuppoſe, that 'tis ſcarce poſſible for a Priſoner to make a proper Confeſſion, ſince he is viſited by the Prieſt but once, and that for a very ſhort Time; beſides, the ghoſtly Father has not the Power to abſolve him from thoſe Cenſures which 'tis pretended he has incurred, unleſs he be dying; that the ſick Priſoner is not allowed a Prieſt to aſſiſt him in his dying Moments, nor is the Crucifix preſented to him to comfort him, and excite him to Contrition in his dying Moments.

NOTWITHSTANDING that theſe unhappy Wretches ſuffer ſuch dreadful Hardſhips, yet moſt of them diſcover ſo lively a Faith, that they daily draw Croſſes with a Coal on the Walls of the Dungeons in which they are confined, and when they are at their laſt Gaſp, their Companions, as they are not allowed a Prieſt, aſſiſt them as well as they can; pray fervently, and ſhed Floods of Tears, and are continually exhorting them to Contrition, and to repeat the holy Names of Jeſus and Mary till they expire. But why are not the antient Chriſtians, and all the Faithful in general, allowed Admittance into theſe dreadful Priſons upon theſe mournful Occaſions? Theſe undoubtedly would edify very much, by the Virtue and Piety of theſe unfortunate Victims of the Inquiſitors, and be fully convinced, that the greateſt Part of thoſe Perſons in Portugal, who are reputed Jews, are, in reality, zealous Chriſtians; who, after having led a ſober and religious Life, and adhered ſtrictly to the Principles of the Catholic Church, end their Days in ſuch a Manner, ſuitable to thoſe who call themſelves her dutiful Sons, and have no other Motive or Reaſon to accuſe themſelves falſly, but merely in order to free themſelves from their miſerable Captivity, and eſcape the cruel and infamous Death with which they are continually threatened.

IT may be proper to obſerve here, that theſe poor ſick Creatures who are treated with ſo much Inhumanity, are looked upon by the Inquiſitors either as Jews or Chriſtians. But if they look upon them as Jews, ſhould not Chriſtianity prompt them to convince them, if poſſible, of their Crimes? But on the other Side, if they ſuppoſe them Chriſtians, does not our Saviour forbid their being abandoned in their laſt Moments; or what is worſe than all, to be left to the Mercy of three or four Jewiſh Fellow-Sufferers, who in all Probability will endeavour to corrupt their Principles?

How laudable, how great would it be for an Inquiſitor, prompted with a truly apoſtolical Zeal, to perform the Office of a Paſtor, by viſiting thoſe gloomy Habitations, purely to exhort the Priſoners to finiſh their Courſe piouſly! Did thoſe Officers conduct duct themſelves in this manner, Numbers of thoſe unfortunate Creatures would then go to Death with the utmoſt Reſignation; and in their laſt Moments, give the moſt unſuſpicious Tokens of a pure and lively Faith, and poſſibly by that means lay aſide the Prejudice they might have imbibed, ſince Death generally ſhews truly what a Man is, and is a very unfit Seaſon for Hypocriſy. Poſſibly the Inquiſitors may object, that as they judge theſe unhappy Wretches, it would derogate from their Dignity to condeſcend ſo far; but to this it may be anſwer'd, that the Quality of Judge does not exclude that of Father in an Eccleſiaſtic, whoſe ſole Aim ought to be the Converſion of Souls, and not the Deſtruction of the Body; and though it were to be allowed, that it would not be proper for them to viſit the Priſons, yet ſurely they ought to let their Priſons be viſited by pious and charitable Perſons, and ſuch as are capable of inſtructing, comforting, and ſtrengthening their Souls in Virtue.

CHAP. III.

THE Secretary of the Inquiſition having received the Priſoner from the Familiars at the Gate, he delivers him into the Cuſtody of the Alcaide and two Turnkeys, who carry him into the Dungeon. Here two ſtrong Doors are ſhut upon him, when he is confined in a Room about twelve Foot long, and ten wide. This Cell is generally very dark, the Light coming in only through a very ſmall Window at the Top of the Room. This glimmering Light is ſo unchearing to the Priſoner, that he ſpends the whole Day in wiſhing for Night, purely to enjoy the dim Light of a ſmall Lamp which the Inquiſitors allow him. However, the Expence of the Lamps, and the waſhing of their Linen, are both deducted from the five Pence per Day, which is allowed them for their Subſiſtence.

THE Reader will excuſe our not giving a particular Deſcription of the Naſtineſs and Stench of theſe Priſons; however, as it may be proper to give a juſt Idea of whatever is done in this Place, we ſhall be obliged to enter into a more exact Detail. The whole Furniture of theſe miſerable Dungeons is four earthen Pots to make Water in, and one larger than the reſt, to eaſe the other Neceſſities of Nature, all which are emptied but once a-Week.

FROM this Circumſtance it may be judg'd how great the Stench and how unwholſome theſe Places muſt be, as the Priſoners are obliged to ſpend Week after Week in the Midſt of ſo much Naſtineſs. And indeed the Stink is ſo horrid, that frequently, eſpecially in Summer, Worms are ſeen crawling up and down the Dungeon; and the Stench is ſo nauſeous, that 'tis next to a Miracle how theſe poor Wretches can live ſo long in the Midſt of it. Hence it is that thoſe Priſoners, who go in Proceſſion in the Acts of Faith, are generally ſo pale and wan, that their moſt intimate Acquaintance ſcarce know them; they looking like ſo many dead Bodies that are made to move with Springs, rather than living Creatures. In each of theſe Dungeons is a Bed, that fills half the Cell, on which the Priſoners lie; and theſe Cells are ſo exceſſively moiſt, that their Mats and Mattreſſes are ſoon rotted. Four or five Perſons, and ſometimes more, are generally confined together in one of them, in which Caſe ſuch of them as cannot lie upon the Bed, (it being not large enough to hold them all) are forced to ſtretch themthemſelves upon the bare Boards in the Midſt of the Filth. How terrible muſt it be for five Perſons to be coop'd up in ſo ſmall a Place, in the Midſt of ſo many Veſſels full of Naſtineſs; for the Inquiſitors ſcarce allow the Living ſo much Ground to lie upon, as are indulged the Dead for their Graves.

WE have now deſcribed the Dungeons of the Priſons of Coimbra and Evora; but thoſe of Lisbon are a little larger, and not ſo dark.

SOMETIMES there is but one Priſoner in a Cell, which is crouded according to the Number of the Priſoners, or the Time ſince the ſolemnizing the Act of Faith. One cannot ſay whether the Priſoners are happier in having Company, or in being alone. If they are alone, their Solitude is dreadful, and in caſe they have Company, they are obliged to bear with their ill Humours, Infirmities, and Errors. But the moſt dangerous Companion a Priſoner can have, is a Perſon who has confeſſed himſelf; for ſuch a one is perpetually perſuading others to do the ſame, by aſſuring them they have no other Way left them to ſave their Lives, and that they ought not to be aſhamed to do what ſo many good People, and which they themſelves, who give them ſuch Advice, have done before; ſo that a Chriſtian muſt have a dreadful Time of it, ſince beſides his own Torments, his Ears are continually grated with thoſe of others. Beſides, the Priſoner himſelf has juſt Reaſon to ſuſpect whether thoſe who adviſe him in this Manner, are not his Accuſers; and whether their Depoſitions are not an Obſtacle to his Releaſe.

THUS do the moſt malicious and crafty Priſoners endeavour to perſuade ſuch of their Companions as are more ſimple, or leſs upon their Guard, to accuſe thoſe in their Confeſſions who endeavour to get out of the Clutches of the Inquiſitors; all which Accuſations or Impeachments occaſion inexpreſſible Confuſion, inaſmuch as when a Perſon who is unjuſtly impeached finds he has forfeited his Goods and Chattels, he will endeavour to make others as unhappy as himſelf.

BUT this happens becauſe the Inquiſitors do not require ſuch Witneſſes as agree in the Circumſtances of Times, Places, and Perſons; for if all who give their Depoſitions were obliged to this, few would run the Hazard of accuſing themſelves falſly, much leſs to name Accomplices, ſince it would be impoſſible for them to agree in all the Circumſtances of a pretended Crime.

WE muſt obſerve that it very often happens, when a Priſoner has juſt given in his Depoſition againſt another, who, in order to procure his Releaſe, has pleaded guilty, the Informer is confined in the ſame Cell with the Perſon againſt whom he ſwore; and when the Perſon indicted is told in the Audience, that there is a new Evidence, and a freſh Impeachment lodg'd againſt him, he immediately ſuppoſes that this additional Misfortune came from without Doors, whereas in reality 'tis the very Man who is confin'd with him under the ſame Roof, that has brought it upon him. We ſhould find numberleſs Inſtances of this Nature, did the Inquiſitors ſuffer the Trials to be inſpected.

WE are farther to obſerve, that in the Inquiſitions of Portugal, the Priſoners are frequently removed out of one Cell into another, and thereby frequently change their Companions. 'Twould be no eaſy Matter to gueſs why they are ſhifted in this Manner; however, 'tis certainly a Misfortune to the Innocent, becauſe as the Priſoners get acquainted with one another by this Means, they naturally ſuppoſe that their Fellow-Priſoners employ the ſame Methods to get their Diſcharge; and being in this Manner induced to think, that they are impeach'd by their Fellow-Priſoners, they thence are alſo prompted to impeach all thoſe with whom they have any Acquaintance. 'Tis aſtoniſh-

ing to think, that ſince the Inquiſitors boaſt ſo inviolable a Secrecy, they ſhould ſuffer the Priſoners to have any Communication one with another. May we not juſtly ſuſpect that the ſole Motive of their proceeding in this Manner, is purely that they may have the better Opportunity of ruining all thoſe who fall into their Clutches?

PERSONS who are thus confined have not the ſad Conſolation allowed them of bewailing their Misfortunes; to theſe, Sighs and Tears are forbid, though they have the ſtrongeſt Reaſons for both; and if any one happens to make a little Noiſe, or ſpeak ſo as to be heard in the next Cell, he is gagg'd and whipp'd very cruelly. This is done to frighten the reſt, who, while the Priſoner is puniſhing in this Manner, hear a kind of Herald, who cries aloud, that the Priſoner is whipp'd by Order of the Lord Inquiſitors, either for having ſpoken too loud, for crying, or beating upon the Walls of his Cell, or for having quarrelled with his Comrades. Many Criminals have been whipp'd ſo cruelly for ſuch Faults, that it has thrown them into a Fit of Sickneſs for ſeveral Months, and ſome have been maimed all their Life-Time. Theſe Puniſhments are inflicted on all ſorts of Perſons, without the leaſt Diſtinction of Age, Sex, or Quality; inſomuch that they barbarouſly ſtrip married Women and Maidens of the ſtricteſt Virtue, whom their Parents had educated with the utmoſt Care. But the moſt inhuman Circumſtance is, that whenever any Priſoner happens to make the leaſt Diſturbance, all who are in the Cell with him are puniſh'd for it; the Diſturber for making the Noiſe, and the reſt for not immediately diſcovering it.

Now ſuch a Procedure as this, throws the Priſoners into the higheſt Perplexity, ſince, in caſe they don't impeach their Comrades, they are puniſh'd; and, in caſe they do, they never fail of being accuſed by them, not only in the above-mention'd Caſes, but in thoſe of a capital Nature; ſo that all thoſe poor Wretches can do, is, to ſubmit patiently to their Sufferings, and to hold their Tongues.

IT may be worthy our Conſideration, to reflect on the miſerable Condition to which a great Number of young Maidens, Nuns, and Women of the higheſt Quality and the ſtricteſt Virtue, are reduced, who are confined in the Priſons of the Inquiſition, with the moſt flagitious and moſt abandon'd Perſons of their own Sex; and on the great Number of Friars, Prieſts, and Gentlemen of the greateſt Birth, who have no other Companions but a Set of ignorant, illiterate, debauch'd, mean Wretches.

WE muſt alſo obſerve, that ſuch as are whipp'd for having ſpoke to thoſe in the next Cell to them, are frequently put into the ſame Dungeons with them a few Days after. Such Procedure as this appears vaſtly myſterious, and can be done from no other Motive, but purely to embarraſs and perplex the Priſoners.

IN caſe, as frequently happens, the Priſoners are very fervent in their Prayers, faſt certain Days in the Week, and the whole Lent, the Inquiſitors forbid their Piety and Abſtinence, pretending 'tis all Hypocriſy; but God, who ſees the Heart of Man, will one Day manifeſt whether the Judges or the Priſoners were the greateſt Hypocrites.

CHAP. IV.

How WOMEN are treated. The Order obſerved in Proſecutions.

WE have hitherto related but the leaſt Part of the Sufferings of thoſe who are confin'd in the Inquiſition. Words could but faintly deſcribe the Barbarities which are practiſed in theſe gloomy Habitations, eſpecially in the Cells where the Women are impriſoned; for the Inquiſitors act with infinitely more Caution with regard to that Sex, and are more ſecret in all Things which concern them; however 'tis certain, that the handſomeſt meet with the moſt gentle Treatment; and here we ſhall ſuppreſs a great Number of Particulars which it would be indecent to relate. There is now a certain Woman at Madrid, who happening to be engaged in a very odd Adventure in one of the Portugueſe Inquiſitions, was no ſooner releaſed but ſhe immediately left the Kingdom, and could never be prevailed with to return back into it.

WERE the numberleſs Multitude of unhappy Wretches, who are daily let out of theſe Priſons, at full Liberty to divulge what they have ſeen and ſuffer'd, and were they not afraid of being ſeiz'd again and burnt alive, in caſe they happen to blab, the World would ſoon have another Idea of the Sanctity of this Tribunal; but the Oath of Secrecy, which is adminiſtred to them at their Releaſe, and the dreadful Menaces which are pronounced on theſe Occaſions, Menaces enough to terrify the moſt undaunted, force them not to once open their Lips. The only Conſolation left them, is the Liberty of revealing their Thoughts to their Confeſſors; and their Confeſſions ſtrike the Prieſts to whom they are then made with the utmoſt Horror. But of what Service is this? are Families leſs diſhonour'd upon this Account, or is their Deſtruction leſs certain? The Inquiſitors, to whom Complaints are frequently made on this Account, pretend that theſe unhappy Victims of their Fury and inſatiable Avarice, impoſe upon their Confeſſors, purely to excite their Compaſſion. Might we not anſwer, that there is much more Room to doubt the Sincerity of a forced Confeſſion, made by Perſons whoſe Souls are dejected with Terror, who are oppreſſed and inhumanly treated, and perſuaded they have no other Way left to recover their Liberty and ſave their Lives than a ſacramental Confeſſion, which is made with the utmoſt Freedom, which the Perſon who makes it is firmly perſuaded will never be divulged, and from which he cannot expect the leaſt Relief? It even frequently happens, that the Dread with which ſeveral poor Penitents who have eſcaped the Clutches of the Inquiſition, are ſtruck, leſt their ghoſtly Fathers ſhould not keep an inviolable Secrecy with regard to their Confeſſions, prompts them to commit Sacrilege, and to accuſe themſelves falſly of Crimes before the Audience. For this Reaſon 'tis very neceſſary that all who hear the Confeſſions of ſuch unhappy Perſons, take great Care not to ſuffer them to aggravate the Crimes whereof they accuſe themſelves falſly.

IT might be anſwer'd in the ſecond Place, that as the Agents of the Inquiſition have reconciled, in the Acts of Faith, ſuch as have pleaded guilty before their Tribunal, they are not to ſuppoſe that they tell an Untruth in that of Penance; ſince, at that rate, one muſt conclude, that they are no leſs Jews or Heretics at their leaving the Inquiſition, than when they were firſt impriſon'd in it; whence it would follow, that all the Penance which they had been enjoined, all the Acts of Faith, and their ſeveral Reconciliations, would be ſo many uſeleſs Ceremonies. In fine, admit the Proceedings of the Inquiſition are as equitable as they pretend to be, why ſhould they force all Perſons at their Releaſe, to take an Oath not to reveal any Circumſtance that has happen'd? Would

Would it not be of greater Service to the Public, as well as more glorious for the holy Office, to allow their Priſoners a full Liberty of Speech, and to bind them no otherwiſe, than the obliging them to tell nothing but the Truth. This would be the only Method of making it known to every one; Priſoners would no longer complain of their being forced to obſerve an inviolable Secrecy; a Remedy would thereby be applied to the inexpreſſible Perplexity and Confuſion which occaſions ſo many Executions, and which renders the juſtifying ſo many innocent Perſons an Impoſſibility.

BUT the better to clear up this Matter, it will be proper to exhibit the Order which is obſerved in the Trials of the Inquiſitions; firſt of ſuch as die negative, and ſecondly of thoſe who plead guilty. Heaven is witneſs that I aim at nothing but the Truth in what I am going to relate, and that I am prompted by no other Motive than the Glory of God, and the Service of my Fellow-Creatures.

FIRST, the Priſoner is carried to the Audience by the Alcaide, attended by a Turnkey: He goes thither bare-headed, and at his going in he is obliged to kneel; when his Name, Country, Trade, or Profeſſion, and a thouſand trifling Particulars are ask'd him; all which are writ down, and afterwards ſigned by him.

SOME Priſoners after having been carried to the firſt Audience, are ſometimes confined two, three, or four Years, before they are call'd a ſecond Time, while others are tried with much greater Diſpatch. Theſe Delays generally occaſion a moſt horrid Circumſtance, which is, that thoſe who are laſt confined, voluntarily impeach ſuch as are confined along with them, for fear theſe ſhould have accuſed them before.

THERE is Reaſon to believe, that the Slowneſs of certain Procedures is wholly owing to the Want of a ſufficient Number of Witneſſes againſt the Priſoners, and the Hopes with which the Inquiſitors flatter themſelves, that by ſuſpending the Trial, they will thereby obtain a greater Number of Affidavits, becauſe thoſe who are newly impriſoned are perpetually impeaching others who are at Liberty, and theſe accuſe again in their Turn ſuch as were impriſon'd before them. But 'tis certain, that theſe dreadful Delays frequently reduce a Priſoner to Deſpair, who being beſides continually prompted by the Jailors and Turnkeys, is at laſt reſolved to ſue to be admitted to Audience; when in order to procure his Diſcharge, he accuſes himſelf of numberleſs Crimes whereof he is wholly innocent, and which, perhaps, no one had laid to his Charge.

WHEN a Priſoner is called a ſecond Time to Audience, called Meſa, or Board of the holy Office, 'tis in order to inquire into his Extraction; for not ſatisfied with taking down the Names of his Father and Mother, they alſo inquire thoſe of his Grandfathers, great Grandfathers, Brothers, Siſters, Children, Uncles, Nephews, and Couſins, to the fourth Generation: They afterwards inquire whether they are now Chriſtians; if wholly, or in Part only. Theſe Interrogatories, ſo little uſed in other Tribunals, make thoſe who are ask'd them believe, that the ſole Motive of their being thus examined with regard to their Anceſtors, is purely to ſift out whether they have failed to impeach any of them, moſt Priſoners ſuppoſing that this is the only Way to ſave their Lives.

BUT after that a Priſoner has made all theſe Declarations, he is ſtill confined; for many Crimes are laid to his Charge by Perſons unknown, whoſe Names it is conſequently very difficult for him to gueſs, which yet is the only Way left him to procure his Releaſe.

WE ſhould have a better Idea of the Cruelty, the Confuſion, and Vexation of the Inquiſitors, were they to publiſh faithfully the Trials of thoſe whom they have delivered up to the Executioner, merely becauſe they could not hit upon the Names of thoſe who depoſed againſt them; moſt of them at the ſame Time their Accomplices. Now ſuch as are condemned to the Flames by the Inquiſitors, becauſe they did not declare all their Accomplices and thoſe who impeached them, are called Diminutos, or Perſons who did not make a full Confeſſion, or for not having named all their Accomplices.

AFTER that the Names of the ſeveral Relations of the Priſoner have been taken down, he is asked, whether he is willing to confeſs his Crimes? which they tell him is the only way left to excite the uſual Clemency and Mercy of the Inquiſition. This he is exhorted to do as ſpeedily as poſſible, but without ſpecifying the Crimes he is ſuppoſed to have committed. This, in the Inquiſition, is called the firſt Information. In caſe the Priſoner anſwers, that he has always been a Member of the Chriſtian Church, and cannot accuſe himſelf of any Crime cognizable by the Inquiſitors, he is then obliged to take a freſh Oath of Secrecy; when, having ſigned his Anſwers, he is remanded back to his Cell.

BEING brought a third Time before the Board, which is the ſecond Information; after taking the uſual Oaths of Secrecy, and that he will declare nothing but Truth, he is asked, whether he is deſirous of confeſſing himſelf in order to merit Mercy? In caſe he ſtill anſwers, that he never acted any Thing againſt the Faith of Chriſt, but has conſtantly adhered thereto all his Life-Time, they then interrogate him upon divers other Articles of the Law of Moſes; which is generally done in the Manner following:

WHETHER he has left the Law of Chriſt to follow that of Moſes? or, whether he is acquainted with any Chriſtians who have acted in that Manner?——Anſwer'd in the negative.

WHETHER, in Compliance with the Laws of Moſes, he has abſtained from Swines Fleſh, that of Hares, of Rabbits, or of Fiſh that have no Shell? —— Anſwered in the Negative.

THESE two Queſtions ſufficiently ſhew in what Manner a Priſoner is examined with regard to his Obſervation of the Jewiſh Diſpenſation. At the End therefore of each Queſtion, the Words, Anſwered in the Negative, are only written; and no mention is made of the Proteſtations, Complaints, ſupplicating Replies of the unhappy Priſoners. Some Time ago one of theſe being asked, Whether he had not ſhifted himſelf on Saturdays? whether he had not ſwept his Houſe backwards? or had not thrown little Crumbs of Bread and Drops of Wine into Pots of Water? of which ſuperſtitious Ceremonies the new Chriſtians are accuſed. The Priſoner anſwered in this Manner: "I have already "declared to you, Gentlemen, that I was a Chriſtian, which Circumſtance alone ſuf-"ficiently ſhews, that I could never give up into ſuch ridiculous Ceremonies; therefore, "if I may preſume to adviſe, do not trifle away your precious Time in this Manner, but "rather be quick in determining the Fate of ſo many unhappy Wretches who are now "groaning in Captivity."

THERE are daily Priſoners, who, before their Examination being wholly unacquainted with the Jewiſh Ceremonies, get by Heart the ridiculous Particulars which are told them. When they afterwards accuſe themſelves, for fear of being puniſhed for having practiſed thoſe filthy, ſuperſtitious Cuſtoms; whereas in reality, they were firſt taught them by thoſe who are their Judges.

THE Interrogatories and Anſwers being ended, the Priſoner is remanded back to his Cell.

As there is no fixed Time for the Length of their Trials, ſome are diſpatched in a few Weeks, while others take up ſeveral Years: 'Tis in vain for a Priſoner to beg and intreat, for the Inquiſitors are deaf to his Cries, and ſeldom or never admit him to Audience but when they judge proper. And if it happen that they are wrought upon by his Supplications, and he is accordingly brought before them, yet, if he has nothing to alledge but his Innocence and the Miſery he ſuffers, he is immediately remanded back to Priſon, when he is reproached for having ſo vilely abuſed the Lenity of the Inquiſitors; and to heighten his Affliction, he is barbarouſly uſed by the Turnkeys, who upbraid him for begging to be admitted to Audience, ſince he, at the ſame Time, did not intend to acknowledge his Guilt.

HOWEVER, ſome Time after, that is, whenever the Inquiſitors think proper, the Priſoner is ſent for; and being now at the third and laſt Information, he is urged by all the Motives which are moſt apt to inſpire him with Terror, to confeſs his Crimes: If he refuſes, he is terribly menaced; and if he ſtill perſiſts in what they call his Obſtinacy, the Proctor appears to declare to him his Concluſions, otherwiſe called the Declaration of Juſtice.

THEN the Proctor of the Inquiſition, holding a Paper in his Hand, reads the following Words out of it:

1. THAT the Priſoner, who was baptiſed a Chriſtian, has abandoned the Faith, and profeſſed the Law of Moſes, in hopes that he might be ſaved in the Practice of the Jewiſh Ceremonies.

2. THAT the ſaid Priſoner, being ſome Time ſince in a certain Place with Perſons of the ſame Extraction with himſelf, that is, with new Chriſtians, the Perſons then aſſembled, declared to each other, that they lived in a ſtrict Obedience to the Jewiſh Law, and therefore never eat of thoſe Things which were forbidden by the ſaid Law, ſuch as Swines Fleſh, &c.

3. THAT the ſaid Priſoner being in a certain Place, with certain Perſons, who like himſelf were new Chriſtians, one of the Company affirmed, that he had eat Part of a Ham, to whom the Priſoner anſwered, that he never eat any. To this ſome Perſon then preſent ſaid that he did very right, if he were prompted thereto from a Reſolution of obeying the Law of Moſes. That this Subject being purſued farther, all the Company had declared themſelves Followers of the ſaid Law, in Obedience to which they ſhifted every Saturday.

4. THAT the Priſoner at the Bar, happening to meet in a certain Place with other new Chriſtians, had told them he intended to purchaſe a conſiderable Poſt; to which one of the Company replied, that if he might adviſe, he ſhould not buy it, ſince as he was a new Chriſtian he might be prevented from doing it. But that another of the Company had told him, that this Conſideration ought not to divert him from purchaſing the ſaid Employment, ſince others of the ſame Extraction as himſelf had acted in ſuch; and that all the Company had declared in favour of the Jewiſh Law, purely to procure to themſelves Riches and Honour: That it was in View of fulfilling this Law that they all ſaid the Pater, and abſtained from eating certain Meats prohibited by the Moſaic Law.

AND inſomuch as the ſaid Priſoner is ſufficiently convicted of the above-mentioned Crimes, the ſaid Proctor concludes that he ſhall be delivered over to the ſecular Arm, as an Heretic and Apoſtate.

SUCH is pretty near the Inſtrument call'd by the Inquiſitors The Proctor's Declaration; which being read, the Priſoner is asked, whether the whole Purport of it be not true? And in caſe he anſwers, (as generally happens) that it is abſolutely falſe, he then is remanded back to his Cell.

CHAP. V.

SEQUEL of the PROSECUTIONS.

SOME Time after this horrid Declaration has been made, which is whenever the Inquiſitors think proper, the Priſoner is called to the Board, when a Counſellor is ſent for, called in Portugueſe, Letrado, to undertake his Defence; tho', to ſpeak the Truth, theſe Counſellors are rather Spies ſet over him, than his Advocates.

THEN the Inquiſitors ſay to the Counſellor: The Priſoner at the Bar having deſired Counſel, we grant you leave to undertake his Defence, and to make ſuch Petitions, Obſervations, and Remonſtrances, as you ſhall think proper; but with this Proviſo, that in caſe you perceive that the Priſoner is for employing the leaſt Fraud or Malice in his Defence, you are ſtrictly enjoin'd to inform the Court of it.

THIS Declaration ended, the Priſoner and his Letrado are put into another Room, but a third Perſon comes to them, and ſtays all the Time they diſcourſe together, in order to prevent any Juggle between them.

THE Counſellor and the Spy ſeat themſelves in Chairs, and tho' the Priſoner is a Perſon of the firſt Quality, or a Dignitary of the Church, he yet is forced to ſit upon a Stool. Then the Counſellor reads the Declaration which was given him, containing the ſeveral Matters laid to his Charge, as delivered by the Proctor; which being done, he asks the Priſoner whether he has any Thing to ſay in his Defence. The Priſoner anſwers, that he is a Chriſtian; that he has never done any Thing in Oppoſition to the Chriſtian Faith; and that the Purport of the Declaration is abſolutely falſe. Then the Letrado takes the Pen into his Hand, and draws up the Objections, which are generally as follows:

THAT it would be a very eaſy Matter to prove, that the Priſoner was baptized a Chriſtian; that he has fulfilled the ſeveral Duties enjoined him in his Baptiſm; that he has led a very exemplary Life, has been duly preſent at Maſs and Sermons, has frequently approached the Sacraments of Penance and the Euchariſt, and beſtowed Alms liberally on the Poor, and on religious Houſes.

FURTHERMORE, that he has done the moſt ſignal Service to the Churches and Fraternities to which he belonged; that he has employ'd a great Part of his Subſtance in Works of Piety; that no Perſon can ſay he ever committed an Action contrary to the Religion he profeſſes; ſo far from it, that he has always diſcovered the higheſt Love, as well as Awe, of the Divine Being, and the utmoſt Love and Charity for his Neighbour.

THAT it can be as clearly proved, he never ſhifted himſelf on Saturdays; that he has frequently been ſeen eating Swines Fleſh, Hare, Rabbits, and all ſorts of Fiſh, whether Shell-Fiſh or otherwiſe, without making the leaſt Diſtinction with regard to Meats, except in conformity to the holy Roman Church. That his Servants may be examined on theſe Articles, and his moſt intimate Acquaintance, above all his Confeſſor, and the Rector of the Pariſh where he lived; and that all theſe will not ſcruple to make Oath, that in whatever concerns Religion his Conduct was always irreproachable.

SUCH is the uſual Form of the Objections, which the Counſellors make who are appointed on theſe Occaſions to plead the Cauſe of Criminals. Being ſigned by the Letrado and the Priſoner, the former goes to the Meſa in order to give an Account of what he has done, and the latter is remanded back to Priſon.

SOME Time after, viz. whenever the Judges think fitting, they ſend for the Priſoner before them, in order for his calling ſuch Perſons as may prove the Particulars of his Objections. The Law requires that there be three Witneſſes at leaſt for each Article, and indeed there are few Priſoners but clearly prove what they had alledged in their own Juſtification. However, this is of very little Service to them, tho' in juſtice they ought to invalidate the Teſtimony of a ſingle Perſon, which at the ſame Time is generally trifling and inconſiſtent. The Priſoner having done, he is ſent back to Priſon.

SOME Time after this, he is again ſent for, when he is urged afreſh to confeſs his Guilt. In caſe he perſiſts in declaring his Innocence, he is asked, whether he conſents that the Proctor ſhould make a new Declaration of the Proofs found againſt him, immediately after which the Secretary begins to read in theſe or the like Words.

The legal Declaration of the Affidavits given in againſt the Priſoner at the Bar.

AN Evidence, whom we will call [a] Richard, has depoſed, That about ten Years ago, he heard and ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar, whoſe Name is Lewis, being in a certain Place (ſuppoſe Coimbra) with Perſons of the ſame Extraction with himſelf, they declared to each other, that both of them lived in Conformity to the Law of Moſes.

[b] ANOTHER Evidence, whom we will call John, has alſo depoſed that the ſaid Lewis being in a certain Place (ſuppoſe Caſtelbraco) about fifteen Years ago, in Company with other new Chriſtians, whom we will call Francis and John, one of the Company having obſerved that he uſed to eat Pork, was anſwered by the Priſoner at the Bar, whoſe Name is Lewis, that he never eat any; to which another, whom we will call Francis, ſaid, that Lewis did very well, provided it was in Obedience to the Law; and that the whole Company on that Occaſion affirmed, they ſquared their Conduct according to the Principles of the Moſaical Inſtitution.

A THIRD Witneſs, ſuppoſe his Name [c] William, has legally depoſed, that the abovementioned Lewis being about ſix Years ago in a certain Place, Coimbra for inſtance,

[a] This Evidence, whom we call Richard, ſeems here to have been the only Witneſs with Lewis. Compare this with the Declaration of the ſaid Lewis hereafter mentioned.

[b] This Witneſs, whom we call John, has impeached Lewis and Francis. Tho' there are but three Perſons mentioned in this Indictment, there are nevertheleſs ſometimes eight, who are all enſnared by the Inquiſitors. The Reader is deſired to beſtow ſome Reflection on theſe Depoſitions, in order to compare them with thoſe of the Priſoner.

[c] The Reader will eaſily obſerve that the Evidence is very different from the Defence made by the Priſoner, which is a plain Proof that the whole is but a Trick.

with Perſons of the ſame Extraction with himſelf, whom we will ſuppoſe to be Emanuel and William, the ſaid Lewis told the Evidence then preſent, that he intended to purchaſe a conſiderable Employment; that one of the ſaid Witneſſes, Emanuel for inſtance, told him it would not be proper for him to buy it, becauſe being a new Chriſtian it was very probable ſome Perſon or other might traverſe his Deſign; to which another of the Company, ſuppoſe William, anſwered, that this ought not to prevent his purchaſing it, ſince Perſons of the ſame Extraction with himſelf had exerciſed ſuch Employments; and that all the Company then preſent, profeſſed their living in Obedience to the Injunctions of the Law of Moſes.

THIS is pretty near the Form of the Declarations of the Proofs which the Inquiſitors pretend to have againſt their Priſoners.

THOSE of the Priſoner, whom we will call Lewis, conſiſt only of three Witneſſes, whoſe Evidence is far from agreeing; however, theſe are conſidered by the Inquiſitors as ſufficiently valid to cauſe any Perſon to be ſeized! nay, ſometimes a Perſon is impriſoned tho' there are but two ſuch Evidences, who, as they are commonly perjured, can hardly agree in the Particulars they depoſe. If the Inquiſitors would allow the Trials to be publiſh'd, it would then be found, that ſcarce two Witneſſes in a thouſand agree in all Circumſtances, unleſs Matters were ſo managed, that having impeached a Perſon before themſelves were taken up, they had concerted and agreed together upon their Depoſition beforehand.

THE Declaration is read to the Priſoner, when he is asked, whether he allows the Charge to be true? But as we will ſuppoſe Lewis to be innocent, he conſequently denies ever Article of it; upon which he is immediately remanded back to Priſon.

THE Inquiſitors do not permit the Counſellor to have any Conference with the Priſoner for ſome Time afterwards; but this is of little Prejudice to him, ſince he really has only the ſpecious Name of his Counſellor. And to ſay the Truth, he is not allowed to ſupplicate or alledge any Thing in Favour of the Priſoner, but what the Inquiſitors think proper. The Counſellor is never ſhewn either the Trial or the Proceedings; and as he is not informed of the ſeveral Circumſtances of the Affair, it would be ſcarce poſſible for him to make a ſuitable Defence, ſince he is nominated to this Employment by the moſt zealous Familiars of the Inquiſition, who very often are ſurpriſingly illiterate. In fine, as theſe Counſellors are Retainers to the holy Office, they always ſet the Caſe of thoſe Priſoners whoſe Cauſe they pretend to plead, in the worſt Light. And inaſmuch as the Inquiſitors and Familiars, are prejudiced againſt all thoſe who in Portugal are diſtinguiſhed by the Name of new Chriſtians, their Counſellors always think the worſt of their Priſoners. Now if theſe happen to ſpeak their real Sentiments at the Board, and that theſe prove to be againſt the Priſoner, they are of great Prejudice to the latter; whereas tho' this Advocate judge never favourably of him, it is of very little Service to him.

THE Proctor is the chief Man in the Secret, and may, whenever he pleaſes, peruſe the whole Proceſs, in order that he may be the better enabled to perplex the Priſoner; whereas the Counſellor having but a very ſuperficial Knowledge of the whole Affair, cannot poſſily make any ſuitable Defence. Hence it is, that great Numbers of theſe unhappy Creatures die undefended; conſtrained either to periſh miſerably in the Flames, or to caſt the blackeſt Stain on their Families, by accuſing themſelves of Judaiſm, or ſeveral other Crimes, whereof they are wholly innocent.

SOME Time after, whenever the Inquiſitors think proper, the Advocate is allow'd Acceſs to the Priſoner, when he reads to him the above-mention'd Declaration of Proofs which had before been ſignified to him at the Board, and drawn up in pretty near the Form before exhibited. This Inſtrument excludes indeed a Variery of Depoſitions; but how numerous ſoever they be, they always differ both in Subſtance and Circumſtances.

THIS Inſtrument being read, the Letrado asks the Priſoner what he has to alledge againſt the Charge. In caſe he anſwers, that the whole is a mere Rhapſody of Lyes; that he is innocent of all that is laid to his Charge, and that he earneſtly beſeeches the Counſellor to undertake his Defence, then the Letrado changing his Note, begins to act the Part of an Inquiſitor; employs all his Rhetoric to prevail upon his Client to make an open Confeſſion; repreſents to him, that it will be impoſſible for him to extricate himſelf by any other Means; and that, in caſe he continue obſtinate, he will run the riſque of continuing ſeveral Years in Priſon, or of being put to Death.

A LITTLE Reflection on theſe Occaſions has the Effect which ſuch Advice given by a Counſellor muſt naturally produce in weak Minds, ſuch as thoſe of Women and others; and indeed, theſe falſe Advocates generally perſuade their Clients to accuſe themſelves, though in never ſo ſcandalous a Manner.

THAT in caſe the Priſoner ſtill perſiſts in declaring his Innocence, then the Letrado never fails to addreſs him as follows: What Anſwers can you make to the Crimes which the Proctor has laid to your Charge, and which he affirms to be ſufficiently proved? It muſt be confeſs'd, that a Priſoner is very much to be pitied on theſe Occaſions; for what Succour or Conſolation can ſuch a pretended Advocate adminiſter? Is it not plain that the Whole is a mere Juggle? Were the Letrado to do his Duty, ought he not to except againſt all the Witneſſes, ſince either they differ in their Depoſitions, are moſt of them Priſoners, or were forced by Threats and Violence to give ſuch Evidence as the Inquiſitors think proper? In Lay-Tribunals a ſingle Witneſs goes for nothing, though it were in caſe of High-Treaſon; and ſuch muſt be Men of unſullied Characters. But the Inquiſitors, on the contrary, receive all kind of Witneſſes; and the Depoſitions of Perſons ſuborn'd and forc'd, and who have been confin'd ſeveral Years in Priſon, and had no other Way of ſaving their Lives, are receiv'd as valid. Was an Offer of Liberty made to thoſe who are confin'd in our different Priſons, upon condition that they would depoſe againſt others, without their being oblig'd to agree with the Depoſitions of the other Witneſſes, there is hardly one but would endeavour to procure his Liberty at ſo eaſy a Rate. Are not the Priſoners who are confin'd in the Priſons of the Inquiſition human Creatures as well as thoſe who are confin'd in ſecular Goals? Does not the Horrors of ſo dreadful a Confinement, and the Fear of a cruel Death, make as ſtrong an Impreſſion upon them, eſpecially on Women? There is no Room to doubt, but as theſe unhappy Creatures confeſs themſelves falſly to be Jews when it is extorted from them, they would alſo accuſe themſelves to be Mahometans were Threats and Menaces employ'd.

HOWEVER, the Counſellors have not the leaſt Scruple upon theſe Occaſions, but are very eaſy in their Minds, and have not the leaſt Qualm of Conſcience, though they are anſwerable to Heaven for the Life, the Wealth, and Honour of thoſe whoſe Cauſe they undertake. And if it happens, which is but too often the Caſe, that a Priſoner accuſes others falſly by the Advice of his Counſellor, into what Guilt does this latter plunge himſelf! and can we ſuppoſe he can ever atone for it?

IN fine, the Letrado having ask'd the Priſoner whether he has any ſolid Exceptions to make againſt his Witneſſes? the latter anſwers, That 'twill be impoſſible for him to hit upon any, ſince they are all unknown to him. Then the Advocate draws up ſeveral againſt the Witneſſes in general, and at the ſame Time engages the Priſoner to diſcloſe to him, without the leaſt Reſerve, whatever he may have to alledge againſt all Perſons with whom he may have had any Difference, in order that in ſo great a Number, he may include thoſe who depoſed againſt him. Nevertheleſs, as the Priſoner is not only often unacquainted with his Accuſers, but never ſo much as once heard their Names, the Conſequence is, that though he excepts againſt an hundred, he has not the good Luck to hit upon thoſe whom only it concerned him to name. Another Inconveniency which ariſes from the Priſoner's Perplexity is, that as he, by his Counſellor, excepts againſt all the Perſons he can poſſibly think of, who perhaps never once thought to do him the leaſt Prejudice, he thereby makes a general Confeſſion of his whole Life to the Letrado; diſcovers to him all the Intrigues or Scenes of Gallantry in which he may have been engaged, and thereby ruins the Reputation of ſeveral Women, and thoſe perhaps of Diſtinction, by diſcloſing what ought to have been buried in eternal Oblivion. Such is the wretched Perplexity of thoſe who are impriſon'd by the Inquiſitors, who have no Refuge left but to make vain and empty Challenges, by ſaying for inſtance, that ſuch a one is their Enemy, becauſe they either debauch'd his Wife, his Daughter, or his Siſter. On which we are to obſerve, that the Inquiſitors pay no manner of Regard to ſuch Exceptions, if it can be proved that the Perſon who makes them, either ſpoke afterwards, or was reconcil'd to the Perſon whom he challenges, as though the Portugueſe did not frequently conceal their Revenge, under the moſt ſpecious Appearance of Friendſhip.

ANOTHER Method by which the Priſoners of the holy Office ſometimes recover their Liberty, is by proving their being in another Place, which in Portugueſe is called [a] Coarctato, that is, the proving the Priſoner was in a different Place from that ſworn to in the Indictment; as for inſtance, to ſhew that he was in Liſbon, when 'twas pretended he was in Coimbra.

FOR the Validity of every Challenge or Exception, the Priſoner muſt bring three Witneſſes at leaſt, of an unſullied Character, all of them old Chriſtians; but the Advocate is not told their Names. We are to obſerve, that the Witneſſes who are ſubpæna'd by the Priſoner on theſe Occaſions, are always under ſuch dreadful Apprehenſions, leſt the Inquiſitors ſhould ſuſpect their favouring the Priſoner, that this Conſideration frequently prevents their making ſuch Depoſitions as might be of Advantage to the Priſoner, or at leaſt making them very imperfectly. We are farther to obſerve, that none but Priſoners of Experience or Underſtanding, fly for Refuge to the Coarctato; and if the Priſoner himſelf does not hit upon it, his Advocate never puts it into his Head. The better to illuſtrate this Matter, the Reader is to know, that the Priſoner is never told the Places directly which the Witneſſes ſwore to, unleſs he deſires to be told their Names in order to clear himſelf by the Coarctato; but that in the Declarations which are read to the Priſoner, they always make uſe of the Words, In a certain Place, without ſpecifying any particular one, as we have ſhewn in the above-mention'd Examples. Now moſt Priſoners finding thoſe Places are not pointed out, ſeldom have the Senſe to require their being named, in order to clear themſelves by the Coarctato. Beſides, this Expedient is generally of no Service to Women, young Perſons, and even to Perſons of certain Conditions; ſuch being too ignorant to think of it themſelves, and are never prompted to it by their Advocates, though bound in duty to do all that lies in their

[a] The Plea of Coarctato can be alledged by none but Travellers, and is ſcarce ever allow'd to Women.

Power

Power for thoſe whoſe Cauſe they undertake. But ſo unhappy is the Lot of all who are ſeized by the Inquiſitors, that every Thing ſeems to conſpire their Ruin; and whenever their Defence is to be undertaken, numberleſs Difficulties ariſe, and thoſe for the moſt Part unſurmountable.

CHAP. VI.

SEQUEL of the Proceedings againſt ſuch Men as are impeach'd; and againſt Women.

ALL that the Priſoner and his Advocate can do for their Advantage conſiſts in theſe kinds of Challenges. Some Time after the Priſoner is called to Audience, but only to inquire of him the Names of thoſe Witneſſes he had mentioned in his Challenges or Exceptions. Having done this, he is remanded back to Priſon, and not a Word is mention'd to him of his Cauſe. If he has been ſo happy, when he made his Exceptions, as to hit on the Names of thoſe who depoſed againſt him, then the Witneſſes he calls upon, are examined with regard to theſe Exceptions, otherwiſe no farther Mention is made of them, and the Cauſe continues at a ſtand.

SUPPOSE that the Priſoner, whom we will call Lewis, was taken up in January 1700. no Mention is made to him of his Trial till two Years after his Impriſonment. If the Reader thinks this a long Time, he is to know that ſeveral Priſoners have been confined three Years, before a Word has been ſaid to them of it. Two Years being elapſed, all the Proceedings we before took notice of are concluded in two Months, ſo that Lewis flatters himſelf he ſhall be ſet at Liberty in the firſt Act of Faith; but he is miſtaken; for the Act of Faith is ſolemnized, but no notice is taken of him. How bitter muſt the Reflection be, when a poor Priſoner conſiders that it would be impoſſible for him to procure his Liberty before another Act of Faith, which will be two Years at leaſt! In vain does he torture his Mind, to gueſs at the Reaſons why he ſhould be detained in this Manner; for this it will be impoſſible for him to gueſs.

AT laſt, about a Year after, he is called to Audience, when he is again exhorted to confeſs his Crime. In caſe he anſwers as he did before, that he is wholly innocent, and is not conſcious to himſelf of having committed any Crime, he is remanded back till a little before the next Act of Faith, when he (ſuppoſe Lewis) is put to the Torture, where at the ſame Time that all his Bones are diſlocated in a dreadful Manner, he is earneſtly conjured (nor are the moſt terrible Menaces omitted on theſe Occaſions) to make a general Confeſſion of all his Crimes, in order that he may be ſet at Liberty.

'TIS indeed ſurprizing, how it can be poſſible for any of theſe unhappy Wretches to bear up againſt ſuch a Crowd of Sufferings; but in order to give the Reader ſome Idea of this Matter, and the Effect which this Torture generally produces, we ſhall here inſtance an Example, which is that of Mary of the Conception, a Native of Villa-Eſtremos, and Daughter to Emanuel Soares.

THIS young Woman, who afterwards lived with one of her Brothers, named Alvares Pinto, was taken up, and alſo two of her Siſters. Theſe three young Women, after having having been long impriſon'd, were at laſt ſet at Liberty in the Act of Faith ſolemnized at Evora in April 1660. Mary of the Conception, after having conſtantly perſiſted in declaring her Innocence, was at laſt put to the Torture. She bore it very couragiouſly till 'twas pretty near ended; but at laſt, overcome with the Torments, ſhe accuſed herſelf. Upon this ſhe was unbound, and was ſuffered to put on her Clothes in order to make her Confeſſion. But now, inſtead of perſiſting in what ſhe had before declared, ſhe proteſted that all ſhe had ſpoke when upon the Rack, was abſolutely falſe; that ſhe was a Chriſtian, and that the Dread of dying under her Torments, was the ſole Motive why ſhe accuſed herſelf of Judaiſm. Upon this ſhe was remanded back to Priſon, and a few Days after was put a ſecond Time to the Torture, when ſhe again accuſed herſelf; which was no ſooner done than ſhe was unlooſed, when being carried to the Audience, ſhe now perſiſted in her Innocence, and told her Judges, that 'twould be to no Purpoſe for them to put her a third Time to the Torture, ſince ſhe ſhould always accuſe herſelf falſly, though ſhe were rack'd an hundred Times. However, ſhe was again put upon the Rack; but as Heaven then indued her with uncommon Reſolution, ſhe went through it continually, perſiſting in her Innocence. What is here related was publiſhed with her Sentence; and 'twas for refuſing to ratify what ſhe had confeſs'd in the two firſt Tortures, that ſhe was condemned to be whipp'd publickly through the Streets, and afterwards baniſhed for ten Years.

IN the ſame Act of Faith there appeared to be reconciled Andrao Franciſco Tendeiro, born in Villa-Vicioſa, who hearing this young Woman's Sentence pronounced, and having ſaid to thoſe who ſtood near him, that he thought it a very ſevere one, he was called to the Audience, when the Inquiſitors, after having ſharply reprimanded him, told him, he might look upon it as a great Happineſs, that they had been ſo indulgent as not to confine him; that though they, out of their great Goodneſs and Charity permitted him to enjoy his Liberty, he yet ſhould take the utmoſt Care not to blab ſo inconſiderately another Time.

WHEN Women are put to the Torture, they are undreſſed to their Shifts, which are of coarſe Cloth; then they are put upon the Rack in a very indecent Manner, before a large Company of Men; ſo that as moſt of them are terrified by the Torture they undergo, they confeſs or deny whatever is required from them, in order to be freed from the Torments they are made to ſuffer.

LET us nevertheleſs ſuppoſe, that Lewis has had ſo much Reſolution as to bear up under the Torments, without confeſſing any Thing; that the next Act of Faith (or Goal-Delivery) he is ſet at Liberty; that is, is not condemned to die, for want of ſufficient Evidence, the three above-mentioned being not enough; ſuppoſing, I ſay, he is clear'd on this Occaſion, is it not ſurprizing that a poor Creature ſhould be tortured in this Manner upon ſo trifling a Matter? that he ſhall be made to ſuffer ſo many Torments upon ſuch ſlight Evidence? that a Trial which might have been diſpatch'd in a few Days, ſhall be ſpun out to ſo many Years? and that a Man's Health and Buſineſs muſt be ruin'd, becauſe, forſooth, he muſt be obliged to wait till the next Goal-Delivery? Is not all this unjuſt and barbarous?

LEWIS being thus releas'd, is carried to a public School, where he is confin'd a Month, in order to learn his Catechiſm. But of what Service is this? And if he already knows all he can be taught, why is he confin'd in this manner? The Reaſon is certainly, becauſe the Inquiſitors would thereby perſuade the Vulgar, that he is ignorant of the very Elements of the Chriſtian Religion.

AT laſt Lewis is completely ſet at Liberty, becauſe of the Happineſs he had in his ill Fortune, viz. that there were no more than three Witneſſes appear'd againſt him. But let us now ſuppoſe there are ten, all Perſons of the Character we juſt now deſcrib'd; which, according to the Maxims of the Inquiſition, is ſufficient to cauſe a Perſon to be deliver'd over to the ſecular Arm, as manifeſtly convicted. A little before the Goal-Delivery, Lewis is call'd to Audience, when it is inſinuated to him, that he muſt prepare to hear his Sentence, which is to be pronounc'd in the next Act of Faith that is to be ſolemniz'd on a Day they name to him. This is the Notice which is given to all ſuch as are to be condemn'd, that fatal Day being carefully conceal'd from the reſt of the Priſoners till the Moment it is to be ſolemniz'd. In what a dreadful Situation is the Mind of ſuch an unhappy Wretch, who is revolving continually the horrid Barbarities which are preparing, unaſſiſted with a Confeſſor, or any Conſolation; and at the ſame Time abſolutely reſolv'd to ſuffer Death, rather than accuſe himſelf or any other Perſon falſly. In fine, the Friday immediately preceding the Sunday of the Act of Faith, Lewis's Hands are tied very early in the Morning; and the ſame Inſtant a Jeſuit is ſent to him, in order to receive his Confeſſion, and aſſiſt him during thoſe laſt three Days.

THE Moment the Confeſſor is come in, the Priſoner makes his Confeſſion to him as one who is ſoon to leave the World, being reſolv'd not to preſerve his Life, when Truth and his own Honour are to be the Sacrifice. Sunday being come, he walks in the Proceſſion, hears Sentence of Death publicly pronounc'd upon himſelf; when he declares aloud that he dies a good Chriſtian, and has always liv'd ſo; that he is innocent of all the Crimes which are laid to his Charge; that notwithſtanding this, he ſtill reſigns himſelf to Puniſhment and Death, in hopes of obtaining from Chriſt Jeſus the Pardon of thoſe Sins whereof he is really guilty. Nevertheleſs, we daily ſee a great Number of Priſoners, who, terrify'd with the Approaches of Death, either prevent Sentence of Condemnation from paſſing upon them, or, who after Sentence has paſs'd, agree to all the Queſtions which are put to them, and confeſs themſelves guilty of Things whereof they are wholly innocent.

As ſoon as Lewis has heard his Sentence pronounc'd, he is deliver'd over to the ſecular Arm, when he is carried before the Parliament, where, without once inquiring into his Trial, he is condemn'd to the Flames. Before he is deliver'd up to the Executioners, he is asked, What Religion he is deſirous of dying in? To which not only Lewis, but all thoſe unhappy Perſons who are in his Circumſtances, anſwer, That they die as they have lived, in the Principles of the Roman Catholic Religion; that they deteſt all Sects and Hereſies, as alſo the Jewiſh Law; acknowledging Chriſt Jeſus for their only Saviour, in whoſe Merits they put their whole Truſt.

Lewis being at laſt brought to the Stake, perſiſts in his Sentiments to the laſt; and in this Manner do all reſign their Breath who are condemn'd to the Flames by the Inquiſitors, and are by them called Convitto negativo, or negative Convicts.

WE will now ſee, in what Manner thoſe extricate themſelves, who are reconciled and condemned to Baniſhment, for having deferred their Confeſſion till Sentence of Death had paſſed upon them.

LET us ſuppoſe therefore that the above-mention'd Lewis is accuſed by fifteen or twenty Perſons, who diſagree in all the Circumſtances of their ſeveral Depoſitions. Lewis finds his Ruin unavoidable, becauſe of the Impoſſibility to except againſt ſuch a Number of Witneſſes with whom he is wholly unacquainted. If nevertheleſs the Dread of Puniſhment in the Condition he is in, at laſt inclines him to accuſe himſelf of Things whereof he is wholly innocent, he undoubtedly argues with himſelf in theſe or ſuch like Words: How will it be poſſible for me to hit upon the Names of ſuch Witneſſes? And tho' I ſhould be ſo fortunate as to gueſs them all, how will it be poſſible for me to name exactly the Time, the Place, and the Occaſion of the ſeveral Conferences, which 'tis pretended I had with them? This, methinks, is what I ſhall never be able to do. However, I know by Experience, that ſome Perſons have procur'd their Liberty, by confeſſing themſelves guilty of ſeveral Crimes whereof they are as innocent as I am. It therefore will be enough, if I hit upon the Names of thoſe who have ſworn againſt me, though I ſhould not have the good Fortune to gueſs the other Circumſtances. But then, how can I poſſibly gueſs the Names of twenty People? Conſequently the only Method by which I can do this, will be to impeach all the new Chriſtians in general, with whom I have the leaſt Acquaintance, at leaſt all thoſe with whom I have any Intimacy, ſince 'tis the only Way left me to ſave my Life.

LEWIS having taken this Reſolution, revolves in his Mind all the Perſons whom he has the leaſt Room to ſuſpect are his Adverſaries: Upon this he deſires to be admitted to Audience, where, as he frequently cannot exactly hit upon the Names of thoſe whom he imagines to be his Accuſers, he points them out to the Inquiſitors, by ſaying the Son, Daughter, or Wife, of Mr. Such-a-one; and in order that he may be ſure of naming the twenty who have ſworn againſt him, he ſometimes accuſes two hundred, and at laſt perhaps does not gueſs the Perſons who impeach'd him.

SEVERAL Priſoners begin by naming their Fathers, Children, Brothers, from an Opinion that their Judges (ſince they did not ſpare their neareſt Relations) will excuſe them, as ſuppoſing it may be owing to their bad Memory, in caſe they cannot hit upon all the Names of thoſe who impeach'd them. Other Priſoners, in order not to expoſe their Relations, forbear to name them, and mention none but indifferent Perſons. But to return to Lewis: He flatters himſelf, that now he has made ſo ample a Confeſſion, he will ſoon recover his Liberty; but alas! he is in a greater Perplexity than ever, in caſe he could not gueſs the Names of all who ſwore againſt him, becauſe the Inquiſitors always declare to him on theſe Occaſions, that in caſe he does not complete his Confeſſion, the Proctor will give in his Petition, praying that he may be tried as a Diminuto, i. e. one who has maliciouſly ſuppreſſed Part of his Accomplices, and made an imperfect Confeſſion.

THIS unfortunate Wretch, who has gone ſo far as to accuſe himſelf falſly in order to ſave his Life, ſeeing himſelf in danger of forfeiting it, notwithſtanding the horrid Confeſſion he has made, rambles in his Mind all over his own Country and thoſe adjacent to it. Nothing eludes his Reflections, for he revolves the Names of all the new Chriſtians with whom he has the leaſt Acquaintance, not ſparing even Prieſts or Monks; and if Portugal is not found ſufficient, he travels into Spain, Italy, France, in order to hit upon Perſons whom he may accuſe. But if he is told that all this is not yet ſufficient, he then rakes into the Aſhes of the Dead, who, as was before obſerv'd, are no leſs exempt from the Proſecutions of the Inquiſitors, than the Living.

IN fine, if Lewis has had the good Luck to find out all the Names requir'd, he then comes out at the Goal-Delivery among the Reconcil'd, when he is baniſh'd for five Years either to Braſil, or ſome other Country. 'Tis by this means that ſuch as accuſe themſelves after their Trial, are diſtinguiſh'd from thoſe who have prevented their Condemnation; the latter being never ſent into Baniſhment.

CHAP. VII.

The Confeſſion of the Priſoner compared with the Depoſitions of his Accuſers.

WE have juſt before ſeen, in what Manner the Priſoner, whom we called Lewis, got his Liberty; we are now going to examine what Relation there is between thoſe Particulars he has confeſſed, and the Depoſitions we before ſuppoſed to have been made againſt him. By this it will manifeſtly appear, that all theſe pretended Confeſſions are ſo many Traps laid for the Innocent; and that all the Depoſitions which are made before the Inquiſitors, are very near in the ſame Strain. Perhaps the Reader may think me guilty of Tautology; however, the Neceſſity I was under of giving a perfect Knowledge of theſe Matters, was the Reaſon of my being ſo Prolix.

LEWIS therefore, as was before obſerved, had made a Confeſſion, and in order to gueſs the Names of the twenty Perſons who depoſed againſt him, has accuſed two hundred. He named ſuch a Number of them, that he had the good luck to hit upon thoſe which were for his Purpoſe.

LET us now give an Inſtance in thoſe Things which happened to Lewis, on which Occaſion we are to remember, that all Priſoners of the Inquiſition, who are accuſed of Judaiſm, make pretty near the ſame Confeſſion.

LEWIS [a] has made Oath, that about ſix Years ago, being at Gologan Fair, and ſupping in an Inn with Richard, Bernard, and Giles, a Piece of Pork was brought upon the Table; that thereupon, Giles ſaid he never eat of that Fleſh; that Bernard ſaid the ſame, and added, that it always made him ſick; that then Richard ſaid, he was perſuaded he did not refrain from eating Swine-Fleſh, but only becauſe it was prohibited by the Law of Moſes. That this Deponent, Lewis, confeſſed that what he ſaid was true; ſo that at laſt they all had profeſſed their Obedience to the Law of Moſes.

LEWIS [b] has declared upon Oath, that being about five Years ſince in Company with John, in the Convent of Bajulo three Leagues from Coimbra, that there John told him he had the higheſt Veneration for the Religious of that Monaſtery, who are Carmelites, becauſe they had been founded by Elias, the Prophet of the antient Law; and that this Diſcourſe had inſenſibly engaged them to declare themſelves Jews.

LEWIS [c] has declared upon Oath, that engaging in Diſcourſe about twelve Years ſince at one of the Gates of Coimbra, with William, Sylveſter, and Laurence, a Peaſant came up to them, and asked whether they would buy two Books he had in his Hand: To which Laurence replied, No. Upon which, the Countryman going away, William ſaid to the reſt, that they might ſpeak their Thoughts freely, ſince they all profeſſed the ſame Religion. Whereupon they all declared their Attachment to the Law of Moſes; and that they would have made a more open Declaration, had not ſome Perſons come up to them as they were diſcourſing.

[c] What Affinity or Relation is there between this Depoſition with that of Francis above-mentioned, who has declared John to be an Accomplice? Were the Trials publiſhed, we ſhould meet with many Contradictions of the ſame Nature.

LEWIS

LEWIS has declared upon Oath, that being at Coimbra about nine Years ago, in Francis's Houſe, in Company with Leonora, Wife to the ſaid Francis, they had mutually diſcover'd themſelves to be Followers of the Jewiſh Faith.

I BEG the Reader to reflect a little how eaſily the Confeſſions of Perſons impeach'd are received, provided they only name thoſe who have depoſed againſt them; and that they never conſider whether it agrees with the ſaid Depoſitions in Time, Place, Occaſion, and ſuch-like eſſential Circumſtances. That in caſe Lewis's Declaration is genuine and ſincere, ought it not to agree in every Particular, with the Depoſitions of the Accuſers? Nevertheleſs, if the Inquiſitors were to allow the Trials to be publiſh'd, we ſhould ſcarce ever find that the Declarations of the Perſons impeach'd and their Accuſers, agreed exactly in Particulars; whereas, if the Inquiſitors were to require, that all the Parties ſhould agree together in Circumſtances, we then ſhould not ſee Chriſtians daily accuſing one another of Judaiſm; it being almoſt impoſſible for Perſons to agree in Facts when they are entirely falſe. If it ſhould happen that ſome one of the Priſoners ſhould be really found a Jew, the Witneſſes who had depoſed againſt him, would not fail of agreeing together in all the Circumſtances, ſince the Allegations would be juſt.

PERHAPS it will be asked, why ſo may Priſoners who accuſe themſelves, are given over to the ſecular Arm, upon pretence that they have concealed ſome of their Accomplices, who are therefore called Diminutos, i. e. whoſe Confeſſions are defective and imperfect.

As this is a very delicate Article, it may be proper to dwell a little upon it. In order therefore to ſay no more than what they know to be true, we are to diſtinguiſh three kinds of Diminutos, who as ſuch come out condemn'd to die.

THE firſt are thoſe who having accuſed themſelves after their being impriſon'd, or at leaſt before Sentence of Condemnation had paſſed upon them, have conſequently had all the Time requiſite to examine themſelves, and make a complete Declaration.

THE ſecond are ſuch as have not confeſſed till after Sentence of Condemnation had paſſed upon them. Theſe are put to the Torture, in order thereby to force them to complete their Confeſſions, and by that Means ſave their Lives; which is looked upon by the Inquiſitors as an extraordinary Act of Clemency and Mercy, inaſmuch as in Conſideration of the Torture, the Priſoners are not required to make ſo exact a Declaration, the Torture making up for the Inſufficiency of their Confeſſion. This ſecond kind of Diminutos are allowed Time to anſwer what is required of them, till the Friday immediately preceding the Sunday of the Act of Faith.

THE third are ſuch as do not make a Confeſſion till they are hand-cuffed, and are given up to the Confeſſors. The Condition of theſe is worſe than thoſe above-mentioned, becauſe they are never after put to the Torture; and that the only way to clear themſelves, is to name all thoſe who have accuſed them, without ſo much as excepting one ſingle Perſon.

IT is in order to gueſs them all, that ſuch Priſoners are induced not to ſpare their neareſt Relations, and Strangers. And becauſe theſe unhappy Wretches, who are brought to the Brink of Deſpair by the Dread of an ignominious and cruel Death, name a great Number of Perſons whom they never knew, and by that Means put a great many People in the Danger whence they endeavour to extricate themſelves, the Portugueſe ſay proverbially, Maôs atados, terras abraladas: i. e. the Moment a Priſoner is hand-cuffed, the Country is on Fire.

IT

It is very probable, that moſt of thoſe who come out condemned as Diminutos, after having accuſed themſelves, and ſeveral Perſons, of the ſame Crimes whereof they declared themſelves guilty, have willingly ſpared their Wives, their Children, Fathers, or Brothers. Now as there is no room to preſume that they acted in this Manner from a Defect of Memory, it is not thought neceſſary to put them to the Torture to force them to name ſuch Perſons. It is for this Inſincerity that the Inquiſitors cauſe them to be burnt as Diminutos. Nevertheleſs, it ſometimes happens that Perſons, though they impeach all their Relations, are nevertheleſs delivered over to the ſecular Arm as Diminutos, merely for omitting the Names of Perſons with whom they had the ſlighteſt Acquaintance. As for inſtance:

George Francis Mela, Inhabitant of Villa-Vicioſa, having been ſeized by the Inquiſitors of Devora, made a voluntary Accuſation a little Time after his Impriſonment, in hopes of ſoon obtaining his Liberty by that Means. In his Confeſſion he impeached all the Perſons he could poſſibly think of, as well his own Countrymen as Foreigners; inſomuch that he named upwards of five hundred. He had a Daughter, who at five Years of Age had been put into the Convent Della Speranza, of the ſame City, where ſhe had been educated by the Nuns of that Houſe, who were antient Chriſtians. This young Woman being grown up to Years of Maturity, had taken the Veil, and led a moſt exemplary Life. Her Father, whenever he came to ſee his Daughter, never diſcourſed her but in the Preſence of ſome of the Nuns. The unfortunate Father being reſolved to get out of Priſon at any rate, accuſes his Wife, his Brothers and Children, and among the reſt the Nun in queſtion; but notwithſtanding his going theſe horrid Lengths, yet he could not ſatisfy the Inquiſitors, who condemned him as a Diminuto. Thus unhappily undeceived, and reduced to the deepeſt Deſpair, when he found that notwithſtanding all his Confeſſions he ſtill muſt ſuffer, he diſowned all he had before affirmed, declared aloud that all he had depoſed, either againſt himſelf or others, was abſolutely falſe, and that he had only made thoſe Depoſitions purely to ſave his Life. In his Sentence he was called Diminuto Revogante, i. e. who has confeſſed ſome Part, and afterwards denied it all.

Maria Mendez, native of Fronteira, living in Elvas, Relict of Gaſper Gomez Jacinthus, having been ſeized by Order of the Inquiſitors, at firſt made a Confeſſion, in which ſhe accuſed her Children, Grand-Children, Relations, and all her Friends and Acquaintance, making in all near ſix hundred Perſons; and yet ſhe was ſentenced to die as a Diminuta. Finding herſelf reduced to this deſperate Condition, notwithſtanding the ample Confeſſions ſhe had made, ſhe denied all ſhe had before affirmed, and proteſted the only Motive of her declaring ſo many Falſities, was in order to ſave her Life. At laſt, coming out in the Act of Faith, in all her dreadful Geer, in order to go to the Stake, one of her Daughters ſeeing her paſs by, named ſome of their Relations aloud, fearing ſhe had either omitted or forgot them, and hoping that in caſe ſhe declared them to the Inquiſiters, ſhe might eſcape the Flames: But her unfortunate Mother anſwered, I did not omit thoſe you juſt now named, and have rambled over Portugal and Caſtile, but all to no Purpoſe.

CHAP. VIII.

Punishment of NEGATIVE CONVICTS.

IT is manifeſt, from what we have juſt now obſerved, that not only all ſuch are condemned as Diminutos who have endeavoured to ſpare their Relations, but alſo moſt of thoſe who could not poſſibly gueſs the Names of the ſeveral Perſons who are ſuppoſed to have been their Accomplices. 'Tis certainly a moſt melancholy Spectacle, to ſee Perſons thus carried to Execution, who, after having accuſed themſelves, have ſworn againſt their own Fathers, Brothers, and Children.

IT will perhaps be asked, why certain Priſoners, after having impeach'd a great Number of Perſons, chuſe rather to die than depoſe in this Manner againſt their Relations. To this it was anſwered, that the Tenderneſs one naturally breathes for Perſons who are ſo nearly related, and ſo dearly beloved, prompts thoſe unhappy Wretches to loſe their own Lives, rather than to reduce their Relations, whom they know to be innocent, to the ſame deſperate Condition with themſelves.

IT may be asked, whence it is that ſome Diminutos, and even certain negative Criminals, after having deferred Matters to the very laſt, do yet make a Confeſſion, when there is no other way left of ſaving their Lives; and that many Priſoners have a very good Gueſs, and name all the Perſons who have depoſed againſt them. It is anſwered, that ſuch Perſons have been informed by ſome other Means; or elſe by deep Reflection, have at laſt hit upon the Names of thoſe who had impeached them; or, that in caſe they ſo long deferred the making their Declaration, from a Principle of Conſcience, in order that they might not expoſe the Lives of innocent Perſons by accuſing them falſly, that nevertheleſs the Fear of Death has afterwards forced them, as it were againſt their Wills, to act in this Manner. But ſince we have mentioned negative Criminals, we ſhall inſtance ſome of them, in order to ſhew the Fate of thoſe to whom the Inquiſitors give that Name.

JAMES DE MELLO, a Native of Lisbon, a Gentleman of ſome Conſideration, and Knight of the Order of Chriſt, had ſerved ſeveral Years in Quality of Captain of the Horſe, with great Honour and Diſtinction. This Mello was partly a new Chriſtian, as alſo his Wife and two Sons. It had frequently happened, that when he ſaw any new Chriſtian arreſted by order of the Inquiſitors, he had diſcovered the greateſt Joy upon that Account, as well as Zeal for the Inquiſition, in order that he might not be ſuſpected of favouring the Jewiſh Tenets.

NOTWITHSTANDING this, it happened, whether out of Revenge or otherwiſe, that one of thoſe whoſe Misfortune this Gentleman ſeem'd to have inſulted, accuſed him, with his two Sons and his Wife; whereupon they were all thrown into Priſon together. As his Wife and the Children had been brought up very tenderly, and wholly unacquainted with Adverſity, they ſoon grew very uneaſy under their Confinement; whereupon they reſolved to make an immediate Confeſſion, to which they probably had been prompted by the Exhortations of their Gaolers or their Fellow-Priſoners. Deluded by their Advice, they all three accuſed the poor Gentleman, and thereupon were releaſed a little after. The Captain himſelf came out alſo in the next Act of Faith; but it was in order to be burnt as a negative Convict, notwithſtanding all the Proteſtations he he made of his being a Chriſtian, and his invoking the Name of Chriſt with his laſt Breath.

ALPHONSE NOBRE, born in Villa-Vicioſa, one of the principal Gentlemen of that City, whereof he had been Mayor, and the Prior of the Mercy, was caſt into the Priſon of Coimbra, upon the Suppoſition that he was partly a new Chriſtian. Some Time after his Son and Daughter were ſeized; who, prompted by wicked Advice, or terrified by Threats, firſt accuſed themſelves, and afterwards their Father, who came out in the Act of Faith, condemned as a negative Convict. As the old Gentleman was walking in the Proceſſion, it happened that he paſſed cloſe by his Son, who, ſtruck with Horror at his Father's ill Fate, beſought him to forgive him, and to indulge him his Bleſſing. I pardon you, replied his Father, for having brought me into this Condition through your Baſeneſs, becauſe I hope that Heaven will pardon me; but I ſhall not give you my Bleſſing. He would not look upon him as his Son, who had brought ſo much Diſhonour upon himſelf; ſo that he conſented to paſs for a Jew, tho' he was really a Chriſtian. I beſeech God, ſays the old Man, to convert and pardon you. Having ſaid theſe Words, he went to Death with the utmoſt Conſtancy; which, added to the Demonſtrations he gave of a ſincere and ſolid Piety, very much raiſed the Admiration of the Spectators.

HERE follows another Inſtance of Perſons of leſs Condition.

JOHN OF SEQUEIRA, and his Brother, Natives of Torres Alvas, Sons of a Laundreſs, were ſeized at Lisbon about thirty-five Years ago. At the ſame Time was arreſted John Travaſſos de Coſta, who for ſeveral Years had been Vicar-General to the Archiepiſcopal See of Lisbon. The two Brothers reſolutely aſſerted their Innocence; but as a great Number of Witneſſes had ſworn againſt them, they were condemned. The great Vicar Travaſſos, who, in Conſideration of his Dignity, had been frequently admitted to Audience, and knew how difficult it is for a Perſon who is once ſeized by the Inquiſitors to get out of their Clutches, felt a ſudden Damp upon his Spirits, confeſſed whatever was required of him, and impeached a great Number of Perſons; among whom were John de Sequeira, and his Brother, who in all probability were told by their Fellow-Priſoners that Travaſſos had depoſed againſt them. Now one of the Brothers being at an Audience, ſaid to the Inquiſitors, Gentlemen, how can it poſſibly enter into your Thoughts, that a Vicar-General ſhould have revealed his Secrets to me, who being no more than the Son of a Laundreſs, ſhould have thought it Honour ſufficient to have been his Footman? In caſe Travaſſos has depoſed againſt me, 'twas undoubtedly becauſe he imagined I ſhould play him the ſame Trick; however, I heartily forgive him, as I hope Forgiveneſs from Almighty God: But I proteſt, I am not guilty of one of theſe Articles whereof I am now accuſed. Were I really a Jew, as you pretend me to be, why ſhould I ſcruple to own my ſelf ſuch to ſave my Life, ſince I have no Eſtate to loſe? But I dare flatter myſelf that Heaven preſents me this Opportunity of working out my Salvation by the Torments I am to ſuffer in this World, and I am firmly reſolved not to loſe it. The two Brothers were burnt as negative Convicts, and to the laſt Gaſp gave the moſt lively Teſtimonies of their Faith in Chriſt. In the ſame Act of Faith the Grand Vicar walk'd, clothed with the Sanbenito, and lived ever after in a miſerable Manner. 'Twas even reported, that he declared, in his dying Moments, that all he had depoſed before the Inquiſitors, either againſt himſelf or others, was intirely falſe: But the holy Office has no manner of regard to ſuch Declarations.

WERE the old Chriſtians as much baited by the Inquiſitors as the new ones, and were they not skreened from all theſe Proſecutions and Grievances by the bare Privilege of their Birth, there is no doubt but they would alſo accuſe themſelves of the the ſame Crimes. This we may preſume, becauſe ſince the Statute which ordained that the Depoſitions of the new Chriſtians againſt the old ones ſhould be of no Force, the latter have frequently been in the ſame Caſe; and that from 1535 to 1600, when this Statute was made, ſeveral antient Chriſtians were impeached, and accuſed themſelves of Judaiſm; inſomuch that one of theſe confeſſed he went to a Place near a Well, at a little Diſtance from the City, where he expected to ſee the Meſſias riding upon a Goat.

BUT ſince, by the Statute above-mentioned, it has been enacted that no new Chriſtian ſhould be allowed to depoſe againſt the old ones. Whenever any of theſe are taken up by the Inquiſitors, they have no more to do but to declare their Extraction, which alone is looked upon as a very conſiderable Defence; and the new Chriſtians, who either from Inadvertency or otherwiſe, accuſe any of the old Chriſtians, are looked upon as forſworn Wretches, and as ſuch are obliged to wear the Carocha in the Act of Faith, and afterwards are whipt and ſent to the Gallies.

BAPTIST FANGUEIRO CABROS, born in Elvas, of the principal Nobility of the Country, was ſeized, and declared a new Chriſtian in the eighth Degree: Accordingly he was tried and condemned. He afterwards confeſſed, being already hand-cuffed, when he could no more be put to the Torture, or conſequently make up by this cruel Method for the Defects of his Confeſſion. However, being reſolutely determined to ſave his Life if poſſible, he impeached all the Perſons he could poſſibly think of; and among the reſt a Female Mulatto, who was related to the Family of one of his Uncles, on that Side by which he was ſaid to be partly a new Chriſtian. He therefore came out in the Act of Faith, clothed with the San Benito de Fogo Revolto, and was ſent to the Gallies. Not long after the Mulatto above-mentioned was arreſted, who made no other Defence than that ſhe was an old Chriſtian; and this being proved, Fangueiro was remanded back to Priſon, whence he came out a ſecond Time with the Carocha on, was again whipt, and ſent to the Gallies for five Years. And inaſmuch as the Captain of the Galley had favoured him becauſe of his Quality, and therefore diſpenſed with his doing the ſervile and painful Duty to which the other Slaves are condemned, the Captain was ſent to the Inquiſition, and ſeverely reprimanded for his Indulgence. It may not be improper to obſerve, that Fangueiro had depoſed againſt the Mulatto, when, as he was hand-cuffed, he could not, as was before obſerved, make up the Defects of his Confeſſion by Torture; he therefore could not eſcape Death any other way than by accuſing the Mulatto, who was included in the Number of his Accomplices; and nevertheleſs he was whipt and condemned to the Gallies, for only hahaving impeached her.

CHAP. IX.

The REASONS why the new Chriſtians are perſecuted. Examples of old Chriſtians puniſhed.

IN this Manner ſuch new Chriſtians as impeach old ones are convicted of Perjury; for ſince the enacting the above-mentioned Statute, the latter ſufficiently defend themſelves by only pleading the Statute, and their being antient Chriſtians.

BUT

BUT were thoſe two Expedients to fail, they undoubtedly would act as all new Chriſtians are forced to do, in order to eſcape being puniſhed capitally. If it ſhould be asked, How it comes to paſs that ſo many new Chriſtians, who have accuſed themſelves of being Jews, appear in the ſeveral Acts of Faith? It will be anſwered, That were they urged to confeſs themſelves Calviniſts or Mahometans, moſt of them would call themſelves ſuch, or any other Name that might be required of them; the Barbarities of the Inquiſitors being the ſole Motive which forces ſo many to accuſe themſelves of Crimes whereof they are wholly innocent.

HENCE it is, that the Sovereign, the Nobility, and the common People of Portugal, being impoſed upon by theſe ſpecious Appearances, look upon theſe unfortunate new Chriſtians as a Set of abominable Wretches, preſuming the horrid Things which are laid to their Charge in the Act of Faith, to be all Matter of Fact: But could one but make them comprehend the Truth of the Particulars contained in theſe Memoirs, their Hatred would ſoon be changed into Pity, and all of them would unanimouſly endeavour to find out Expedients for remedying an Abuſe of ſuch horrid Conſequence, which occaſions the Deſtruction of a numberleſs multitude of Chriſtians, by ſuffering them to paſs for Jews; a Circumſtance which at the ſame Time caſts the blackeſt Stain on the Portugueſe Name.

IT muſt be farther obſerved, that the ſame Man who was look'd upon as perjured when he depoſed againſt an antient Chriſtian, is looked upon as a good Witneſs when he accuſes a new one; whereas one would naturally ſuppoſe, that whoſoever depoſed falſly againſt one Perſon, would do the ſame againſt another, and conſequently ought never to be received as a Witneſs.

IT may be objected, that ſuch as are in this Manner convicted of Perjury, are not look'd upon as forſworn, merely becauſe they depoſed againſt antient Chriſtians, but alſo becauſe, after their being ſtrictly examined, they themſelves owned their Depoſition was falſe.

THIS Objection may be eaſily anſwer'd, by juſtly affirming, that many are condemn'd as perjured who did own themſelves to be ſo; and that even ſuch as ſeem to confeſs their being forſworn, were prompted to it from no other Motive than purely to get out of their cruel Confinements, to eſcape Torture, and to ſave their Lives; in the ſame Manner as they accuſe themſelves falſly to be Jews, they would accuſe themſelves of being Mahometans and Idolaters, were they urged to it, and had no other way left to get out of the Clutches of the Inquiſitors. Were the Inquiſitors as zealous in forcing their Priſoners to deny what they depoſe againſt new Chriſtians, as they are to make them contradict what they had ſworn againſt the old ones, they would retract equally in both Caſes; but ſo far from doing this, they are burnt by the Name of Confeſſo Revogante, i. e. one who has retracted what he had before confeſſed.

PERHAPS it will be objected, that they are ſufficiently convicted of Perjury, when they impeach thoſe Perſons for new Chriſtians who are well known to be old ones.

To this 'tis anſwer'd, that when they accuſe them of being new Chriſtians, they really thought them ſuch. And indeed, ſo much Care is at firſt taken in adviſing them not to depoſe againſt antient Chriſtians, ſince, in caſe they do ſo, they will inevitably be puniſhed with great Severity, that 'tis manifeſt a Priſoner, after having had ſuch notice given him, never pretends to impeach an old Chriſtian but unknowingly; becauſe he imagines him to be a new one, and is afraid that he had depoſed againſt him before. Had not Fanguiero, whom we mentioned in the preceding Chapter, been afraid of being burnt as a Diminuto, he would never have once thought of impeaching the Mulatto Woman.

WE do not think the puniſhing of Perjurers with Severity is unjuſt, but only that all ſuch who are ſo, are not puniſhed with the ſame Impartiality; and that the old Chriſtians are ſpared on this Occaſion, who being liable to the ſame Frailties with the reſt of Mankind, may ſometimes be Jews, and, like the new Chriſtians, ſometimes ſpeak Truth, and at other Times be guilty of Falſhood.

IN the Monaſtery of the Franciſcans of Lisbon, in Campo do Curral, was a Friar, a Man of great Learning, of a very good Family, and born in that City: The Name of his Houſe was Travaſſos de Coſta, and it is ſaid that his Father was Regiſter of the Court. This Friar, tho' an old Chriſtian, nevertheleſs gave himſelf up intirely to Jewiſh Principles; and ſo fond was he of his new Belief, that he inſinuated his Errors to his Brethren, and endeavoured to bring them over to his own Sentiments. The Friars after having attempted, but in vain, to bring him back to his former Belief, were at laſt forced to impeach him to the Inquiſition. Upon this he was ſeized, tried, condemned, and burnt; when he proteſted in his dying Moments, that he was firmly perſuaded the Law of Moſes was the only true one.

IN his Sentence, which was read publickly in the Act of Faith, or Jail-Delivery, he was called, partly a new Chriſtian; but his Relation conſidering he would thereby bring a great Scandal upon the whole Family, made their Remonſtrances to the Inquiſitors upon that Account. They owned that their Relations had been juſtly condemned and executed, ſince he had profeſſed himſelf a Jew; but they inſiſted, that as he was not a new Chriſtian, they ſhould not call him a Jew, which would preſerve his Family from the Shame and Ignominy it would otherwiſe be expoſed to. The Inquiſitors allowed them to prove what they had advanced; upon which Juſtice was done them. The Words which had been written under the Sentence of the Deceaſed were erazed, and they were recognized true antient Chriſtians. Here we ſee an antient Chriſtian turn Jew, and perſiſt in his Errors with his laſt Breath.

FRANCIS DE ALEVIDO CABRAS, a Native of Elvas, Son to Andrew Martin Cabras, and one of the principal Gentlemen of that City, was a ſworn Enemy to all the new Chriſtians, ſo that he never failed to perſecute them grievouſly, whenever he had the leaſt Opportunity for it. His Behaviour was the Occaſion, that when a Report having been ſpread, that his Mother had inherited, by one of her Grandfathers, ſome of the Blood of the new Chriſtians, notwithſtanding all the reſt of her Anceſtors, both by Father and Mother, had been old Chriſtians, ſome Perſons depoſed againſt Alevido and Donna Britta de Sigueira his Aunt, his Mother's Siſter; whereupon they were both ſeized. Francis de Alevido accuſed himſelf immediately, and appeared in the Proceſſion as reconciled; that is, clothed in the San-benito.

HE was no ſooner returned to the Houſe of his Father, whoſe Name was Andrew Martin, but the latter, exaſperated againſt him for the Ignominy he had brought upon himſelf and all his Family, immediately turned him out of Doors, and ſent him to Spain. He continued for ſome Time in that Kingdom, turned Franciſcan Friar, and afterwards returned to Portugal, where the Religious of his Order obliged him to quit the Habit, and declared his Profeſſion invalid, becauſe he had been impriſoned in the Inquiſition. Whereupon he came out from thence a Jewiſh Convict, as was manifeſt from his own Confeſſion; ſo that ever ſince the Concluſion of the Peace between Spain and Portugal, he reſided at Elvas, and wore a Lay Habit.

As for Donna Britta de Siqueira his Aunt, ſhe acted in a quite different Manner from what her Nephew had done. To juſtify herſelf, ſhe ſaid ſhe was an old Chriſtian, and was ſet at Liberty after her being acknowledged ſuch; whence it was manifeſt that Francis de Alevido was not a new Chriſtian, as he was ſuppoſed to be.

THE Witneſſes who depoſed againſt Donna Britta, came out with Carochas, were whipt, and ſent to the Gallies. Francis de Alevido was again ſeized, and after having been impriſoned a conſiderabled Time, he came out with a Carocha, and was baniſhed Portugal for two Years; and that becauſe he, being an antient Chriſtian, had accuſed himſelf falſly of Judaiſm, and for his having prejudiced a great Number of People by falſe Depoſitions. Here again we ſee an old Chriſtian condemned as a Jew by his own Confeſſion, and afterwards convicted of accuſing himſelf and others falſly.

FRANCIS LOPES MARGALHO, a Native of Elvas, univerſally known to be an old Chriſtian, upon his Wife's being ſeized by the Inquiſitors, reſolved to accuſe himſelf immediately; and having a Nephew, Emanuel Lopes Torras by Name, he exhorted him to imitate what he had done. His Nephew anſwered he would not; becauſe, ſays he, I am an old Chriſtian: But this however did not keep his Uncle from going to the Inquiſition, as he had before reſolved. Nevertheleſs his Nephew proved his Extraction, and was not moleſted. He was Son to Margalho's own Brother. We leave theſe Examples to the Reader's Conſideration.

ANTONIO GONSALVES, born at Olivenca, and living at Cabanas in the Dioceſe of Viſeo, known and proved an old Chriſtian, was impriſoned in the Inquiſition, and came out from thence with the San-benito in the Act of Faith in 1660.

MEYA NOITE, born in Abrantes, being undeniably an old Chriſtian, was the ſworn Enemy of the new Chriſtians, which was his Ruin. This Man, who might juſtly be called a Bully, always diſcovered the greateſt Joy and Satisfaction, whenever he ſaw any new Chriſtian impriſoned in the Inquiſition; when he uſed to inſult them, and often follow them to the very Gate of the Priſon, calling them Jews, and loading them with a thouſand Imprecations. This cruel Uſage exaſperated all the new Chriſtians to ſuch a Degree, that twelve of them conſpired together to ruin him: Theſe made a Reſolution, that in caſe they ſhould be ſeized, they would unanimouſly accuſe Meya Noite of judaizing in Concert with them; and agreed upon what they ſhould ſay, in order that their Depoſitions might concur in every Circumſtance. They were afterwards all ſeized, when every one in particular accuſing himſelf, ſwore, that ſuch a Day, in ſuch a Place, and on ſuch an Occaſion, the above-mentioned Meya Noite, with ſuch and ſuch Perſons, naming the other eleven, had mutually declared that they lived in Obedience to the Moſaical Inſtitutions. And upon the Inquiſitors asking each of them, in particular, Whether Meya Noite were a new Chriſtian? each of them, as had been before concerted, anſwered, That he knew nothing of that Matter; but that in the Indictment in Queſtion, the ſaid Meya Noite told them he was Chriſtiam Novo, and that they had believed him upon his affirming himſelf to be ſo. With this Precaution theſe twelve Evidences extricated themſelves out of the Danger, to which all ſuch (ſince this Statute) are inevitably expoſed, who have impeached an old Chriſtian of judaizing. This unhappy Man having been carried to Priſon, and finding himſelf thus accuſed by the concurrent Teſtimony of twelve Perſons (a Circumſtance that never happened in the Inquiſition, at leaſt ſuch another has never ſince occurr'd) found it impoſſible for him to invalidate them. And as he was not of a conſiderable Family, and could not tell the Name of one of his Great Grandfathers, tho' univerſally known to be an antient Chriſtian, he had the Name of partly a new Chriſtian given him; whereupon he was tried, condemned, and burnt, tho' he cried aloud, all the Way he went to Execution, that he was an old Chriſtian.

FROM theſe ſeveral Inſtances we may juſtly affirm, that the Inquiſitors not only forbear to employ the neceſſary Expedients for improving true Religion and ſuppreſſing Judaiſm, but on the contrary, ſeem by their Rigours in their Cruelties, and other Barbarities ſo oppoſite to the Maxims of Equity and Juſtice, to endeavour only to oblige thoſe to embrace the Jewiſh Religion, who are really Chriſtians, by forcing them to impeach themſelves and others, of Crimes they never once had Thoughts of committing.

CHAP. X.

The following is extracted from DELLON'S Inquiſition of Goa. Deſcription of that INQUISITION.

THE Priſon of the Inquiſition, called by the Portugueſe, Santa Caſa, or Holy Houſe, ſtands on one Side of the great Square before the Cathedral, dedicated to St. Catharine. 'Tis a large and magnificent Edifice. In the Front are three Gates, whereof the middle one is the largeſt, which is at the Foot of the great Stair-Caſe that leads to the great Hall to be mentioned hereafter. The two Gates on each Side lead to the Apartments of the Inquiſitors, each of which is vaſtly ſpacious. Beſides theſe there are ſeveral other Apartments for the Officers of the Priſon. Beyond theſe is a large Building, divided into ſeveral leſſer ones two Stories high, ſeparated from one another by lower Courts. On each Story is a Gallery in Form of a Dormitory, divided into ſeven or eight Cells or Dungeons, each ten Foot Square, and are about two hundred in Number.

SOME of theſe Cells are very dark, having no Window, and receiving the Light only by the Door; theſe Cells are ſmaller and lower than the reſt. One Day when I complained about that in which I myſelf was confined, I was carried to one of the above-mentioned, to ſhew me that I might have been uſed ſtill more rigorouſly in that Particular. All the other Dungeons but the laſt mentioned are ſquare, arch'd, white-waſh'd, neat, and enlightned by a Grate, to which there is no Shutter, and which ſtands ſo high, that the talleſt Man cannot reach up to it.

THE Walls of theſe Cells are five Foot thick in every Part, and each Cell has an inner and outer Door; that on the Inſide the Wall is in the Manner of a Folding-Door, is made very ſtrong with Iron Bars, and open about half Way at the lower Part, like a Grate. At the Top is a little Window (or Wicket) by which the Priſoners receive their Victuals, Linen, and ſuch Things as go thro' it. This Wicket is lock'd up, and farther ſecured by two ſtrong Bolts.

THE inner Door is not ſo ſtrong as the outward one, but is of one intire Piece, and not open in any Part. It is generally left open from ſix in the Morning till eleven, to let in the Air thro' the Grates of the other Door, in order that theſe Dungeons may be leſs noxious. This ſecond Door, like the firſt, is always ſhut all the reſt of the Day.

To each of the Priſoners is allowed an earthen Pot filled with Water for waſhing; another Water-Veſſel called Gurguleta, alſo filled with Water for Drinking, with a Pucaro, or Diſh made of a kind of red Earth commonly found in the Indies, which is of wonderful Uſe in keeping the Water ſweet. They have likewiſe a Broom, to ſweep their Cells; a Mat, which is ſpread on a kind of Bedſtead, on which they lie; a large Veſſel to eaſe Nature in, that is emptied every four Days; a Pot to cover it, in which they alſo throw the Duſt, &c. they ſweep up.

THE Priſoners eat the Food of the Country. The Blacks are fed with Cangé or Rice-Water, Rice, and a little fry'd Fiſh; and the Whites have the ſame Food, except that they are allowed ſome Fruit, and a little Meat every Thurſday and Sunday for their Dinners, but not a Morſel at Supper, not even on Eaſter-Sunday. This Regimen is obſerved both for Thriftineſs, and to mortify the Priſoners, who are ſaid to have incurr'd the greater Excommunication; as alſo to prevent what the Indians call Mordechi, or an Indigeſtion that is but too frequent, and of the moſt dangerous Conſequence in thoſe ſultry Climates, and particularly ſince the Priſoners lead ſuch ſedentary Lives.

THIS Diſtemper generally begins by a violent Fever, which is attended with Shiverings, and purges upwards, which is ſoon followed by the Death of the Patient, in caſe a Remedy be not immediately applied. There is one which is uſually employ'd by the Indians on theſe Occaſions, becauſe daily Experience proves it to be a Specific, and if omitted is of the moſt dangerous Conſequence.

THEIR Remedy is the applying a Piece of red-hot Iron to the Patient's Foot, at the moſt callous Part of the Heel. A Spit or Bar is made uſe of for this Purpoſe, which is applied Croſs-wiſe, and held to the Part above-mentioned till ſuch Time as the Violence of the Burning forces the Patient to cry out. However, this does not put him to much Pain, nor prevent his walking about immediately after with the ſame Eaſe as before, unleſs he has ſome other Hurt. This Remedy, provided it be taken in Time, is generally infallible; and a Man, who in caſe had it not been applied, would have run the Hazard of his Life, is often inſtantaneouſly cured by this ſimple Remedy. We are to obſerve, that Bleeding is of a very dangerous Conſequence in theſe Diſtempers; and that a Phyſician upon his firſt coming to the Indies, muſt take great Care not to miſtake on theſe Occaſions, ſince it might be of the moſt pernicious Conſequence.

SOMETIMES Phyſicians and Surgeons viſit the Sick; but tho' a Priſoner be never ſo Sick, neither the Viaticum or Extreme Unction are adminiſtred to him, nor does he ever hear a Sermon or Maſs.

SUCH as die in Priſon are buried in it without the leaſt Ceremony; and in caſe they are judged by the Inquiſitors to have merited Death, their Bones are burnt in the next Gaol-Delivery or Act of Faith.

As it is very ſultry in the Indies, and the Inquiſitors don't allow the Priſoners to have Beds, they never have Fire, Candle, or any Light but that of the Sun. With regard to Beds, there are two Bedſteads in each Cell; becauſe they are ſometimes forced to confine two Priſoners in the ſame Dungeon. Beſides the Mat which is allowed to every one, the Europeans, and Perſons of ſome Diſtinction, have a Counterpaine, which being doubled, ſerves them inſtead of a Mattraſs; but ſeldom have Coverlets, becauſe of the violent Heat of the Indian Climate, unleſs it be to guard againſt a kind of Gnats, whereof there are vaſt Quantities in thoſe Countries, and which are inexpreſſibly troubleſome.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Officers of that Tribunal, and their Behaviour to the Priſoners; from DELLON.

THERE are two Inquiſitors of Goa, the firſt whereof, called Inquiſidor Mor, or the Grand Inquiſitor, is always a ſecular Prieſt; and the ſecond a Dominican Friar. There are other Officers of the Inquiſition, called Deputados do ſanto officio, who are more in Number, and are of other religious Orders. Theſe aſſiſt at the pronouncing Sentence on the Criminal, and at the Examination and Preparation of the Trial; but they never come into Court, unleſs the Inquiſitors ſend for them. There are other Officers called Calificadores do ſanto Officio, who examine all Books which are ſuſpected to contain any Tenets againſt the Faith. Theſe are never preſent at the pronouncing Sentence, nor ever come into Court but to give an Account of what they have tranſacted in thoſe Particulars committed to thir Chrrge.

THERE is moreover a Proctor, an Attorney, and Counſellors for ſuch Priſoners as deſire them; but theſe, inſtead of defending them, only betray and pump their Secrets out of them. And tho' there were no room to doubt of their Fidelity and Sincerity, yet their Succour and Protection would be of little Service to the Priſoners, ſince they are never allowed to ſpeak to them but in the Preſence of their Judges, or other Perſons appointed by the Inquiſitors, to give them an Account of all that paſſes.

THERE are alſo other Officers of the Inquiſition called Familiares do ſanto Officio, who are properly the Sergeants of the Inquiſition. People of the higheſt Quality are proud of the Employment, which is to ſeize thoſe who are impeached by the Tribunal; which generally ſends a Familiar of the ſame Quality with the Perſon who is to be arreſted. Theſe Officers have no Salary, but think the Honour of their Poſt a ſufficient Recompence. All of them wear a Badge of Honour, a Gold Medal on which the Arms of the Inquiſition are engraved. Whenever a Familiar is to ſeize a Perſon, he goes unattended; when he declares to the Priſoner that the Inquiſitors have ſent for him. At the pronouncing of theſe Words, the Priſoner is obliged to follow forthwith, ſince, were he to make the leaſt Reſiſtance, he would immediately be ſeized by an hundred Perſons.

BESIDES theſe Officers, there are alſo Secretaries, real Sergeants, called Meirinhos, an Alcaide or Jailor; and Turnkeys to ſecure the Priſoners, and to carry them Victuals and other Neceſſaries.

As all the Priſoners are commonly ſeparated, and that two are very ſeldom put into the ſame Cell, four Turnkeys are ſufficient to ſecure two hundred. The Priſoners are obliged to be perpetually ſilent; and did any of them preſume to complain, to cry, or even to pray with too loud a Voice, they would run the Hazard of being ſeverely beat by the Turnkeys; for the Moment theſe hear the leaſt Noiſe, they immediately run to the Place whence it comes, to demand Silence; and in caſe the Priſoner does not obey after the firſt or ſecond Notice, they open the Door of his Dungeon, and beat him moſt unmercifully. This Severity is not only of Service in puniſhing ſuch as offend, but to frighten the reſt of the Priſoners, who all hear the Cries and Blows, becauſe of the deep Silence that reigns all over the Priſon.

THE Goaler and his Turnkeys are continually in the Galleries, and lie in them.

THE Inquiſitor, attended by a Secretary and an Interpreter, viſits all the Priſoners every two Months, or thereabouts; on which Occaſion he asks them whether they want any Thing? whether their Meats are brought them at the ſtated Hours? and whether they have no Complaints to make againſt the Turnkeys? To theſe Queſtions the Secretary writes down the ſeveral Anſwers; which being done, the Door is immediately ſhut.

HOWEVER, theſe Viſitations are purely for Form ſake, and to give a ſpecious Colour to the Juſtice and Humanity of the Tribunal, but are never of the leaſt Service to ſuch Perſons who are ſo ſilly as to complain; ſo far from it, that they are treated much more cruelly upon that Account.

THE wealthy Priſoners are not better fed than the pooreſt among them, and the latter are ſubſiſted out of the Confiſcations of the former; the Inquiſitors ever confiſcating all the Goods and Chattels of their Priſoners.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Formalities obſerved in the INQUISITION.

WHEN a Perſon is ſeiz'd, his Name, Profeſſion, or Quality, and Age, are ask'd. This being done, he is charitably exhorted to diſcover his whole Subſtance; and that he may be the more willingly induced to do this, they aſſure him in the Name of Chriſt Jeſus, that in caſe he is innocent, every Thing ſhall be faithfully reſtor'd him; and on the other Side, though he ſhould be clear'd, all the Effects that ſhall be afterwards found, which he himſelf had not reveal'd, ſhall be certainly confiſcated. But as People form to themſelves the moſt advantageous Idea of the Piety and Integrity of the Judges of this Tribunal; a Priſoner who is innocent, and conſequently is fully perſuaded he ſhall be clear'd, makes no ſcruple of diſcloſing to the Inquiſitors the greateſt and moſt important Secrets of his Family and Affairs.

THE Public indeed has ſome Reaſon to be prejudic'd in favour of the Inquiſitors, ſince there is no Tribunal in the World, where Juſtice is exercis'd with ſo much Humanity; but then this is mere Shew and Outſide. Such as voluntarily accuſe themſelves, and diſcover their Repentance before their being ſeiz'd, are ſeldom impriſon'd; but on the other Side, all who do not accuſe themſelves before their Impriſonment, are reputed guilty, and condemn'd as ſuch. There muſt be ſeven Witneſſes to condemn a Man; and when a Priſoner confeſſes his Guilt, the Inquiſitors are ſatisfy'd with excommunicating his Perſon, and confiſcating his Goods and Chattels. But in caſe he is ſo unhappy as to fall a ſecond Time into their Clutches, they then give him over to the ſecular Arm, but firſt obtain a Promiſe from the ſecular Judges, that in caſe they reſolve to put the Priſoner to Death, it ſhall at leaſt be without Effuſion of Blood. Surprizing Gentleneſs and Humanity! But we muſt add ſome Circumſtances to ſhew what is to be expected from this ſpecious Humanity. The Witneſſes are never confronted; the vileſt vileſt Wretches are receiv'd as Evidences, and even thoſe whoſe Intereſt it is to get the Priſoner executed. The Priſoner is not allow'd to challenge the moſt notorious Evidences, and ſuch as are leaſt capable of depoſing againſt him; and theſe ſeven Witneſſes are frequently reduc'd to five. Among theſe ſeven Witneſſes, the pretended Accomplices are included, whoſe Evidence is extorted from them by the Rack, and have no other Way to ſave their Lives than by accuſing themſelves falſly. The Priſoner himſelf is included in the Number of Witneſſes, who, though he accuſes himſelf falſly on the Rack, is nevertheleſs admitted an Evidence againſt himſelf. Nay, theſe ſeven are frequently reduc'd to none at all, becauſe they are in reality only pretended Accomplices, who are wholly innocent of the Crimes laid to their Charge; but whom the Inquiſitors render guilty, by forcing them, either by the Rack, or Menaces of Fire, to accuſe innocent Perſons, in order to ſave their own Lives. In order to give the Reader an Idea of this Myſtery, he is to know, that of the ſeveral Crimes whereof the Inquiſitors may take Cognizance, ſome are of ſuch a Nature that one Perſon only is guilty, as for Inſtance, Blaſphemy, Impiety, &c. Others there are which cannot be perpetrated without one Accomplice at leaſt, as Sodomy; and others again, which cannot be committed without ſeveral Accomplices, as the having aſſiſted at the Judaical Sabbath, or the being preſent in thoſe ſuperſtitious Aſſemblies, that converted Idolaters find it ſo hard a Matter to quit, and which are look'd upon as magical and diabolical, becauſe they are held in order to diſcover Secrets, and pry into Futurity, by ſupernatural Methods.

'TIS particularly with regard to ſuch Crimes as cannot be perpetrated without one or more Accomplices, that the Inquiſitors act after a moſt extraordinary Manner.

THE Jews having been driven out of Spain by Ferdinand King of Arragon, and Iſabella Queen of Caſtile, fled to Portugal, where they were protected, upon condition they would turn Chriſtians. This they did, at leaſt in outward Appearance; and as their very Name is odious in all Places, the Chriſtian Families have been diſtinguiſh'd from the converted Jewiſh ever ſince that Time; inſomuch, that the People now call thoſe who are deſcended from theſe in any Degree ſoever, Chriſtiams novos, or new Chriſtians; and becauſe that in Proceſs of Time, ſome of theſe converted Jews married with antient Chriſtians, their Poſterity are every Day reproach'd with being partly new Chriſtians, which in the Portugueſe Language is tem parte de Chriſtiam novo. In this Manner theſe unhappy Wretches, though their Grandfathers and Fathers were Chriſtians, have not yet been able to get themſelves admitted among thoſe who are call'd Chriſtiam velhos, or old Chriſtians. And as the Families, which are thus deſcended directly or partly from thoſe Jews, are diſtinctly known in Portugal, and are deteſted and hated by the reſt, they are therefore oblig'd to unite themſelves more ſtrongly in Friendſhip, in order to do reciprocal Services, which they cannot expect from old Chriſtians; and 'tis this ſtrict Union that increaſes the Hatred and Averſion of the latter, and is uſually the Cauſe of all their Misfortunes.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Injuſtice committed in the INQUISITION, with reſpect to Perſons accuſed of Judaiſm.

TO give the Reader a perfect Idea of this Matter, we will ſuppoſe that a new Chriſtian, who nevertheleſs is a ſincere Chriſtian, and really deſcended from the unfortunate Families above-mention'd, is ſeiz'd by order of the Inquiſitors, and not only accus'd by ſeven Witneſſes, but fifty. A Perſon, in theſe Circumſtances, who is conſcious of his Innocence, which he flatters himſelf to make appear, will make no ſcruple to give in to his Judges an exact Inventory of all his Goods and Chattels, not doubting but they will be faithfully reſtor'd him; but he is very much miſtaken; for the Inquiſitors have no ſooner confin'd him, but they order every Thing to be ſold by Auction, well knowing they ſhall never reſtore them to him.

AFTER the Priſoner has been confin'd for ſome Months, he is call'd to Audience, and ask'd if he knows the Reaſons why he is impriſon'd; and as he always anſwers in the negative, he is exhorted to think ſeriouſly of that Matter, and to reveal it, ſince 'tis the only Way left him to get an immediate Releaſe; upon which he is remanded to his Cell. Some Time after he is again ſent for to Audience, and examin'd ſeveral Times; when he makes the ſame Anſwer. At laſt, a little before the Auto de fé, the Proctor comes to him, and declares, that ſeveral Perſons have accus'd him of judaizing; that is, of having obſerv'd the Ceremonies of the Moſaic Law, ſuch as the abſtaining from Swine's Fleſh, Hares, &c. of meeting and ſolemnizing the Sabbath, and other Particulars. He is then conjur'd by the Bowels of the Mercy of Chriſt Jeſus (for theſe are the very Words) to make a voluntary Confeſſion of his Crimes, as there is no other Way left him to ſave his Life; and that the holy Office does its utmoſt to preſerve it. As we ſuppoſe the Priſoner innocent, he perſiſts in denying the Charge, whereupon he is condemn'd as a Convicto Negativo, or a negative Convict; that is, to the Flames.

HOWEVER, he is frequently exhorted to accuſe himſelf, and told, that in caſe he does it the Evening before the Goal-Delivery, he may eſcape the Flames; but if he perſiſts in declaring his Innocence, he is at laſt told that he is condemn'd to die; and this is done the Friday before the Sunday of his coming out. This he is told in Preſence of a Tipſtaff or Serjeant belonging to the ſecular Tribunal, who thereupon ties his Hands with a Cord, to ſhew that he takes poſſeſſion of him after his being abandon'd by the eccleſiaſtical Juſtice. At the ſame Time a Confeſſor is ſent to him, who continues with him Day and Night, and is perpetually urging him to confeſs the Crimes which are laid to his Charge, in order to ſave his Life: But a Perſon who is innocent is ſtrangely perplex'd on this Occaſion; for if he perſiſts to plead not guilty till Sunday, he then is inhumanly burnt on that Day; and in caſe he pleads guilty, he makes himſelf infamous as long as he lives. But on the other Side, if the Exhortations of the Confeſſor, and the Dread of Puniſhment, prompt him to confeſs himſelf guilty of Crimes whereof he is truly innocent, he then muſt deſire to be admitted to Audience, which Favour is ever immediately allow'd to Priſoners. As ſoon as he is come before the Judge, he muſt immediately plead guilty, and then ſue for Mercy, as well in conſideration of his Crimes, as his Obſtinacy in having ſo long denied them; and as 'tis ſuppos'd that he accuſes himſelf ſincerely, he is oblig'd to give the moſt minute Detail of all his Crimes; and this innocent Perſon, who has been told the ſeveral Depoſitions of his Witneſſes, has no more to do, in order to ſatisfy what is requir'd of him, than to repeat what was before told him.

HE then poſſibly ſuppoſes that his Troubles are at an end, but alas! is very much miſtaken, he being oblig'd to ſubmit to many other Things, which are infinitely more ſhocking than any Thing which has been hitherto; for the Inquiſitors never fail to addreſs him as follows: If thou haſt liv'd in Obedience to the Moſaic Law, if thou haſt been preſent in Aſſemblies on the Sabbath, as thou confeſſeſt to have done, and thy Accuſers were there alſo, as 'tis probable they were, 'twill then be neceſſary for thee, in order to convince us of the Sincerity of thy Confeſſion, to name not only thy Accuſers, but likewiſe all who were preſent with thee in thoſe Aſſemblies.

ONE cannot eaſily diſcover the Motive which prompts the Inquiſitors to force theſe pretended Jews to gueſs the Names of thoſe who ſwore againſt them, unleſs it be that the Witneſſes with regard to the Sabbath are his Accomplices: But how will it be poſſible for an innocent Man to gueſs them? or ſuppoſing him guilty, what ſignifies his naming to the Inquiſitors ſuch Perſons as he knows, ſince they have receiv'd their Depoſitions, and that the Priſoner is pronounc'd guilty, merely on their Affidavits? In all other Caſes they will not permit a Criminal to know any Evidence whom he will except againſt, but on the contrary will oblige him to gueſs it. If we ſhould ſuppoſe them Accomplices, the Inquiſitors won't be better acquainted with them for his telling their Names; in caſe they have been forc'd to confeſs their Crimes in the Priſon of the Inquiſition, they either have been or are ſtill confin'd in them, and the Inquiſitors have no Intereſt to make the Priſoners gueſs their Names; he will not be more innocent, nor they leſs guilty, upon that account. The Priſoner, and thoſe who depoſe againſt him, are equally in the Power of the Inquiſitors; what therefore can be the Intereſt of thoſe Judges, unleſs it be to prevail with the Priſoner to accuſe all his Accomplices, by endeavouring to gueſs the Names of all his Accuſers? This may be of ſome Service, in caſe he be really guilty; but if he be innocent, the forcing him to gueſs the Names of People he knows nothing of, cannot but put him into a great Dilemma; and this muſt unavoidably happen; for as this poor new Chriſtian is ſaid to name Perſons with whom he is wholly unacquainted, to the Inquiſitors who know them very well, (ſince otherwiſe the confeſſing himſelf guilty of a Crime whereof he is wholly innocent, would not ſave him from the Flames) the Priſoner, I ſay, muſt neceſſarily argue as follows: None but my Relations, my Friends, or Neighbours, can poſſibly have impeach'd me; and ſome of the new Chriſtians I uſed to frequent; for the old Chriſtians are very ſeldom ſuſpected or troubled about Judaiſm; and perhaps the Perſons I hint at, have been reduc'd to the ſame unhappy Circumſtances with myſelf; I therefore muſt accuſe them all in my Turn. But as it is ſcarce poſſible for the Priſoner to gueſs the Names of all who depoſed againſt him, he is oblig'd, in order to hit upon the Names of the ſix or ſeven Perſons who depoſed againſt him, to accuſe a great Number of innocent Perſons who never ſo much as thought of him. However, he is oblig'd to ſwear againſt them, as ſoon as he has once made ſuch a Declaration; which alone is a Motive ſufficient to cauſe ſuch Perſons to be ſeiz'd, and to be confin'd in the Priſons of the Inquiſition, till ſeven Witneſſes can be ſuborn'd to accuſe them falſly, as the Perſon whom I here inſtanc'd; and frequently many unfortunate Perſons are burnt, though their Accuſations are as unjuſt as thoſe above-mention'd.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

Sequel of the Formalities, and Injuſtice of the Tribunal of the INQUISITION.

IT is plain from what has been ſaid in the foregoing Chapter, that the miſerable Victims of the Inquiſition impeach one another, and conſequently that a Man may be wholly innocent, though fifty Perſons are to ſwear againſt him; nevertheleſs, this ſame unhappy Man, notwithſtanding his Innocence, upon his refuſing to accuſe himſelf, or his ill Fate in not gueſſing thoſe who ſwore againſt him, is deliver'd over to the Executioner as a Criminal who is ſuppos'd to be ſufficiently convicted. But this would happen leſs frequently, were Care taken to confront the Proſecutors, Witneſſes, and the Priſoner.

WHATEVER is practis'd with regard to Perſons ſuſpected (by Subornation) of Judaiſm, and all that has been juſt now related, is to be underſtood of Perſons ſuſpected of Incantations, becauſe ſuch are ſuppoſed to have been preſent in the ſuperſtitious Aſſemblies above-mention'd. The Difficulty of gueſſing the Names of their Evidences is ſtill greater, becauſe they have not the Opportunity, like the new Chriſtians, to ſearch for their Evidences and Accomplices, among one particular Branch of Men, but are oblig'd to gueſs at random, and to call over all their Relations, Acquaintance, Friends, and Enemies, of all Profeſſions; which throws the innocent Perſons into a ſtill greater Perplexity, becauſe they are obliged, in theſe fortuitous and forced Accuſations, to name a greater Number, in order that they may be able, among a Crowd of innocent Perſons, to gueſs thoſe Witneſſes about whom they are examin'd.

THE Goods and Chattels of ſuch as are condemn'd to die, and of thoſe who eſcape Death by a voluntary Confeſſion, are equally confiſcated, becauſe they are all reputed guilty; and as the Inquiſitors thirſt leſs after a Man's Life than his Wealth; and that purſuant to the Laws of that Tribunal, ſuch only as have relaps'd, and others who will not confeſs their Guilt, are deliver'd over to the ſecular Arm; the Judges ſet every Engine at work, in order to oblige the Priſoners to confeſs, and never fail to put them to Torture upon theſe Occaſions. They have even the Inhumanity to torture them in the ſevereſt Manner, in order to ſave their Lives, by forcing them to plead guilty. But the true Reaſon why they ſo earneſtly deſire that all Priſoners ſhould accuſe themſelves, is, becauſe when once a Man has pleaded guilty, no one can afterwards doubt but his Goods and Chattels were juſtly confiſcated; and that by pardoning thoſe pretended Criminals, they deceive the Simple and Ignorant by a ſpecious Appearance of Juſtice and Humanity, which does not a little contribute to perſuade the Public of the Sanctity and Juſtice of this Tribunal; which, were it not for this Artifice, would ſoon fall to the Ground. It may be proper to obſerve in this Place, that all who have in this manner eſcaped the Flames by a forced Confeſſion, are oblig'd to inform the World, as ſoon as they are releas'd by the Inquiſitors, that they have been treated with great Humanity and Tenderneſs, in ſparing their Lives, when they juſtly merited to die; and were a Man, after having pleaded guilty, to pretend to juſtify himſelf after his Releaſe, he would immediately be impeach'd; when he would be ſeiz'd and burnt in the next Act of Faith, without any hopes of Pardon.

'TIS

'Tis therefore certain, that many Chriſtians are put to Death merely through a falſe Accuſation, and though they were but imperfectly convicted of judaizing: This the Inquiſitors would ſoon find, would they but give themſelves the Trouble to examine Matters coolly, and without Prejudice, and recollect that of an hundred Perſons who are condemn'd to the Flames as Jews, ſcarce four profeſs that Faith in their dying Moments. The reſt cry out with their lateſt Breath that they are Chriſtians, have been ſo all their Life-Time; that they worſhip Chriſt as the ſole, the true God, and that their Hopes are grounded wholly on his Mercy, and the Merits of his precious Blood. But neither the Cries nor the Expoſtulations of thoſe unhappy Creatures, (if we may give that Name to Perſons who ſuffer for the Sake of Truth) make the leaſt Impreſſion on their bloody Judges, who think, that ſo clear and authentic a Confeſſion, which ſuch a Multitude of People make of their Faith, as they go to Execution, does not merit the leaſt Reflection; but, on the contrary, ſuppoſe that the bare Apprehenſion of Torments, which forces a certain Number of Witneſſes to accuſe innocent Perſons, will alone ſecure them from divine Vengeance. If ſo many Chriſtians, who are branded with Judaiſm, are unjuſtly deliver'd over to the ſecular Arm, in all the Tribunals of the Inquiſition, there is no leſs, nor leſs frequent, Injuſtice committed, with regard to ſuch as are accuſed of Magic or Incantation in the Indies, and are thereupon condemn'd to the Flames. And to exhibit this clearly to the Reader, we are to obſerve that the Heathens, who have a great Number of ſuperſtitious Practices, (in their inquiring, for inſtance, the Succeſs of an Affair, or of a Fit of Sickneſs? whether a Perſon loves us? who has ſtole a Thing? and ſuch like) we muſt, I ſay, obſerve that theſe Heathens can neither ſo well, or ſo ſoon lay aſide theſe Things, as not frequently to uſe them after their Baptiſm. But this will not be thought ſo particular, if we reflect that in France, where the Chriſtian Religion has been ſo long eſtabliſh'd, we nevertheleſs meet a great Number of Perſons who believe and practiſe impertinent Ceremonies, which ſo long a Series of Years has not been able to obliterate. We are farther to obſerve, that theſe lately-converted Heathens, have ſpent the greateſt Part of their Lives in the Pagan Religion, and that ſuch of them as live under the Portugueſe Government, in the Indies, are either Subjects or Slaves, who ſeldom change their Religion upon any other Motive, but in hopes of being better treated by their Maſters. Nevertheleſs, ſuch Faults, tho' as they are committed by unenlightned and ignorant Perſons, they ought at moſt to be puniſh'd with Whipping, are nevertheleſs expiated by Fire, in caſe they plead not guilty a ſecond Time, after having confeſs'd the firſt, or perſiſt in pleading not guilty the firſt Time. The Inquiſitors not only puniſh ſuch Chriſtians as are guilty, or pretended to be guilty of thoſe Crimes whereof they take Congnizance, but alſo Mahometans, Heathens, or others, of what Religion ſoever, who have perpetrated any one of theſe Crimes, or have follow'd their religious Worſhip in any of the Dominions ſubject to the King of Portugal. For notwithſtanding that the King allows Liberty of Conſcience, the Inquiſitors interpret their Privilege in ſuch a Manner, as to permit Foreigners to profeſs their reſpective Religions, but puniſh all thoſe who preſume to exerciſe them in any Manner. And as his Portugueſe Majeſty has many more Mahometan and Heathen Subjects than Chriſtian in his Dominions in the Eaſt-Indies, and that the Inquiſitors, who put to Death all Chriſtians who have relaps'd, never condemn ſuch to Death as were never baptiz'd, though they were to relapſe an hundred Times into the ſame Guilt, and are at moſt puniſh'd either with Baniſhment, Whipping, or the Gallies, the Dread of being puniſh'd with Death, hinders great Numbers from embracing the Chriſtian Religion. Thus the holy Office, ſo far from being of Advantage to the Faith in thoſe Countries, drives People from the Church, and makes them conſider it with Horror.

THE perpetual Chain of Accuſations, which muſt neceſſarily follow from the Particulars we have now related, and the Liberty which all Men have to impeach thoſe againſt againſt whom they may have conceiv'd Malice, is the Occaſion that the Priſons of the Inquiſition are ſeldom empty. And notwithſtanding there is an Act of Faith or Goal-Delivery, every two or three Years at fartheſt, there are nevertheleſs two hundred Perſons, or more, tried every Seſſions.

CHAP. XV.

Some Particulars relating to the Officers of the INQUISITION.

THERE are four Inquiſitions in the whole Extent of the Portugueſe Dominions, viz. in Portugal thoſe of Lisbon, Coimbra, and Evora; and that of Goa in the Eaſt-Indies. Theſe Tribunals are all ſovereign, and have no Appeal from them. The Juriſdiction of that of Goa extends over the ſeveral Countries poſſeſs'd by the King of Portugal, on the other Side the Cape of Good Hope. Beſides theſe four Tribunals, there is alſo the great Council of the Inquiſition, in which the Inquiſitor-General preſides. This Tribunal is the principal, and it is made acquainted with whatever is done in all other Places. Beſides the Honour, the unbounded Authority, and the Salaries annex'd to the Employments of Inquiſitors, there are alſo two Circumſtances that are vaſtly beneficial to them. The firſt is, whenever they expoſe the Effects of any Priſoner to Sale by Auction, if there is any precious Jewel, or any ſuch Thing among them, which they are deſirous of, they have no more to do but to ſend one of their Servants to bid, and no Body will preſume to outbid them; by which means they often purchaſe very valuable Things for a Trifle. The ſecond Method by which they make a great Advantage is, that as the Sums ariſing from the Confiſcations are put into the King's Treaſury, they are empower'd to draw a Warrant upon it for whatſoever Sums, and at what Time ſoever they pleaſe, to defray the Expences and private Exigencies of the Inquiſition. This Money is paid at Sight, nor does any Perſon preſume to inquire what thoſe private Exigencies are, by which means they get the greateſt Part of the Monies ariſing from Confiſcations.

THE King nominates all the Inquiſitors, who are confirm'd by the Pope, and from him they receive all their Bulls. The Inquiſitor of Goa only aſſumes the Privilege of being carried in a Chair, and he is much more reſpected than either the Archbiſhop or the Viceroy. He has Juriſdiction over all Perſons, both eccleſiaſtical and ſecular, the Archbiſhop, his great Vicar, who is commonly a Biſhop, the Viceroy, and the Governor when the Viceroy is dead, excepted. But he has the Power of arreſting any of theſe, after having firſt given notice thereof to the Court of Portugal, and receiv'd ſecret Orders for that Purpoſe from the ſupreme Council of Lisbon, call'd Conſelho Supremo. This ſovereign Tribunal meets every Fortnight, except upon extraordinary Occaſions, when they meet oftner; whereas the ordinary Councils meet twice every Day, viz. from eight in the Morning till eleven, and from two till four, ſometimes later in the Afternoon, eſpecially when the Acts of Faith draw near; for on thoſe Occaſions the Audience is frequently continued till after ten at Night.

WHEN Cauſes are tried, beſides the Deputados who aſſiſt, the Archbiſhops or Biſhops of the ſeveral Places where the Inquiſition is eſtabliſh'd, have the Privilege of being preſent in them, and to preſide in all the Sentences pronounc'd againſt them.

THE Priſon of the Inquiſition of Goa is a moſt dark, dirty, ſtinking, dreadful Place, and it is impoſſible for Imagination to form a worſe; 'tis call'd Aljouvar by the Portugueſe, and is a kind of Cellar, at which the Light enters only by a ſmall Hole, into which the Sun-Beams never enter. It caſts a dreadful Stench; nor have the Priſoners any other Place to eaſe Nature in, than a great Hole like a Well, level with the Ground, and in the Midſt of the Cavern; whence it is, that Part of the Filth lies round the Hole; for which Reaſon moſt of the Priſoners eaſe themſelves in different Parts of the Cavern.

HERE follows the Manner in which Dellon tells us he was brought to Audience.

WHEN I found, ſays he, that I was kept a whole Day and Night in the Aljouvar, without being examin'd, I began to flatter myſelf that I might continue in it till my Affair was concluded; but all my Hopes vaniſh'd, when an Officer of the Inquiſition came the 16th of January at eight in the Morning, and brought Orders for carrying us to the Santa Caſa, which was immediately executed.

THE Irons with which I was loaded, made walking very painful to me; however, we were oblig'd to walk on Foot thus fetter'd, from the Aljouvar to the Inquiſition. I was helped in going up the Stairs, when I entered with my Companions the great Hall, where ſeveral Smiths knock'd off our Irons; which being done, I was firſt call'd to Audience.

AFTER having croſs'd the Hall, I went into an Anti-Chamber, and from thence into another Apartment, where I found my Judge. This Place is call'd by the Portugueſe Meſa do Santo Officio, i. e. the Table or Tribunal of the holy Office. It was hung with blue and yellow Taffety. At one End of it is a large Crucifix in Relievo, placed againſt the Hangings, and reaching up almoſt to the Cieling. In the Middle of the Chamber is a large Alcove, on which is fixed a Table near fifteen Foot long, and four over. There was alſo over the Alcove, two eaſy Chairs, and ſeveral other Seats round the Table, and at the End, on one Side of the Crucifix, was the Secretary ſeated on a folding Chair. I was placed at the other End, oppoſite to the Secretary; very near me, and at my Right Hand, was ſeated, in one of theſe eaſy Chairs, the great Inquiſitor of the Indies, Franciſco Delgado e Matos, a ſecular Prieſt, about forty. He was alone, becauſe then, of the two Inquiſitors who are generally in Goa, the ſecond, who is always a Dominican Friar, was embark'd for Portugal a little while before, and the King had not yet nominated any Perſon to ſucceed him.

AT my coming into the Hall of Audience, I threw myſelf at the Feet of my Judge, imagining the ſuppliant Poſture I was in, would move him to Compaſſion; but he would not ſuffer me to continue in it, and therefore immediately order'd me to riſe. Then having ask'd me my Name and my Profeſſion, he ask'd me whether I knew the Reaſon why I had been impriſon'd? whereupon he exhorted me to declare it immediately, as it was the only means left me to recover my Liberty inſtantly. After having anſwer'd theſe two firſt Queſtions, I told him, that I believ'd I knew the Reaſon for my being impriſon'd, and that in caſe he would be pleaſed to hear me, I would immediately accuſe myſelf. I mingled Tears with my Entreaties, and thereupon I threw myſelf a ſecond Time at his Feet; but my Judge told me with great Coolneſs, that I might

I might take my Time, for that Matters were not urgent; that he had Affairs upon his Hands of much greater Conſequence than mine; that he would give me notice at a proper Seaſon, when immediately he rang a little Bell for the Alcaide, or Turnkey of the Priſon. This Officer came into the Hall, and conducted me to a long Gallery not far diſtant from it, whither we were followed by the Secretary.

HERE my Trunk was brought, which was opened before me; upon which I was ſearched very narrowly, and every Thing I had about me was taken away to the very Buttons of my Sleeves, and a Ring which I wore on my Finger; inſomuch that they left me nothing but my Beads, my Handkerchief, and a few Pieces of Gold which I had ſewed up in a Ribbon, and were lodged between Leg and Stocking, which they happened to overlook. A pretty exact Inventory was immediately drawn up of all the reſt; but all this was of no manner of Service to me, ſince nothing of Value was afterwards reſtored to me, notwithſtanding that the Secretary aſſured me, and the Inquiſitor alſo, that all I had would be faithfully reſtored to me the Inſtant I ſhould be releaſed.

THE Inventory being drawn up, the Alcaide took me by the Hand, and carried me to a Dungeon ten Foot Square, where I was confined alone, nor ever ſaw a living Soul till the Evening, when the Supper was brought me. As I had not eat any Thing either that or the preceding Day, I eat what was given me very heartily, and ſlept better upon it. The Turnkey coming the next Morning with my Breakfaſt, I deſired to have my Books and Combs; but they told me, that Priſoners are never allowed to have Books, not even a Prieſt to have his Breviary, tho' he be obliged to repeat Divine Service; and that as for my Combs, I ſhould not want them; and indeed this was very true, for they immediately cut off my Hair, a Cuſtom obſerved with regard to both Women and Men, tho' of the greateſt Quality, the firſt or ſecond Day at fartheſt, of their Impriſonment.

I HAD been told, when I was firſt impriſoned, that when I ſhall want any Thing, I need do no more than knock gently at the Door, in order to call the Turnkeys, or to ask for what I wanted at Meal-Time: And that when I was deſirous of going to the Audience, I need only addreſs myſelf to the Alcaide, who, as the Turnkeys, never ſpeaks to the Priſoners without having ſame Perſon along with them. I had alſo been flatter'd with the Hopes, that I ſhould be ſet at Liberty immediately after my Confeſſion, which made me continually importune my Officers to let me be carried before my Judges; but notwithſtanding all my Tears and Intreaties, I was not indulged it, till the laſt Day of January 1674.

THE Alcaide, accompanied with a Turnkey, came to me for that Purpoſe about two in the Afternoon. I dreſſed as he ordered me, and came out of my Dungeon bare-legged and bare-footed, the Jailor going before, and the Turnkey after me. In this Order we walked to the Gate of the Chamber where Audience is given. Here the Alcaide advancing a little forward, and making a low Bow, came out again, upon which I went in. Here I found the Inquiſitor and Secretary, as before. Immediately I fell upon my Knees, but was ordered to riſe and ſeat myſelf, upon which I ſat down upon a Bench which was placed at the End of the Table, on the Side where the Judges ſat. Juſt by me, and at the End of the Table; was a Maſs-Book, on which I was firſt ordered to lay my Hand, and to promiſe that I would ſwear to the Truth, and to keep inviolable Secrecy, which are the two Oaths required of all who appear before this Tribunal, whether they come to give in their Depoſitions or to receive any Orders.

I WAS afterwards asked, Whether I knew the Reaſon of my being impriſoned, and if I were reſolved to declare it? to which I anſwered, That I was fully determined to do ſo. Upon which I made an exact Declaration of all I had before related with regard to Baptiſm and the Worſhip of Images; but did not mention any Thing I had ſaid with reſpect to the Inquiſition, they not occuring at that Time to my Memory. The Judge having again asked me, whether I had any more to ſay? and being told, that I could not think of any Thing elſe, was ſo far from ſetting me at Liberty, as I had flattered myſelf I ſhould be, that he concluded the Audience with theſe very Words:

THAT I had done very well to accuſe myſelf voluntarily, and that he exhorted me in the Name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to declare immediately the Remainder of my Informations, in order that I might experience the Goodneſs and Mercy which that Tribunal indulges to all who prove the Sincerity of their Repentance by a genuine and voluntary Confeſſion.

MY Declaration and the Exhortation being ended and written down, it was read to me, and I ſigned it; which being done, the Inquiſitor rang a little Bell to call the Alcaide, who came, and carried me back to Priſon in the ſame Order I came.

I WAS carried a ſecond Time before the Judge, without my deſiring it, on the 15th of February, which made me ſuppoſe that he intended to ſet me at Liberty. Being come, I was again asked whether I had any more to ſay? I was exhorted not to diſguiſe any Circumſtance, but on the contrary to make a ſincere Confeſſion of my Faults. I anſwered, that after a very ſerious Self-Examination, I could not think of any freſh Particulars. I then was asked my Name, thoſe of my Father, my Mother, Brothers, Grandfathers and Grandmothers, Godfathers and Godmothers, whether I were Chriſtam de octo dies? that is, a Chriſtian of eight Days ſtanding; becauſe Children are not baptized in Portugal till the eighth Day after their Birth, nor are Childbed-Women churched till the fortieth Day after their Lying-in, tho' they had never ſo eaſy a Delivery. The Judge ſeemed to be ſurpriſed, when I told him that the Cuſtom of deferring the Baptiſm of Children a whole Week, was not practiſed in France; but that on the contrary, they were always chriſtened as ſoon as Conveniency would permit. 'Tis pretty evident by the Obſervance of theſe Moſaic Ceremonies, that notwithſtanding the Portugueſe pretend to have the Jews in ſo much Abhorrence, they yet are not ſo good Chriſtians as they ought to be. But this is not the greateſt Evil which flows from the Obſervance of theſe Jewiſh Inſtitutions; for from the former, it happens but too frequently, that Children die without being regenerated by the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and are by that Means excluded Heaven for ever; and in order not to violate the Ceremony of Purification, which ought to ceaſe after the Goſpel Diſpenſation, the Portugueſe Women do not in the leaſt ſcruple to act in Contempt to an Injunction of the Church, which obliges all Chriſtians to aſſiſt every Sunday and every Feſtival at the holy Sacrifice of the Maſs, unleſs they happened to be prevented from ſo doing by ſome lawful Cauſe.

I WAS further asked the Name of the Perſon who baptized me, in what Dioceſe, what City, and laſtly, whether I had ever been confirmed, and by what Biſhop? Having anſwered theſe ſeveral Queſtions, I was ordered to kneel down, to make a Sign of the Croſs, to repeat the Pater Noſter, the Ave Maria, the Creed, the Commandments of God and the Church, and the Salve Regina. In fine, he concluded as before, with exhorting me by the Bowels of Jeſus, to confeſs immediately the ſeveral Crimes and Errors I had not yet revealed; which being written down, and read before me, and ſigned by myſelf, I was remanded back to Priſon.

FROM the firſt Moment of my Confinement, I had always been in the deepeſt Affliction, and ſhed inceſſant Tears; but at my Return from the ſecond Audience, I abandoned myſelf entirely to Grief, when I found that I was required to confeſs ſuch Things as to me appeared impoſſible, ſince I could not recollect any ſuch Circumſtances as I was ordered to confeſs. I therefore endeavoured to ſtarve myſelf; not but I took all the Suſtenance that was brought me, becauſe, in caſe I had refuſed it, I ſhould have been beat by the Turnkeys, who always examine very carefully, upon their taking the Plates back, whether the Priſoners eat enough to ſupport Nature; but my Deſpair ſuggeſted Methods to elude their Vigilance in this Particular. I ſpent whole Days without taking a Morſel, and uſed to throw Part of what was given me into the Baſon, to prevent its being ſeen. This ſevere Abſtinence entirely prevented my Sleeping, and now I did nothing but macerate my Body in this Manner, and ſhed Floods of Tears. However, in theſe Days of Sorrow and Lamentation, I revolved in my Mind all the Errors of my paſt Life, and confeſt that all my Miſery was a Judgment from Heaven upon me: I even perſuaded myſelf, that God perhaps had employed theſe ſevere but ſalutary Methods to call me to himſelf; when being a little revived and comforted with theſe Reflections, I ſincerely implored the Aſſiſtance of the holy Virgin, who is equally the Comforter of the Afflicted, and the Refuge and Aſylum of Sinners; and indeed I have had ſo viſible a Demonſtration of her Protection, as well during my Impriſonment, as on ſeveral other Occaſions, that I cannot forbear making this public Teſtimony thereof.

IN fine, after having made a more exact, or more happy Recollection of all I had ſaid or done during my Reſidence at Daman, I remembered the ſeveral Expreſſions I had uſed touching the Inquiſition and the Integrity thereof: Upon which I immediately deſired to be admitted to Audience; but this however was not granted me till the 16th of March following.

I MADE no doubt, upon my Appearance this Time before the Judge, but that I ſhould then put an End to my unhappy Affair, and after the Confeſſion I was going to make, be immediately ſet at Liberty; but when I thought my Wiſhes upon the Point of being accompliſhed, I ſaw myſelf immediately fall from my moſt ſanguine Hopes; becauſe that when I had declared every Thing I had to ſay with regard to the Inquiſition, I was told that this was not what was expected from me; and having nothing elſe to ſay, I was immediately remanded back, nor would they ſo much as write down my Confeſſion.

DESPAIR having prompted M. Dellon to make away with himſelf, advice thereof was given to the Inquiſitors, who ordered him to be brought to Audience; but he was ſo weak, that he was forced to be carried thither. I there, continues he, was laid along the Floor, my extreme Weakneſs not allowing me either to ſit or ſtand.

THEN the Inquiſitor reproached me ſeveral Times; gave Orders for my being carried away, and Handcuffs to be put upon me, to prevent my forcing off the Chains with which I was bound. This was immediately executed, and I was not only handcuffed, but an iron Machine was clapt about my Neck, which held to the Handcuffs, and was lock'd with a Padlock; ſo that now it was impoſſible for me to ſtir my Arms. But this Treatment only exaſperated me the more: I threw myſelf on the Ground, and ſtruck my Head againſt the Floor and the Walls; and had I been bound but a little longer in that Manner, I ſhould infallibly have got my Arms at Liberty, and ſhould have died with it: But as I was continually watched, they found by my Actions, that Severity was very unſeaſonable at this Time, and that it were better to employ gentle Methods.

UPON this my Irons were knocked off, Endeavours were made to comfort me with deluſive Hopes, I was put into another Cell, and had again a Companion given me, who was ordered to watch me narrowly. This Priſoner was a Black, but much more unſociable than my former Companion. Nevertheleſs Heaven, who had preſerved me from ſo great an Evil, baniſhed the Deſpair which ſat brooding over me, a Circumſtance in which I was more happy then many others, who frequently make away themſelves in their Confinement in theſe Dungeons, where no Conſolation is ever allowed to enter. This Companion continued about two Months with me; for as ſoon as I appear'd to be eaſier in my Mind he was taken from me, notwithſtanding my Weakneſs was ſo great, that I could ſcarce walk from my Bed to the Door of my Cell, when Victuals were brought me. In fine, after having ſpent almoſt a Year in this Manner, I was ſeaſoned to Affliction, and Providence afterwards endued me with ſo much Patience, that I never made any more Attempts upon my own Life.

I HAD been about eighteen Months in this Confinement, when the Judges being informed that I was in a Condition to ſpeak, ſent for me the fourth Time to Audience, where I was asked, Whether I was not reſolved to anſwer what was required of me? Having replied, that I could not recollect a ſingle Circumſtance more, the Proctor of the Inquiſition appeared with his Declaration, in order to ſignify to me the ſeveral Informations which had been exhibited againſt me.

IN all the other Examinations I had accuſed myſelf, and they were contented with hearing my Depoſition without deſcending to Particulars, and had remanded me back to my Cell the Inſtant I proteſted I had no more to declare againſt myſelf; but in this fourth Examination I was accuſed, and was allowed to defend myſelf. They read to me, in the Informations which were exhibited againſt me, the ſeveral Things wherewith I had accuſed myſelf. Theſe Facts were true, and I had confeſſed them by my own proper Impulſe, conſequently I had nothing to object againſt theſe Facts; but then I flattered my ſelf, that I could prove to the Judges they were not ſo criminal as they were thought to be. I therefore anſwered, with regard to what I had advanced on Baptiſm, that I did not any ways intend to oppoſe the Doctrine of the Church; but that the Paſſage, Niſi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua & ſpiritu ſancto, non poteſt introire in regnum Dei, having appeared very expreſs to me, I deſired an Explication of it. The chief Inquiſitor ſeem'd ſurpriz'd, that I ſhould mention a Paſſage that every one knows by Heart, and his Surprize raiſed my Aſtoniſhment. He asked me where that Paſſage was to be found; I anſwered in the Goſpel according to St. John, Chapter iii. Verſe 5. He then ordered the New Teſtament to be brought, looked out the Place, read it, but did not explain it to me. However, he was very glad to inform me, that it was ſufficiently explained by Tradition; becauſe the Church has always looked upon as baptized, not only all thoſe who died for our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, without having received the ordinary Form of Baptiſm, but alſo thoſe who deſiring to be baptized, and repenting of their Sins, have died ſuddenly unbaptized.

With reſpect to the Worſhip of Images, I ſaid I had advanced nothing but what was borrowed from the holy Council of Trent, and repeated to him the Paſſage following, from the 25th Seſſion, De invocatione ſanctorum & ſacris imaginibus. Imagines Chriſti, Deiparæ virginis, & aliorum ſanctorum, retinendas, iiſque debitum honorem, & venerationem impertiendam; ita ut per imagines, coram quibus procumbimus, Chriſtum adoremus, & ſanctos, quorum illæ ſimilitudinem gerunt, veneremur.

THE Judge ſeemed more ſurprized to hear of this Quotation, than he had been at my repeating the former; and looking into the Council of Trent, he ſhut the Book without explaining the Paſſage.

IT

IT is ſurpriſing to think, that Perſons who are eſtabliſhed Judges over others in Matters of Faith, ſhould be ſo profoundly ignorant; and I muſt confeſs, that I could ſcarce believe this Circumſtance myſelf, tho' I had been an Eye-Witneſs to it, and have it perfectly freſh in my Memory, had I not found in Tavernier's Voyages, that how reſerved ſoever Father Ephraim of Nevers may be on Matters relating to the Inquiſitors, who tortured him ſo cruelly, he yet breaks out into the following Expreſſion: That nothing ſhocked him ſo much as the ſtupid Ignorance of thoſe Inquiſitors.

THE Proctor, when he read the Informations, had ſaid, that beſides what I myſelf had confeſſed, I was moreover accuſed and clearly convicted of having ſpoke with Contempt of the Inquiſition and its Miniſters, and of having ſpoke with great Diſreſpect of the Pope and his Authority. He concluded, that the Stubbornneſs I had hitherto ſhewn in ſlighting ſo much charitable Advice which had been given me, being a manifeſt Proof that I concealed very pernicious Deſigns; and that having deſigned to teach and foment Hereſy, I conſequently was become obnoxious to the major Excommunication; that my Goods and Chattels ought to be forfeited to the King, and myſelf delivered over to the Executioner in order to be conſumed in the Flames.

I LEAVE the Reader to judge the Tortures which theſe Concluſions of the Proctor raiſed in my Breaſt; notwithſtanding, I can truly affirm, that how dreadful ſoever thoſe Words may be, yet Death would have been more welcome than Impriſonment. Thus in ſpight of the Terror with which I was ſeized, I yet had Spirits enough left to anſwer the Accuſations which were then exhibited againſt me, in ſaying that I never had harboured any ſiniſter Intentions; that I had ever continued a true Catholic; that all thoſe I had converſed with in India, would vouch the Truth thereof, particularly Father Ambroſe and Father Ives, both French Capuchins, who had frequently heard my Confeſſions. (I knew after I was ſet at Liberty, that Father Ives was actually at Goa at the very Time when I called upon his Teſtimony.) That I had ſometimes gone fifty Miles to celebrate Eaſter; that if I had been any ways inclined to entertain heretical Principles, I might eaſily have ſettled in thoſe Countries in the Indies, where a full Liberty of ſpeaking is allowed; and conſequently, that I ſhould not, had Matters ſtood thus, have ſettled in the Dominions of the King of Portugal; that ſo far from diſputing againſt Religion, I had, on the contrary, frequently argued with Heretics in defence of it; that indeed I remembered I had ſpoke with too much Freedom, when I was before the Inquiſitor; but that I was greatly ſurprized they would impute that very Thing to me as a heinous Crime, which they had looked upon as a Trifle, when I offered to declare it about a Year and a Half ago: That as to the Particulars which related to his Holineſs, I could not recollect that I had expreſſed myſelf in the Manner laid to my Charge; that nevertheleſs, if they would pleaſe to deſcend to Particulars, I would ſincerely confeſs the Truth.

THEN the Inquiſitor told me, that I was allowed Time to conſider of thoſe Articles which related to his Holineſs; but that he could not ſufficiently admire my Impudence, in affirming that I had made my Confeſſion with regard to the Inquiſition, ſince 'twas very certain that I had not once opened my Mouth upon that Head; and that in caſe I had made my Declaration upon that Article, when I ſaid I had done it, I ſhould not have been kept ſo long in Priſon.

I REMEMBRED ſo perfectly every Thing I had advanced, and the Anſwers that had been made me, and was ſo tranſported with Rage to ſee myſelf mocked in that Manner, that if I had not been immediately ordered to withdraw, upon the ſigning of my De-

Depoſition, it would have been impoſſible for me to refrain from opprobrious Expreſſions before the Judge: And had I had Strength and Liberty equal to the Courage with which my Paſſion fired me, I perhaps ſhould have gone farther than injurious Terms.

I WAS called three or four Times to Audience in a Month, where I was urged to confeſs thoſe Particulars I had advanced with reſpect to the Pope. A new Proof was then declared to me, which the Proctor pretended was drawn up againſt me on that Head, but which did not differ in a ſingle Circumſtance from what had before been urged againſt me. But a Proof that the whole was a falſe Accuſation, and invented merely to force me to ſpeak, is, that they would not declare to me the Particulars which they pretended I had advanced. At laſt, finding they could get no more out of me, they ſaid no more; and this Article was not inſerted in my Indictment, when it was read publickly in the Act of Faith.

THEY therefore attempted again in theſe laſt Audiences, to oblige me to confeſs, that in the ſeveral Facts I agreed upon, I really intended to defend Hereſy; but this I was reſolved never to own, ſince it was a Falſhood.

DURING November and December, my Ears were wounded with the Cries of Priſoners who were put to the Torture, which is ſo ſevere that I have known ſeveral Perſons of both Sexes, who were lame all their Life-Time after, and among the reſt, the firſt Companion I had in my Confinement.

IN this holy Tribunal no regard is had to Age, Sex, or Condition; but all are treated with the ſame Severity, and they are indiſcriminately tortured, and ſtript almoſt naked, whenever the bloody-minded Inquiſitors are pleaſed to order it.

I REMEMBRED I had heard before my Impriſonment, that the Auto de Fe was generally ſolemnized the firſt Sunday in Advent, becauſe that Paſſage of Scripture which relates to the laſt Judgment is read on that Day in Churches, the Inquiſitors then pretending to exhibit a lively Repreſentation thereof. I moreover obſerved, that there were a great Number of Perſons confined in that Priſon; the deep Silence which reigns in that Houſe giving me an Opportunity to count the Number of Doors which were daily opened at the ſtated Times of eating. I was beſides almoſt ſure that a new Archbiſhop arrived at Goa in October, the See having been before vacant for almoſt thirty Years. At leaſt I thought ſo, becauſe the Bells of the Cathedral had rung in an extraordinary Manner for nine Days together, at a Time when neither the univerſal Church, nor that of Goa in particular, ſolemnize any remarkable Feſtival. I knew that this Prelate was expected even before my Confinement.

THESE ſeveral Reaſons made me flatter myſelf, that I might gain my Liberty in the Beginning of December; but when I found the firſt and ſecond Sunday in Advent were paſt, I did not doubt but either my Liberty or Confinement was poſtponed for at leaſt twelve Months.

As I fancied that the Act of Faith was never ſolemnized but in the Beginning of the Month of December, finding it elapſe without the leaſt Sign of any Preparation for that dreadful Ceremony, I reſolved to ſubmit another Year to my Afflictions; nevertheleſs, I found at a Time when I leaſt expected it, that I was likely to be ſet at Liberty.

I OB-

I OBSERVED that Saturday the 11th of January, 1676. intending after Dinner to give my Linen to the Turnkeys in order to get it waſhed, as was the Cuſtom, they refuſed to take it, and put it off till the next Day.

I COULD not but revolve a thouſand Thoughts upon the Occaſion of this extraordinary Refuſal, but not finding one ſatisfactory, I at laſt concluded, that poſſibly the Act of Faith might be ſolemniz'd the next Day; but I was more ſtrongly confirmed in my Opinion, or rather look'd upon it as certain, when after hearing the ringing for Veſpers at the Cathedral, Matins were rung immediately after, which had never been done ſince my Confinement, the Eve of the Feaſt of Corpus Chriſti excepted, which is always ſolemniz'd in India, the Thurſday immediately following Low-Sunday, becauſe of the continual Rains which fall at the Time of its Celebration in Europe. One would have thought that my Heart was going to be fill'd with Joy, ſince I thought I ſhould be ſoon ſet at Liberty, and that I ſhould come out of the Grave, as it were, in which I had been buried for near two Years; nevertheleſs the Dread with which the fatal Concluſion of the Proctor had fill'd me, and the Uncertainty of my Deſtiny, heightened my Affliction to that Degree, that I ſpent the Remainder of that Day, and Part of the Night, in ſuch a Condition as would have moved the hardeſt Heart, thoſe excepted under whoſe Cruelty I ſuffer'd.

SUPPER was brought me, which I refuſed, and contrary to Cuſtom it was not urged upon me; but no ſooner were the Doors ſhut, but I gave myſelf up to Grief and Deſpair. At laſt, after having deplored my hard Fate with Sighs and Tears, oppreſſed with the moſt piercing Anguiſh, I began to doze about Eleven at Night.

I HAD not been long aſleep, when I was on a ſudden awaked by the Noiſe which the Turnkeys made in opening the Doors of my Cell; and as this was unuſual, I was ſurprized to ſee People enter it with a Light; and my Fears were not a little increaſed by the Lateneſs of the Hour.

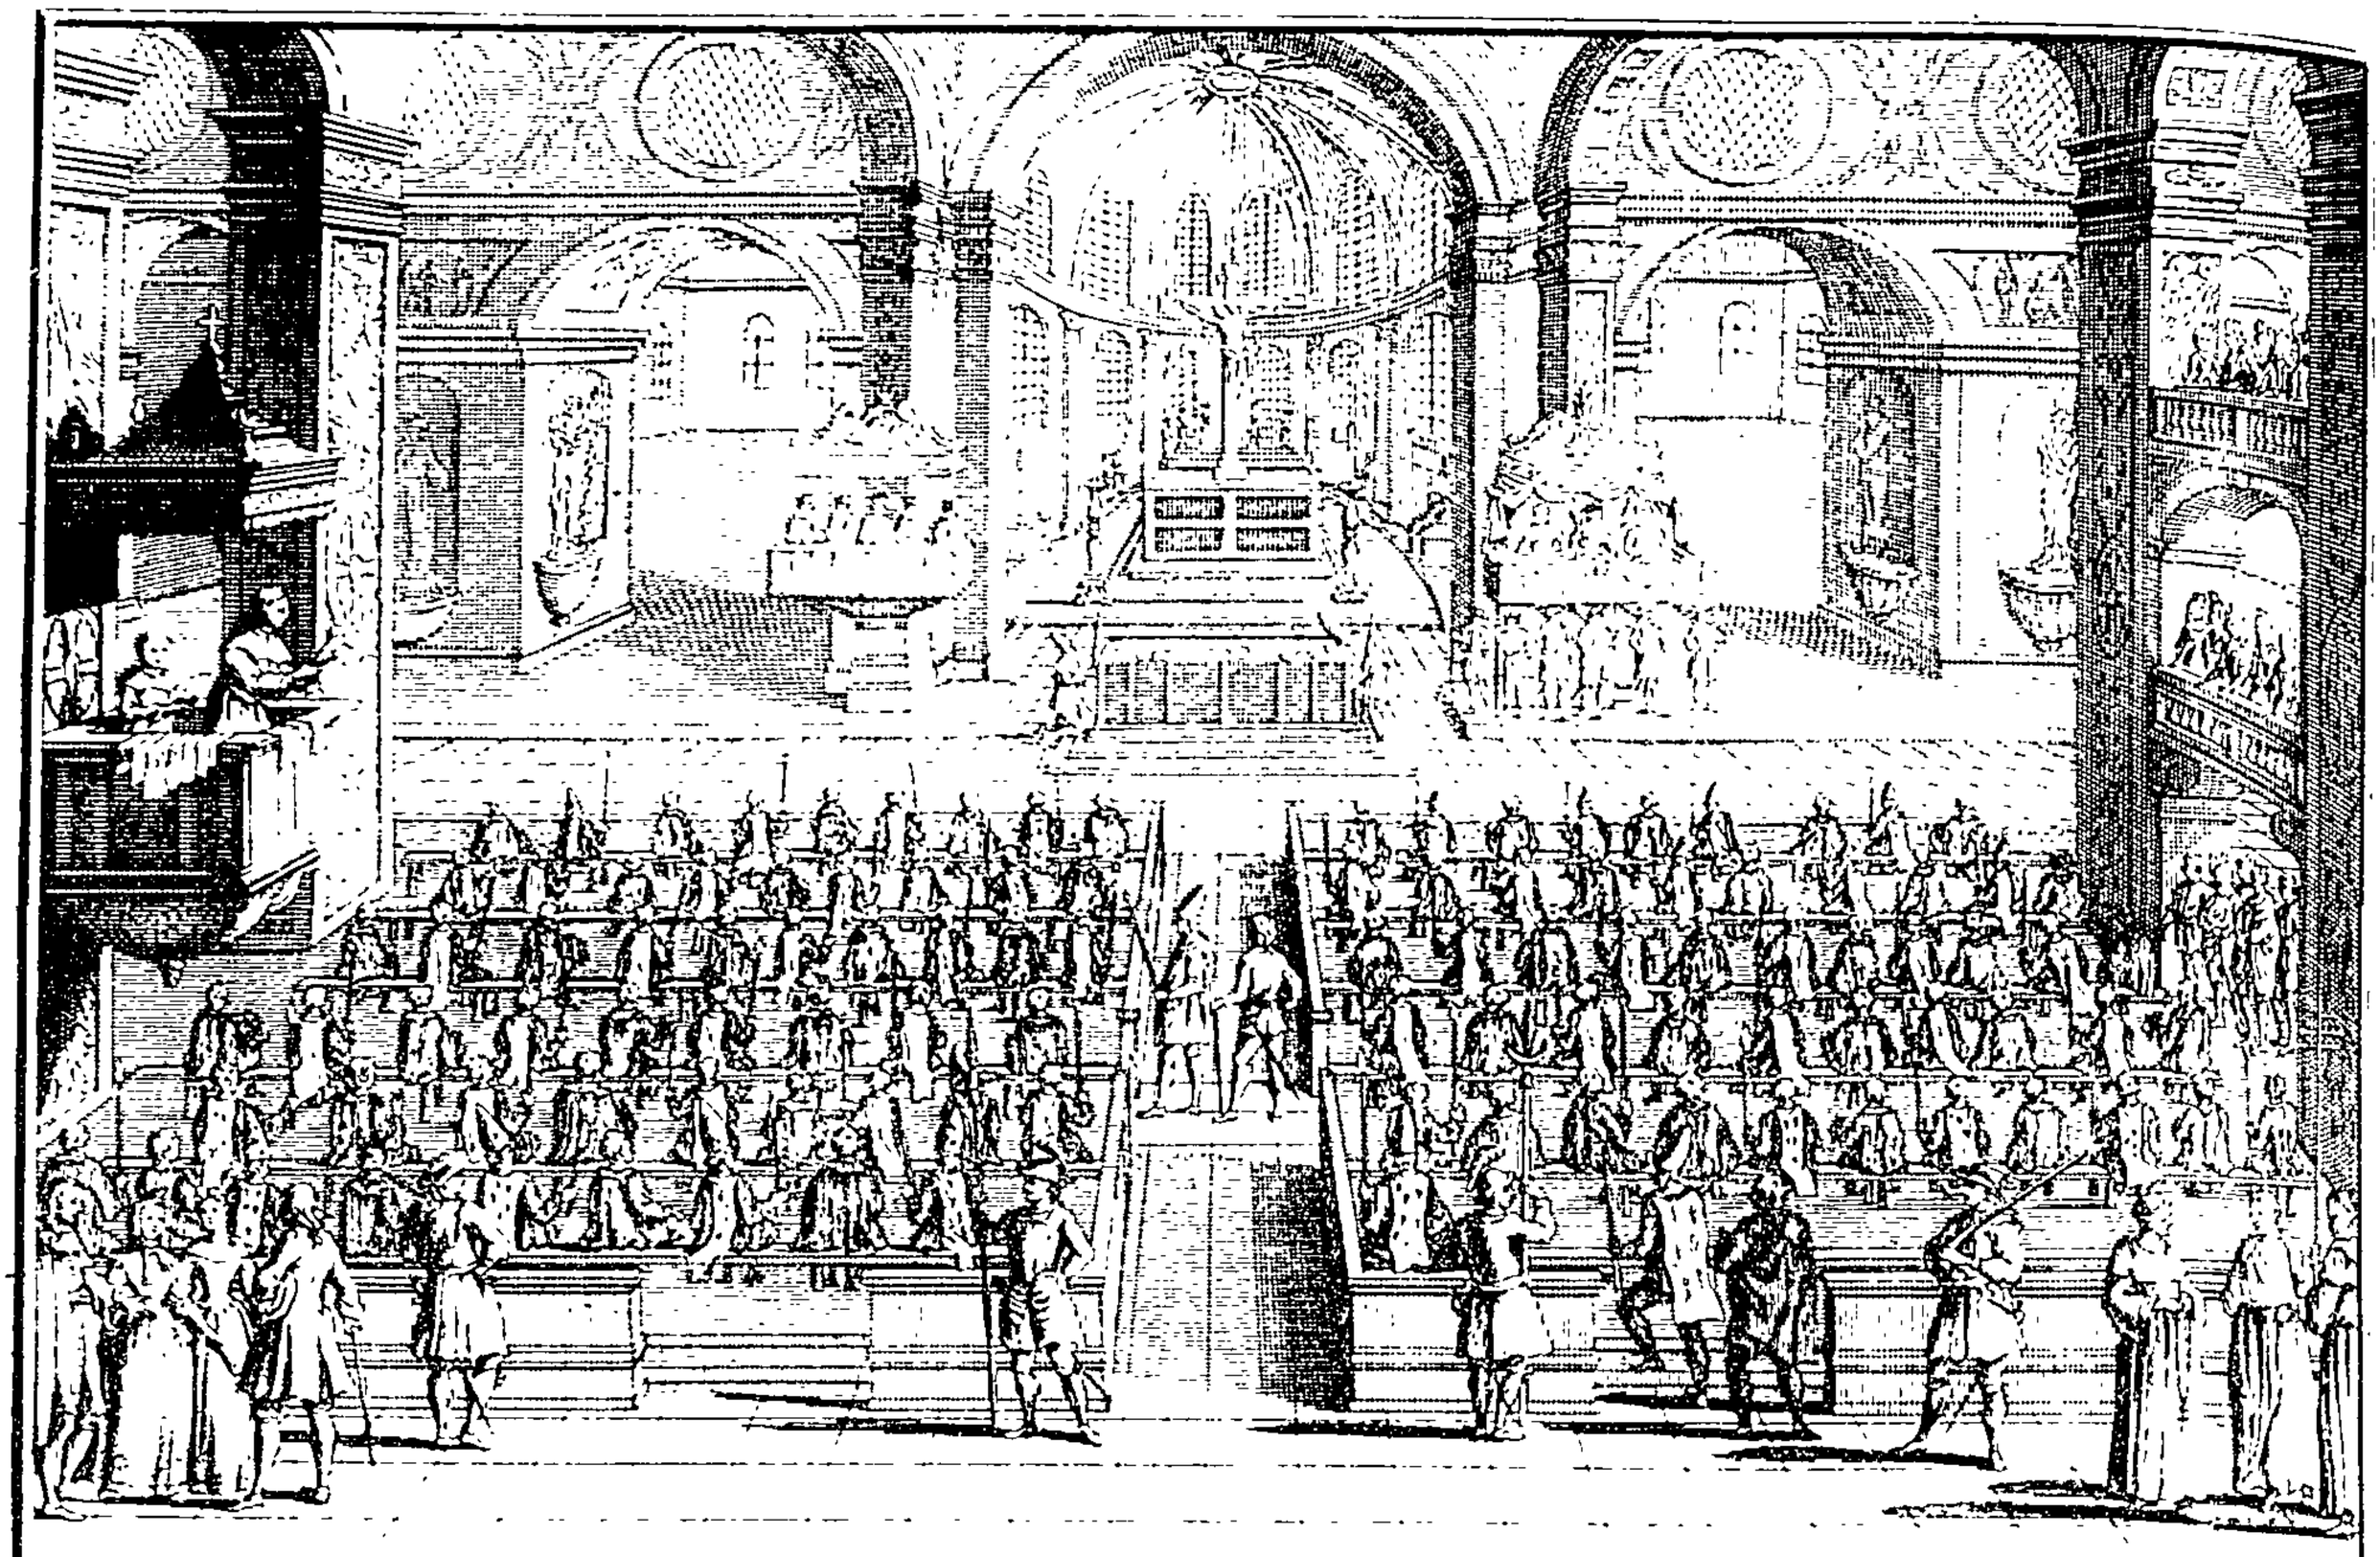
THEN the Alcaide gave me Clothes, which he ordered me to put on, and to be ready to leave my Cell when he ſhould call me for that Purpoſe; then he went away, leaving a lighted Lamp in the Dungeon. I now had neither Strength enough to riſe, nor to anſwer; and the Moment the Turnkeys left me, I was ſeized with ſuch a Trembling, that for above an Hour I could not ſo much as caſt my Eyes upon the Clothes which were left me. At laſt I roſe, and falling proſtrate upon the Earth before a Croſs which I had drawn upon a Wall, I recommended myſelf to Heaven, and reſigned myſelf wholly to Providence; after which I put on the Sute, which conſiſted in a Waiſtcoat, the Sleeves whereof reached to the Wriſt, and a Pair of Drawers that reached to the Heels; the whole made of a black and white ſtriped Linen.

I DID not wait long after the Dreſs was brought me, for the Turnkeys came about Two in the Morning into my Cell, whence I was carried into a long Gallery, where I found a great Number of my Fellow-Sufferers ſtanding againſt the Walls. Here I placed myſelf, and ſeveral did the ſame after me. Notwithſtanding there were upwards of two hundred more in this Gallery, yet as all of them were gloomily ſilent, that there were not above a dozen Whites among them, who could ſcarce be diſtinguiſhed from the reſt, and that all were clothed in the ſame Dreſs with myſelf, they might eaſily have been taken for ſo many Statues fixed againſt the Wall, had not the Motion of their Eyes, which was the only Liberty allow'd them, ſhewed them to be living Creatures.

THE Gallery in which we ſtood had ſo few Lamps in it, and the Light of them was ſo very faint and weak, that this Circumſtance added to the Crowd of black and ſorrowful Objects, ſeemed to make the whole like a Burial.

THE Women, who were clothed in the ſame Linen as the Men, were placed in an adjacent Gallery, where we could ſee them; but I obſerved, that in a Dormitory not far from the Place where we ſtood, there were alſo Priſoners clothed in a black Sute, which deſcended very low, who walked up and down from Time to Time. I did not then know what this meant, but was inform'd a few Hours after, that they were thoſe who were to be burnt, and were walking up and down with their Confeſſors.

As I was unacquainted with the Formalities of the holy Office, how heartily ſoever I might formerly have wiſhed to die, I then was under dreadful Apprehenſions leſt I ſhould be one of thoſe who were condemned to the Flames. However, I cheer'd myſelf a little, when I conſider'd my Dreſs was not different from the reſt, and that 'twas not likely ſuch a Number of People would be burnt as were there preſent.



AFTER we were all placed againſt the Wall, a yellow Wax-Taper was given to each of us; after which Clothes were brought us made like Tunics, or large Scapularies: They were of yellow Cloth, with red St. Andrew's Croſſes painted before and behind. Such as are branded with theſe Stigmas, are thoſe who have been guilty, or ſuppoſed to be guilty, of Crimes againſt the Faith of Chriſt, whether they be Jews, Mahometans, Wizards, or Heretics, who have left the Catholic Religion. Theſe large Scapularies with large St. Andrew's Croſſes are call'd San-benitos.

THOSE who were look'd upon as convict, and perſiſt in declaring their Innocence, or have relapſed, wore another kind of Scapulary call'd Samarra, the Ground whereof is grey; the Criminal is drawn thereon, both before and behind, ſtanding on Fire-Brands, with Flames mounting upwards, and Devils around them. At the Bottom of the Portrait the Crime and Name of the Priſoner are written. But ſuch as accuſe themſelves after Sentence has been pronounc'd upon them before their Releaſe, and have not relapſed, have Flames pointing downwards painted on their Samarra's, and this is call'd Fogo Revolto, or reverſed Fire.

SAN-BENITOS were given to twenty Blacks accuſed of Magic, and to a Portugueſe convicted of the ſame Crime, and who was moreover a new Chriſtian; and as they were reſolved not to revenge themſelves by Halves, but to inſult me to the utmoſt, they forced me to put on a Dreſs like to that of the Wizards and Heretics, though I had always confeſſed the Catholic Religion. This the Judges might eaſily have known from a great many People, both Frenchmen and others, with whom I had lived in ſeveral Parts of India. My Terror was increaſed when I ſaw myſelf in this Habit, becauſe I thought that as there were not, among ſo great a Number of Criminals, but twenty-two Perſons who were dreſſed with theſe ignominious San-benitos, 'twas very poſſible that theſe only were thoſe who were not to be pardoned.

AFTER the San-benitos, five Paſteboard Caps were brought, ſhaped like a Sugar-Loaf, having Devils and Flames painted on them, with the Word Feiticero, i. e. Wizard, round them. Theſe Caps are called Carochas, and were put on the Heads of the five moſt guilty of the Criminals, among thoſe who were accuſed of Magic; and as they ſtood pretty near me, I expected to have one alſo; however I was miſtaken. I then almoſt doubted no more but that theſe miſerable Wretches were to be really burnt, and as they were not better acquainted than myſelf with the Formalities of the Inquiſition, they have ſince told me, that they thought their Ruin inevitable.

The EXECUTIONS.

Supplice des Condamnez.

EVERY one being habited according to his imputed Crime, we were allow'd to ſit upon the Ground till farther Orders.

ABOUT Four in the Morning, ſeveral Domeſtics belonging to the Priſon came after the Turnkeys, to give Bread and Figs to ſuch as would eat; but for my Part, though I had not ſupped the Night before, I had ſo little Appetite, that I ſhould have taken nothing, had not one of the Turnkeys come up to me and ſaid, Take the Bread that is offered you; and if you can't eat it now, put it into your Pocket, for depend upon't you'll be hungry before you come back.

THESE Words gave me the higheſt Conſolation, and diſpelled all my Fears, ſince he talked of my returning back, which made me take his Advice.

AT laſt, after having long waited, Day began to break about Five, when one might plainly behold in the Faces of all the Priſoners, the various Impulſes of Shame, Grief, and Fear, as thoſe different Paſſions raged in their Boſoms; for notwithſtanding that they were all fluſhed with Joy, when they found they were going to be deliver'd from their dreadful and inſupportable Captivity, yet the Uncertainty of their Fate very much diminiſh'd their Tranſports.

CHAP. XVI.

Order of the PROCESSION in the Act of Faith, and the Ceremonies which are obſerved in the Place where it is ſolemnized.

THE largeſt Bell of the Cathedral began to ring a little before Sun-Riſe, to give notice to the People of the Solemnization of the Act of Faith, which is, as it were, the Triumph of the holy Office. We at firſt marched out one by one. I obſerved in paſſing out of the Gallery into the great Hall, that the Inquiſitor was ſitting at the Door, having a Secretary ſtanding near him; that the Hall was crowded with the Inhabitants of Goa, whoſe Names were written in a Liſt which the Secretary held in his Hand; and that at the ſame Time that a Priſoner was ordered out, he named one of thoſe Gentlemen who were in the Hall, who immediately went up to the Priſoner, and attended him, in order to ſtand Godfather to him in the Act of Faith.

THESE Godfathers anſwer for the Perſons they attend upon, and repreſent them when the Feſtival is ended. The Inquiſitors pretend that 'tis a great Honour for a Perſon to be choſen Godfather on theſe Occaſions.

THE General of the Portugueſe Ships in India was my Godfather, and therefore I came out along with him; and being got into the Street, I found that the Proceſſion opened with the Dominicans, who enjoy this Privilege becauſe St. Dominic their Founder inſtituted the Inquiſition. Before them, the Standard of the holy Office was carried, in which the Image of the Founder was wrought in very rich Embroidery, holding holding a Sword in one Hand, and an Olive Branch in the other, with this Inſcription, Juſtitia & Miſericordia.

AFTER theſe Friars follow the Priſoners, walking one after another, with each his Godfather by his Side, and a Wax-Taper in his Hand. The leaſt guilty walk'd firſt, and as I was not looked upon to be very innocent, above an hundred Priſoners walk'd before me. Men and Women walk'd together, for there was no other Diſtinction than that of Crimes. I, like the reſt, was bare-headed and bare-footed, but I ſuffer'd very much in the March, which laſted above an Hour, becauſe of the little Flints with which the Streets of Goa are fill'd, ſo that my Feet were all bloody.

WE were carried through the principal Streets, expoſed to the Sight of innumerable Spectators, who were come from all Parts of India, and lined the Way as we walk'd; Care being taken to give notice of the Act of Faith in Sermon Time, in the moſt diſtant Churches, a long Time before its Solemnization.

AT laſt, oppreſſed with Shame and Confuſion, and vaſtly fatigued with the March, we arrived at St. Francis's Church, which was then appointed to prepare the Celebration of the Act of Faith.

THE high Altar was covered with Black, and had on it ſix ſilver Candleſtics, in which were ſix lighted white Wax-Tapers. On each Side of the Altar two Seats like Thrones were raiſed; that to the Right for the Inquiſitor and his Council, and the other for the Viceroy and his Court.

AT ſome Diſtance from them, and oppoſite to the high Altar, a little towards the Door, another Altar had been raiſed, on which two Maſs-Books lay open. From them to the Church-Gate a Gallery was built about three Foot wide, railed in on each Side; and on each Side Forms were placed for the Criminals to ſit on, with their reſpective Godfathers, who ſat down as they came into the Church, ſo that thoſe who came firſt into it, ſat neareſt to the Altar. Being ſeated in my Place, I began to conſider the Order which thoſe who came after me were made to obſerve. I found that thoſe who wore the dreadful Carrochas above-mentioned, walked laſt in the Proceſſion; that immediately a large Crucifix was carried, the Face of which was turned to thoſe who walked before it, and which was followed by two Perſons and four Statues, that were carried, big as the Life, and repreſenting ſo many Men, each of them fixed upon a long Pole, and accompanied with ſo many Boxes, each carried by a Man, which Boxes were filled with the Bones of thoſe whom thoſe Statues repreſented.

BY the Face of the Crucifix turned towards thoſe who preceded it, the Mercy that had been ſhewn them is denoted, by ſparing their Lives, though they had juſtly deſerved to die; and by the ſaid Crucifix's being turned behind to thoſe who follow'd it, is denoted, that thoſe unhappy Wretches are now loſt to all Hope; thus every Thing that relates to the Inquiſition has a myſterious Signification.

THE Dreſs of theſe unhappy Perſons inſpired equal Horror and Pity. The living Criminals, and the Statues, were clothed in Samarras, made of grey Linen, painted full of Devils, Flames, and Firebrands, on which the Criminal's Head was painted, both before and behind, with the Sentence written below, containing in few Words, and in large Letters, his Name, that of his Country, and the Crime for which he was to ſuffer. They alſo wore Carrochas, which, like the Habit, were filled with Flames and Devils.

THE little Trunks in which the Bones of thoſe who died were laid, and who had been proſecuted before or after their Deceaſe, before or after their Impriſonment, in order that their Goods and Chattels might be confiſcated, were alſo painted black, and covered with Demons and Flames.

WE are here to obſerve, that the Inquiſitors do not confine their Juriſdiction over the Living only, or ſuch as die in Priſon; but that they frequently proſecute People ſeveral Years after their Death, whenever they may then be impeached of any conſiderable Crime. In this Caſe theirBodies are dug up, and if they are found guilty, their Bones are burnt in the Act of Faith; all their Goods and Chattels are confiſcated, which are forcibly taken away from their Heirs. I advance nothing in this Place but what I myſelf know to be true; for among the Statues that were carried in the Act of Faith, one of them repreſented a Man dead many Years before, who had been lately proſecuted, his Bones dug up, his Goods confiſcated, and Bones burnt, or perhaps thoſe of ſome other Perſon who had been buried in the ſame Place.

THESE unhappy Wretches being entred in the gloomy Manner above deſcribed, and ſeated in the Places appointed them near the Church Door, the Inquiſitor came, attended by his Officers, and went and ſeated himſelf on the Bench that ſtood to the Right of the Altar, during which, the Viceroy and his Court ſeated themſelves on the Left.

THE Crucifix was placed on the Altar betwixt the ſix Candleſticks, when every one being ſeated in his Place, and the Church crouded with People, the Provincial of the Auſtin Friars went up into the Pulpit, and preached for half an Hour. Notwithſtanding my great Anguiſh of Heart, I obſerved he compared the Inquiſition to Noah's Ark; but nevertheleſs that he found this Difference between them, viz. That the Beaſts who entered into the Ark, came from thence after the Flood with the very identical Inclinations they had carried into it; but that the Inquiſition had this admirable Property, to make ſo great a Change with regard to thoſe who were impriſoned in it, that many who were cruel as Lions and Tygers at their going in, came out from thence as meek and gentle as Lambs.

SERMON being ended, two Readers went alternately into the Pulpit, where they read in public the Trial of the ſeveral Criminals, and alſo their reſpective Sentences.

THE Priſoner whoſe Sentence was read, was, while that was doing, conducted by the Alcaide to the Middle of the Gallery, where he ſtood, with a lighted Wax Taper in his Hand, till his Sentence was read. And as all the Priſoners are ſuppoſed to have incurred the Penalty of the greater Excommunication, after their Trial and Sentence have been read, the Priſoner is carried to the Foot of the high Altar, on which the Maſs-Books are laid; and here being ordered to kneel, he lays his Hands on the Book, and continues in that Poſture till every Criminal has a Maſs-Book before him.

THEN the Reader laying aſide the Trials, read aloud the Confeſſion of Faith, having firſt briefly exhorted the Priſoners to repeat it after him with their Hearts as well as their Mouths; and this being done, each Priſoner returned back to his Place, and the Trials were again read.

I WAS called in my Turn, when I found my Impeachment conſiſted of three Heads: The firſt, for having aſſerted the Invalidity of Baptiſm Flaminis; the ſecond, for having ſaid that Images are not to be worſhipped, and for having blaſphemed a Crucifix, by ſaying, that one of Ivory, was no more than a Piece of Ivory; and thirdly, for having ſpoke with Contempt of the Inquiſition and its Miniſters; but above all, for the Blackneſs of my Intentions when I affirmed theſe ſeveral Things: In conſideration whereof I was declared excommunicate; and for Reparation, my Goods and Chattels were confiſcated to the King's Uſe, and myſelf baniſhed from the Indies, and condemn'd to row in the Portugueſe Gallies for five Years, and alſo to fulfil the other Penances which ſhould be particularly enjoin'd me by the Inquiſitors.

OF theſe Puniſhments, none was ſo grievous to me as my being forced to leave the Indies, where I had made a Reſolution of travelling ſeveral Years longer: However, this Reflection was ſweetened, when I conſidered that I was going to be releaſed out of the Clutches of the Inquiſitors.

MY Confeſſion of Faith being read, I returned to my Place, and made my Advantage of the Advice my Turnkey had given me, not to refuſe the Bread which was offered me; for as the Ceremony laſted the whole Day, none of the Criminals eat any Thing that Day but in the Church.

CHAP. XVII.

ABSOLUTION of the Excommunicated, and what is obſerved with regard to thoſe who are condemned to the Flames.

AFTER the Trials of thoſe who were pardoned were read, the Inquiſitor left his Seat, in order to put on the Albe and the Stole; when being accompanied with about twenty Prieſts, each having a Switch in his Hand, he came into the Middle of the Church, where, after having ſaid ſeveral Prayers, we were abſolved from the Excommunication, which it was pretended we had incurr'd, by Virtue of a Stroke on the Back, which theſe Prieſts gave to each of us with the Switch.

I CANNOT forbear relating a Circumſtance, to ſhew how groſly ſuperſtitious the Portugueſe are with regard to every Thing which relates to the Inquiſition; which is, that during the Proceſſion, and all the Time I continued in the Church, my Godfather would never anſwer me, tho' I ſpoke ſeveral Times to him, and beſought him to give me a Pinch of Snuff, which he refuſed me for fear of being involved in the ſame Cenſure with myſelf; but as ſoon as I was abſolved, he embraced me, gave me Snuff, and told me he then looked upon me as his Brother, ſince the Church had looſed me.

THIS Ceremony being ended, and the Inquiſitor returned to his Seat, the Priſoners who were to be burnt were made to advance forward. There were a Man, a Woman, and the Images of four Men deceaſed, with the Boxes in which their Bones were laid: The Man and Woman were black Indians, and Chriſtians, accuſed of Magic, and condemned as relapſed; but in reality were no more Wizards than thoſe who condemned them.

OF

OF the four Images, two repreſented Men convicted of Magic, and the other two, two Men, both new Chriſtians, accuſed of turning Jews; one whereof died in the Inquiſition, and the other in his own Houſe, and had been buried many Years before in his Pariſh Church. However, being accuſed after his Death of embracing the Jewiſh Principles, as he died very rich, the Inquiſitors had cauſed his Body to be taken out of the Grave, in order to burn his Bones in the Act of Faith. Hence 'tis plain, that the Inquiſitors, like our Saviour himſelf, exerciſe a Power over the Living and the Dead.

THE Trials of theſe unhappy Perſons were read, which all ended with theſe Words, viz. That it not being in the Power of the holy Office to pardon them, becauſe of their relapſing into their Errors or their Impenitence, and being indiſpenſably obliged to puniſh them in the utmoſt Rigour of the Laws, they therefore delivered them over to the Flames.

WHILE theſe laſt Words were pronouncing, a Sergeant from the ſecular Powers advanced forward, and took Poſſeſſion of theſe unfortunate Perſons, who before had been ſtruck gently on the Breaſt by the Alcaide, to ſhew they were abandoned by the Inquiſitors.

IN this Manner the Act of Faith ended, and whilſt the condemned Criminals were carried to the River Side, where the Viceroy and his Court were aſſembled, and where the Piles on which they were to be burnt, had been prepared the Day before; while theſe Things, I ſay, were doing, we were carried back to Priſon, but without obſerving any Order as we walked.

THO' I did not ſee them executed, yet, as I had a full Account of it from Perſons who had been preſent at ſeveral of theſe Executions, I ſhall give a Deſcription thereof in few Words.

WHEN the condemned Priſoners are coming to the Place where the Lay-Judges are aſſembled, they are asked, What Religion they chuſe to profeſs at leaving the World? But they don't make the leaſt mention of their Trial, which is ſuppoſed to have been fair, and that they were juſtly condemned, the Inquiſition being looked upon as infallible.

HAVING anſwered this only Queſtion that is asked them, the Executioner lays hold of them, and ties them to Stakes; where they are firſt ſtrangled, in caſe they die Chriſtians; but in caſe they perſiſt in profeſſing Judaiſm or Hereſy, they then are burnt alive: However, this happens ſo rarely, that there is ſcarce one Inſtance of it in four Acts of Faith, tho' ſeveral Perſons generally ſuffer on thoſe Occaſions.

THE Day after the Execution, the Pictures of the executed Criminals are carried into the Church of the Dominicans. Their Heads only are to be repreſented to the Life, with Firebrands under them, with their Names, thoſe of their Fathers, and their Country, and the Crime for which they ſuffered, with the Day of the Month and Year of their Execution.

IN caſe the Criminal had relapſed into his Guilt, the following Words are writ under his Picture, Morreo queimado por Hereje relapſo, i. e. That he was burnt as an Heretic relapſed. If he perſevered in his Error, after having been accuſed but once, the Words Por Hereje contumas, are written under his Picture; but there are very few of theſe. In fine, if after having been accuſed but once, by a ſufficient Number of Witneſſes, neſſes, he perſiſts in aſſerting his Innocence, and dies in profeſſing the Chriſtian Religion, then there is under his Picture, Morreo queimado por Hereje convitto negativo, i. e. He was burnt as a Heretic convict, but did not confeſs. And of the latter there are great Numbers. Now it is certain, that out of an hundred who die as Negatives, ninety-nine are not only innocent of the Crime imputed to them, but chuſe to die, rather than falſly confeſs themſelves guilty of a Crime. For it is not natural to ſuppoſe, that was a Man ſure to be pardoned in caſe he would confeſs, that he would perſiſt in his Innocence, and chuſe rather to be burnt than to own a Truth, the Confeſſion of which would ſave him.

THESE terrible Portraits are hung up in the Nave, and over the great Gate of the Church, as ſo many illuſtrious Trophies ſacred to the Glory of the holy Office; and when this Side of the Church is filled, they alſo croud the Wings near the Gate with them. In the great Church of the Dominicans at Lisbon, which is not far from the Inquiſition, there are ſeveral hundreds of theſe melancholy Paintings.

CHAP. XVIII.

M. DELLON is releaſed out of the INQUISITION; is carried to a Houſe, in order to be inſtructed; when he is brought back to the INQUISITION, there to receive the Penance inflicted upon him.

I WAS ſo wearied and dejected at my Return from the Act of Faith, that I was almoſt as deſirous of going back to my Cell, as I had been a little before to come out of it.

MY Godfather accompanied me to the Hall, and the Alcaide having carried me into the Gallery, I went and ſhut myſelf up whilſt he was looking after the reſt. Being got in, I threw myſelf upon the Bed till my Supper ſhould be brought me, which conſiſted only of Bread and Figs, the Hurry of the Day not allowing the Officers to get any Thing elſe. I ſlept however much better this Night than I had done for a conſiderable Time before, but the Moment Day appeared, I was impatient to know my Fate. About ſix, the Alcaide bid me give him back the Dreſs I had worn in the Proceſſion, which I willingly returned him; and at the ſame Time offered him the San-benito, but he would not receive it, I being to wear it on all Sundays and Feſtivals till I had completed my Sentence.

ABOUT Seven, Breakfaſt was brought me, and a little after I was ordered to pack up my Things, and to be in Readineſs againſt my being called out. I obey'd this laſt Order with all poſſible Care and Diſpatch; when about Nine a Turnkey opened my Door, order'd me to take up my Bundle upon my Shoulders, and to follow him to the great Hall, whither the greateſt Part of the Priſoners were already come.

HAVING ſtaid ſome Time here, I ſaw about twenty of my Fellow-Priſoners, who had been ſentenced to be whipt the Day before, which had juſt then been executed upon them by the Hands of the Common Hangman, thro' all the Streets of the City. Being thus aſſembled, the Inquiſitor came in, when we all fell on our Knees to receive his Bleſſing, after having kiſs'd the Ground he walked upon. Orders were afterwards given to ſuch Blacks as had few or no Clothes, to carry thoſe of the Whites. Such of the Priſoners as were not Chriſtians, were immediately ſent to the Places whither they had been condemned; ſome of them into Baniſhment, others to the Gallies, or the Houſe where Powder is made, called Caſa da Polvera; and the Chriſtians, whether Blacks or Whites, were carried to a Houſe hired for that Purpoſe in the City, there to be inſtructed for ſome Time.

THE Blacks lay in the Parlours and Galleries, and the Whites were put into a ſeparate Apartment, where we were confined all Night, but had Liberty to range the whole Houſe over in the Day-Time, and to ſpeak with any Body. The Whites and Blacks were catechiſed ſeparately every Day, and Maſs was daily celebrated, at which we all aſſiſted, as alſo at Morning and Evening Prayer.

DURING my Stay in this Houſe, I was viſited by a religious Dominican, my Friend, whom I had known at Daman, where he was Prior. The good Father, who was oppreſſed with Years and Sickneſs, no ſooner heard of my being ſet at Liberty, but he immediately viſited me in a Sedan. He bewailed my ill Fate with Tears and Embraces, telling me that he had been in great Terror for my Sake; that he had frequently inquired into the State of my Health, and my Affairs, of the Father Procurator of the Priſoners, his Friend, and of the ſame Order; that he could obtain no Anſwer for a conſiderable Time; and that at laſt, after many Entreaties, all he could get out of him, was, that I was ſtill alive.

THE Sight of this good Friar gave me great Conſolation, and the Neceſſity I was under of leaving the Indies was a Trouble to us both. He had the Humanity to viſit me ſeveral Times, when he requeſted me to return to the Indies as ſoon as I ſhould be ſet at Liberty, and ſent me Proviſions of various Kinds for a Voyage, which otherwiſe I could never have procured.

AFTER I had lived in this Houſe till the 23d of January, we were again conducted into the Hall of the Inquiſition, when each of us was called in his Turn to the Board of the holy Office, there to receive from the Hands of the Inquiſitor, a Paper containing the Penances to which we were reſpectively ſentenced. I went thither in my Turn, when laying my Hands on the Goſpels, I was ordered to kneel down, and to promiſe not to reveal any of thoſe Particulars, which had happened in the Inquiſition during my Impriſonment.

THE Judge afterwards gave me a Paper ſigned by himſelf, containing the Penance enjoined; and as it was ſhort I ſhall tranſcribe it Word for Word.

Liſt of the Penances enjoin'd, &c.

1. DURING the three Years to come, he ſhall confeſs and communicate: The firſt Year, every Month; and the two following, at Eaſter, Whitſontide, Chriſtmas, and the Aſſumption of our Lady.

2. He ſhall aſſiſt at Maſs and Sermons all Sundays and Feſtivals, in caſe he has Opportunity for ſo doing.

3. DURING the ſaid three Years, he ſhall daily repeat five Times the Pater Noſter and Ave Maria, in honour of the five Wounds of our Saviour Chriſt.

4. He ſhall not engage in Friendſhip with Heretics, or Perſons whoſe Faith is in the leaſt ſuſpected, which may in any Manner prejudice his Salvation.

5. He ſhall keep inviolably ſecret, all he has either ſeen, ſaid, or heard; as alſo whatever has been tranſacted with himſelf, either at the Board, or other Places of the holy Office.

CHAP. XIX.

Deſcription of the Galley, or Priſon of the INQUISITION in LISBON.

THE Galley is ſo called, becauſe as there are no Gallies in Portugal, all who are condemned to them by the Inquiſitors or the ſecular Magiſtrate, are ſent to this Place.

IN this Galley all the Priſoners are chained in Couples by one Foot only; the Chain is about eight Foot long, and each Priſoner has an iron Hook at his Girdle to hang it on, in ſuch a Manner, that there is about three Foot in Length of it between both of them.

THESE Slaves work daily in the King's Ship-Yards, and are employ'd in carrying Wood to the Carpenters, in unlading Veſſels, fetching Stones and Sand to ballaſt them, and Proviſions to victual them; they make the Tow, and, in ſhort, do whatever the King's Officers think proper to order them, tho never ſo mean, laborious, and ſlaviſh.

THIS Galley is alſo a Houſe of Correction for fugitive or incorrigible Slaves: There are alſo a great many Turks in it, who were taken on Board the Corſairs of Barbary; and all theſe Perſons, of what Quality and Condition ſoever, are indifferently employ'd in ſervile and laborious Work, unleſs they have Money to fee the Officers that ſuperintended them, who otherwiſe treat them with the utmoſt Inhumanity. This Galley, as it is called, ſtands on the Bank of the River, and conſiſts of two very large Rooms, one above the other, both of which are generally full; and the Slaves lie on Bedſteads covered with Mats.

THEIR Head and Beards are ſhaved once a Month, and they wear blue Cloth Coats and Caps. They have likewiſe a Garment of grey Serge, which they uſe as a Cloak in the Day, and a Coverlet in the Night; theſe, and two coarſe Shirts, is all the Kings allows them every ſix Months.

EACH Slave has a Pound and a Half of black Biſcuit daily, ſix Pound of ſalt Meat a Month, with a Buſhel of Peas, Lentils, or Beans, which they may diſpoſe of as they pleaſe. Thoſe who are aſſiſted by Friends, generally ſell their Allowance, in order to buy ſomething elſe with it. They are carried very early every Morning, all Feſtivals excepted, to the Yard, which is about a Mile and a Half from the Priſon. There they are forced to work continually till Eleven, at whatſoever their Task-Maſters think proper to employ them in; they then leave off work till One, and during that Interval are allowed to eat or ſleep. At one a-Clock they again begin to work, which they continue till Night, when they return back to Priſon.

In this Priſon there is a Chapel, in which Maſs is ſaid on Sundays and Feſtivals, and whither ſeveral charitable Clergymen come frequently to cathechiſe, and preach to the Galley Slaves. Beſides the King's Allowance to the Priſoners, they receive frequent Alms; ſo that none of them can be in real Want. When any of them are ſick, they are carefully viſited by Phyſicians and Surgeons, and if very ſick, the Sacraments are duly adminiſtred to them, and they never want ſpiritual Conſolation at thoſe Seaſons. When a Slave commits ſome egregious Fault, he is whipt very cruelly; being extended at full Length, with his Belly towards the Ground, and being held in this Manner by two Men, a third whips him ſo ſeverely on the Buttocks, with a Rope, that it generally takes away the Fleſh with the Blow. Dellon tells us, that he has ſeen ſome, who, after being whipt, the ſuffering Parts have mortified in ſuch a Manner, that they were obliged to have deep Inciſions made in them; and that theſe often ulcerated in ſuch a Manner, that the unhappy Wretches could not work for a conſiderable Time.

When a Slave has any Buſineſs that abſolutely requires his Preſence, he is allowed to go about the City without his Companion, provided he pays a Man, who is obliged to follow him every where. He then drags his Chain alone, and, as it is very long, he puts it over his Shoulders, when it hangs either before or behind, as he thinks proper.

ILLUSTRATION

HISTORICAL MEMOIRS

Relating to the

INQUISITION.

THE Inquiſition is a Subject of ſo particular a Nature, that any one who attempts to write upon it with Impartiality, will find he has undertaken a very difficult Province.

If we conſider it with regard to its Origin, we ſhall find ſo many Perſons of the greateſt Character for their Holineſs, and the Practice of all the Chriſtian Virtues among its Founders, that we can ſcarce look upon this Work of theirs as a Myſtery of Iniquity, and calculated wholly for the Ruin of the Virtuous. If we reflect farther, that the wiſeſt and moſt politic Kings have ſtrenuouſly endeavoured to eſtabliſh it in all Parts of their Dominions, tho' it leſſened their Authority at the ſame Time, it will induce us to think, that they were prompted to it from no other Motives, than the Advantage they thought would accrue to true Religion. Not to mention, that many of thoſe who preſide over it, are Perſons of the moſt illuſtrious Birth, and of ſo unſullied a Reputation, that it is almoſt impoſſible we ſhould ſuſpect they could ever commit the vile and unjuſt Actions, which this Tribunal is generally ſaid to be guilty of.

But

BUT then, if we view the ſame Object in another Light, and inquire into its tyrannical Proceedings, we muſt neceſſarily have the utmoſt Deteſtation for an Inſtitution, which, upon the ſpecious Pretext of imploying its Severities againſt Error, does at the ſame Time undermine the very Foundation of that Religion, for whoſe Sake it ſeems to have been eſtabliſhed. Such a Cloud of Witneſſes have given in their Evidence with reſpect to the Barbarity and Cruelty that is exerciſed therein, that it is impoſſible to challenge or except againſt them all. Beſides, a Perſon who is ever ſo little converſant in antient Church-Hiſtory, cannot but exclaim againſt an Order of Monks, who, laying aſide all Humility and Repentance, which ought to be their peculiar Characteriſticks, arrogate to themſelves a Power, not only over Kings, (who indeed as Laymen, are as much expoſed to the Cenſures of the Church with regard to Spirituals, as the meaneſt of their Subjects) but alſo over Biſhops, who cannot with Juſtice be judged by any but their Equals, in Matters relating to Doctrine. 'Tis impoſſible but we muſt be ſeized with the moſt melancholly Reflections, when we ſee the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles; obliged to ſubmit to a vile Set of Monks, or expoſed to the Ignominy of being loaded with Irons, and conſtrained to anſwer, like ſo many Criminals, to ſuch Wretches as God never appointed them for Judges. The Inquiſition, when conſidered in this Light, loſes all that Appearance of Piety which renders it ſo venerable in the Eyes of a few, and that Authority which aſtoniſhes the greateſt Part of Mankind. We then perceive plainly, that all thoſe Princes who have endeavoured to eſtabliſh it in their Dominions, have been ſecretly prompted to it by Perſons whoſe Intereſt it was to adviſe them thereto, and to diſguiſe the Conſequences which would reſult from it; that they had been rewarded upon that Account, with the Patronage and Favour of the Court of Rome, which at that Time they ſtood in need of; in a Word, that human Motives had as much Share in it, as Zeal for the Purity of the Faith.

A GREAT Number of Authors have employ'd their Pens againſt this Inſtitution. Some in writing the Hiſtory of the Albigenſes and Waldenſes, have ſet forth the Eſtabliſhment of the Juriſdiction of the holy Office, in Colours conformable to the Prejudices of the Religion they had imbibed; others again have written Books expreſly on this Subject. We may affirm in general, that none but the Flatterers of the Court of Rome, have praiſed, with any Pleaſure, the bloody Zeal of thoſe Wretches, that offered the Blood of Heretics to a God, who deſires only their Converſion, who holds it in his Hand, and who ſuffers Hereſy to ſubſiſt, purely to draw Good from it. M. de Limborch, a famous Divine among the Remonſtrants, having recovered ſome Acts of the Inquiſition of Toulouſe, being the Sentences which had been pronounced in the Beginning of the fourteenth Century, againſt thoſe Perſons who had been either ſuſpected or convicted of adhering to the Party and the Religion of the Albigenſes, thought he ſhould do the Proteſtants no little Service in making them public. It muſt be owned that they reflect no little Diſhonour on thoſe who were concerned in them.

THE principal Deſign of the Editor, was, to ſhew that the Roman Catholic Religion ſupports itſelf by no other Methods than thoſe of Cruelty and Perſecution; but the bare Collection of theſe Sentences was not ſufficient. The Neceſſity there was of publiſhing them in the ſame Style, and with the ſame Orthography uſed in the Original Inſtruments, for fear leaſt they ſhould be looked upon as Counterfeits, made the Peruſal of them very harſh and unpleaſant, not to mention that they were unintelligible to a great many Readers. However, M. de Limborch removed this Difficulty, by annexing to it a Hiſtory of the Inquiſition, which he treated at large, and with much more Coolneſs and Moderation than could have been expected from a Proteſtant Divine. His Work was publiſhed at Amſterdam in 1692. The Subject was of too important a Nature not to be treated in the French Tongue; accordingly the Year following, a Book was publiſhed under the Title of The Hiſtory of the Inquiſition and its Origin. This Work, which which was pretended to be printed at Colen, conſiders the Inquiſition as the principal Strength of the See of Rome. And notwithſtanding that the Author has extracted Part of his Book from the Treatiſe above-mentioned, nevertheleſs, from ſeveral Paſſages in it, we may conclude it was written by a Roman Catholic. About ſix Years before the Publication of the two above-cited Treatiſes, M. Dellon, a French Phyſician, printed a Narrative of his Sufferings in the Inquiſition of Goa, which ſold prodigiouſly; and indeed the Public is very fond of ſuch Relations.

THE Memoirs relating to the Hiſtory of the Inquiſition abound with very curious Particulars. 'Tis Pity the Author was not ſomething more methodical; did not always handle his Subject with a due Copiouſneſs; and had not, in his frequent verbal Tranſcripts from the French Writer on the Inquiſition, omitted ſeveral eſſential Particulars which he might eaſily have copied. He writes with ſo much Freedom, that I have ſometimes doubted whether his Work had really been printed at Paris with Permiſſion. 'Tis ſcarce credible, that it could have been ſtamped with the Imprimatur of the royal Cenſors, eſpecially that they would have let it paſs with ſo many judicious Reflections, which reflect ſo much upon the Court of Rome, and ſome other Sovereigns, when we conſider, that the ſame Cenſors ſhall frequently boggle ſo much at the wrong Interpretation, which may ſometimes be given to a very innocent Word, and ſhall, upon ſo trifling a Motive, force an Author to new model an entire Chapter, and frequently his whole Work. If ſo myſterious a Conduct be not contradictory, at leaſt we may affirm, 'tis very imprudent in them to ſuffer ſuch Books to be printed, as are purpoſely calculated to render a Yoke odious, which they are inſenſibly endeavouring to eſtabliſh in the Kingdom.

PAGE 199. The Author of the Memoirs aſſerts very juſtly, that Force, Violence, Tortures, and ſuch like Methods, were never employ'd in the primitive Times, to bring back Heretics into the Boſom of the Church. M. Limborch, and the Author of the Hiſtory of the Inquiſition, carry the Parallel between the antient and the modern Church, in that reſpect, much farther; and notwithſtanding that there have been in all Ages, Men who were for perſecuting their Fellow-Creatures, and that the Orthodox Church has not always been ſufficiently free from this Leaven, we may nevertheleſs affirm, that nothing which could be compared with the Inquiſition, had appeared till the twelfth Century, notwithſtanding there were always, in the different Ages of Chriſtianity, ſome Churchmen who made a holy and ſalutary Uſe of Perſecution. Tertullian, in the ſecond Chapter of his Apology, addreſſing himſelf to the Heathens, ſays as follows: Since we cannot meet with any Man, who is deſirous of being honoured by Force, much leſs ought we to think that God delights in an involuntary Homage [a]. Man has a natural Right and a Power to worſhip what Object ſoever he thinks fit; and the Religion of one Man does neither Good nor Harm to that of another. To oblige a Perſon to embrace a Religion againſt his Will, does not merit the Name of Religion; it muſt be receiv'd voluntarily, and not by Compulſion, &c. St. Cyprian likewiſe condemns all Conſtraint in poſitive Terms, and even points out this Difference between the Church under the antient Diſpenſation, and that under the new, [b] viz. that whilſt the Circumciſion of the Fleſh ſubſiſted, all ſuch as diſobey'd the Prieſts were killed with the Sword; whereas ſince the Time of the ſpiritual Circumciſion, the Proud and Refractory were killed only by the ſpiritual Sword, whenever they were cut off from the Church. Cardinal Bellarmine, who quotes this Saint as though he had adviſed the putting Heretics to Death, had better not have made ſo unjuſt an Application of a Paſſage, wherein St. Cyprian exhorts Sinners to ſuffer Martyrdom for the Expiation of their Sins. This Cardinal, by the way, was intirely devoted to the Opinions of the Italians; and his Prejudice made him turn ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers and the Scriptures, in ſuch a Senſe as ſeemed favourable to the Court of Rome: But were thoſe Paſſages to be read in the Original, they would be found to bear a quite different Senſe. Lactantius carries this Matter much farther, as we find by the twentieth Chapter of his fifth Book. The Church was always actuated with this Spirit of Peace and Gentleneſs, till ſuch Time as the Emperors having embraced the Chriſtian Religion, the Biſhops began to employ inſenſibly the Authority which Kings and Princes had given them, to oppreſs all ſuch as refuſed to ſubmit to the Juriſdiction of the Church; and the Moment they ceaſed to be perſecuted, they themſelves became Perſecutors. At firſt the moſt ſevere Puniſhment they inflicted upon Heretics, was to ſend them into Baniſhment; and [a] Socrates relates in his Hiſtory, that the Biſhops of the Nicene Council only pronounced Anathema againſt Arius and his Followers; and that the Emperor Conſtantine baniſhed Arius, Euſebius of Nicomedia, and Theognis of Nice. However, the above-mentioned Emperor afterwards acted with great Severity, as may be ſeen in his Letter to the Biſhops and the People, wherein he ſays, Whoſoever ſhall be found guilty of having concealed one of Arius's Books, inſtead of throwing it into the Fire, ſhall himſelf be put to Death.

[b] Epiſt. 51. & 62.

PAGE 200. According to the Precept of St. Paul, &c. This Paſſage which is taken from the Epiſtle to Titus, Chap. iii. Ver. 10. is as follows: A Man that is an Heretic, after the firſt and ſecond Admonition reject.

IBID. And an antient Writer, who though he owns, &c. [b] Sulpitius Severus, not Severus Sulpitius, as our Author has it, not only condemns the Procedure of thoſe Biſhops who prompted the Emperor to put Priſcillian to Death, but adds two Circumſtances that are not very favourable to the Inquiſition. Firſt, that the putting this Man to Death, inſtead of ſuppreſſing his Hereſy, did, on the contrary, ſtrengthen it, and made it ſpread the more; for now his Followers, who had honoured him as a Saint in his Life-Time, began to revere him as a Martyr after his Death. Secondly, that St. Martin, ſo far from entertaining any ſuch Sentiments, had been always urgent with Ithacius to withdraw his Charge, and beſought Maximus not to ſhed the Blood of that unhappy Perſon. This holy Biſhop, as the above cited Hiſtorian relates, thought it ſufficient to drive all ſuch Heretics out of the Church as had been condemned by an eccleſiaſtical Sentence; but that it was A NEW AND UNHEARD-OF CRIME for a ſecular Judge to take Cognizance of any Cauſes relating to the Church. The Reader might probably think, that he employ'd theſe Words merely to favour eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and to inveſt the Biſhops with ſuch an Authority, as the Emperor himſelf ought not to have aſſumed; but this holy Man had no ſuch Thoughts. The Emperor in thus perſecuting the Heretics, did no more than execute the Sentence of a great Number of Biſhops; and St. Martin was an utter Enemy to Compulſion. During his Reſidence at Triers, he ſtopt all Proſecutions wherein Life was concerned, and would not leave it till Maximus had promiſed him not to ſhed the Blood of the Guilty. However, this Prince having been afterwards corrupted by Magnus and Rufus the Biſhops, and diſſuaded from theſe gentle Methods, referred the Cauſe to Euodius the Prefect, who put to Death Priſcillian, Feliciſſimus, Armenius, Latronianus, and Euchrochia, contrary to the Promiſe he had made the holy Biſhops. Some others alſo ſuffered Death; and 'tis on this Occaſion that the Hiſtorian makes uſe of thoſe Words quoted by our Author. We ſhall ſhew in one of the following Remarks, in what Manner St. Martin diſcovered his Deteſtation of ſo cruel an Action.

[b] Hiſt. Sacr. Lib. II. Cap. 51.

IBID.

IBID. The Cauſes for which Heretics may be puniſhed are reduced chiefly to four, &c. The firſt which our Author mentions is drawn from a political Motive, viz. of preſerving the State in Peace. 'Tis certain that this ought to be the grand Object of Policy, and that all ſuch Methods as tend to it are allowable, when it is impoſſible to obtain it by any other Means; Salus populi ſuprema lex eſto. All Laws ought to center there. But among Heretics, ſuch are to be diſtinguiſhed, whoſe Opinions or Actions are a Prejudice to the public Tranquillity. There is no Room to doubt but the civil Magiſtrate may puniſh ſuch as theſe, without being ſollicited by the Church to do it. Thus when the Anabaptiſts took up Arms, ſeized upon Munſter, and ſet up a Kingdom in that Place in oppoſition to the lawful Sovereign, they became guilty, and merited the Havock that was made among them; not for their erroneous Principles, but for having been found in Arms, and for endeavouring to diſturb the Tranquillity of the Government. But when this Sect, laying aſide their enthuſiaſtic Fury, contented themſelves with worſhipping God in ſuch a Manner as they thought would be moſt agreeable to him; obſerving at the ſame Time to live in obedience to the Laws of the Country, and confining themſelves to the Cares of their reſpective Families; the Authority of puniſhing an Anabaptiſt for his private Opinions immediately ceaſed, and the true Church has no farther Power over them, than to employ Exhortation, kind Arguments, or, at moſt, Excommunication.

THE ſecond Reaſon which the Author gives, agrees very ill with the practical Doctrine of St. Martin. The ſame Hiſtorian, who informs us how much that Saint oppoſed the putting of Priſcillian to Death, and who applauds him for it, does nevertheleſs take notice at the ſame Time, that this Hereſiarch was found guilty of Sorcery in two Examinations; that he did not deny his having imbibed impure Doctrines; that he had held nocturnal Aſſemblies, in which ſeveral leud Women were preſent; and that he had ſaid Prayers in it, being ſtark naked [a]. Nothing could poſſibly be more oppoſite to that Purity, which the Goſpel requires in all who receive it; and according to the Rule laid down in the Memoirs, Maximus was oblig'd to puniſh ſuch as abuſed Religion in this Manner, and made it a Cloke to their ignominious Paſſions. And yet we ſee here at the ſame Time, an illuſtrious Saint, the Apoſtle of France, ſtanding between the Emperor and them, and oppoſing their Puniſhment.

THE third Reaſon is ſpecious indeed; nevertheleſs upon this Pretence of preventing the Creator's being diſhonoured by blaſphemous Tenets, we thereby open a Door to infinite Perſecutions. The Fathers of the Nicene Council treated Arius as a Blaſphemer, becauſe he denied the Conſubſtantiality of the Word. He, on the other Side, accuſed them of believing in three Gods, and in deſtroying the Unity of the Godhead, which certainly would be Blaſphemy. Now, according to the Maxim of the Memoirs, Conſtantine had Authority to puniſh the Arians, who denied the Divinity of our Saviour; but then, when one of his Succeſſors declared for Arius, if he did this with Sincerity, he muſt neceſſarily think that the Conſubſtantialiſts committed Blaſphemy, and that he was bound in Duty to puniſh them. This Duty muſt naturally reſult from the Opinion he had of his being in the right. When Julian was for reſtoring Heatheniſm, he [b] undoubtedly believed that 'twas a more pure kind of Worſhip than that of our Saviour; and was it juſt he ſhould therefore force the whole Univerſe to return back to Paganiſm? Shall it be aſſerted that ſuch a Zeal is lawful in thoſe only who defend the Truth? But the Anſwer to this is, that every one thinks himſelf in the right. The Moment you allow it to be lawful to put Heretics to Death, you acquieſce in the Condemnation of all who do not think juſt as they do. The Word

[a] Hiſt. Sacr. Lib. II. Cap. 50.
[b] This may be doubted.

HERETIC is so much abused, that it is made to signify nothing at all. The most extravagant Sectaries look upon all as Heretics who do not allow of their idle Dreams; and in consequence of this, have a Right to persecute such as do not favour their Tenets. If the Prince is allowed to treat such of his Subjects ill as he thinks Heretics, and that only because they entertain certain Opinions with respect to Religion that clash with his, he himself is as much a Heretic with regard to them; and a People who are thus prejudiced, will easily prefer to him another Prince, who is of the same Principles with themselves. Nor will they fail to do it, if at the same Time that he differs from them in Opinion, he persecutes them with Severity.

THE last Reason is as weak as the rest. I am even afraid, that the Author of these Memoirs understands the Meaning of these Words as little as I myself do. Heretics may be proceeded against with Rigour: Not, says he, to compel them, but in order to incline them, by the Fear and Dread of the Laws, to return to the Church which they had left. I don't perceive the Difference he finds between forcing and inclining a Person to any Thing, by the Dread of Laws and Punishments. We have already seen by the Execution of Priscillian, as related by Sulpitius Severus, that it is not fitting to employ Severity and Rigour to extirpate Heresies. No Person is induced to enlighten his Mind by the Dread of the Laws; so far from it, that we find that in all those Countries where the Inquisition is established, every one is afraid of knowing too much. There, when a Layman is seen to inquire assiduously into his Religion, he becomes immediately suspected; and as it is of dangerous Consequence to a Person to be knowing, in case they have but the least Suspicion that he has imbibed fewer Prejudices than the common People, the Consequence of this will be, that this Man, to preserve himself from Ruin, shall act the Part of a Hypocrite, and mask himself, but will immediately throw it off the Moment he thinks himself out of the Reach of the Inquisitors. When once an Italian gets safe to London, Florence, Paris, Lisbon, or Amsterdam, he becomes quite another Creature. This wretched Policy has produced a great Number of Atheists, who look upon Religion as no other than a mere Contrivance of the Court of Rome; and who, for fear of being one Day convicted of Unbelief, write, in order to screen themselves, upon the Immortality of the Soul, and on other Subjects which they believe nothing of; and all this only (in case they should happen to be prosecuted upon that Account) that they may make use of this as a Handle, in order to prove that they have done their utmost to demonstrate those very Things, which they are accused of denying. The Parallel between the Practice of the antient Church, and that of the Inquisitors, with respect to Heretics, is one of the best Articles in these Memoirs; 'tis scandalous for the Inquisition to dispense with those Laws, which Justice, Humanity, and the Principles of Christianity, have prescribed to all Tribunals in general. But this Parallel was already drawn in the History of the Inquisition, and its Origin, in Page 92. & seq. of the Edition printed in 1693.

BOOK II. This abounds with faithful Extracts, copied verbatim from the Treatise above-mentioned; but the Reader would have been more obliged to the Epitomizer, had he given him the Particulars of the Inquisition of Venice. As this wise Republic has restrained the ambitious Tyranny of Priests, she is thereby less subject to the Caprices of the Inquisitors, than those Nations among whom it is established. This Difference is so great, that it deserves to be shewn more at large than the Author of the Memoirs has done, who has only given us a few indigested Hints on that Head. To supply this Defect, we shall present the Reader with the thirty nine Chapters or Statutes, extracted from the same Work, and compared with the Italian of Father Paul.

STATUTES

STATUTES to be observed by the INQUISITION at Venice.

I.

THREE Senators ſhall be always deputed to aſſiſt in Venice, in all the Judgments, Actions, and Proceedings of the Inquiſition; and as the ſeveral Cities which are ſubject to it muſt regulate themſelves after the Example of the capital City; in all ſuch Places where the Inquiſition is eſtabliſhed, inſtead of the three Senators, the Rectors of the ſeveral Cities ſhall aſſiſt at all the Judgments of the Inquiſition, by virtue of their Office. Beſides the Confirmation of this Statute by antient Cuſtom, and ſeveral Decrees of the Senate, the Senate has expreſly agreed to the ſame by a Concordate made between Julian III. and the Republic, Anno 1551.

II.

In caſe that in thoſe Cities ſubject to the Capital, any Rector is prevented from aſſiſting at the judicatory Proceedings of the Inquiſition, then the Podeſtat's Vicar ſhall be preſent in their Stead; and in caſe this latter cannot be there, the Rector ſhall be oblig'd to depute a Counſellor or ſome other Magiſtrate to aſſiſt therein. Decreed in the Council of Ten, the 29th of November, Anno 1548.

III.

In caſe an Aſſiſtant has any Affair or Tranſaction with the Court of Rome, wherein his Intereſt is concerned, ſuch Aſſiſtant is forbid to intermeddle with the Affairs of the Inquiſition in any Manner whatſoever; in this Caſe it devolves on his Collegue, or to the ſenior great Chamberlain, in caſe there happens to be but one Rector in the City, and that he had any Tranſaction with the Court of Rome. Thus decreed in the Council of Ten, the 9th of June 1574.

IV.

The Perſons appointed to aſſiſt in the judiciary Proceedings of the Inquiſitions, are forbid to intermeddle in any Manner whatſoever, either with preparing the Trials or Sentences which are pronounced, but are only to attend very carefully to every Thing tranſacted therein, and are only to act on four different Occaſions.

1. When the Affair is of ſo important a Nature as to affect the Honour of God, the Good of the Church, the Extirpation of Hereſy, or the Puniſhment of ſome very heinous Crime; in theſe Caſes they are commanded immediately to ſee that the Sentences pronounced by the Inquiſitors be put in Execution, and be aſſiſtant therein to the utmoſt of their Power.

2. In caſe that the Inquiſitors, upon pretence of performing the Duties of their Employment, and of puniſhing ſuch Crimes as fall under their Cognizance, ſhould do any Thing that may be prejudicial to the Authority of the civil Magiſtrate, and the public Peace; or that may tend to the Scandal and Oppreſſion of the Subjects of the Republic; ſuch as aſſiſt in their Proſecutions in her Name, muſt bring them to Reaſon, and oblige them to act conformable to the Rules of Juſtice and Equity; but in caſe their Endeavours herein happen to be fruſtrated, they muſt put a ſtop to the Execution, till ſuch Time as the Prince has had notice of all that has been tranſacted, and has ſent his Orders how they are to proceed.

3. If they ſhould debate upon any Subject, which they ſuſpect may tend to leſſen the Authority of the State, or the Oppreſſion of the People, they muſt ſo order Matters, as to get the Execution thereof ſuſpended, till ſuch Time as they have informed the Prince of it, and received his Anſwer.

4. If it ſo happen, that the Inquiſitors ſhould be negligent in the Exerciſe of their Functions, and proceed too ſlowly in the Puniſhment of Heretics, ſo that they may have Reaſon to fear, it would thereby give them an Opportunity of growing more numerous, the Aſſiſtants are bound in Duty to admoniſh the Inquiſitors to perform theirs; and in caſe it ſhould not proceed from Want of Inclination, but Power, they muſt inform the Prince thereof, and procure his Orders for that Purpoſe, and in caſe it be neceſſary, greater Services than uſual.

V.

Whoever aſſiſts, in the Name of the Republic, at the judiciary Proceedings of the Inquiſition, is forbid to take an Oath of Fidelity; of Secrecy, or of what Nature ſoever to the Inquiſitors, or any other eccleſiaſtical Judge, though they are obliged to both, but by virtue of that Secrecy and Fidelity they owe their Prince. Thus decreed in the Senate the 5th of September, 1609.

VI.

In conſequence of the foregoing Statute, they, in quality of Officers of the Republic, are obliged to give the Senate an Account from Time to Time, of whatſoever important Matters are tranſacted in the Inquiſition. Thus decreed in the Senate the 22d of April, 1643.

VII.

When any Inquiſitor dies, or any Removal is to be made among them, they ſhall immediately give Advice thereof to the Prince, and the Ambaſſador of the Republic at Rome, to the End that he may exclude all ſuſpected Perſons from being elected Inquiſitors. Thus reſolved in the Senate the 18th of October, 1612.

VIII.

No new Inquiſitor ſhall be admitted, without the Approbation of the Prince, and producing a Patent to that Effect. Thus decreed in the Senate the Day and Year above-mentioned.

IX.

The Aſſiſtants muſt be preſent at all the Proſecutions which are carried on by the Inquiſition, as well againſt the Laity as the Clergy, both ſecular and regular, from what Place ſoever the Informations may have been ſent, and before whomſoever they may have been depoſed. This was firſt decreed by the Council of Ten, the 30th of June, 1568. and by the Senate the 1ſt of September, 1609. and the 9th of Auguſt, 1613.

X. The

X.

The Aſſiſtants muſt be preſent, not only at the Sentences of all Proſecutions, but at every Thing that may any way relate to them, ſuch as Summons, Writs for Seizure, Impriſonment, Hearing of Witneſſes, Torturing, Abjuration, Abſolution, and in general, at whatever is tranſacted from the Time of the Impeachment to the paſſing Sentence. Thus reſolved in the Senate the 9th of Auguſt 1603, and the 5th of September 1609.

XI.

The Aſſiſtants cannot abſent themſelves from any Proceedings of the Inquiſition, upon any Pretence ſoever, tho' they appear to them of never ſo little Conſequence; nor can they give leave to have any Thing tranſacted in their Abſence. The Senate has declared, that to grant any Thing of this Nature, would exceed the Bounds of their Authority. Thus decreed the 5th of September 1609.

XII.

That if any Proſecution ſhall be prepared, or any other Proceedings carried on in their Abſence, they ſhall look upon the whole as null, and put a Stop to the Execution of them. All they can promiſe, is, that the whole Proceſs may be begun again in their Preſence. Thus determined in the Senate the 18th of January 1591, and ſignified to the Pope's Nuncio the 8th of June 1591.

XIII.

They ſhall not ſuffer any Informations to be made in their Defence, that relate to any Trial out of the Venetian Territories. The Pope deſiring this Article might be granted him, was refuſed by the Senate the 9th of March 1560.

XIV.

They ſhall not only refuſe to permit the carrying on of any Suit, of what kind ſoever, in their Abſence; but ſhall take care that the Form of Words following be inſerted at the Beginning of all the Acts; the moſt illuſtrious and moſt excellent Lords N. N. being preſent and aſſiſtant. This is an expreſs Article of the Concordate made between Julius II. and the Republic Anno 1551.

XV.

The Aſſiſtants ſhall not ſuffer the Inquiſitors to inſert any Statutes made out of the Dominions of the State, in their Proſecutions. But in caſe there come from Rome, or any other Place, any good Statute, which does not interfere with the Authority of the Republic, the Inquiſitors of the State may put ſuch Statute in Execution, provided they proceed therein according to the uſual Form and Cuſtom of the Country, by drawing up the new Decree in the Name of the Inquiſitors of the Place, in Preſence of the public Aſſiſtants, and without once mentioning that the Decree came from Rome, no otherwiſe than if the Inquiſitors of the Place had drawn it up themſelves. This was decreed in the Senate the 7th of September 1590.

XVI.

They ſhall prevent all Proſecutions and Priſoners from being carried out of the Dominions of the State, tho' their Accomplices ſhould be in ſuch Places, without firſt giving giving an Account thereof to the Prince, and having his Orders for it. Thus decreed with Relation to Priſoners by the Council of Ten, the 27th of June 1567; and with reſpect to Proſecutions, by the Senate the 8th of July 1589.

XVII.

No Aſſiſtant can be a Conſulter of the Inquiſition, thoſe Employments being incompatible.

XVIII.

The Aſſiſtant cannot allow the Inquiſitors to grant Writs for ſeizing any Perſon ſoever; unleſs it apppears by the Informations made in their Preſence, that the Crime is of ſuch a Nature as to fall under the Cognizance of the Inquiſition. Thus reſolved in the Senate the 5th of July 1597. If it be a dubious Caſe, they ſhall give Notice thereof to the Prince, and, in the mean Time, the Suit ſhall be ſuſpended, and ſhall wait for his Orders. Thus decreed in the Senate the 23d of Auguſt 1597.

XIX.

They ſhall not ſuffer the Inquiſitors to proſecute Wizards and Conjurers, unleſs they are manifeſtly guilty of Hereſy. This Statute agrees with the Cannon Law, and the expreſs Reſolution made in the Senate on this Head, the 10th of October 1598. If the Caſe is dubious, it ſhall be reſerved to the Ordinary Judges; which is agreeable to the Canon Law, and the Opinion of the Doctors.

XX.

The ſame ſhall be obſerved with reſpect to Inchantments and Witchcraft, of which they ſhall not allow the Inquiſitors to take Cognizance, except that ſome of the Sacraments may be thereby abuſed, and conſequently ſome Mark or Token of Hereſy given; that if over and above the Suſpicion of Hereſy, Death, Sickneſs, or Madneſs ſhould enſue to any Perſon therefrom, the Inquiſitors ſhall judge of the Suſpicion of Hereſy, and the civil Magiſtrate of the Evil which may have proceeded from the Enchantment, and the two Sentences ſhould be executed by the two Tribunals that pronounce them. Thus decreed by the great Council the 28th of October 1610.

XXI.

Nor ſhall the Inquiſitors take Cognizance of Blaſphemers, that being the Prerogative of the civil Magiſtrate, agreeable to the Tenor of the Laws both civil and canonical, and the Practice of all Chriſtendom. But in caſe, by the Blaſphemy utter'd, any Token or Suſpicion of Hereſy may be given, the Inquiſitors ſhall judge of the Token, and the civil Magiſtrate of the Blaſphemy. In this Manner two Sentences will be paſs'd upon the Priſoner; the one of the holy Office with reſpect to ſpiritual, and the other of the civil Magiſtrate with regard to corporal Puniſhment. Thus decreed by the Senate the 11th of November 1595. The ſame ſhall be obſerved with reſpect to all who ſhall ſtrike holy Images, or throw Stones at them; or ſuch as ſhall publickly ridicule holy Things. Thus decreed in the Senate the 8th and 15th of May 1599.

XXII.

Neither ſhall the Inquiſition take cognizance of thoſe who marry two Wives, except there be a Token or Suſpicion of Hereſy; in this Caſe the Inquiſitors ſhall judge of the Token, Token, and the civil Magiſtrate of the Bigamy; that in caſe there be neither Token or Suſpicion of the Hereſy, the civil Magiſtrate may take cognizance of it. Thus decreed in the Senate the 8th of June 1591, the 8th of Auguſt 1592, the 31ſt of July 1598, and the 23d of March.

XXIII.

The Inquiſitors ſhall not be allowed in any Manner whatſoever to judge in Caſes of Uſury, the canon Law referring theſe Cauſes to the civil Magiſtrate.

XXIV.

Jews, and all other Infidels, ſhall not be ſubject to the Judgment of the Inquiſition; but what Crime ſoever they may be guilty of, Recourſe ſhall be had to the civil Magiſtrate, who ſhall puniſh them with more or leſs Severity, in Proportion to the Enormity of the Crime. Thus reſolved by the Senate the 28th of January, and the 12th of of October 1591, agreeable to the Decrees of the Pope.

XXV.

The Inquiſitors ſhall not be Judges over the Greeks, nor of any other People within the Dominions of the Republic, who have been allowed their ſeveral Prelates, and permitted to live according to their reſpective Cuſtoms. In criminal Caſes, not excepting ſuch as relate to Religion, the civil Magiſtrate only ſhall judge them; and ſhall puniſh them with more or leſs Severity in Proportion to the Enormity of their Crimes, agreeable to the conſtant Practice of the Republic, and the Anſwer which was made to the Pope's Nuncio by the Senate the 4th of September 1609.

XXVI.

If any Subject of the Republic ſhall have ſettled himſelf on the other Side of the Mountains, for the ſake of Trade or any other Buſineſs, and having there committed a Crime, ſhould not be informed againſt at Rome or elſewhere, the Aſſiſtant in ſuch caſe, ſhall not ſuffer him to be ſummoned by the public Cryer, or by an Inſtrument left at the Houſe of his Relations: But the Deciſion of it ſhall be left to the Judges of the Places where that Crime was committed. Thus reſolved in the Senate the third of September 1610.

XXVII.

The Goods and Chattels of all ſuch as ſhall have been condemned by the Inquiſition for Hereſy, ſhall not be confiſcated to the Profit of the ſaid Inquiſition, but ſhall be left to their Children and other lawful Heirs, with the moſt expreſs Prohibition not to give any Part of them to the Perſons condemned. Thus determined by the Council of Ten, the 5th of November 1568.

XXVIII.

The Inquiſitors may not publiſh the Bull of any Pope, nor any Ordinance of the Inquiſition of Rome, whether of antient or modern Date, without the Leave of the Prince firſt obtain'd for that Purpoſe. Thus decreed by the Senate the 2d of Auguſt 1607.

XXIX.

As to ſuch Books as are prohibited by the Court of Rome, the Aſſiſtants ſhall not allow the Inquiſitors to publiſh within the Territories of the Republic, any other Catalogue of prohibited Books, than that of the Year 1595, agreeable to the Concordate made between Pope Clement VIII. and the Republic, the 24th of Auguſt 1596.

XXX.

The Inquiſitors are not permitted to judge the Officers of the Cuſtoms, Vintners, Inn-Keepers, or Butchers who ſell Meat in Lent. All ſuch Perſons ſhall be judged only by the civil Magiſtrate, to whom Recourſe ſhall be had in caſe of Neceſſity. Thus reſolved in the Senate the 5th of September 1609.

XXXI.

By Virtue of the ſame Decree, the Inquiſitor ſhall not require an Oath of any Artificer whatever, nor puniſh him for ſuch Faults as he may have committed in his Art or Myſtery; becauſe theſe Things come under the Cognizance of the civil Magiſtrate.

XXXII.

The Inquiſitors ſhall not be permitted to draw up any Monitory againſt the ſeveral Companies of Tradeſmen, nor againſt the Magiſtrates in Affairs relating to the Adminiſtration of Juſtice; but if there be any Subject of Complaint againſt theſe, the Aſſiſtants ſhall be Judges of the ſame. Thus decreed by the Senate the 3d of September 1568.

XXXIII.

The Form and Tenor of the Edict, which the Inquiſitors uſually publiſh at their Entrance into their Poſts, ſhall be reduced under ſix Heads, and to theſe the Inquiſitors are not allowed to make any Addition.

1. Againſt ſuch as are Heretics, or who knowing any Perſon to be ſo, forbear to impeach them.

2. Againſt thoſe who ſet up Conferences and Aſſemblies in Prejudice of the Catholic Religion.

3. Againſt thoſe who celebrate Maſs, or who preſume to hear Confeſſions, without being duly qualified for that Purpoſe.

4. Againſt ſuch Blaſphemers as give any Suſpicion of Hereſy.

5. Againſt thoſe who prevent and interrupt the Juriſdiction of the Inquiſition; who annoy the Officers, and who, with reſpect to the Employment, either threaten or abuſe the Informers and Witneſſes upon that Account: Or, in other Caſes; ſuch, for inſtance, for having annoy'd an Officer of the Inquiſition in Caſes wherein their Employments were not concerned; this ſhall be judged by the ordinary Magiſtrate.

6. And laſt, Againſt all who either keep, print, or cauſe to be printed, any Books that treat of Hereſy, or are written in Oppoſition to the eſtabliſh'd Religion.

In

In caſe the Inquiſition is for proceeding farther, and for adding any new Decree, or for inſerting any other Clauſe over and above what is expreſſed in the ſix Articles above-mentioned, the Aſſiſtants ſhall not ſuffer him to do the ſame, but ſhall give notice thereof to the Prince. Thus reſolved in the Senate with the Conſent of the holy See, the 23d of May 1608.

XXXIV.

If any Crime, the Cognizance whereof belongs to the Inquiſition, ſhall be committed in ſuch Caſtles and Villages where the Inquiſition is not eſtabliſhed, the Inquiſition of the City, to which the ſaid Places are ſubordinate, ſhall judge the ſaid Crime in the Preſence of the Aſſiſtants of the ſeveral Places.

XXXV.

If any Crime ſhould be committed in Places ſubject to Juriſdictions, the Spiritual whereof ſhould be ſituated in Places different from the Temporal, the Cognizance thereof ſhall belong to the Inquiſition eſtabliſhed in that Place where the ſpiritual Juſtice reſides, and the Aſſiſtant of the ſaid Place ſhall be obliged to be preſent at the Sentence. Thus decreed by the Council of Ten, the 13th of March 1555.

XXXVI.

If any Perſon impeached, ſhall, after Summons, obſtinately refuſe to appear before the Inquiſition; and that, according to the Practice of the holy Office, he be declared a Heretic, and delivered over to the ſecular Arm; the Magiſtrate ſhall be obliged to baniſh him, either for a Term of Years or for ever, from all the Dominions and Places belonging to the Republic. Thus reſolved by the Council of Ten, the 23d of December 1563.

XXXVII.

Such Perſons as having been condemned by the Inquiſition, either to a temporary or perpetual Impriſonment, ſhall have eſcaped from the Priſons of the ſame, ſhall be baniſhed by the Magiſtrate, either for a limited Term of Years or for ever, as he in Conſcience ſhall think moſt neceſſary. Thus reſolved in the Council of Ten, the 7th of April 1564.

XXXVIII.

Such Perſons as having been ſummoned to appear to anſwer for their heretical Tenets out of the Dominions of the Republic, ſhall have retired to ſuch Places for their own Security, ſhall be condemned by the Magiſtrates to four Years Impriſonment, and be afterwards baniſhed from all the Dominions and Places ſubject to the Republic; which however ſhall not hinder the Inquiſition from condemning them to a greater Puniſhment. Thus reſolved by the Council of Ten, the 22d of April 1568.

XXXIX.

The Inquiſitors are impowered to puniſh Slanderers, and ſuch Wretches as ſhall have made falſe Depoſitions before their Tribunal, provided they can be convicted of Falſhood or Untruth, by the Proceſs itſelf; but if to effect this, it be neceſſary to begin the Proſecution a-new, the Aſſiſtants ſhall not ſuffer it to be carried on by the Inquiſitors, and ſhall cauſe this freſh Proſecution to be transferred to the ordinary Judges; this being juſt juſt and equitable, according to the Opinion of the Doctors, who had been conſulted upon this Article.

THESE are the thirty-nine famous Chapters or Statutes, by which the Inquiſition is now govern'd in all the Dominions of the Republic of Venice, and which confines its Authority to much narrower Limits than it enjoys in all other Places where it is eſtabliſhed. The Inquiſitors have frequently complained of this; have been ſupported and encouraged therein by the Court of Rome, and have ſet every Engine at work, in order to get all or Part of them annulled; but to no Purpoſe. As the Senate have always been perſuaded, that in caſe they ſhould make the leaſt Conceſſions on this Head, the ſpiritual Power would at laſt deſtroy the temporal, they have for that Reaſon always aſſerted and maintained, even the moſt inconſiderable of thoſe Statutes, with the utmoſt Rigour and Reſolution.

IT is however obſerved, that the Senate have neglected to add one farther Condition to them, which would certainly have been granted, had they inſiſted upon the Neceſſity of it; a Condition of ſuch mighty Conſequence, that there is juſt Room for Wonder, how ſo great a Number of Perſons, and all of them endued with the moſt conſummate Wiſdom, could have overlook'd it.

IN Spain the Inquiſitors are all Spaniards; and in the Milaneſe the Natives of that Country are not excluded the holy Office. Now the Venetians might very juſtly, and indeed ought to have inſiſted, that no Foreigner ſhould be permitted to enjoy any Employment in the Inquiſition eſtabliſhed in their Territories. They have indeed applied a Remedy to this Overſight, by obliging the Inquiſitors, who are ſent to them, to obtain from the Doge Letters Patents, directed to the ſeveral Rectors or principal Magiſtrates of the ſeveral Places, without which they cannot either be received, or perform the leaſt Function of their Employments, in any ſuch Place; for whenever the Doge does not approve of an Inquiſitor, he either wearies him out with repeated Delays, or even refuſes his Grant, without which that of the Pope is wholly uſeleſs.

BUT as the Court of Rome have never been able to remove the antient Boundaries which had thus been ſet to their Authority, they have in revenge excluded the Subjects of the Republic from all the Inquiſitions of Italy and the Pope's Territories.

IN reading theſe Articles we find, 1. That the Inquiſition of Venice is of a mix'd Nature, i. e. compoſed of Clergy and Laity; the former whereof are Judges, and the latter no more than Aſſiſtants. 2. That it is ſubordinate to the Republic and the Senate, and not to the Court of Rome, as the reſt, which is manifeſt from the IIId, Vth, VIth, and XVth Statutes. One remarkable Circumſtance is, that theſe Statutes were not made at once, but at different Times, according as the Senate obſerved that the Court of Rome incroached on the Rights of the Republic.

As the Lay-Inquiſitors are no more than Aſſiſtants, we nevertheleſs find that they are impowered to oppoſe whatever they think may interfere with the Privileges of the Republic. Pope Julius III. imagined he had made a complete Conqueſt, when he prevailed ſo far as to have it expreſſed in the Concordate, that the Clauſe, The moſt illuſtrious Lords N. N. being preſent and aſſiſtant, ſhould always be inſerted. Nevertheleſs the Court of Rome have ſince found, that what they thought a Victory was a real Detriment, and have therefore employ'd every Artifice to get this Clauſe annulled, though to no Purpoſe.

GREGORY IV. declared by a Bull, that as Hereſy was cognizable only in the eccleſiaſtical Court, the civil Magiſtrate had therefore no Buſineſs to intermeddle in it, notwithſtanding the great Number of Cuſtoms to the contrary, which even the Popes themſelves had approved. The Senate maintained, and very juſtly, that as the very Nature of a Concordate ſuppoſes the Conſent of both Parties, conſequently it cannot be made void but by the Parties contracting; and that to maintain, that an Affair which had been agreed upon between two Princes under reciprocal Obligations, ſhould nevertheleſs depend upon the Will of one of them, implied a Contradiction. However, Matters were carried no farther, and the Republic of Venice has been obliged to ſtand eternally upon her Guard, to employ the moſt prudent, political Maxims, and to be unſhaken in her Reſolutions, to prevent the Court of Rome from uſurping an abſolute Authority over the Inquiſition at Venice.

BOOK the third, Chap. I. II. III. & ſeq. This Book is tranſcribed from the Treatiſe above-mentioned, and begins in the Original at Page 166.

PAGE 238. And though Jews, Mahometans, and other Infidels, are not ſubject to the Inquiſition, &c. I ſhall on this Occaſion relate a Story which happened at Rome. A Dutch Anabaptiſt going to that City upon ſome Affair or other, delivered himſelf with too much Freedom on the Principles of his Religion, upon which he was impeached to the Inquiſitors, who immediately ſent their Officers to ſeize him. There was no Occaſion to employ Torture to make him confeſs he did not acknowledge the Pope's Infallibility, nor allow all thoſe Tenets which a Man is required to aſſent implicitly to at Rome. They were juſt going to put him to Death, when one of the Inquiſitors taking Pity on his Youth, reſolved to ſave him. In one of the Examinations the Priſoner was asked, Whether or no he believed in ſeveral Articles of Faith then mentioned? To which he anſwered in the Negative. Whereupon the Inquiſitor who was prejudiced in his Favour, thought proper to ask him, Whether he had ever been baptized? To which he alſo anſwered, No. His Friend the Inquiſitor hearing this, cauſed him to be declared a Heathen, and as ſuch, not ſubject to the Inquiſition; ſo that our Dutchman got off by ſubmitting to the Ceremony of Baptiſm, and the being catechized.

PAGE 240. 'Tis ſurprizing to conſider the forlorn Condition of a Perſon who falls under this Misfortune, &c. This can proceed from nothing but a Dread of the Barbarities of the Inquiſitors. In all other Tribunals, the Relations and Friends of the Priſoner are allowed to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to ſerve him, and to ſet every Engine at work, either to prove his Innocence, or extenuate his Crime. 'Tis ſcandalous to conſider that Prieſts, who ought to be ſo many Angels of Peace, have leſs Humanity than the Laity, and ſhould be leſs indulgent than the Pagans, who never deprived the Unfortunate of this Recourſe, eſpecially till after they were found guilty, and Sentence was pronounced againſt them. We have already ſeen in the foregoing Remarks, that St. Martin oppoſed the Puniſhment of Priſcillian. 'Twas to no Purpoſe that Ithacius the Biſhop, who had impeached this Hereſiarch, and others who had contributed to his Condemnation, implored the Protection of Maximus. In vain an Aſſembly of Biſhops ſeemed to give a Sanction to this Perſecutor, by ſtill joining in Communion with him. They had but juſt before extorted from the Emperor (a Man of too eaſy and calm a Temper, by the Advice of the Prieſts, to make uſe of the Expreſſion of [a] Sulpitius Severus) a Decree, by which a Number of armed Men were impowered to go over into Spain in ſearch for Heretics, and to deprive them of their Lives and Poſſeſſions; but the Arrival of St. Martin at Triers threw them into the utmoſt Conſternation; they foreſaw that he would certainly cenſure their Proceedings, and condemn them abſolutely. To prevent this, they endeavour'd to procure an Order to forbid his Entrance into that City; they employ'd the vileſt Artifices to prevent Maximus from giving them a Hearing, well knowing it would be to their Prejudice; however St. Martin refuſed to join in Communion with them, notwithſtanding the Synod had juſtified the Conduct of Ithacius. 'Tis true, indeed, that being terrified, becauſe Maximus, upon finding him inflexible, would have put two Officers to Death, in whoſe Favour St. Martin interceded, he conſented to join in Communion with Ithacius and his Accomplices, upon condition that the Lives of thoſe two Officers ſhould be ſpared, and that the Tribunes who had been ſent into Spain ſhould be recalled; all which was granted him. On the Morrow he was preſent at the Conſecration of Felix the Biſhop, and communicated that Day with the Followers of Ithacius; but being required to confirm this Communion in Writing, he refuſed to do it, and looked upon the Complaiſance he had ſhewed only for two Hours, as a great Crime, which afflicted him ſo much, that he was reſolved to break off all farther Correſpondence with that Party. Let us make a Reflection or two on this Incident, which is found in an Author of undoubted Credit, and afterwards compare it with the Maxims of the Inquiſition; we then ſhall find, that Ithacius, according to the modern Principles, was an illuſtrious Biſhop, and zealous for the Purity of Faith; and that in an Age like ours, he would infallibly have been made a Cardinal, and become a worthy Member of the Congregation of the holy Office. But for poor St. Martin, he, as a Favourer of Heretics, would have immediately been confined in the Dungeons of the Inquiſition, and would never have come out from thence, but in order to go to Execution. And as we may probably ſuppoſe that this Saint, who was not to be wrought upon either by the Favours or Threats of Maximus, nor drawn away by the Authority of a corrupted Synod, would have aſſerted his Opinion to the laſt, he conſequently would not have been allowed the Favour of fuego revolto, but have been treated as a hardened and impenitent Heretic. 'Tis well that the Inquiſitors confine their Studies to the Caſuiſts and ſuch like Authors; for the Hiſtory of the Church would often force a Bluſh from them, were they to examine their Conſciences, though ever ſo ſlightly, by the Light thereof.

BOOK III. Chap. 3. The Author of the Memoirs here furniſhes us with ſeveral very curious Particulars. But as M. de Vayrac has attempted to give us the Proceedings of the Spaniſh Inquiſition, and even to juſtify them, it may not be improper to quote what he ſays upon that Head, as we find it in his Preſent State of Spain, Book IV.

" I HAVE not yet made the leaſt Mention of the Inquiſition, and feel myſelf oppreſſed, " as it were, with the Weight of the Subject I am going to handle. On one Side I " am thoroughly ſenſible of the Danger to which I expoſe myſelf, in caſe I ſhould, " through Inadvertency, let drop any Expreſſion that might give never ſo little Offence " to this formidable Tribunal; a Tribunal which commands ſo much Awe and Reſpect, that Mankind think they can expreſs it by no other Manner, than a religious " and myſterious Silence. But on the other Side, as I am to give my Readers a compleate Idea of the preſent State of Spain, I am thereby indiſpenſably obliged to inform " him equally, in whatever relates to the eccleſiaſtical, no leſs than the civil Government; and here, in what Manner muſt I begin, in order to invalidate the Calumny " which has ſo frequently been thrown upon an awful Tribunal? a Tribunal that claims " the Veneration of all good Chriſtians, and which the ſovereign Pontiffs, and the " Catholic Kings, have always conſidered as the Shield and Defence of the Chriſtian " Religion.

" I MUST

" I MUST own, that were thoſe who exclaim againſt it, to conſider the Quality of " the Members of it, they would entertain quite other Notions of it. They would " find it headed by a Cardinal, at leaſt a Prelate of the higheſt Rank; that its Mem- " bers were Perſons of the higheſt Character in the Adminiſtration, both eccleſiaſtical " and civil; when probably they would not have the Boldneſs to deſcribe them as a " Company of barbarous and implacable Judges, inclined rather to puniſh the Inno- " cent, than pardon the Guilty; greedy of poſſeſſing the Wealth of ſuch unhappy Per- " ſons as fall into their Hands, rather than zealous for their Salvation, and more in- " clined to keep up a groteſque fantaſtic Devotion, than to diffuſe a Spirit of ſolid " Piety. They would not always repreſent them, as is their Cuſtom, with an Arm up- " lifted, ready to hurl the Thunder on the Heads of thoſe unhappy Creatures. They " would ſay in themſelves, 'tis impoſſible to conceive how, in a State governed by " Laws, and in which the Chriſtian Religion is profeſſed, a Tribunal could poſſibly " have been erected, whoſe Proſecutions, according to them, are directly levelled at " the Deſtruction of Mankind, and calculated to overturn all Order, Law, Juſtice, and " Humanity. But from an unaccountable Fatality, whether it be that the Writers on " this Subject have copied from unfaithful Memoirs, or have confounded a holy and " ſalutary Severity with a Barbarity of the moſt criminal Nature, 'tis certain they de- " ſcribe the holy Office as a Place where there is no Safety for Riches or Innocence, " becauſe of the crying Injuſtice that is committed therein. But the moſt deplorable " Circumſtance is this: Prejudice has taken ſo deep Root, that I almoſt deſpair of ever " making my Countrymen acknowledge, that an Inquiſitor is diſtinguiſhed by Cir- " cumſpection, Wiſdom, Juſtice, Integrity, and ſuch-like Virtues. I yet will endea- " vour to make this appear; and to effect it, believe it will be proper to treat upon the " Inſtitution of the holy Office, the Judges which compoſe it, and the Methods of " its Proceedings.

" KING Ferdinand the Catholic, and Iſabella his Conſort, having manifeſt Proofs that " the Moors, by a feigned Converſion, and the Jews, from the moſt execrable Policy " and a ſordid Spirit of Intereſt, pretended to live as Chriſtians in outward Appearance, " though at the ſame Time the former ſecretly adhered to the deteſtable Tenets of " Mahomet, and the latter followed the Principles of the Jewiſh Law, both to the great " Scandal of Believers; who by not guarding ſufficiently againſt the ſecret Enemies of " the Faith and Doctrine of Chriſt Jeſus, did themſelves fall into the moſt dreadful " Diſorders by their Communication with them: Theſe Monarchs, I ſay, reſolved to " check the Progreſs of ſuch a Multitude of Abominations, by ſetting up an Inquiſi- " tion in their Dominions, (as had been practiſed in France in the Time of the Albi- " genſes) in order to revive the holy Severity, which the eccleſiaſtical Laws have enacted " againſt Heretics, Moors, Jews, Apoſtates, Atheiſts, impious and ſuperſtitious " Wretches. For this Purpoſe they declared to his Holineſs, the urgent Neceſſity there " was of puniſhing theſe Prevaricators ſeverely, in order to prevent the ill Example " they gave, from corrupting any longer the Purity of the Faith of ſuch as publicly " profeſſed the Doctrine of the Church of Rome; and the Pope having granted them " leave to erect an Inquiſition in Spain, they laid the Foundation thereof in 1478. " And on this the ſovereign Pontiffs have, by different Bulls, devolved all their Power " and Authority in whatever relates to the Catholic Faith, and alſo that there ſhould " lie no Appeal from its Sentence: And on the other Side, Kings have, in its Favour, " given up all their Authority in whatever relates to the judging of the Confiſcations " of all ſuch as are convicted of Hereſy, Idolatry, Judaiſm, Apoſtacy, Atheiſm, Irre- " ligion, Superſtition, &c.

" THIS

" THIS Tribunal is compoſed of a Preſident, with the Stile and Title of Inquiſitor-
" General, and Lieutenant of the Roman Pontiff in Spain; of ſix Counſellors, by the " Stile and Title of Apoſtolical Inquiſitors; of one Fiſcal, or Attorney-General; one
" Secretary of the Chamber, two Secretaries of the Council, one Alguaſil-Major, a " Receiver, two Reporters, four Porters, Uſhers, or Door-Keepers; a Sollicitor; and
" of ſeveral Qualificators and Conſultors, whoſe Number is not fixed, there being ſome-
" times more, and ſometimes leſs, one whereof is by Right and Title to be of the " Order of St. Dominic, by virtue of a Decree of Philip III. of the 16th of December,
" 1618. by which that Privilege is granted to that Order, but not the abſolute Govern" ment of the Council, as ſome ſpurious Writers have affirmed, and which indeed the " Generality of People take to be Fact, grounded upon a fabulous Tradition.

" THE Poſt of Inquiſitor-General is ſo eminent a Dignity, that if one of the King's " Sons was to be a Clergyman, he would not think it beneath him to fill that Place.
" This is ſo true, that I have been aſſured Philip IV. having given one of his Subjects
" the Choice either of the Archbiſhopric of Toledo, or the Employment of Inquiſitor-
" General, and finding he preferred the former, he ſaid, I have been miſtaken in my " Opinion of the Capacity and Talents of this Man, ſince he has choſe rather to be Arch-
" biſhop of Toledo, than Inquiſitor-General. And indeed his Power is ſo abſolute and " unlimited, that his Catholic Majeſty cannot boaſt of having one Subject in his Do" minions who is exempt from it. He only, in conjunction with his Majeſty, has the " filling up of Vacancies which happen among the Inquiſitors, and the latter can never " confer them without his Holineſs's Conſent. 'Tis he who nominates, with the " Conſent of the Council, to the ſeveral Poſts of ſuch Tribunals of the Inquiſition as
" are ſubordinate to the ſupreme Council, which are eſtabliſhed at Sevil, Toledo, Gra-
" nada, Corduba, Cuenca, Validdolid, Murcia, Llerada, Logreno, St. Jago, Saragoſſa, " Valentia, Barcelona, Majorca, Sardinia, the Canary-Iſlands, Mexico, Cartagena, and " Lima.

" EACH ſubaltern Tribunal conſiſts of three Inquiſitors, two Secretaries, one Al-
" guaſil, one Receiver, a certain Number of Qualificators and Conſultors, with whom
" the Inquiſitors adviſe upon any Affairs that happen, deſcribe or characterize Pro-
" poſitions, examine and correct ſuch Books as are printed either in Spain or " Abroad.

" ALL the Officers of the ſupreme Council, and of the other Tribunals of the In" quiſition, are obliged to give authentic Teſtimonies of their good Life, Capacity, and
" the Pureneſs of their Blood, i. e. to prove that none of their Families were ever Here" tics, Moors, or Jews.

" I HAVE indeed been ſometimes ſurprized, that the Inquiſitors ſhould ſeize upon " Perſons on a bare Information, or on Signs and Tokens; but I was no longer ſo,
" when I was informed that the holy Office never proceeded to that Act of Severity
" without having firſt made the moſt diligent Enquiry into the Character of the In-" former, and taken the utmoſt Care that the Informations made, were not the Reſult
" of Hatred or Revenge; and indeed they frequently give notice to one who is im" peach'd, either to reform his Conduct in caſe he be guilty, or clear himſelf if he be " innocent. Beſides, we are to obſerve, that the Law of Retaliation is made uſe of " againſt the Informer; but unluckily ſuch as follow this Trade take great Care to " conceal their Names.

" IT

" IT may be proper to acquaint the Reader, by the Way, that thoſe who affirm that " ſuch Perſons as are impriſoned by the holy Office are obliged to gueſs at the Crime " whereof they are accuſed, aſperſe that Tribunal unjuſtly; ſince 'tis notorious, that the " Moment a Priſoner is ſeized, they begin to prepare his Trial, and ſend him a Coun- " ſellor and an Attorney to defend his Cauſe. I muſt indeed own, that they ſuf- " fer a great deal in their Impriſonment; but on the other Side, as they are never " ſeized but for the moſt flagrant Crimes, we muſt not wonder if they are kept under a " very ſtrict Confinement.

" WE are to obſerve, that the Subaltern Tribunals cannot impriſon Prieſts either " religious or ſecular; any Knights of the military Orders, or any of the Nobility, " without firſt giving notice thereof to the ſupreme Council. They are likewiſe " bound to give the ſaid Council an Account monthly of the State of ſuch Goods and " Chattels as have been confiſcated; and are obliged to make a faithful Report an- " nually of all the Cauſes they have heard, and alſo give in a Liſt of their Priſoners. " As thoſe of Majorca, Sardinia, the Canary Iſlands, and the Indies, cannot maintain a " frequent Correſpondence with the above-mentioned ſupreme Council, becauſe of their " great Diſtance from it, they never give an Account of their ſeveral Tranſactions " but once a Year. No inferior Tribunal is allow'd to ſolemnize an Act of Faith, with- " out firſt obtaining the expreſs Leave of the ſupreme Council for that Purpoſe, who, " to make it the more ſolemn, generally ſends a Counſellor thither.

" THE political Conduct both of the ſupreme Council and of the other Tribunals of " the Inquiſition, is ſurprizing and wonderful; and the moſt inviolable Secrecy is there- " in obſerved with regard to Obedience and the Exactneſs of the ſeveral Proſecutions. " The Inquiſitors, Qualificators, Conſultors, Commiſſioners, Receivers, Familiars, and " Algaufils belonging to the ſupreme Council, make an almoſt numberleſs Multitude. " They reckon upwards of 20000 Familiars in Spain only: Theſe are diſperſed up and " down the ſeveral Provinces of that Kingdom, and they accept of this Poſt rather in " a View to make a Figure in the World, and command Awe and Reſpect, than from " any intereſted Motives; which is the Reaſon why in ſo great a Number there are " ſcarce 2000 of them in actual Employments. Theſe Familiars are as ſo many Exempts, " appointed to ſuper-intend the Actions of all above them, and to ſeize upon ſuch as " are impeached.

" TO conclude, the moſt fatal Circumſtance attending thoſe who have been im- " peached to this Tribunal, is, that though they ſhould be wholly innocent, it yet " throws a blemiſh upon their Character as long as they live; and that ſuch as are con- " victed, are thereby diſqualified for ever from holding any Poſt under the Govern- " ment."

UNLUCKILY for the Inquiſition, its Apologiſt has been forced to lay aſide the Simplicity of the hiſtorical Style, and to employ the higheſt Strains of Rhetoric, in order to juſtify it. This Manner of ſetting out, plainly diſcovers the Difficulty of the Attempt; the Author ſhews he is ſenſible of it; and the Arguments he employs, in order to deſtroy the Prejudice the World entertains againſt the Inquiſition, ſeem to be a more full Juſtification than any we meet with in his Book. However, as he profeſſes a greater Love to Truth, than Reſpect to the Inquiſition, his Sincerity extorts ſuch Confeſſions from him as do no way juſtify this Tribunal. We have obſerved that he contradicts himſelf, when he ſays that the holy Office never give Orders for the ſeizing of any Perſon, without firſt making the moſt diligent Enquiry into the Character of the Informer, and taking the utmoſt Care his Depoſitions are not the Reſult of Hatred and Revenge:

venge: And a little after he owns, that unluckily ſuch as follow this Trade, take great Care to conceal their Names. Nor is there leſs Contradiction when he ſays, that as Perſons are never ſeized but for the moſt flagrant Crimes, we muſt not wonder that they are kept under a very ſtrict Confinement; Expreſſions which claſh very much with thoſe we find at the Concluſion of the ſame Chapter. The moſt fatal Circumſtance, ſays he, attending ſuch as have been impeached to this Tribunal, is, that altho' they ſhould be wholly Innocent, it yet throws a blemiſh upon their Character as long as they live; and that ſuch as are guilty, are thereby diſqualified for ever from holding any Poſt under the Government. In the whole, I do not believe this Author is ſooner to be believed, than the Writer of The Hiſtory of the Inquiſition, who has given us the Particulars of the Proceedings of that Tribunal, and who relates that the Priſoners are confined ſeveral Years before they are called to a Trial. Whoever reads the third Chapter of the third Book of the Memoirs, muſt look with Horror and Deteſtation on a Set of Eccleſiaſtics, for keeping an unhappy Wretch many Years in Suſpence, which muſt infallibly raiſe the moſt gloomy Ideas in his Mind, becauſe he is ignorant what Fate his Enemies are preparing for him.

EXPLANATION of the FIRST FIGURE.

THE firſt Plate repreſents the Hall whither the Priſoner is carried in order for Examination.

A The Inquiſitor who examines the Priſoner.

B The Secretary taking down all his Anſwers.

C The Priſoner ſitting on the Stool, with his Face turned towards a large Crucifix, and the Inquiſitor's Table.

D The Goſpel, on which he is obliged to ſwear that he will truly anſwer to every Article that ſhall be put to him.

EEE Seats for the abſent Officers.

THE fourth Chapter of theſe Memoirs muſt ſtrike all who have the leaſt Senſe of Humanity with Horror. A [a] Chriſtian Philoſopher of our Age ſaid, That Torture is a wonderful Invention, perfectly well adapted to ruin innocent Perſons of weak Conſtitutions; and to ſave the Guilty, provided they are but ſtrong and vigorous. Several learned Lawyers have thought that theſe Rigours were the Source of numberleſs Abuſes; and indeed the moſt notorious Criminals have been found to bear up under the Tortures, both ordinary and extraordinary, without making the leaſt Confeſſion; and on the other Side, ſeveral innocent Perſons have confeſſed themſelves guilty of Crimes, which, after their Deaths, were found to have been perpetrated by others. In the mean Time, as the Juſtice of all Tribunals conſiſts in judging conformable to the Laws, we cannot blame the civil Magiſtrate for not aboliſhing it after it is once eſtabliſhed; but it is ſurpriſing to conſider, that ſo ſoft and gentle a Miniſtry as that of the Goſpel, has not diverted Prieſts from adopting an Uſage which owes its Original to Paganiſm. The three kinds of Torture, which the Inquiſitors employ to extort Confeſſions, are all repreſented in the ſame Plate.

[a] La Bruyere.

Ex-

Explication of the Second FIGURE.

THE ſecond Plate repreſents à ſubterraneous Grotto, called the Place of Torments, where the Torture is given in three different Manners.

A The Inquiſitor preſent at the Torture, who puts a ſtop to it, after it has laſted an Hour, or otherwiſe when he thinks proper.

B B Two Aſſiſtants.

D D A Priſoner who ſuffers a kind of Strapado.

E E E The Tormentors raiſing the Priſoner to the Top of the Cieling, and afterwards letting him down with a Jerk within half a Foot of the Ground; by which Means his Arms are put out of Joint.

F The Bench on which the Criminal is laid, in order to ſuffer the Torture of Water.

G A Criminal in whoſe Mouth Water is poured thro' a Funnel.

H H H Servants belonging to the Inquiſition, who prepare the Water, that is to be poured thro' a Funnel.

I The Torture by Fire. The Criminal whoſe Feet are broiled in order to extort a Confeſſion from him.

K One of the Tormentors rubbing his Feet with Bacon, to make his Torments more exquiſite.

L The Phyſician of the Inquiſition, who commands the Tormentors to ſtop, when there is any Danger of the Criminal's dying under the Torture.

All the Servants who are employ'd in this dreadful Office, are muffled up in ſuch a Manner that it is impoſſible to know them again, and look like ſo many Apparitions, rather than Men.

CHAPTER the fifth of the above-mentioned Book. — The ſame Ceremonies are not always obſerved at the Reading of Proſecutions and Sentences. We may obſerve, that here it is made on a great Theatre or Scaffold, erected for that Purpoſe in Madrid, and we read in the Inquiſition of Goa, that the Auto de Fe thereof, deſcribed by Dellon, who was ſo unhappy as to be a very near Spectator of it, was celebrated in the Church of St. Francis. A learned Engliſh Gentleman, who after his Return from Italy publiſhed three Letters, printed in 1688, informs us, that the Condemnation of Molinos was ſolemnized in the Church of Minerva at Rome. The Dreſſes the Criminals appear in, are pretty near the ſame in all Countries; and we ſhall not make any mention of them in this Place, becauſe all the reſt of the Figures are relative to the Inquiſition of Goa. I ſhall only relate in what Manner Molinos made his laſt Appearance in Public.

" CURIOSITY had drawn a prodigious Concourſe of People to the Church of Mi- " nerva——— but Piety was always made to bear a Part in this Ceremony; for his
" Holineſs had granted a plenary Indulgence to all who ſhould aſſiſt at it.———
" Molinos appeared in a very neat Dreſs, with his Beard newly trimmed; in his ſa" cerdotal Habit; with a ſmiling Countenance, which his Enemies ſaid had all the " Charms that recommend a Man to the Fair Sex. He was brought out of Priſon in " an open Coach, with a Jacobin along with him. He was brought at firſt, for ſome
" Time, in one of the Galleries of the Minerva, and looked freely on all the Spec" tators, and returned a Bow to all who ſaluted him." (Such ſalutes to a Victim of the Inquiſition, are very remarkable, as we have ſeen) " And all he was heard to ſay,
" was, that they ſaw a Man who was defamed, but that he was a Penitent; Infama-
" to, ma pentito. After this he was carried to Dinner; and indeed he had a very good " one provided for him, becauſe 'twas to be his laſt good Meal. Dinner being end" ed, he was carried to Church in a triumphant Manner, in an open Chair, on the " Shoulders of the Sbirri. Being ſeated in his Place, he made a very ſubmiſſive Bow
" to the Cardinals, and did not, in any one Action, give the leaſt Token of Fear or " Shame. He was chained, and had a Wax Taper in his Hand, when two luſty " Friars read his Proſecution aloud; and Orders had been given that the Multitude " ſhould cry, to the Fire, to the Fire, at the reading of every Article. Being brought " back into Priſon, he enter'd his Cell with the utmoſt Compoſure, calling it his
" Cloſet; and in his taking leave of the Prieſt who attended him, pronounced theſe
" Words: Farewel, my good Father, we ſhall ſee one another again at the Day of Judgment,
" when it will appear, whether Truth is on your Side or mine. He was confined in this " Place till he died."

IT may be proper to obſerve, that this was a very particular Caſe. For the Inquiſitors being deſirous of cruſhing a Sect that attempted to aboliſh a numberleſs Multitude of pious Exerciſes, which brought great Sums to the Prieſts, gained a conſiderable Advantage, in forcing the Leader of it to make a public Recantation. Molinos had a great Number of Admirers, not only in the ſeveral Provinces of Spain and Italy, but alſo in the Congregation of the holy Office; and if we may give Credit to the Engliſh Author above cited, the Pope himſelf being ſuſpected to favour Molinos, was obliged to give an Account of his Faith to the Commiſſioners of the Inquiſition, who were appointed to examine him in private for that Purpoſe. Petruci, who had imbibed the ſame Sentiments with Molinos, and had aſſiſted him in the ſpreading them, being raiſed to the Dignity of Cardinal, had rid out the Storm, which gave occaſion to the following Latin Diſtich:

Crimine ſunt ſimiles ambo, ſed diſpare ſorte;
Oſtrum Petrucius, vincla Molinos habet.

That is,

They both were guilty of the ſame Crime, but met with a very different Fate, for Petruci was raiſed to the Purple, but poor Molinos was thrown into Priſon.

THE above-mentioned Engliſh Writer afterwards gives an Inſtance of the great Temper and Moderation of an Inquiſitor, a Temper which one would ſcarce imagine them to be capable of. He tells us in pag. 128. " That one of Molinos's Diſciples had the " Courage to tell the Inquiſitors to their Faces, that they were a Society of unjuſt, " cruel, and heretical Wretches; and compared their Treatment of him, to that of the " Jews to our Saviour; notwithſtanding which, adds the ſame Writer, we are told that " they afterwards releaſed him upon his Recantation."

CHAPTER

CHAPTER the ſeventh, Michael de Montſarratte. That which follows to theſe Words; after ſuch dreadful Examples, &c. is not to be found in the Hiſtory of the Inquiſition and its Original, but is tranſcribed from a Book that was printed many Years after. But after this Quotation, the Author of the Memoirs again tranſcribes a great many Things from the Hiſtory of the Inquiſition. The ſharp Reproaches that are afterwards thrown on the Inquiſitors, are juſtly grounded, and we find in the [a] original Treatiſe, whence theſe Memoirs are chiefly extracted, three ſtrong Proofs of the ill Uſe which the Inquiſitors make of the exceſſive Power and Authority that they aſſume. The firſt is the irrefragable Teſtimony of Clement V. who in the Council held at Vienna, made grievous Complaints againſt the Adminiſtration of the Inquiſitors, for carrying their Authority to very undue Lengths. He owns that Complaints had been often juſtly made to him upon that Acconnt, and ſaid farther, that if Things were ſuffered to go on in that Manner, it would follow, that what had at firſt been eſtabliſhed for the Good of the Church, would in the End turn to its Prejudice, and added, that the only Method to put a ſtop to theſe unjuſt Proceedings, would be to draw up good Statutes, which being duly executed, would effectually remove all Subject of Complaint. This was accordingly done, and they are ſtill found in the Body of the Canon Law.

SECONDLY, Pope Clement VI. gave a particular Commiſſion to Bernard, Cardinal of St. Mark, and his Legate in the Dominions of his Holineſs, which impowered him to take Cognizance of the Cruelties which the Inquiſitors committed, and to do Juſtice to all who ſhould complain of their Oppreſſion.

THESE two Inſtances are more than ſufficient to prove, that the Inquiſitors are capable of exerciſing ſuch Cruelties as ought to be reſtrained for the Good of Mankind.

HERE follows a third. In 1518. a great Number of Wizards were diſcovered in the Province of Breſcia. The Magiſtrates in thoſe Parts, either through Negligence, or from the Perſuaſion that the Cognizance of their Crime belong'd properly to the ſpiritual Magiſtrate, ſurrender'd them up to them; but the Extortion and Oppreſſion which reſulted from hence were ſo flagrant, that the Council of Ten found themſelves obliged to annul all their Proceedings; to ſummon the grand Vicars of the ſeveral Biſhops and Inquiſitors, who had been guilty of the above-mentioned male Practices, to appear at Venice; and to appoint other Judges, who, in conjunction with the ordinary Aſſiſtants, ſhould reviſe the ſeveral Proſecutions, and do Juſtice to all thoſe who ſhould offer up any Complaints againſt the Inquiſitors. And notwithſtanding that all this was done, continues the above-mentioned Hiſtorian, they yet were ſcarce able to keep the People from making an Inſurrection.

THE Inhabitants of Rome have not yet forgot the dangerous Seditions which broke out in that City after the Death of Pope Paul IV. who had carried the Cruelty of the Inquiſition to a very great Height. The Statues which had been erected in his Honour were thrown down, and dragged ignominiouſly up and down the City for ſeveral Days together; the People who were particularly exaſperated againſt the Inquiſition, forced open its Priſons, and ſet at Liberty all ſuch Perſons as were impriſoned in them; they afterwards ſet fire to the Palace of the holy Office, and did not give over their Fury till they had plundered and burnt all the Writings belonging to it. Anno 1568. Mantua had like to have been deſtroy'd by another Sedition of the ſame Nature, which had been raiſed upon account of the Inquiſition.

CHAPTER the eighth of the ſame Book. The Author of the Memoirs has extracted from the ſo-often-mentioned Work, all the Particulars he relates concerning the Authority which the Inquiſitors aſſumes with reſpect to Books. It muſt be confeſſed, that much Venom is contracted by Reading, and that many People would have preſerved a Purity, both as to Faith and Manners, had they not unhappily met with Books that depraved their Underſtandings, and taught them to take a greater Delight in committing Vice. Nothing can be of ſuch bad Conſequence in this Caſe as the Works of the Caſuiſts; but then the Inquiſitors never attack theſe Authors, but on the contrary, ſpend all their Fury againſt ſuch Pieces as have met with the moſt univerſal Approbation. The New Teſtament of Mons, the Reflections of Father Queſnel, Baillet's Lives of the Saints, St. Auſtin's Works, publiſhed by the Congregation of St. Maur; theſe are the Books which the Inquiſitors commit to the Flames; at the ſame Time that they ſhall ſuffer ſuch Books as the following to be ſold at Rome, viz. Ragionamenti d'Aretino, de Matrimonio by Sanchez, and other infamous Writings of the ſame Stamp; and alſo canonize the Writings of Cardinal Sfondrato, notwithſtanding they had been unanimouſly proſcribed by a kind of national Council, compoſed of the moſt learned Body of Clergy in the World.

BAYLE has juſtly obſerved in his Dictionary, that theſe very Inquiſitors who exerciſe ſo much Severity againſt the moſt edifying Pieces, have not taken the leaſt Notice of the frantic Notions of Beata Maria d'Agreda, who, having a crazy Imagination, ariſing from an ill-grounded Devotion, wrote Things injurious to the Majeſty of the Creator. We don't find that they have cenſured the ſcandalous Tax of the Datary, or Chancery, at Rome, a Book which is juſtly conſidered as the greateſt Ignominy and Reproach of the Court of Rome; or in caſe they prohibit the Reading of it, 'tis upon Pretence that it has been corrupted by Heretics, i. e. publiſhed with Reflections which laid open the Scene of Knavery contained in it.

AND yet there was found a Man who either through Want of Judgment, or Modeſty, was ſo ſilly as to write an hiſtorical Elogium of the Inquiſition. The Perſon I mean is Father Macedo, a Franciſcan Friar, who in the Schema ſacræ congregationis ſancti officii Romani, printed at Padua in 1676. had the Impudence to make the Seat of its Inſtitution in the terreſtial Paradiſe, or Garden of Eden. This learned Hiſtorian pretends, that God began to execute the Office of Inquiſitor in that Place, and that he continued it out of Eden againſt Cain, and thoſe who built the Tower of Babel; that St. Peter acted in the ſame Quality againſt Ananias and Saphira, and devolved that Power on the Popes, who inveſted St. Dominic and his Succeſſors therewith. 'Tis ſurprizing that the Inquiſitors ſhould not be afraid of becoming the Laughing-Stock and Contempt of the World, in ſuffering ſuch Books to be printed. Before I leave this idle Prattle, I ſhall take occaſion from St. Dominic and his Order, to obſerve, that in a very waggiſh little Poem, entitled the Arriere-ban (i. e. Aſſembly of the Vaſſals) of the Church Militant, written on occaſion of the Siege of Candia; the Poet ſuppoſes that the Pope raiſes an Army of Prieſts and Monks, in order to force the Enemies to leave that Place, and gives to each Order ſuch a Poſt as is ſuitable to his Habit and his Manners. And as for the Dominican Friars, he gives them the Employment following:

Les Jacobins inquiſiteurs,
Feront punis les deſerteurs.

That is,

The Poſt beſt ſuited to St. Dominic's Fry's
To puniſh ſuch as from their Colours fly.

THE Motive which occaſioned this Order to have the Preference in this Employment has been ſhewn before. The Founder of the Dominican Friars, or Jacobins, having alſo founded the Inquiſition, is the Reaſon why St. Dominic is repreſented in the Standard of the Inquiſition, with his proper Characteriſtic, namely, a Dog carrying a Torch near a Globe; becauſe when his Mother was with Child of him, ſhe dreamt ſhe ſaw a Dog lighting the World with a Torch. In his Right-Hand is a Branch of Olive, as a Token of the Peace he will make with ſuch as ſhall declare themſelves good Catholics; and in his Left, a Sword, to denote the War he makes with Heretics, with this Motto, Juſtitia & Miſericordia. See what has been ſaid on this Head in the Memoirs, and the fourth Compartment.

BUT the Standard of the Spaniſh Inquiſition is different, it being a wooden Croſs full of Knots, with a Sword and an Olive Branch, as repreſented in the third Compartment. This Standard has been deſcribed in a very different Manner in theſe Memoirs.

Explication of the FIGURES repreſenting the Habits of the Criminals condemned by the INQUISITION.

THE fifth Compartment repreſents a Priſoner whom the Inquiſitors have found too guilty to be acquitted, and yet not criminal enough to be condemned. He is clothed in a San-benito, which is a ſleeveleſs Coat of a yellow Colour, with a great red St. Andrew's Croſs before and behind. Theſe are generally Perſons who readily accuſe themſelves, gueſs their Accuſers, and diſcover a Sorrow for the Crimes they have committed. See what has already been ſaid in theſe Memoirs. The male Priſoners have a Waiſtcoat under their San-benito, the Sleeves whereof deſcend to the Wriſt, and a Pair of Drawers which reach to their Heels, both made of black Linen ſtrip'd; but the Women wear their own peculiar Habits under the San-benito, as we ſee in the ſixth Compartment, repreſenting a Nun condemned by the Inquiſitors, and clothed in the Habit of her Order, with the San-benito over it; and in the eighth and ninth Compartments, obſerve that thoſe Men who wear the San-benito are bare-headed.

IN Compartments ſeven and eight, a Man and a Woman are repreſented, who having been condemned to the Flames, have eſcaped them by making a Confeſſion in the very critical Minute, after their Sentence had been read, and before they are taken out of Priſon, provided nevertheleſs that they are not ruled. Their under Dreſs is the ſame with the above-mentioned, with the Difference only of the Paſteboard Cap, ſhaped like a Cone, which is worn by Men as well as Women. Theſe Caps are called Carrochas. Their Scapulary called Sammaria, differs from the San-benito in this; the Ground of it is grey, with Flames painted upon it, and the Points turned downward, and is called Fuego Revolto, to denote that they, by their Confeſſion, have thrown down the Pile on which they were to have been burnt.

THE ninth and tenth Compartments repreſent a Man and Woman who have no Hopes of Pardon left. Theſe, in like Manner as thoſe above, wear the Carrocha and the Sammaria, but then the Points of the Flames are pointed upwards, and have alſo Devils painted on them armed with Hooks. At the Bottom of the Sammaria is a Figure repreſenting the condemned Criminal.

OBSERVE

OBSERVE firſt, that in the eighth and ninth Compartments, the Engraver has repreſented the Women in their Hair, whereas it was before ſaid, that all Priſoners of both Sexes, and of what Condition ſoever, have their Hair cut off; and as this is done to prevent their harbouring Lice, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe that they cut it from Time to Time.

SECONDLY, That he has repreſented the Women with their Shoes and Stockings on, a Diſtinction not taken notice of by the Memoirs, where we find, on the contrary, that in the Proceſſion they all go bare-footed, and that the Priſoners are not ranked according to their Sex, but the Crimes they have committed.

THE eleventh Plate is ſo accurately deſcribed in the ſixteenth Chapter of the fourth Book, that it were needleſs to give an Explication thereof in this Place.

THE laſt Plate repreſents the Place of Execution.

A A Repreſents ſuch as are condemned by the Inquiſitors after their Death.

C C Two Criminals condemned to the Flames.

D Another who is ſtrangled before he is burnt; a Favour indulged to thoſe who repent before they die.

E E E Coalmen who furniſh the Wood for the Fire, and light the ſeveral Piles.

F F F More unhappy Creatures who are going to ſuffer the ſame Puniſhment, and ſurrounded with Confeſſors, exhorting them to renounce Judaiſm. After Sentence of Condemnation has paſſed upon them, and their Delivery over to the ſecular Arm, they are carried to the Place of Execution, mounted on Mules, as is the Cuſtom in Spain and Portugal.

THE Reader is to take notice, that in ſome Places the Piles are not raiſed from the Ground as in this Plate, but a very wide and deep Hole is dug, in which a great Fire is made over Night, ſo that it is full of live Coals, by that Time the Priſoners get to it. If they are Jews who perſiſt obſtinately in their Principles, they are carried thrice round this dreadful Grave, when if they ſtill perſiſt in their Opinions, they are thrown into it. In Spain, not many Years ſince, a beautiful Jew of about eighteen, being greatly importuned by a Monk to abjure her Religion, was ſo much offended at it, that ſhe threw herſelf into the Flames, which conſumed her Body in a very little Time.

Tantum Religio potuit ſuadere malorum!

IN order to complete the Relation of the Proceedings of the Inquiſition, we ſhall preſent the Reader with the following Auto de Fe, or Act of Faith, as it was ſolemnized at Lisbon in 1707.

[b] The perpetual Impriſonment which is pronounced by the Inquiſitors, is very often no more than a Prohibition to quit the ordinary Place of their Reſidence; and even if a Perſon ſo condemned is a Merchant, he ſometimes has Leave to follow his Buſineſs in all Parts of the Dominions of the King of Portugal, but then he muſt be always ready to appear when called upon by the Inquiſitors.

Impeachments of the Inquiſition, 239. A Perſon impeach'd four ſeveral Ways. How ſummon'd to appear before the Inquiſitors. Advice to a Perſon impeach'd. Almoſt impoſſible to elude the Search of the Familiars. ibid. If a Perſon breaks Priſon. very difficult to eſcape out of Spain becauſe of the Hermandad, ibid. A Perſon impeach'd has no Aſylum, 240. Forlorn Condition of a Perſon impeach'd. How cruelly ſeiz'd, ibid. No Perſon dares make Reſiſtance. How barbarouſly treated when in the Clutches of the Inquiſition. The Priſoner is exactly ſearch'd. Several Perſons who have made away with themſelves in Priſon. Inquiſitor and and his Officers ſearch the Houſe of the Criminal. Every Thing ſeiz'd. Proſecution carried on vaſtly ſlow. Priſons are dreadful. Dungeons under Ground, and ſtink wretchedly; Way to them frightful: Ever Gloomy. Priſoners ſee no one: If they ſpeak to their Fellow-Priſoners, whipt with great Severity, 241. A very odd Invention by which the Perſons are enabled to hold a ſlow Converſe, 242. The Priſoner is at laſt told, he may be admitted to Audience. He appears before the Inquiſitors. Queſtions put to him. Familiars, how cloſe they ſtick to a Man's Heels, ib. When a Perſon is ſeiz'd a ſecond Time by the Inquiſitors, 242. How treated. Inquiſition vaſtly magnificent, tho' the Dungeons ſo horrid, 244. If a Priſoner refuſes to take an Oath, Sentence is immediately pronounc'd, ſuppoſing him not a Chriſtian, ibid. If he takes the Oath he is queſtioned in numberleſs Circumſtances, in order to entrap him. Hitherto he neither knows his Crime nor his Accuſers. Inquiſitors enſnare Priſoners by a Promiſe of Pardon in caſe they make a Confeſſion, ibid. The Priſoner charged with many pretended Crimes. Villany of the Inquiſitors, 245. Priſoner has a Counſellor which is only ſpecious, he not being allow'd to do him any Service, ib. He is never told the Names of his Accuſers. The unhappy Wretch carried from the Dungeon to Audience, and from Audience to Jail for ſeveral Years. Depoſitions againſt the Priſoner ſhewn him. He may challenge his Witneſſes, but muſt firſt gueſs them, ibid. Rules obſerv'd with regard to Witneſſes, practiſed by no other Tribunal; the horrid Barbarity in this caſe, 246.

Impediments of Marriage, viz. 1ſt. Error. 2d. Condition; 3d. Vows made in any religious Order, 113. On the Clandeſtine Marriages of Monks and Nuns, ibid 4th. Conſanguinity. 5th. Crimes. 6th. Difference of Religion. 7th. Force or Violence. 8th. Order. 9th. Ties. 10th. Decency. 11th. Impotency. Some gay Reflections on this Head, ibid. Impotency imputed to Sorcery, 114. A whimſical Method of faſcinating a married Couple with a Wolf's Pizzle, &c. The Charm; how diſſolved. Public Trial of a Perſon's procreative Ability: When ſinful to exerciſe it, ibid. Some farther Reflections on Impotency, 116

Indulgences, to what Pilgrims only granted; 178. Great Efficacy of them. Some Briefs waſh away all Sins at the Point of Death, by only pronouncing thrice the Name of Jeſus and Mary. If a ſick Perſon recovers, he may lend theſe Indulgences to a Friend. Whimſical Particulars on this Occaſion, ibid.

Inhumanity, Injuſtice, and Cruelty of the Inquſition, 257. The Spaniards would give every Thing in the World to be rid of it. A great Happineſs to have Religion preſerv'd pure and unſpotted; but there are no Countries where the Inhabitants are more diſſolute, than where the Inquiſition is ſettled, nor more Hypocrites, ibid. The Inquiſition occaſions this Ignorance and Hypocriſy, ibid. Even Kings liable to be proſecuted by the Inquiſitors. Henry III. excommunicated and depoſed by Sixtus V. The Inquiſition of Caſtile condemn the laſt Will of Charles V. to the Flames. 258

Injuſtice committed in the Inquiſition with regard to Perſons accuſed of Judaiſm, from Dellon, 309. A new Chriſtian, tho' ſincere, yet, when impriſoned, loſes all his Goods and Chattels. Is call'd to Audience. Queſtions ask'd him; is remanded to his Cell. Again call'd to Audience. Falſly accuſed of judaizing. Exhorted to confeſs, and promiſed a Pardon. given over to the ſecular Arm. A Confeſſor ſent to him. Tortur'd and burnt if he pleads not guilty. If Innocent he muſt plead guilty, otherwiſe will be puniſh'd, ibid. Is order'd to gueſs at his Accuſers, and to reveal his Accomplices. Folly of this. Perplexity a Priſoner is under upon this Occaſion. He is forced, as it were, to accuſe ſeveral innocent Perſons, who are often burnt, 310. Priſoners accuſe one another. Injuſtice of this. Goods and Chattels of all Priſoners who plead guilty confiſcated. Tortur'd inhumanly. Priſoners when releaſed by the Inquiſitors, tho' treated never ſo barbarouſly, are yet obliged to publiſh they were uſed with great Humanity, otherwiſe would be ſeized and burnt, 311. Multitudes of real Chriſtians put to Death upon a falſe Accuſation of their being Jews, which is plain, from their calling upon Chriſt in their dying Moments. Great Injuſtice with regard to ſuch as are accuſed of Magic. Tho' the King of Portugal allows Liberty of Conſcience, yet the Inquiſitors won't permit it. In what Manner the Chriſtian Religion is hindred from ſpreading, 312. Notwithſtanding there is a Jail-Delivery every two or three Years, yet two hundred or more Perſons are tried every Seſſions, 313

Interdict, what, 88

Inquiſition, difficult to write upon it impartially, 331. Founded by Perſons of great Sanctity. Thoſe who preſide over it Men of Probity. But on the other Side vaſtly barbarous, ibid. Friars belonging to it aſſume an Authority over Kings and Biſhops. A Reflection on this. Founded in a great Meaſure on human Motives. This Tribunal applauded and condemn'd by different Writers. M. De Limborch's Book againſt the Inquiſition, to prove it is founded on Cruelty and Perſecution. Particulars of Mr. Limborch's Work, 332.

Inquiſition, dreadful Cruelties of the Inquiſition, 204. Inquiſitors generally Monks. Formalities and Methods of Proſecution entirely new. Proſecution here extends even beyond the Grave; to the Aſhes of the Heretic. All natural Duties forbid by the Inquiſitors; a Wife muſt impeach her Husband, a Son his Father, 205

Inquiſitors, not inveſted with ſo much Power originally, 214. Their Authority how limited at firſt; afterwards enlarg'd; ſtill more by the Emperor Frederick II. An obſtinate Heretic order'd to be burnt, ibid.

INDEX.

Inquiſition received with very little Difficulty, 221. The Pope publiſhes a Bull: Subject of it. Reaſons why the Inquiſition was firſt eſtabliſh'd in thoſe Provinces only: Feign'd and real ones. Bull ſtrongly oppoſed, during ſeveral Popes. Oppoſition grounded on the exceſſive Severity of the Inquiſitors, ibid. Accuſed of extorting Money, 222. Proteſts againſt it from ſeveral Cities, &c. ſix Grounds of the Proteſt. The Inquiſitors, to ſoften Matters, forego ſeveral Things. Inhabitants, where Inquiſitions are eſtabliſhed, eas'd. Biſhops allow'd a little more Power. The Court of Rome draw two conſiderable Advantages from this Conceſſion, ibid.

Inquiſitors accuſed of impriſoning Women who refuſe to indulge them in their criminal Paſſions. An Exclamation againſt them, 260

Inquiſitors-General, cruel Wretches. Their Conduct. They puniſh Children for the real or imaginary Crimes of the Parents, 267, 268

Several of the Prime Nobility accuſe the Inquiſitors of Cruelty, 274. Their Names. The Proſecutions of the Inquiſition ſuſpended. His Holineſs addreſs'd upon this Occaſion, is very much griev'd at the Proſecutions. The Inquiſitors ordered to ſend him the Originals of four Trials, ibid. The Inquiſitor-General ſuſpended, and the reſt excommunicated, ibid. They refuſe to obey; but afterwards ſend him four Trials, and are pardoned. The Inquiſitors ſet the Pope's Encroachments on the Crown, in the moſt odious Light to his Majeſty. Don Pedro the King impoſed upon by theſe Reaſons. The Inquiſitors endeavour to bribe his Majeſty's Embaſſador in Rome, but without Succeſs, and therefore get him recall'd. A Creature of their own ſent Ambaſſador. He inſinuates ſeveral Things to the Pope againſt the new Chriſtians, 275. And that the Portugueſe would perhaps rebel, break off from the See of Rome, and have a Patriarch of their own, ibid. The Pope is impoſed upon, and Matters ſtill continue upon their former Foot, 276

Inquiſition in Goa: from Dellon, 304. Its Situation. A magnificent Edifice. Apartments of the Inquiſitors. Dungeons very dark; Deſcription of them. Walls vaſtly thick, a Wicket to receive Victuals in. Each Priſoner allow'd an Earthen Pot, a Water-Veſſel, a Diſh, a Broom, a Mat, and a Veſſel to eaſe Nature. Food of the Priſoners, ibid. Of the Whites and Blacks, Have light Suppers, 305. Reaſons of it: Out of Thriftineſs, and to prevent Indigeſtion. Of very dangerous Conſequence: Throws into violent fevers which are often mortal. Deſcription of that Diſtemper. An infallible Remedy for it, by applying a red hot Iron Bar to the Priſoner's Foot. Bleeding vaſtly dangerous. Priſoners not allow'd Candles, ibid.

Inquiſition of Spain, treated of by M. de Vayrac, 346. How much the Author was embaraſs'd to treat upon it, leſt he ſhould let drop any Expreſſions that might give Offence. To conſider the Quality of thoſe who preſide in it, we could hardly think it an unjuſt Tribunal, nor draw it in ſuch frightful Colours They would imagine it to be all Mildneſs, ibid. The Prejudice conceiv'd againſt the Inquiſition ſo great, that it will be ſcarce poſſible to make the World conſider it in a favourable Light, 347. Riſe of the Inquiſition under Ferdinand and Iſabella. Eſtabliſh'd againſt the Moors in Spain in 1478. The Popes have devolv'd all their Authority on the Inquiſition. The Members who compoſe it, 348. The Dignity of the Inquiſitor-General ſo great, that the King's Son would not think it beneath him. No Perſon exempt from his Juriſdiction. The Subaltern Tribunals, of whom they conſiſt; their Employment. In what Manner the Officers of the Inquiſition qualify themſelves: That the Inquiſitors never order Perſons to be ſeiz'd, but after making the moſt diligent Informations: That Priſoners are not obliged to gueſs at the Names of their Accuſers. Never ſeiz'd but for the moſt flagrant Crimes. Subaltern Tribunals, how reſtrain'd, 349. The political Conduct of the Inquiſition very ſurpriſing. Upwards of twenty thouſand Familiars in Spain; ſcarce two thouſand in actual Employment. M. De Vayrac's Aſſertions examin'd, prov'd to be contradictory. That no great Credit is to be given to this Author, 250

The Inquiſitors juſtly reproach'd, 353, They abuſe their great Authority. Pope Clement V. exclaims againſt them: Particulars of his Complaints. Pope Clement VI. impowers Perſons to take Cognizance of their Cruelties, ibid. Several ſuppoſed Wizards diſcover'd in Breſcia, deliver'd up to the Spiritual Magiſtrates; perſecuted by them, and other Judges appointed. The People almoſt make an Inſurrection. Sedition in Rome upon Account of the Inquiſition. Pope Paul IV.'s Statue dragg'd up and down the City. Priſoners in the Inquiſition releaſed. Set Fire to the Palace of the Holy Office. Mantua almoſt deſtroy'd by a Sedition of the ſame Nature, ibid. Inquiſitors uſurp great Authority with regard to Books. Ill Conſequences of bad Books. Inquiſitors cenſure only good ones. Several ſpecifi'd. Vile Books ſuffer'd to be read. Some Obſervations of Mr. Bayle, upon the frantic Notions of Beata Maria d' Agreda, 354. Friar Macedo makes the Elogium of the Inquiſition, ſays it was inſtituted in the Garden of Eden; God, the firſt Inquiſitor, who perſecuted Cain; St. Peter, an Inquiſitor againſt Ananias and Saphira, who devolv'd that Power on the Popes, ibid.

Don John of Portugal oppoſes the Eſtabliſhment of the Inquiſition, 270. A Monk introduces it in 1557. by a fictitious Brief, and is ſent to the Gallies for it, ibid. Some Nobles remonſtrate to the King againſt the Inquiſition. The Pope commands the Inquiſitors to releaſe all the Priſoners: They obey, but fill their Priſons again immediately, 271. John IV. would willingly have aboliſh'd the Inquiſition. Orders the Goods and Chattels of Priſoners ſhould not be confiſcated. The Inquiſitors Offended at it. They obtain a Brief from the Pope which interferes with the King's Orders. They deſire to read it to his Majeſty. A pretty Fetch of the King's, by which he eludes the Inquiſitors, ibid. They wait upon the Queen after the King's Death, and tell her he had incurr'd the Sentence of Excommunication. She conſents that the King's Corpſe ſhould be abſolv'd, 272

Low-Countries, Attempts made to ſettle the Inquiſition there, 228. Suppoſed for ſome Time not feaſible. After the Riſe of the Lutheran Principles, Charles V. attempts to eſtabliſh it, ibid. The Governeſs of theſe Provinces diſplays the ill Conſequences of it; that the Foreign Merchants, and great Numbers of the Natives, would leave the Country, and thereby ruin the Trade. The Emperor's Edict not put in Execution. Philip II. of Spain attempts to eſtabliſh the Inquiſition. Strongly oppoſed. The People mutiny, which gives Riſe to the Dutch Republic. Inſurrection long and bloody. A Peace concluded. The United-Provinces throw off the Spaniſh Yoke, 229

St. Lucia commanded to be carried to the Stews. The Holy Ghoſt fixes her down with ſuch a Weight ſhe could not ſtir; they bring many Yoke of Oxen to draw her, but all in vain, N. 61

Negative Convicts in the Inquiſition, how puniſh'd, 298. Story of one James de Mello, a Native of Liſbon, a Knight, and Captain of the Horſe, partly a new Chriſtian; always delighted when any new Chriſtian was ſeiz'd by the Inquiſitors. One whoſe Misfortunes he had inſulted, accuſes him. Himſelf, his two Sons, and Wife, thrown into Priſon. All three accuſe the poor Gentleman; who is burnt as a negative Convict, ibid. A Gentleman of Villa-Vicioſa thrown into Priſon. His Son and Daughter accuſe him: As he is going to the Flames, his Son, ſtruck with Remorſe, begs Forgiveneſs on his Knees: His Father forgives him; but won't give him his Bleſſing. He dies with great Conſtancy. John of Sequeira and his Brother ſeiz'd. the Archbiſhop of Liſbon's Vicar ſeiz'd at the ſame Time. The two Brothers plead Not guilty. The Vicar-General pleads guilty; impeaches many People, and among the reſt the two Brothers. They deny the Charge, and prove the Incoherence of it. They are both burnt on this Accuſation, and the Grand-Vicar walks with the San Benito in the ſame Proceſſion. Declares in his dying Moments, he had ſworn falſly againſt them, 289. Old Chriſtians protected by the Inquiſitors. One of theſe expected to ſee the Meſſias come riding on a Goat. No new Chriſtian allowed to depoſe againſt an old one. A new Chriſtian of Quality ſeiz'd and Hand-cuffed: Put to the Torture, and accuſes many; among the reſt a Female Mulatto. He walks with the San Benito and is ſent to the Gallies. The Mulatto ſeiz'd, and ſet at Liberty. The Captain of the Galley ſeverely reprimanded for uſing the Man of Quality tenderly, 300 ties, 220. First, that Bishops should judge Heretics, jointly with Inquisitors: That at last the Bishops would have only the Shadow of Authority left. Second Objection answered: That Magistrates should, like the Bishops, be satisfied in outward Appearance; should dispose of the lower Offices in the Inquisition, and appoint an Assistant to the Inquisitors in their Visitations. A fresh Obstacle is started, viz. how to defray the Expences of the Inquisition for Prisons, Salaries, Prisoners, Executions. A Fund necessary for this Purpose, ibid. Expedients propos'd, that the several Corporations should furnish Sums, 221.

Officers of the Inquisition, Particulars relating to them, from Dellon, 313. Four sovereign Tribunals in the Portugueze Dominions. The great Council of the Inquisition. Inquisitors get vast Sums of Money; first, because they may purchase a Prisoner's Goods; and secondly, because they may draw what Sums they please out of the King's Treasury. Mighty State of the Inquisitor-General of Goa; his great Power, ibid. Prison of the Inquisition of Goa, a dark, dirty, stinking, dreadful Place. Dellon, how brought to Audience at Goa. He is loaded with Irons, and carried to Audience. His Irons are knock'd off. Description of the Hall of Audience, its Furniture. At his coming in throws himself at the Inquisitor's Feet. He orders him to rise, and asks him several Questions. Dellon begs with Tears to be heard. Is told there's Time enough for it, 314. Is carried to a long Gallery. His Trunk brought and open'd before him; is closely search'd, and every Thing, to the very Buttons of his Sleeves, his Beads and Handkerchief excepted, taken from him. An exact Inventory of his Things taken, which is of no Service to him. The Jailor carries him to the Dungeon, where he is confin'd alone; not allow'd a Book or a Comb. His Hair is cut off. Was flatter'd with the Hopes of being treated with great Lenity at his first imprisoning, and told he might be admitted to Audience whenever he desir'd it. Is again call'd to Audience. Comes out of the Dungeon bare-headed and bare-footed, the Jailer before, and the Turnkey behind him. They come to the Hall of Audience; he falls upon his Knees before the Inquisitor. Is order'd to rise, and to swear on the Mass-Book to reveal the Truth, and observe an inviolable Secrecy. Is ask'd whether he knows why he was imprison'd, and other Questions, 315. Is again remanded to the Dungeon. The Inquisitor's Exhortation just before. Comes again to Audience. Again exhorted to confess. Questions ask'd him; the Names of all his Relations; whether he is a new Christian? Many Portugueze Christians observe several Jewish Ceremonies; ill Consequences of it. Is ask'd who baptiz'd him. In what Diocese; what City; by whom confirm'd; order'd to kneel down. Again exhorted to confess all his Crimes, 316. Had spent all his Confinement in incessant Tears, but now is abandon'd to Despair. Endeavours to starve himself; cannot sleep; is very sick. Re-capitulates all the Errors of his past Life. Comforted by his Reflections. Implores the Assistance of the Blessed Virgin. Finds himself greatly supported. Again admitted to Audience. Hopes he shall be set at Liberty. Again remanded back to Prison. Again brought to Audience, but is so weak he can hardly stand; lies along the Floor. The Inquisitor reproaches him; is handcuffed, and an iron Collar put about his Neck, so that he could not stir his Arms; beats his Head against the Floor and Walls, 317. His Irons knock'd off, and us'd more gently. A Black, who is very unsociable, put into his Cell to keep him Company. Many kill themselves in the Dungeons. The Black is two Months with him, and taken from him when he grows better. After eighteen Months Confinement, again sent for to Audience. Articles exhibited against him. Is allow'd to make his Defence; Substance of it. His Notion concerning Baptism, the Worship of Images, &c. 318. Surprizing Ignorance of the Inquisitors. Accus'd of speaking contemptuously of the Inquisition, of fomenting Heresy, and therefore ought to be deliver'd over to the secular Arm. He is greatly terrified at these Menaces, and yet has Spirits left to make his Defence. Particulars of it; that he had continued a good Catholic; had frequently defended the Faith against Heretics; yet owns he had spoke too freely before the Inquisitor, but had not utter'd any Thing against his Holiness. Is order'd to recollect all he had said, and remanded back to Prison, 319. which exasperates him very much. Call'd four Times more to Audience. The Prisoners tortur'd. Auto de Fe generally solemniz'd the first Sunday in Advent. Thinks the Jail-Delivery is at Hand. His Joy upon that Account, 320. Very much damp'd, because of the Uncertainty of his Destiny; spends the Evening in deep Anguish; sleeps, and is awak'd at Midnight by the Jailer. Is order'd to dress himself. In great Terror. Recommends himself to Heaven. The Turnkeys carry him at Two in the Morning to a long Gallery. Upwards of two hundred Prisoners in it. Their dejected State, 321. Female Prisoners in another Gallery. Sees those who were to be burnt. Is prodigiously terrified. A Wax Taper and the Scapulary given them. Another Dress on which Devils and Flames are painted. Twenty Blacks accus'd of Magic. Dellon wears the Habit given to Wizards. Pastboard Caps with Devils, &c. painted on them, 322. Are all allow'd to sit on the Ground. Bread and Figs given them. His Lady comes with a Body of Men to his Aſſiſtance. Attacks the ſtrong Caſtle of Menerbe. Sack'd, ibid. Declares War againſt Raymond Count de Toulouſe. Count de Monfort's great Conqueſts. King of Arragon abandons him, and checks the Succeſſes of the Croiſaders, ibid. Marches againſt Count de Monfort A bloody Battle. King of Arragon kill'd. Twenty thouſand Albigenſes ſlain. All defeated, 212. Montfort takes ſeveral Places. Beſieges Toulouſe. Kill'd by a Shot from the Croſs-Bow. All the Croiſaders routed. The Counts of Toulouſe, Foix, and Cominges, recover all their ſtrong holds, ibid.
Spain, Inquiſition eſtabliſhed there, 226. Received in Arragon. Soon becomes odious, but rendred flouriſhing by Ferdinand of Arragon, and Iſabella of Caſtile. Owed its Eſtabliſhment in Spain to John de Torquemada, a Dominican. The Promiſe he had obtain'd from Queen Iſabella Levell'd againſt the Moors, who are forced to leave Spain and fly into Africa. Great Numbers ſtill continue in Spain, ibid They and the Jews forced to renounce their Religion, which they do only in outward Appearance. This Hypocriſy of great Prejudice to the Government. Torquemada's Repreſentations to the Queen. Fatal Conſequences of this Hypocriſy. That violent Methods would be neceſſary. His Arguments make an Impreſſion on the Queen. She wins the King over, and it is eſtabliſh'd all over Spain, 227. Torquemada created Cardinal and Inquiſitor-General. He perſecutes in fourteen Years upwards of an hundred thouſand Perſons, of whom ſix thouſand were condemn'd to the Flames, 228
Spain, Inquiſition there, 234. Supreme Council of whom compos'd. Number of Familiars very Great. Its great Power: All other Inquiſitions of Spain ſubordinate to it. The greateſt Subjects tremble at it. The King himſelf does not dare to interfere in it. The Inquiſitors vile Treatment of Don Carlos, &c. Philip II. rid by the Inquiſition, ibid. Names of the Inquiſitions of Spain ſubject to the principal one, 235
Spaniards, moſt of them very illiterate, 267. Never read either the Scripture or the Fathers, uninform'd of true Piety, Hypocrites ſtrongly devoted to their Paſſions, ibid.
Spirit of Chriſt Jeſus, gentle, moderate, &c. not for employing Force and Tortures, as the Inquiſition, 199
Spiritual Benefices which excommunicated Perſons are deprived of, viz. partaking in Public Prayers, Right of adminiſtring and receiving Sacraments, Right of aſſiſting at Divine Offices; being entirely excluded from common Converſation, being buried in conſecrated Ground; not allow'd an active or paſſive Voice with regard to Benefices, &c. the Exerciſe of Spiritual Juriſdiction, 88
Stations in Lent, 12
Stations of the moveable Feaſts after Eaſter, 39
Statutes obſerv'd by the Inquiſition of Venice, Particulars of them, from 337 to 344. Confin'd thereby to much narrower Limits than it enjoys in all other Places. The Inquiſitors have frequently complain'd of it, ibid. The Venetians would never make the leaſt Conceſſions to the Court of Rome on this Occaſion, 344. yet the Senate over-look'd one important Circumſtance, viz. that none but Venetians born ſhould be Inquiſitors. This, how remedied in Part. By the Statutes we find that, 1*ſt*. the Inquiſition of Venice is of a mix'd Nature. 2*dly*, that it is ſubordinate to the Senate, and not to the Court of Rome. The Lay-Inquiſitors in Venice of great Benefit to the Republic. The Republic oblig'd to guard continually againſt the Encroachments of the Court of Rome, 9

TAPERS lighted, when firſt carried at Funerals. What they alude to, 102
Tenebræ, its Service; whimſical Particulars of it: Men, Women, and Children, make a great Noiſe with Sticks, their Fiſts, &c. 18
Thief, ſteals a Pyx, &c. out of a Church in Lisbon, 272. Order iſſued out for ſearching the Houſes of all ſuſpected Perſons; executed with great Severity: The Inquiſitors exaſperated againſt the ſecular Magiſtrates, for taking Cognizance of this Affair, ibid. Debated, whether all the new Chriſtians ſhould be baniſh'd the Kingdom. The Inquiſitors ſeem to oppoſe it. A mere Trick. The Thief found, and proves to be an old Chriſtian. Pleads guilty. Puniſh'd, 273
St. Thomas of Aquin, his luſtful Inclination ſuppreſs'd in a wonderful Manner, N. 10
St. Thomas a Becket, hated by the People becauſe he was King Henry's Enemy. Coming to a Town called Strode, the Inhabitants cut his Horſe's Tail off; but afterwards were puniſh'd for it in their whole Poſterity, who were all born with long Tails like Beaſts, N. 64. A Bird ſeiz'd by a Hawk, but invoking St. Thomas's Name, the latter lets him drop out of his Talons: An admirable Inference drawn from thence, ibid. Offerings in one Year to St. Thomas's Shrine, nine hundred fifty four Pounds, ſix Shillings and three Pence: To that of the bleſſed Virgin but four Pounds, one Shilling and eight Pence; to Chriſt not one Farthing, N. 65. This Saint, upon his Companions boaſting of their Miſtreſſes, tells them he had one excell'd them, (meaning the Virgin Mary;) when they being urgent to ſee her, he invokes her; ſhe appears, and makes him a miraculous Preſent, ibid.
Title, Cardinal takes Poſſeſſion of his, 158. Goes to Church; Solemnity there; Te Deum ſung, the Bull is read which inveſts him with his Title, ibid. Ceremonies obſerv'd at the Feſtival of a Saint, to whom the titular Church of a Cardinal is dedicated, 159. If other Cardinals ſhould come in Service-Time, Solemnity to be obſerv'd, ibid.
Tonſure, its Origin, 129. Of what an Image. More Types. Manner of performing the Tonſure. The Biſhop performs it Antient Tonſure, N. ibid. Types of the Prieſts Veſtments on this Occaſion, the Tapers, &c. 130
Tortures in the Inquiſition, 247. of three kinds. 1ſt, Of the Rope; the Priſoner is drawn up to the Cieling with Ropes, then let down with a Jerk, which puts all his Limbs out of Joint. 2dly, Of Water; the Priſoner forc'd to ſwallow a great Quantity: When he is ſqueez'd, and his Back-Bone broke. 3dly, Of Fire; which is the moſt rigorous: The Soles of the Priſoners Feet rubb'd with ſome unctuous Subſtance, and ſet to broil againſt a large Fire. Continues an Hour, and ſometimes more. Theſe Severities inflicted in the Place of Torments. 'Tis a ſubterraneous Place. The Inquiſitors and Biſhop of the Place preſent. Lighted only by two dim Torches. Frightful Habits of the Tormentors. The Priſoner ſtripp'd almoſt naked, ibid. The Priſoner often brought to the laſt Gaſp under the Torture. Tortur'd a ſecond Time, and carried back to his gloomy Dungeon. Fellows ſuborn'd by the Inquiſitors, to exclaim againſt their Cruelty to the Priſoner, in order to force ſeveral Things from him. The Inquiſitors alſo ſooth him artfully, 248. A Priſoner often not executed till a Year after his Condemnation. Theſe Executions thought of great Service in ſuppreſſing Hereſies, 249
Torture of a young Woman by the Inquiſitors, 282. behaves under it for ſome Time with uncommon Bravery, but at laſt is overcome, and is unbound and dreſs'd; when ſhe again pleads not guilty. Remanded back to Priſon; is again put to the Torture, and pleads guilty. Is unbound, and denies every Thing. Is put again to the Torture, and pleads not guilty to the laſt. Whipt publickly through the Streets, and baniſh'd. A Man impriſon'd for ſaying ſhe was cruelly us'd. A Priſoner releas'd, and ſent to School to learn his Catechiſm. Folly of it. The Priſoner's Hand tied. He makes his Confeſſion. Goes in the Proceſſion. Deliver'd over to the ſecular Arm. Is ask'd what Religion he deſires to die in. Brought to the Stake, ibid.
Treaſurer General of the Apoſtolical Chamber, his Functions, 183
Treaſurer, or Camerlingo, of the College of Cardinals, 179. His Functions. Has a Comptroller, who keeps a Check, or Counter-Account, ibid.

V.

VENICE, the Inquiſition there, 230. Unſullied with Hereſy till the Year 1232, ibid. Upon the Diviſions between the Emperor Frederick II. and Innocent IV. many Heretics ſtart up in Venice. The Senate enact Laws againſt them. That they ſhould be judg'd by the Biſhops, ibid. and ſentenc'd to the Flames. That Statute put ſeverely in Execution. The Pope endeavours to introduce the Inquiſition in Venice. The Venetians would not conſent to it. Sermons of the Inquiſitors create great Diſturbances. Cruelty of the Inquiſitors. All Italy exclaim againſt the Inquiſitors, 231. The Senate, at the Requeſt of Pope Nicholas IV. receive the Inquiſition, but with great Reſtrictions. Particulars of them. The Pope, though not pleas'd with the Reſtrictions, yet accepts their Propoſals. The Pope thinks he has done Wonders, but is miſtaken, 232
Venetians ſet up an Inquiſition by their own Authority. Deſcription of it, 223
Veſpers, or Vigils, their Origin, ſaid to be from the Egyptians, but thought not ſo; other Origins found among the Heathens: Thoſe of the Feſtivals of Venus; of Ceres, vaſtly licentious. Of Minerva, prov'd from Seneca. Thoſe of Chriſtmas, Eaſter, Aſcenſion-Day, and Whitſon-Tide, only obſerv'd in the primitive Times, 4
Viaticum, or Communion of Perſons at the Point of Death, as a Proviſion for the great Journey of Eternity, 77. St. Ambright, a Knight at Venice, ſo ſick he could not take the Hoſt in at his Mouth, prays to God, and his Side opens, by which he receives it, and dies, N. ibid. A Woman very ſick near Exbridge, wants to communicate at Midnight, and ſends a Man for the Hoſt, which he puts into his Boſom, but loſes it. Upon this he goes back for it; ſtrips and ſcourges himſelf. A Pillar of Fire reaches from Earth to Heaven. The Hoſt found in the Graſs. All the Beaſts of the Foreſt flock about the Hoſt, and kneel before it, except a black Horſe, who was a Fiend, N. ibid. 78. How to proceed if the ſick Perſon throws up the Wafer. The Room where the Viaticum is adminiſtred muſt be made very clean. The Hoſt, how diſpos'd of in it, Many Formalities when carried in Proceſſion publicly. 78. The Prieſt's Salutation at his coming into the Room, 79. Ceremonies with regard to the ſick Perſon. The Viaticum of great Antiquity. Precautions us'd when 'tis carried to a Houſe infected with the Plague, and the ſeveral Ceremonies, ibid. 80
Vicar-General, Pope's, 166. His Functions. Has a Vicegerent, who is a Biſhop, a very conſiderable Employment. His Penſion one thouſand two hundred Crowns a-Year, ibid.
Matthew Viſconti, Sovereign of Milan, declar'd a Heretic; ſeverely treated. 215
Extreme Unction, how adminiſtred to Perſons who have the Plague, 79
Extreme Unction, defin'd, 92. Of great Antiquity. Form of it. Who only adminiſter it, and to whom only. Never to Criminals, or impenitent Perſons. Parts anointed are, the Eyes, 93. Ears, Noſtrils, Mouth, Hands, Feet, and Loins. Many Things prepar'd for this Purpoſe. Anointing, how perform'd. The Multitude of Ceremonies uſed on this Occaſion. A Crucifix left with the dying Perſon to comfort him. Some Reflections on the Practice of addreſſing Heaven, by the Medium of material Objects. How a Chriſtian is to be aſſiſted when at the Point of Death. Duty of the Prieſt on this Occaſion, 94

Waſhing the Feet of the poor Prieſts, its Ceremony. How perform'd by the Pope, who puts on a white Apron, 21. The poor Prieſts have their Legs well ſoap'd before they preſent them. How entertain'd afterwards by his Holineſs, ibid. How ſolemniz'd by the King of France. By the King of Spain; on which Occaſion his Majeſty takes off his Hat and Sword, and ties a Cloth round him, &c. 23

Witſontide, Ceremonies of. A Proceſſion made in Caen by the Companies of Tradeſmen. A Taper carried in it, on which little Pieces of Money are fix'd, 40

Women, how treated in the Inquiſition, 282. The Inquiſitors act with much greater Circumſpection and Secrecy, with regard to Women. The handſomeſt always beſt treated. Priſoners afraid to divulge any Thing after their Releaſe. Caution to Confeſſors. A Quere, why the Inquiſitors ſhould exact an Oath of Secrecy from Priſoners at their Releaſe. Inconveniences of it. Women when tortur'd ſtripp'd to their Shifts in an indecent Manner. Moſt plead guilty; ibid.

A DISSERTATION ON THE AMERICANS, AND THE Conformity of their Customs with those of other Nations, Antient and Modern.

CHAP. I.

Of the Original of the Americans.

If the Antients have in any Thing excell'd the Moderns, we may boldly affirm 'tis not in Navigation: Such as have any Knowledge of Antiquity, will not offer to diſpute this Point with us. Taking it for granted, that the Antients traded to the Indies, and doubled the Cape of Good-Hope; that they knew Iceland under the Name of Thulé; that they enter'd the Hyperborean, or Frozen Ocean, and knew Cape Tabin, vaſtly beyond the River Oby; yet all this is not to be compar'd to the Diſcoveries of the Moderns: And ſuppoſing the former had known much more than what is generally allow'd 'em on this Head, it yet could not poſſibly have been of any great Advantage to them, becauſe of the Slowneſs and Defects in their Navigation, which is now univerſally allow'd; the little Knowledge they had of the Winds, and the Belief that prevail'd ſo much among them with reſpect to the Torrid Zone's being not habitable; not to take notice of their ſmall Knowledge in Aſtronomy; all theſe Reaſons, I ſay, ſufficiently prove they were not able to make long Voyages, and conſequently that tho' they might have ſome Knowledge of Countries as far diſtant as thoſe of America, it muſt have been entirely owing to Chance. 'Twould be but to little Purpoſe for us to repeat what has been ſaid by different Authors on this Subject, or to dwell on an Article that would carry us to very great Lengths, were we to go through with it; ſuffice it therefore that we obſerve, there is no Probability the Antients had any regular Correſpondence with the Inhabitants of the Continent which we call America, or had ever form'd any Deſign of ſending Colonies thither; ſo that the Prediction of Seneca the tragic Writer, and what we meet with in Ælian, Plato, and ſome others, relating to unknown Lands, ought to be conſider'd no otherwiſe than as mere Conjecture, or the Product of Fancy. But how America was firſt peopled, and when it was ſo; how the Inhabitants happen'd to loſe their firſt Cuſtoms, and neglected a Correſpondence that might have been perpetuated from Father to Son by the Help of Tradition, is what we are ignorant of. However, we ſhall preſent the Reader with ſome Obſervations on this Subject, that will relate chiefly to the Original of the Americans, and afterwards make ſome others with reſpect to the Conformity of the Cuſtoms of that People with thoſe of our Hemiſphere.

PURCHAS in his Collection of Travels is of Opinion, that 'tis not many Centuries ſince America was firſt inhabited, and grounds his Conjecture on that Continent's not being ſo well peopled at the Time of its Diſcovery by the Europeans, as it muſt naturally have been, had it begun to be peopled about Abraham's Time, or even about that of our Saviour. If this Continent, ſays he, has been inhabited from the Infancy of the World, whence is it that we find ſo many Deſarts in the Midſt of it? or that Countries, ſo fruitful and agreeable as theſe are, had not Colonies ſent to them, ſince they deſerve to be peopled much more than the northern Parts of Europe and Aſia? The Mexicans, who conſider themſelves as the moſt antient Inhabitants of America, and who pretend to have ſent Colonies to Peru and Chili, cannot trace a thouſand Years backwards. But theſe Reaſons are not ſolid enough. For firſt, 'tis very probable that the cruel Cuſtom of devouring one another, which is practis'd by moſt of theſe Nations, the bloody Wars they have been continually engag'd in with one another, and the inhuman [a] Sacrifices they have made of one another for many Ages, may have thinn'd the Number of the Inhabitants of theſe Countries. Secondly, 'tis true indeed, that the Hiſtories of Mexico and Peru, which are the two principal Monarchies in America, do not go very high into Antiquity; but can this be ſufficient to perſuade us, that thoſe two Empires remain'd deſolate and unpeopled for four or five thouſand Years? Ought we not rather to ſuppoſe, that the Ignorance of the firſt Inhabitants occaſion'd their Neglect of tranſmitting to Poſterity the Hiſtory of their Original? The Chronicles of moſt Nations of Europe don't go higher than the Time of the Roman Commonwealth; and Odin, the great Legiſlator of the northern Nations, can hardly go ſo far backwards into Antiquity as two thouſand Years. Rome and Greece indeed go higher; but they can hardly prove an Antiquity of above a thouſand Years over the reſt of the Nations of Europe; beyond this all is Fiction and Chimæra. In fine, no People in the World, the Jews and Chineſe excepted, can boaſt an hiſtorical Exiſtence of more than four thouſand Years; not to mention that we are oblig'd to allow the Chineſe a great Number of Incidents, which we are not able to diſpute with them, for want of a ſufficient Knowledge in their Hiſtory, and the Progreſs of their Sciences.

[a] Above thirty thouſand People had been ſacrificed to the Idols the ſame Year that the Spaniards firſt enter'd Mexico.

BESIDES, we can ſcarcely perſuade ourſelves, that the Eſtabliſhment of the different Nations in America did not require a long Series of Ages, if we conſider, that the Spaniards when they firſt diſcover'd America, found the Iſlands thereof as well peopled as the Continent; and likewiſe if we reflect upon the great Variety of Languages that Travellers have obſerv'd to be in uſe among 'em, which could not poſſibly have arriv'd at ſo great Perfection in ſeven or eight hundred Years. Thoſe who have ſtudied the Progreſs of the living Languages, know very well, that though it be above eight or nine hundred Years, ſince the French, the Italian, the Engliſh, and ſome other Dialects of the Latin, of the ancient Saxon, or German, were firſt form'd, they yet have not been able to loſe the ſenſible Marks of their Origin; which ſurely will ſufficiently evince the Antiquity of the American Languages, whoſe Variety might probably be owing to the firſt Confuſion of Tongues.

'TIS very probable, that the Colonies which firſt ſettled in America came thither by Land, and that if any happen'd to come by Sea, 'twas owing to Chance rather than Deſign. [a] Yet we may naturally ſuppoſe that ſome Phœnician or Carthaginian Sailors having been thrown on the Coaſt of America by a Storm, Neceſſity had forc'd them to ſettle there, and that they there loſt their Language and the little Knowledge they might have had of the Arts and Sciences of their Country. What makes this more probable is, that ſea-faring Men have in all Ages been very ignorant, and but a Degree above Barbarians. The Peruvians had antiently ſome Footſteps of thoſe involuntary Voyages. The firſt Spaniſh Writers who have collected the ſcatter'd Remains of their Hiſtory, make mention of certain People who came from that Part of their Country which lies toward the Sea, and that they afterwards made a Conqueſt of their Country.

[b] TRADITION made the above-mention'd Writers conſider theſe Men, whoſe Original appear'd ſo extraordinary, as ſo many Giants; and, indeed, 'tis not unlikely they were ſuch, ſince we are aſſur'd that Bones of a prodigious Size have been dug up about Puerto Viejo, and in the Valley of Tumbez. We have many learned Men in the World, who, in the Height of their Raptures for this Diſcovery, would conſider theſe Giants as the Poſterity of the Children of Anak, of whom mention is made in Deuteronomy, and would bring the Lord knows how many far-fetch'd Conjectures, to prove that the poor Canaanites, whom Joſhua drove out of their Dwellings, had fled to Peru for Refuge. But to be ſerious: 'Tis hardly poſſible to make a Voyage of even a few Leagues, with their Balſes, Pieroques, and Canoes; neither have the Aſians, the Afri-

[a] Several learned Men have been of Opinion, that America was peopled by the Phœnicians and Carthaginians. They ground their Conjecture on the long Voyages thoſe People us'd to make, who fitting out very conſiderable Fleets, us'd to ſend them beyond the Straits of Gibraltar, the Canary-Iſlands, and thoſe of Cape-Verd, known to the Antients, as is believ'd, under the Name of the Iſlands Gorgades. 'Tis true, indeed, that the Iſlands of Cape-Verd are the neareſt Land to America; but this does not prove the Phœnicians had viſited the American Coaſts. As to the Cruizings of thoſe Phœnicians beyond the Gorgades, they might probably have been made towards the South, rather than towards the Weſt. We in that Caſe ſhould therefore look into the Southern Parts of Africa for thoſe unknown Lands, which the Antients tell us the Phœnicians had diſcovered. On the other Side, if it be true that the Antilles were known to 'em under the Name of the Iſlands of the Heſperides, and that the Voyage from the Gorgades to the Heſperides, which is not now above twenty five or thirty Days Sail, might have taken them forty; which is but a ſhort Time, conſidering their little Experience; we ſhall find that no other People than the Carthaginians could have been able to undertake ſuch Voyages. The Situation of their Country, and the Talents they knew they had for Trade, might probably have excited them to rove up and down that great Expanſe of Waters between Africa and America, having firſt ſettled a pretty regular Correſpondence between Cadiz and the Caſſiterides, now call'd the Azores. If all this were true, we might probably ſuppoſe that the Carthaginians and the other Phœnicians, who were ſettled in Spain and Africk, had carried People to the Azores, the Antilles, &c. and from thence to the Continent of America. And then, after having ſail'd ſeveral hundred Leagues, from the Coaſts of Africa to the Gulph of Mexico, 'tis not impoſſible but that thoſe Mariners might have attempted another as far as the main Land.

[b] 'Tis very well known, that the Antients always endeavour'd to ſet the Foundations of conſiderable Cities, and the Original of great Men, &c. in the moſt conſpicuous Light; and on the other Hand, that the credulous Multitude were too fond of the agreeable and glaring Deceit, ever to be diſſuaded from the Belief of it.

cans,

cans, or Europeans, ever had Courage enough to venture over a wide extended Ocean in ſuch weak Veſſels; and as on the other Side it does not appear that the Americans were ever acquainted with any other kind of Shipping, we may naturally ſuppoſe, that if Chance did at any Time throw ſome unhappy Wretches on a deſart Coaſt of America, in an Age when Mankind had little Knowledge in the Building of Ships, ſuch Perſons were ſoon forced to forget their former Cuſtoms and Manners, and to comfort themſelves for this Loſs, by the Propagation of their Species in thoſe Regions, into which Fortune had thrown them againſt their Wills.

In reality 'tis more natural to ſuppoſe that the firſt Colonies which ſettled in America came thither by Land; by this means we avoid the Difficulties that might be ſtarted concerning the Paſſage of wild Beaſts thither.

However, 'tis impoſſible to fix the Æra when this happened, which perhaps may be as old as the Flood, whereof the Peruvians have preſerved ſome [a] Idea: This is the only Footſtep remaining among them relating to remote Antiquity; for in all other Reſpects the Peruvian Annals ſcarce comprehend the Hiſtory of four Centuries; and then what are theſe Annals? only Guappa's, or Quippo's, that is, certain Strings with Knots in them to point out the ſeveral Tranſactions. Notice will be taken of them in the Sequel of this Work. But before we come to a Deciſion with reſpect to the Original of the Americans, it may be proper to examine whether the Affinity which ſome pretend to find between the Manners and Cuſtoms of the Americans and thoſe of the Phœnicians, may reaſonably induce us to conclude, that the former are deſcended from the latter.

We ſhall not take notice of the Affinity that has been found between the Cuſtom of living in Huts, and that of roving from Place to Place. The Americans in this Reſpect reſemble as much the Nomades, the Arabian Scenites, the Scythians, &c. as the Phœnicians.

The Compariſon that might be made of the Idolatry of thoſe Nations, would alſo hold with that of other Nations of our Hemiſphere. The following Affinity, could it be proved, would deſerve our Notice infinitely more; I mean that of Languages. But without affecting a great Depth of Erudition in this Place, which our Etymologiſts are generally ſo laviſh of, we ſhall content ourſelves with ſaying, that a dozen Words, whoſe Sound and Signification are the ſame in the Languages of two diſtant Nations, are hardly ſufficient to prove that they are both deſcended from the ſame Progenitors. However, if it were true that the Carthaginians, after their Diſcovery of the Heſperides, had known the Continent of America, they might probably have left their Language with ſome of their People behind them; and this Language might have been ſo far confounded with the American Tongues, as to remain only in twelve Words. Let us endeavour to maintain this kind of Paradox, though to ſpeak the Truth we are almoſt perſuaded that the American Settlements were firſt made by Land, and that the Phœnicians of Africa have had very little Share in it. Firſt, 'Tis certain that the Phœnician Language was in Proceſs of Time ſo much corrupted in Africa, that it degenerated to a meer Jargon, mixt with the Lybian and other wild Languages of the neighbouring Nations. Secondly, this Language thus degenerated, being carried into America by a ſmall Number of People, who [b] ſettled there, muſt naturally have been ſoon loſt, ſo that ſmall Remains of it muſt have been left.

The

[a] They tell us that ſix People ſaved themſelves in an univerſal Deluge; that they reſtored Mankind, and that Mangocapac the firſt Inca deſcended from one of them, &c.

[b] Emanuel de Moraes is of Opinion, that the Beauty of the American Climate having engaged great Numbers of Carthaginians to go thither, the Commonwealth being afraid of loſing its Inhabitants, was obliged to forbid thoſe Voyages upon Pain of Death; ſo that the abandoned Colonies ſunk into Savages, the Families ſeparated from one another,

THE Reader may probably look upon this as the mere Product of our Fancy; but if it be duly conſidered, it will not appear altogether improbable. In the whole, what Man of Learning will dare to aſſert, that the Languages of thoſe Countries which lie neareſt Africa, are not mixed with Punic, with Lybian, or even broken Cantabrian Words? Who is able to boaſt his having ſo thoroughly ſtudied the Genius and Etymology of the American Languages, as to be able to affirm, that there are not ſome Footſteps of the African Idioms, and of thoſe Places the Carthaginians poſſeſſed in Spain, to be found therein? Theſe Conjectures might have been carried much farther, had not the Languages of the Antilles been loſt, after the Spaniards deſtroyed the Inhabitants of thoſe Iſlands.

SOME Authors are of Opinion, that the Americans owe their Original to the Diſperſion of the ten Tribes of the Iſraëlites. Something has already been ſaid on that Head, in the third Diſſertation on the Jewiſh Ceremonies. 'Tis true, indeed, that ſome Traces of the Jewiſh Religion had been found at Jucatan, and the Coaſts of the South-Sea; as for Inſtance, a kind of Circumciſion, which we might with great Probability impute to Neceſſity, ſo far from being forc'd to ranſack the Jewiſh Religion upon that Account. [a] Emanuel de Moraes, a Portugueſe, who had travelled many Years in America, has endeavoured to prove that the Jews and Carthaginians are the common Parents of the Americans. We have juſt now quoted his Opinion with Relation to the Migration of the Carthaginians into Foreign Countries. Here follows his Reaſon to prove that of the Jews into Braſil. The Braſilians, ſays he, marry only into their own Families, in like Manner as the Jews married only into their own Tribes. Both of them call their Uncles by the Name of Father, and their Aunts Mother, their Couſins Brother, &c. both of them paſs a Month in deep Mourning, and wear Gowns that deſcend to their Feet. But theſe Affinities are of little Weight, ſome of them being forced, and the reſt entirely falſe. But we ſhall leave the Reader to his private Opinion.

THE great Grotius [b] thinks that the Americans of Panama came originally from Norway. The Norwegians went firſt into Iceland; from Iceland they went into Groenland, by the way of Frieſland: From Groenland they ſpread themſelves into Eſtotiſland, which is a Part of the Main Land of North America, and from thence they ſent Colonies to the Iſthmus of Panama. We muſt own that there is one Circumſtance which ſeems to prove that the Inhabitants of Panama and Mexico are originally of the North, and that is the Tradition of the Mexicans, who formerly declared to the Spaniards, that their Anceſtors came from that Quarter. As to Eſtotiſland, we are told there is a City in that Country, that goes by the Name of Norumbegue, which ſtill preſerves in its Name ſome Marks of the Paſſage of the Norwegians. But unhappily for this Opinion there are not the leaſt Footſteps remaining of any City in the North Parts of America; and the Natives of the Country, if we except thoſe who live in the Cities built by the Europeans, form what can at moſt be called but ſmall Villages, made up only of a few Houſes. Beſides, all that Zeni, who firſt diſcovered Frieſland and Eſtotiſland, relates of his Diſcoveries, appears altogether romantic, and as fictitious at leaſt as the Diſcovery of the Terra Auſtralis by [c] Sadeur. De Laat, in his Diſſertation on the Original of the Americans, ſeems to have thoroughly refuted the Reaſons which Grotius alledges to prove that the Inhabitants of Mexico and Panama came originally from Norway.

As to the Peruvians and other Nations of the South Part of America, Grotius has pretended to prove they came originally from China. The ſprightly and penetrating Genius another, and diſperſed themſelves up and down. The Language grew corrupt, new Words were coined, and in Proceſs of Time a Jargon was formed, that was neither Carthaginian nor American.

of both thoſe Nations; their common idolatrous Worſhip of the Sun; the Hieroglyphic Characters of both; and above all the Voyage of Mancocapac, who came from beyond the Seas to people Peru, and made himſelf the Law-giver of its Inhabitants; all theſe, I ſay, appeared Reaſons ſufficient to this great Man, to induce him to maintain his Opinion.

To this De Laat anſwers, That the Peruvians were never ſuch skilful Artiſts as the Chineſe, and that the moſt excellent Pieces of Handicraft of Peru, are greatly inferior to thoſe of China; but to this we muſt juſtly anſwer, that no Conſequence can be drawn from hence, why the Peruvians ſhould not be deſcended from the Chineſe. The Peruvians would not have been the firſt People that had degenerated from their Anceſtors. He add, that before the coming of the Spaniards among them, they were wholly ignorant of the Uſe of Sailing Veſſels; and that 'tis very unlikely the Peruvians ſhould have wholly loſt all Remembrance of their Country, and the Art of Sailing; particularly if we conſider, that becauſe of the Winds which generally blow from the Eaſt under the Equinoctial, 'tis eaſier to go from Peru to China, than from China to Peru.

THE Chineſe Junks are no way able to croſs the vaſt Sea which lies between China and Peru; beſides it was much more natural for the Chineſe to ſend People into Mexico, as that Country lies much nearer to China. The Adoration which the Peruvians pay the Sun, has no manner of Affinity with the Idolatry of the Chineſe, who do not worſhip that Planet; whereas it is adored by ſeveral Nations of the North Parts of America; from whence it is very natural to believe that the Peruvians came by the Iſthmus of Panama. 'Tis ſurpriſing that Grotius ſhould tell us, that thoſe People had the Uſe of Writing, ſince the Inca Garcilaſſo tells us expreſly in his Hiſtory, that they were ignorant of that Art.

MANCOCAPAC was not a Chineſe: The Peruvians ſaid that he was born of a [a] Rock, which they ſhew to this Day near Cuſco.

IT muſt be confeſſed that the Original of the Americans is hid in great Obſcurity; but it would be otherwiſe, had this People been leſs barbarous and ſavage in their Infancy, or had they afterwards known the Methods which thoſe of our Hemiſphere make uſe of, to tranſmit their Hiſtory to Poſterity; but America does not furniſh one ſingle Monument to this Purpoſe.

THOSE People minded only the preſent Moment, and never troubled their Heads with the Time paſt, or that to come; a Cuſtom which ſtill prevails among ſuch Savages as inhabit Countries not yet frequented by the Europeans. But let us not be too partial in our own Behalf: Are we very certain of our own Orignal? Do we know that of the French, the Spaniards, and the Germans? Would it not be impoſſible to trace the Original of the firſt Inhabitant of Europe? All the Difference we may find between the Americans and our ſelves, is, that Chriſtianity has fixed the Æra of our Hiſtories, and has forced us as it were to leave to the Diſcuſſion of the Critics, the Fictions and Prodigies of Paganiſm that preceded it. The Ages of European Idolatry are an inexhauſtible Fund of Fictions and Conjectures, which the Greeks and Romans themſelves have not been free from, as has been already obſerved; ſince the true Hiſtory of the Greeks is not to be traced higher than the firſt Olympiad, and that of the Romans than the Foundation of their City. We ſhall now give our Conjectures with reſpect to the Original of the Americans. 'Tis very probable that America was as populous a few Centuries after the Deluge as it is at this Time; after which States and Kingdoms were ſoon form'd:

How-

However this was done progreſſionally, according as Families ſeparated, and that the Children themſelves becoming Parents of a numerous Progeny, were obliged to quit their native Countries.

THESE Separations gave Riſe to States, in which Ambition and a Deſire of Superiority might even in thoſe Ages have had ſome Share. Nevertheleſs 'tis probable that Aſia did not ſend out any Colonies, till after having been forced to drive out ſuch young People as were capable of ſubſiſting by themſelves.

BUT theſe Settlements were very eaſily made in thoſe Times: Husbandry was then the only Employment; Mankind then ſpent their Lives in leading their Flocks to Paſture; and 'tis by the Opportunities which rural Occupations gave to People whoſe Paſſions were as yet but in their Infancy, that the firſt Conqueſts were made in Aſia, and the ſending out of the firſt Colonies. A Shepherd, who was at the Head of a numerous Family, Maſter of ſeveral Flocks, and who found himſelf well ſettled in Chaldea, ſent one of his Children, or Dependants, ſeveral Leagues off, with a Detachment of Oxen, Aſſes, and Camels.

THE Flock went gently on, grazing in their Paſſage, and inſenſibly drew farther from the true Owner. In the mean Time the Detachment grew more numerous; from this Flock there ſprung another. The Shepherd, who at firſt was no more than a Deputy, became himſelf the Maſter and Father of a Family: He then alſo ſeparated Part of his Wealth, and gave it as an Inheritance to that Son whom he intended ſhould ſettle in a Foreign Country, or to ſome Dependant that was going to ſettle further off. We preſume that in this Manner an hundred Years was Time ſufficient to people Europe, Aſia, and Africa, very conſiderably, and an hundred more to people the Continent of America. Let us ſuppoſe for this Purpoſe, that at the Flood, [a] Shem, Ham, and Japhet, had each twelve Children, and that all theſe Children were fit for Marriage about fifteen or eighteen Years after the Flood. 'Tis very probable, that after they had been married twelve Years, they might ſee a Poſterity of four hundred and thirty two Perſons. In this manner Noah might have been at the Head of above five hundred Deſcendants in the Space of thirty Years; and if we then ſuppoſe that every one of Noah's great Grandchildren had ten Children, theſe four hundred thirty two Perſons might have begot four thouſand three hundred and twenty Children in ten Years Time. All this might have happened in the Space of half a Century; ſo that multiplying them always by ten, and leaving an Interval of about twenty or five and twenty Years between one Generation and another, Aſia, Europe, and Africa, may have been peopled with four hundred thirty two Millions of Inhabitants, an hundred and fifty Years after the Flood. Methinks this could not be diſputed, were we only to have regard to the ordinary Methods of Propagation. 'Tis true, indeed, that we ſuppoſe every Head of a Family to have had ten Children, when probably ſeveral of thoſe Chiefs might not have had near ſo many. But then how many do we ſee in our Days who have more than ten, and if we conſider what Biſhop Burnet has told us concerning Meſſieurs Tronchin and Calandrin of [b] Geneva; "the former of whom at the Age of ſeventy five, had one hundred and fifteen Children, "or Perſons married to his Children, that could call him Father; and the other "at the Age of forty ſeven, had one hundred and five Perſons, who were all his Ne-"phews or Nieces by his Brothers or Siſters:" If, I ſay, we conſider theſe two Inſtances, 'twill be found that our Computation is modeſt enough, for an Age when Poverty and the Cares of Life had not yet deſtroy'd Man's Vigour, nor reduced him to the Neceſſity of refraining from Marriage, (the lawful Method of Propagation,) for fear of not being able to ſupport his Family. But altho' the Increaſe of our Species had for one hundred and fifty Years been much leſs than we have ſuppoſed it, and that only four hundred Millions of People had come into the World; nay farther, tho' we were ſtill to ſubſtract thirty Millions from that Sum, for the immature or violent Deaths, Diſeaſes and Wars, which in all probability were not ſo bloody in thoſe Ages as they have been ſince, 'tis very natural to think that ſome Millions might detach themſelves from the remaining three hundred and ſeventy Millions in order to ſeek their Fortunes in America. And though we afterwards ſuppoſe that Propagation may have been very much prejudiced by Reaſon of the Fatigues they laboured under in their Voyage, and from the Change of Climate, &c. we ſhall nevertheleſs find that ten or twelve Millions of People may have been able to furniſh America with forty Millions of Souls in fifty Years Time. What is here advanced ought not to be looked upon as a Paradox, nor ſhould any Difficulties be raiſed with reſpect to our Calculation; Difficulties which are founded only on the Length of Man's Life in our Days. Mankind in thoſe Ages had not invented all thoſe pernicious Arts, which at the ſame Time that they ſhorten Life, do alſo leſſen Propagation.

THE rural Life which Mankind led in the firſt Ages; the Indolence of the Americans, which has been continued from Father to Son to lateſt Poſterity; and the Tranquility of that People, unperplexed with thoſe Cares which now prey upon us, were incapable of ruining Health, or of making Men grow Old before their Time. But we will not purſue any farther a Subject that would carry us to too great Lengths. 'Tis ſufficient for our Purpoſe that we have proved the Poſſibility, and even the Probability, that this Part of the World began to be peopled about an hundred and forty Years after the Flood, and ſome Years after the Confuſion of Tongues at Babel.

THESE Colonies paſſed over into America from the North of Aſia, by the Way of Tartary; there are ſeveral Reaſons which induce us to be of this Opinion. " Firſt, [a] Fa" ther Hennepin relates, that four Savages came as Embaſſadors to the Iſſatis and the " Nadoueſſans, while he was among them. They came from a Country above five " hundred Leagues to the Weſtward of that Place, and had been four Moons in their " Journey. They added, ſays he, that their Country lay Weſtward, and that we lay " Eaſtward with reſpect to their Country; that they had journey'd on continually du" ring all that Time, except that which they employ'd in Sleep, and in hunting for " their Subſiſtence. Father Hennepin concludes from thence, that there is no ſuch
" Thing as the Straits of Anian; For theſe Savages aſſured us, ſays he, that they had " not croſſed any great Lake, for that is the Name they give to the Sea. They told us
" further, that all the Nations with whom they were acquainted, that live to the Weſt
" and North-Weſt of the Iſſatis, have not any great Lake near their wide-extended " Countries, but only Rivers, which coming from the North, paſs thro' the Countries
" of thoſe People who inhabit near their Confines, on that Side the great Lake lies,
" which in the Language of the Savages ſignifies Sea." Theſe People undoubtedly inhabit the North Part of California, and extend perhaps to the Frontiers of Eaſtern Tartary, Japan, and the Land of Jeſſo.

THIS Conjecture appears probable enough. [b] The North Part of Japan has not yet been diſcovered, and 'tis ſtill unknown whether it be an Iſland, or Terra Firma; whether it is joined to the Land of Jeſſo, or ſeparated from it by a Strait. The Japaneſe themſelves alſo are ignorant, or pretend to be ſo, in this Matter: " They tell us that the " People who live above them, that is, to the North and North-Eaſt of them, are ſavage
" and untractable: They nevertheleſs own that theſe Countries are of a vaſt Extent;

" that

" that they have gone very far up into them, without being ever able to come to the " End of them, or of finding the Extent of them by the Journeys they themſelves took, " or the Relations of the Inhabitants of the Country; that they had undertaken ſeveral " Journeys for that Purpoſe; and that the Want of Neceſſaries had forced them to re- " turn back without finiſhing their Diſcoveries, &c." From all this we may conclude they had made Incurſions very far up into thoſe Countries, and that they are a little better acquainted with thoſe Countries than we are, a ſmall Part of them only being known to us under the Name of Jeſſo. Nevertheleſs this Country muſt neceſſarily contain a vaſt Tract of Ground, if it be true that it joins to Aſia on one Side, and to America on the other, which according to De Liſle is an Extent of a thouſand or twelve hundred Leagues, from [a] the Borders of California to thoſe of Tartary. Here follows a Particularity which proves that thoſe People are acquainted with Countries which extend very far to the North, North-Eaſt, and Eaſt of Aſia.

We read in the Relation of the Dutch Embaſſies to Japan, that a Map was ſhewn them, in which the Land of Jeſſo was contiguous to Japan on that Side towards the Province of Occhio. The Coaſt of that Country extended North-Eaſtward towards America. They did not there find the leaſt Marks of the pretended Straits of Anian, and conſequently no Communication between the North and South Seas. The Japaneſe ſhewed that Map to the Dutch, to prove to them the Impoſſibility of going round Tartary by Sea, as they were ſuppoſed to have deſigned.

2. Those who have been perfectly acquainted with the Weſtern Parts of America, obſerve, that they are much better peopled than the Eaſtern Parts which lie towards Europe; but this Proof appears to us to be of little Weight: Here follows what we think a better. Tartary may be called the [b] Nurſery of all Nations. [c] Almoſt all the old World is at this Time governed by the Northern Nations, who all came originally from Great Tartary, the Inhabitants whereof in all Ages, accuſtomed to a laborious and active Way of Life like the Americans, have but very few if any ſettled Habitations, and cannot brook the Confinement of Cities. The Tartars, in the ſame Manner as the Northern Americans, make perpetual Inroads into the Territories of their Neighbours, and are continually engaged in War. In a Word, if Tartary has from Time to Time overflow'd, as it were, and pour'd Numbers of its Inhabitants into Europe and Aſia; why may it not have done the ſame with reſpect to America?

3. Besides this Similitude in the Manner of living, we meet with another in the Face and Stature of theſe People. But here it may be objected, that this Reſemblance muſt have been loſt in a Succeſſion of ſo many Ages. Our Anſwer is, That the Americans may have preſerved the Air and Cuſtoms of the Tartars their Anceſtors, as well as the Inhabitants of Lombardy, who have not degenerated much from the antient Lombards; no more than the Normans of France, the Inhabitants of Granada in Spain deſcended from the Moors, or the Turks of Greece in Europe and Aſia, from their reſpective Anceſtors. The modern Lombards are in general remarkable at this Day for bearing the largeſt Beards of any People in Italy, in which they reſemble the antient Lombards, who are ſaid to have [d] been ſo called from their long Beards. The Gaſcoons and Inhabitants of Languedoc, have preſerved the loud and undaunted Voice and ſtern Air of the antient Goths their Predeceſſors. The Spaniards ſtill retain the cold and conceited Air of their Predeceſſors, which uniting together inſenſibly, have at length formed what has been long called the Spaniſh Gravity, which they carried along with them to Naples, and have left ſome Traces of it among the Netherlanders. The Normans retain the Complexion, the Flegm, and cunning Evaſions, of the Northen Nations from whom they are deſcended. The Inhabitants of Granada, particularly thoſe called [a] Alpuxares, have inherited the Dexterity of the Moors, and though Chriſtians, yet they abſtain from Wine in the ſame Manner as the Mahometans. The Turks have introduced part of their Scythian Manners, and the Tartarian Air, into thoſe Countries they have ſince ſettled in. On the other Side, New-Comers inſenſibly acquire the Air and Cuſtoms of thoſe Places in which they ſettle, and in Proceſs of Time form a Mixture, which may nevertheleſs be diſcovered, when ſtrictly examined into. The Phyſiognomy of antient Nations is always viſible in the Faces of their Deſcendants; and the many Revolutions in Italy, during which the Blood of the Natives was ſo often diverted from its true Channel, have yet not been able ſo to change the Features of the modern Italians, but that it plainly ſhews they are either direct or indirect Succeſſors and Deſcendants of the antient Inhabitants of Italy. In fine, to confirm the Opinion of thoſe who are of Opinion that the Americans came originally from Tartary, we will quote the Teſtimony of Furbiſher; he relates "that [b] the Savages he met with to the North-Weſt of Eu- "rope on the American Coaſt, had a Tartarian Air, long black Hair, broad Faces, "flat Noſes, a ſwarthy Complexion; that they roved about like the Tartars, and were "divided into Hoords without any ſettled Habitation, &c."

WE might moreover mention ſeveral Cuſtoms, which are very well adapted to prove that the Americans are of Tartarian Extraction; with ſome of theſe we ſhall preſent the Reader. Whenever a Prince or Cacique among the Tartars, and the greateſt Part of the Americans, leaves the World, ſome of his Domeſtics are always buried along with him. Both have Riches, Trade, and the Sciences in Contempt; and prefer to theſe domeſtic Employments, the Diverſion of Hunting, and making Inroads, which they very often do, for above four or five hundred Leagues, from the Places where they uſually fix their Tents. The antient Inhabitants of the North Parts of Europe and Aſia painted their Bodies; as is manifeſt from what Hiſtory relates concerning the [c] Picts, a People of Scythia, who uſed to paint themſelves much after the ſame Manner as Travellers tell us the Americans, and particularly the Inhabitants of Mexico and Florida, do at this Time. The Goths alſo painted their Faces and Bodies with Vermillion. In fine, the Manner of making War by Surpriſe and Ambuſcades, ſo much practiſed by the Tartars and Americans; the irreconcileable Hatred of both towards their Enemies; their Contempt of Death; their Cuſtom of yielding to their old Men the Honour of being Counſellors, whilſt the youngeſt and moſt vigorous go to the Wars; which Cuſtom is obſerved by ſeveral Tartars to this Day, and was alſo for many Ages practiſed by the Goths, and other Nations that came from the North Parts of Europe and Aſia, and is ſtill obſerved by the Americans; that ſavage Temper which inſpires them with the cruel Cuſtom of drinking the Blood of their Enemies; that Subordination of their Youth to the Aged in military Affairs, and in their Councils of War; the natural Impatience of all theſe People in general, ſeems to authorize the Original we have given to the Americans: But after all, we don't look upon theſe Reaſons as ſo many convincing Proofs, and we willingly ſubmit them to the Conſideration of the Critics.

BEFORE we conclude this Chapter we will produce two or three Etymologies, which [d] Vander Myl had form'd in his own Imagination, to prove that the antient Language of the Tartars differ'd but very little from the German, and that it ſtill ſubſiſts in a few Words on the Borders of Tartary and America. Tenduc, which is the laſt Province of Tartary towards America, ſignifies, ſays he, [a] Extremity and End: Anian, the Name of another Tartarian Kingdom near California, ſignifies [b] Entrance. Near Anian is a great Extent of Country, which is called [c] Bergo; Vander Myl happily meets with a very remarkable hiſtorical Circumſtance therein, which is, that the Scythians, after having abandoned their Country, went and ſhelter'd or hid themſelves in that Country of Bergo. Theſe Etymologies may be put in the ſame Claſs with thoſe of [d] Laquais (or Footman) and Tire-larigot, (or to drink copiouſly) which Menage has obliged us with.

Goropius Becanius, who was alſo ſeiz'd with the ſame etymological Frenzy, had a long Time before deriv'd the Hebrew Tongue, and the Names of the antient Patriarchs, from his native Flemiſh. He tells us that [e] Adam, Methuſelah, and ſome other Patriarchs, diſcovered in their Names the moſt palpable Marks of their Original. The Herd of Etymologiſts may very well be put in parallel with the Makers of Anagrams. We may juſtly apply to both what Colletet has ſaid of the latter, and boldly affirm,

Que tous ces renverſeurs de noms,
Ont la cervelle renverſee.

He, who in tort'ring Words employs his Pains, Tortures in vain his wild diſorder'd Brains.

To theſe Remarks, relating to the firſt Colonies which were ſent into America, and the Original of its Inhabitants, we ſhall add the Voyage that was undertaken in 1170, by one Madoc, of Welch Extraction, towards the North Parts of America. Madoc's People being afterwards abandon'd by the Engliſh their Countrymen, ſoon degenerated into Savages: The only Footſteps they preſerved of their Original were a few Welch Words, which David Ingram, an Engliſh Mariner, obſerv'd in their Language; and the [f] Adoration of the Croſs, the Worſhip of which either themſelves or their Poſterity carried into Cumana and Cozumela. Others are of Opinion that the Welch went aſhore on the Azores. As to the pretended St. Andrew's Croſs, which the Spaniards who firſt went into Cumana found there, and which, they tell us, had been long worſhipped before their Arrival there, we muſt put it in the ſame Claſs with thoſe Relations which are either doubtful, or downright falſe. The ſame may be ſaid of the Croſs, which was alſo worſhipped by the Inhabitants of Cozumela or Acuzamil, before the Arrival of the Spaniards. We ſhall take Notice of this Adoration in the Sequel of the Work. The above-mention'd Spaniards found alſo ſome Negroes at Caracas, between Santa Martha and Carthagena. 'Tis very probable ſome of them might have been carried by a Storm from the African Coaſts to thoſe of America: 'Tis not impoſſible, neither, but that ſome [g] Indians of the Southern Parts of Aſia, and the neighbouring Iſlands, might have entered America by the Southern Countries which lie next to Aſia, and from thence have convey'd Recruits to Chili, Paraguay, and Peru. In ſhort, it may alſo have happened, that America was peopled from the North Parts of Europe: As for Inſtance, the Laplanders and Samoieds may have been carried into Groenland, either on the Ice, or in their Canoes; that from thence their Poſterity might have extended themſelves to Eſtotiſland, and ſo further by Degrees: But however this be, it does not in the leaſt deſtroy our Opinion, viz. that the firſt Americans came into that Country by the Way of Tartary. A Writer who ſhould entertain a Notion of Præ-Adamites, might eaſily ſolve all theſe Difficulties, by making the Americans ſpring from another Adam. As for themſelves they generally believe that they owe their Original to a [a] Lake, or Fountain, or that they came from certain ſubterraneous Places; in this they diſcover as much Ignorance as the antient Barbarians of our Hemiſphere, who included the Oaks among their Anceſtors.

CHAP. II.

Of their IDOLATRY; NOTIONS with reſpect to the DEITY, PARADISE, &c. and of their SACRIFICES.

WE do not intend to treat this Subject philoſophically, becauſe that would carry us to too great Lengths, not to mention that it would be unſuitable to our Deſign, which requires only an hiſtorical Narration of Things. There are two kinds of Idolatry, both of them as old almoſt as Mankind. The firſt occaſioned the giving to the Stars and Elements what was due to God only; the ſecond, which was much more various than the former, had Man for its Object; both roſe originally from the Pride and Fear of Man. On the one he has raiſed, if I may be allowed the Expreſſion, all the Figures, all the Characters, every Thing in general which he imagin'd might be of Uſe to make the Deity ſenſible, to his Mind; and rather than be too narrow in his Conceptions of it, he has multiply'd the Idea in a thouſand different Manners. Neither has he forgot human Nature, whoſe Dignity he has alſo endeavour'd to raiſe, by aſcribing to it all the Perfections which Adam and his immediate Poſterity had conceived of the Deity. On the other he has built a [b] ſumptuous Edifice in which are compriſed an infinite Number of Things he imagin'd would be agreeable to the Gods, not forgetting the leaſt Trifles or Gewgaws. From this Store-Houſe, laid open to the whole Univerſe, iſſued forth the great Number of Rites and Ceremonies which have ſpread up and down the World for ſo many Centuries; and the numberleſs whimſical Opinions that have never ceaſed ſtarting up, ever ſince the Store-Houſe was firſt opened. Whatever graceful Aſpect ſome may have appeared with more than the reſt, they yet are all in the main of the ſame Texture, becauſe they all proceed from the ſame Manufacture. 'Tis not always neceſſary that Nations ſhould have correſponded with one another, and have mutually communicated their Sentiments, to have a Similitude of Ideas and Opinions: But it would be much more difficult to give a Reaſon for the Conformity they are found to have with one another in that Reſpect, if every Country produced a different Species of Men. Are all theſe different Forms of Worſhip, all theſe romantic Notions, leſs agreeable to the Supreme Being than the Infidelity of an Atheiſt? The Matter will admit of Diſpute. The celebrated [c] Bayle has determined for Infidelity; but Leſcarbot, Author of the Hiſtory of New-France, had declared before him, "That he would have a "greater Eſteem for a Man, who ſhould worſhip nothing, than for one who adored "Creatures, uniformed with either Life or Senſation; for, continues the ſame "Writer, how wicked ſoever he may be, he is not yet guilty of Blaſphemy, nor "aſcribes to another the Glory due to God only: He indeed leads ſuch a Life as

" is not many Removes from that of the Beaſts; but that Man is ſtill more brutiſh, " who adores an inanimate Thing, and puts his Truſt in it. A Man who has not im- " bib'd any erroneous Opinion, is much more capable of learning the true Worſhip, " than another that has; he being like the Canvas, which is ready to receive whatever " Colours may be laid on it." Such as have converted Atheiſts and Idolaters may decide the Juſtneſs of this Compariſon.

ALL the antient Idolaters had their ſubaltern Deities, whom they look'd upon as Deputies or Lieutenants to one Supreme God. This Opinion, which is leſs ſurpriſing than Atheiſm, was imbib'd amongſt the moſt ſavage Idolaters. Travellers aſſure us, that the Canadans, and other Savages of North America, ſtand in Fear of the [a] Devil, and believe there are [b] Genii even in inanimate Things: But they nevertheleſs believe in a [c] God, " the Creator of all Things; though they ſay that there are, beſides this God, a Son, a " Mother, and the celeſtial Sun, making four in all. God, ſay they, is above all Things. " The Son and the Planet of the Sun are good Beings; but the Mother who eats them " is good for nothing: And they cannot boaſt too much of the Father's Goodneſs." The Virginians, who alſo believe there are ſeveral Deities, of different Degrees, make them all ſubordinate to one ſuperior God. One would think that the Floridans acknowledg'd the Sun for the Supreme Being; in which Caſe their Worſhip wou'd have an Affinity to that of many antient Heathens, who conſider'd it as the greateſt and moſt powerful of all Beings. The Zemes of the Indians of Hiſpaniola were ſubject to a Being, eternal, unchangeable, and infinite. In fine, 'tis manifeſt, that the bare Light of Reaſon tells Mankind they ought to depend on a Power, who is greatly ſuperior to human Strength; and how diſtant ſoever the Practice of the moſt ſavage American Idolaters may appear from this Idea, it may nevertheleſs be obſerv'd, that many Arguments need not be employ'd to reduce them to this grand Principle.

THE little Knowledge the idolatrous Americans have preſerved of the Supreme Being, is abſorb'd as it were in an infinite Number of ridiculous and trifling Fictions, the natural Conſequences of the falſe Notions they entertain of his Nature and Subſtance. It would be difficult to produce any Thing that has the leaſt Shadow of Reaſon in Juſtification of the Riſe and Original of theſe idle Fictions; or to prove that the Extravagancy of their Notions ſhould reſult from any Thing but their wild and crazy Imaginations, and an habitual Ignorance.

WE ſhall make but one Remark on this Head; which is, that if we carefully examine the Idea and Character the Savages aſcribe to the Deity, we ſhall find, 1. That like Children, they form to themſelves a God, proportionable to the Strength of their own Capacities. 2. That they make him act conformable to their Practices and Inclinations. 3. That they ſuppoſe his Omnipotence to conſiſt in giving them whatever may gratify their Inclinations. 4. That the ſupreme Felicity of this Deity conſiſts in a perfect Enjoyment of whatever is the Object of the Happineſs of thoſe who adore him. 5. That [a] They believe in one whom they call Cudouagni, and tell us, that he often ſpeaks to them. —— " They ſay " that whenever he is angry with them he throws Duſt in their Eyes. Leſcarbot." The Braſilians alſo ſtand in Fear of the Devil, whom they call Anian. We ſhall omit the different Names that are given him by the Moderns. The greateſt Part of them aſſociate him with God, and worſhip them both equally, but they ſtand much more in Fear of the Devil. Theſe Ideas which the American Savages have form'd to themſelves of both God and Devil, have a pretty near Affinity to the two Eaſtern Principles, known to the antient Perſians under the Names of Arimanes and Oramanſes. The Worſhip of the noxious Gods and Evil Genii was eſtabliſh'd upon the ſame Foundation among the Greeks and Romans.

[b] The Savages of New-York are of Opinion, that the Evil Genii are the Cauſe of bodily Pains. Thoſe of South America aſcribe Genii to Arrows. In the main, may not this Opinion have as much Reaſon in it, as that the Antients had of the Soul of the World, and of an univerſal Spirit that pervades every Being.

Spiritus intus alit, totamque infuſa per artus,
Mens agitat molem.——————

theſe Notions are tranſmitted from Father to Son, and that there is Room to believe they have received ſeveral new Improvements ſince their Original Eſtabliſhment, which was owing to the Ignorance of the firſt Americans. This may be illuſtrated by frequent Practices obſervable amongſt ourſelves. Thus for inſtance, when an ignorant Father has a Mind to inſtil the Idea of a God into his Child, before he is ſcarce able to ſpeak: To which End he tells him indeed, that he is the moſt powerful of all Beings; but then he never fails to blend with this Idea a great many Qualities and Frailties incident to human Nature. If the Child loves Play, his Father will be ſure to tell him, whenever he wants to keep him within due Bounds, that in caſe he behaves himſelf well, God will give him Play-things; and all his other Threats and Promiſes are ſure to be of the ſame Stamp. His whole Diſcourſe to his Child ſhall turn wholly on ſenſual Pleaſures, Dainties, Toyings, and ſuch like Puerilities; in the midſt of which, with an Air of Serioufneſs, he will introduce this eternal Being, of whom he himſelf has but an imperfect Idea; then clothing this Being with a Body, but more beautiful and perfect than his own, he will aſcribe to him all thoſe Paſſions, by which he himſelf is actuated; and cannot forbear to blend therewith certain Errors, which through Ignorance he himſelf has always conſider'd as laudable Qualities. The Child brought up in theſe Ideas, and deſtitute of all Opportunities of acquiring a more perfect Knowledge than that he received from his Infancy, adds his own extravagant Notions to thoſe he imbib'd when he was a Child. To purſue this Matter further: Let us ſuppoſe that a Chriſtian Prince ſhould prohibit his Subjects from holding any manner of Correſpondence with their Neighbours, that he ſhould deprive them of the Uſe of Books, ſhou'd baniſh the Arts and Sciences out of his Dominions, ſhould command his People to ſpend their Lives in Hunting, in roving about the Woods, &c. and that his Succeſſors ſhould exactly follow his Steps, we will not ſcruple to affirm, that in two or three Centuries, this People, then become as ſavage as thoſe of Braſil, wou'd intermix what little remain'd in their Minds of their own Religion with the moſt extravagant Notions, and that they wou'd be as ignorant as the Americans. Hence we may eaſily conclude, that the Americans were capable of themſelves to eſtabliſh their erroneous Principles; and that, if there be any Affinity between them and the Idolaters of our Hemiſphere, with reſpect to the Idea they entertain of the Divine Being, it muſt be owing to Chance only.

THE ſame may be ſaid with regard to the Notions the Americans have formed to themſelves of Paradiſe and Hell. The Canadans believe that after Death they ſhall be tranſported into beautiful green Fields, embelliſh'd with all kind of Trees, Fruits, and Flowers. They have not forgot to give Hunting, and the bartering of Skins, a Place in their Paradiſe. [a] The Virginians admit none but their Fellow-Citizens into their Paradiſe: Nevertheleſs the Author quoted in the Margin, tells us, that they have retained ſome Idea of the Reſurrection of the Body, and of the Immortality of the Soul. "They "tell us, ſays he, ſome Fictions concerning the Reſurrection of certain Perſons from the "Dead — as of one — who after his Death had come near the Mouth of Popoguſſo, which "is their Hell; but that a God reſcued him, and gave him leave to return back to the "World, that he might tell his Friends what they ſhould do, in order to prevent their "going into that Place of Torment."

THIS Popoguſſo, the Hell of the Virginians, as we juſt now obſerved, is a great Ditch, which they place at a vaſt Diſtance to the Weſt of their Country, in which they tell us their Enemies are continually burning. The Braſilians who inhabit a very hot Climate, that naturally inſpires them with the Sprightlineſs and Gaiety of Temper, which Travellers have obſerved to be in all thoſe Savages, aſſure us, [a] "That the Souls of the "Virtuous will go and meet thoſe of their Anceſtors, beyond the high Mountains; "that they will dwell with them in delightful Gardens, where they will laugh, "dance, and ſing to all Eternity. To live a Life of Virtue, is with them to make a "great Havock of their Enemies, and afterwards to devour them." The natural Bravery of this People makes them conſider all thoſe as in a State of Damnation, who have led an inglorious Life, and have not oppoſed their Enemies with Vigour; theſe they give up to the Devil, and believe he will torment them eternally. In a Word, all theſe Savages proportion the Rewards and Puniſhments of the next Life to the Ideas they have either acquired or formed to themſelves of Virtue and Vice, of the Happineſs and Unhappineſs of this Life; and in this only they agree with the antient and modern Heathens of our Hemiſphere. I believe 'twould be needleſs to purſue this Conformity; Men are apt enough of themſelves to form the moſt extravagant Abſurdities. Our Notions of the next Life are always conformable to that we may lead in this; and as a Proof of this Aſſertion, we need only reflect upon the Elyſian Fields and [b] Tartarus of the Antients, the Surgam and Patalam of the Eaſt-Indians, &c. Such Notions as theſe have inſinuated themſelves into other Religions, and have been imbib'd by Nations whom we are far from conſidering as ſavage. Of this the Paradiſe of the Mahometans is one Inſtance; nor can the Chriſtians themſelves forbear employing the moſt ſenſual Ideas in their Repreſentations of Hell and Paradiſe.

[a] They believe, that after this Life, the Good are at Reſt, and the Wicked in Miſery. Now, who are the Wicked? Their Enemies, and themſelves the Good; ſo that they are of Opinion they will all be happy after Death, particularly if they have defended their Country with Vigour, and killed a great Number of their Enemies. Leſcarbot's Hiſtory of New France.

THE Reſult of theſe ſeveral Reflections, is, that all Nations are ſenſible of the Neceſſity they are under, of adoring one Supreme Being. This Neceſſity ſuppoſes a Dependance in Man, and conſequently what Idea ſoever we may form to ourſelves of his Being, we muſt neceſſarily repreſent him greater than ourſelves. This Dependance gives even the moſt ſavage Part of Mankind ſome Notion of Sin, and points out to them the Neceſſity of Prayer and Repentance, in order to obtain the Favour of Heaven, and reconcile themſelves to the Deity. Sin draws Puniſhment after it; but Reconciliation, which naturally ſuppoſes the Practice of Virtue, makes us hope for a Reward. The Americans have preſerved ſeveral Notions of this Kind which lead inſenſibly to the Immortality of the Soul, and even to the Reſurrection of the Body, whereof ſome of them have not remained wholly ignorant. The Peruvians, who had more Knowledge than the reſt of the Americans, obſerving that the Spaniards dug up the Bodies of their Incas to plunder them of the Riches that were buried with them, inſtantly beſought them not to diſperſe their Bones, for fear it ſhould prevent their Reſurrection. We muſt indeed confeſs that the Americans have ſullied theſe pure, theſe plain Principles, by the Mixture of the moſt ridiculous Notions; however this is not ſo great a Matter for Surprize, ſince they might juſtly reproach us, notwithſtanding all our boaſted Underſtanding, with having been guilty of the ſame Fault.

SACRIFICES and [c] perfuming with Incenſe were uſed only by the Mexicans and Peruvians. This Manner of ſerving God, eſtabliſhed among all Nations before the Birth of our Saviour, might have been preſerv'd by Tradition in America, ever ſince the ſettling of the firſt Colonies there. As for human Victims, whoſe Blood has been ſo plentifully ſhed on the Altars of the Nations of both Hemiſpheres, it would be very difficult to ſay any Thing that were reaſonable on that Head. One wou'd not think it poſſible find the leaſt Footſteps of Humanity in thoſe cruel Sacrifices. 'Tis however probable, to that the firſt Victims of this kind were offered up in order to appeaſe the divine Vengeance on certain Occaſions, of ſo great Importance that they thought the angry Gods could be appeas'd with nothing but human Blood. This is perhaps the moſt reaſonable Conſtruction that can be made in this Caſe; and the Original we have given to this cruel Cuſtom, ſeems in ſome meaſure to be juſtified by the Death of the Deſcendants of King Saul. 'Tis moreover probable, that theſe barbarous Sacrifices might afterwards have been continued in order to perpetuate the Events which had given Birth to them; and as the Mind of Man, in all Things which relate to falſe Worſhip, is much more apt to give into Exceſs than to keep within due Bounds, Mankind could not prevail upon themſelves to quit that cruel Species of Devotion, but continued to devote to their Gods every Foreigner and Enemy to their Country. Such might have been the Motives of a Worſhip, in which Hatred, Pride, and Superſtition, were equally gratified; and which conſequently might have eſtabliſhed itſelf in America, without the Inhabitants borrowing the Idea of it from other Nations. 'Tis our Opinion, that the Cuſtom which the Braſilians and other American Savages have of putting their Captives to Death, ought to be ranked among theſe inhuman Sacrifices.

CHAP. III.

Of their SOUTHSAYERS, PRIESTS, and ſome of their PROPHECIES.

WE cannot comprehend the Reaſon why [a] Leſcarbot refuſes to beſtow the Title of Prieſts on thoſe who perform the Ceremonies and Invocations of the Demons among the Weſt-Indians, but as far as they preſerve the Uſe of Sacrifices and Oblations, which they offer to their Gods. This Notion is not very juſt. The Title of Prieſt may be beſtowed on all thoſe who are appointed to guide and inſtruct People in their religious Worſhip, of what kind ſoever it be. There are in all Men certain Ideas, which, from their Simplicity, may be called original ones. The Name of Prieſt preſents us with one of this Nature. This Word, which is derived from the Greek, ſignifies Antient. It therefore ſuppoſes that a Prieſt ſhould be old; and this is founded on a plain and ſimple Reaſon, which the Savages form to themſelves as well as we. For Perſons of an advanc'd Age are more prudent, more devout, and naturally more capable of reſiſting the Paſſions than young People, and conſequently fitter to preſent themſelves before God, and to offer up Prayers for Man. Having by Experince acquired a more extenſive Knowledge, they are conſequently more capable of giving Inſtruction. 'Tis therefore much more natural to commit the Adminiſtration of religious Worſhip to the Elder, than to abandon it to young People, who have generally leſs Prudence and Devotion, are over-run with Paſſions, without Experience or Underſtanding, and whoſe Character cannot be agreeable to the Supreme Being. The Americans have preſerv'd the Original Idea, which the Word Prieſt preſented formerly to the Mind; but we loſt it a little after the Birth of Chriſtianity. All thoſe among them who preſide in religious Worſhip, are choſen out of the Elders of the People; and this was generally the Practice in the moſt remote Antiquity.

THE Mexican Clergy had formerly a Superior, whom we may compare to the [b] Pontifex Maximus of the antient Romans, or to that Perſon whom the Lutherans of Germany call by the Name of Antiſtes, Superintendant, or Chief Overſeer; a kind of Prelate, who though he has neither the Croſier or the Mitre, has nevertheleſs a great Influence over the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of the Lutheran Churches.

[b] High Prieſt.

WE

We are not ſufficiently acquainted with the eccleſiaſtical State of Mexico, to compare the Dean, or Chief of the Clergy of that Empire, to the Pope, or even the Muſti of the Turks. 'Tis not to be doubted but that the Prieſts of the other American Nations have their Superiors, who, as in other Countries, have the whole Direction of Religion and religious Worſhip. Men patiently enough ſubmit to ſuch a Dependance, as leaves thoſe who are ſubordinate the Hopes of governing one Day in their Turns.

Most of the American Prieſts are at the ſame Time Phyſicians. Thoſe of Florida always carry along with them Scrips or Wallets full of Herbs and Drugs, for the Uſe of their Patients, [a] to whom they preſcribe in the triple Quality of Prieſt, Phyſician, and Quack.

Priests are alſo Phyſicians in other Countries beſides the Weſt-Indies. We meet with the ſame Circumſtance in Aſia and Africa; ſo natural is the [b] Belief, that Heaven beſtows in a peculiar Manner, the healing Arts on thoſe who are the Depoſitaries of religious Worſhip. This Notion may perhaps be as old as the World. All Pagan Antiquity was of Opinion that the Gods were the Inventors of Phyſic, and in conſequence of this Belief, the Phyſicians were by the Heathens enrolled in the Number of their Gods. The antient Phyſicians likewiſe made uſe of Spells and Inchantments in their Art, in the ſame Manner as the Americans do at this Day. Whether it were, that they intended to make themſelves be conſider'd as more awful by theſe Impoſtures, which the groſs and ſuperſtitious Multitude took for Favours from Heaven; or that the People look'd upon every Thing as Magic, which they could not account for. Be that as it will, the Europeans, with all their Learning and Politeneſs, have not yet been able to purge themſelves entirely of that groſs Idea, which has given Riſe to a prodigious Number of pernicious Books of Secrets, whoſe Authors pretend to aſſociate Phyſic with Incantations.

But it is now no longer look'd upon as an Art that is aſſociable to the Prieſthood only; though 'tis common enough in Germany, to meet with Clergymen, who are [c] Phyſicians and Surgeons at the ſame Time. To conſider Things in a certain Senſe, we ſhall find that all Sciences are allied to one another, and may eaſily be conſidered in one Point of Sight. Is it not probable, that the Conjunction which the Germans have made of Phyſic with Theology, may owe its Original to the antient German Prieſts, who, in Imitation of the Druids among the antient Gauls their Neighbours, had alſo united theſe two Branches together?

The Religion and Counſel of Prieſts have the ſame Influence on civil Affairs in America, as among us in Europe. The ſame Prejudice which makes us truſt the Prieſts with the Cure of our bodily Diſtempers, gives them no little Authority in State-Affairs. They play their Parts ſo well, that they are no ways inferior to their Brethren in other Parts of the World. We have an Inſtance of this Cunning and Artifice in one of the moſt ſavage Nations of America. "The Braſilians, ſays Leſcarbot, have their Caraibes, "who go from one Village to another, and impoſe ſo far on the People, as to make [a] Coreal's Voyages to the Eaſt-Indies, Vol. I.

[b] The Prieſthood has ever been rever'd by all Nations, on account of their being, as it were, the Mediators between God and Man. "By which Means they have frequently rid the People, and had their Souls at their De-"votion, and under that Pretext, have in many Places arrogated to themſelves a Power that could no ways be "juſtified by Reaſon. . . . . Moreover, the Man who is able to diſcover ſuch abſent Particulars as give us Uneaſineſs, "is juſtly honoured by us, and particularly when to this is added a Knowledge in ſuch Medicines as are proper "to cure bodily Diſtempers; Circumſtances highly efficacious to gain Credit and Authority among Men." Leſcarbot's Hiſtory of New France. There is ſo natural a Connection in theſe ſeveral Ideas, that 'tis no Wonder the Savages of America, as well as ſeveral other Nations, whom we look upon as Barbarians, have preſerved it in its primitive Simplicity.

[c] Nay, Quacks, which is ſtill worſe.

" them believe they hold a Correſpondence with [a] Spirits, by which means they are " not only able to give them Victory over their Enemies, but that the Fruitfulneſs or " Barrenneſs of the Earth is owing to their Influence." " They delude the People to " that Degree, ſays [b] Coreal, ſpeaking of the Braſilian Prieſts, as to make them be- " lieve they carry on a ſecret Intelligence with Agnian; and that they can invigorate " whomſoever they pleaſe with Strength and Courage ſufficient to conquer their Ene- " mies. Theſe Prieſts are the old Men among the Aldeas, who boaſt that to them on- " ly the Growth of Plants and Fruits is owing. They are artful enough to act the " Part of Agnian to the Life, and perſuade the Savages, that he torments and uſes " them ill. This they complain of particularly in the Night, becauſe that Seaſon is " moſt favourable to their Impoſture." The Prieſts of other Religions exact the ſame Confidence from their People, by aſſuring them in the ſtrongeſt Terms, that Victory, Plenty, and the reſt of the Bleſſings of Heaven, flow only from their Zeal and Prayers. We may add, that there is not one Eccleſiaſtic in any other Part of the World, who does not wiſh to be conſidered as the Agent or Ambaſſador of his God; and as this Character which he arrogates to himſelf is the moſt glorious that could poſſibly have been invented, 'twill ſcarce excite Humility in the Perſon who bears it.

THE Clergy of all Religions endeavour univerſally, in the firſt Place, to eſtabliſh their Dominion over the Minds of Men; and to effect it, they think 'tis their Buſineſs to perſuade the credulous Vulgar, that by the Virtue of certain private Secrets they obtain the Diſpoſal of the celeſtial Bleſſings. Let it not be objected, that thoſe of the Braſilians are contemptible; for ſince they are duly qualified to work Wonders upon thoſe Savages, 'tis ſufficient to juſtify what we have advanc'd in this Place. Though their Method be different from that of the Bramins, the Derviſes, the Bonzes, and the Talapoins, yet the Plan is not therefore leſs the ſame; and we may be aſſured that a Boïé who breathes Courage on an Aſſembly of Savages, reaps as much Advantage from this pretended Myſtery, as a Bramin does from his Water of the Ganges, or from an Ablution with Cow-Dung.

THE Weſt-Indians have their Oracles and Prophecies, as well as other Nations. Such were thoſe which gave the Mexicans notice of the approaching Deſcent of a foreign People, a little before the Arrival of the Spaniards in America. Theſe Prophecies are of the ſame Nature, with thoſe which the Greek and Roman Hiſtorians have tranſmitted to us. They are all of them deliver'd in equivocal Terms; are as applicable to any other Event as that to which they are pleas'd to apply them, and oftentimes made after the Events foretold by them have happened. The ſame Judgment is to be form'd of all thoſe Prodigies that accompanied the Fall of [c] Montezuma, which muſt have appeared trifling and contemptible, had Chance ſo order'd it, that they had met with Events of an indifferent Nature; but they had the moſt profound Regard and Reverence paid them, as they either preceded or accompanied the Revolution of Mexico, which Circumſtance was nót a little heightened by the natural Superſtition of the Mexicans.

THEIR Oracles may be put in the ſame Claſs with thoſe of the antient Heathens, that is to ſay, they are always [d] doubtful, generally falſe, and ſometimes true by mere Accident,

[a] 'Tis well known that Numa Pompilius, taking Advantage of the Credulity and Superſtition which in his Time had ſo great an Aſcendant over the Romans, made uſe of a pious Fraud to complete his Intentions, by telling them, that he held a private Correſpondence with the Nymph Egeria, who was ſuppoſed to forward the Delivery of Children, and that all his Actions were influenced by her immediate Inſpirations.

[b] Vol. I. of his Voyages.

[c] Emperor of Mexico.

[d] The Deceit and Covetouſneſs of the Prieſts are not a little concern'd herein. Here follows an Inſtance, that may be put in parallel with any of thoſe we read of that kind among the antient Heathens. An Indian going thro' a Wood, perceived a Motion in the Trees, which he took to be ſupernatural. Frighted at the Prodigy, he addreſs'd Accident. They, as well as we, have the Art of [a] working on the Affections of their Hearers, by certain affected Preliminaries, with ſuitable Geſtures and Poſtures, which though they appear ridiculous to us, are yet uſeful in preparing the Attention of the Auditors, and by that Means have the wiſh'd-for Effect on the Minds of thoſe who wait for the Juggler's Deciſions. We will allow that theſe Arts are not to be practis'd on any but Americans; nevertheleſs we muſt own, that they are founded on ſuch Prejudices as few Perſons are free from, viz. Firſt, That God is wonderful in all his Works: Secondly, That all kind of Simplicity is diſpleaſing to him; and, Thirdly, That he never communicates himſelf to Men, but in a Manner directly oppoſite to the common Courſe of Nature. 'Tis on theſe three Prejudices, that the antient as well as modern Heathens have founded all the ridiculous Extravagances of their Oracles; and as theſe Prejudices are univerſal, we muſt not be ſurpriz'd, that even the Chriſtian Religion itſelf is not entirely exempt from them.

DANCING and Singing are in great Vogue among the Americans; but notwithſtanding there may appear ſome Marks of religious Worſhip in both of them, we yet cannot ſafely determine on this Article. Probably they may dance only for Pleaſure-Sake, and to exerciſe themſelves; as to their Songs, they relate always to the illuſtrious Actions of their Anceſtors, and the Deſtruction of their Enemies.

WE muſt not omit, that the Prieſts of the moſt ſavage Americans, have, as in all other Countries, certain [b] Characteriſtics, peculiar to their Profeſſion. We have already taken notice of the little Bags which the Jouanas among the Floridans carry at their Girdles in Quality of Phyſicians. The Braſilian Boïes carry Maracks in their Hands, which is the Name they give to certain hollow Gourd-Bottles, adorn'd with Feathers, and filled with little Stones. They ſtalk along with theſe Maracks in their Hands, with as grave and haughty an Air, as a Friar hugging his Crucifix. We are likewiſe aſſur'd, that the prieſtly Dignity is [c] hereditary among the American Savages, and that the Secrets of the Art are tranſmitted from Father to Son to the lateſt Poſterity. 'Tis exactly the ſame in the Eaſt-Indies, where the Bramins make all their Children Bramins. The Jews excluded all but the Tribe of Levi from the Prieſthood: The Prieſthood was alſo hereditary among the antient Egyptians; but the Chriſtians have laid aſide that Cuſtom.

dreſs'd himſelf to that Tree which he fancied ſhook the moſt; but the Tree not condeſcending to confabulate with him, it ordered him to go to a Boié, with whom it afterwards enter'd into Converſe; commanding him to conſecrate an Image, a Temple, and Sacrifices, to the God who was afterward ador'd by thoſe Indians, under the Name of Yochaxvagamaracotti. Upon which, on the bare Word of the Boié, they immediately decreed divine Honours to this God. We find this Circumſtance in Purchas, quoted from Jeronimo Romano.

[a] A Bricklayer, who was almoſt tir'd with the long Exordium of the Preacher, ſaid he ſpent a long Time in raiſing his Scaffolding. See Menagiana.

[b] If we were better acquainted with the Prieſts of other Nations, we ſhould find in them, as well as in our own, certain Marks which cleave to the Mind, and are never effac'd. Theſe Marks among us conſiſt in certain Habits, which are contracted by inſenſible Degrees; an Air that diffuſes itſelf over the whole Countenance, certain peculiar Methods of ſaluting, a quaint Manner of Expreſſion, that inſinuates itſelf into the moſt polite and unaffected Converſations. The Eccleſiaſtic is diſtinguiſhed by his Eye, his Voice, his Geſture, his Gait, and even the Attitude of his whole Body; but we are not to think that the Clergy are the only Men who carry about 'em the peculiar Marks of their Profeſſion. Every Trade has its Characteriſtics, which are almoſt always indelible.

[c] Jeronimo Romano, quoted by Purchas, tells us in his Commonwealth of the Indians, that the Chief of the Mexican Clergy was of the royal Family, or at leaſt of one of the moſt illuſtrious Families of the Empire. Among the Quality, the eldeſt Son inherited his Father's Eſtate, and the ſecond was devoted to Religion.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Birth of their Children; ſome Cuſtoms of their Women in Child-Bed; their Polygamy, and Manner of educating their Children; the Love their Parents bear them, and their Manner of naming them.

MAN has but one Way of coming into the World, but his Birth has introduc'd a numberleſs Multitude of Cuſtoms, the greateſt Part of which have grown up into Ceremonies. Among theſe Cuſtoms ſome owe their Riſe to Neceſſity, and are probably the ſame in all Countries; ſuch for Inſtance are thoſe of waſhing and naming Children as ſoon as they are born. As to the Cuſtom of covering and wrapping them in Swaddling-Clothes, the Moment they come into the World, 'tis very far from being of univerſal Practice either among the Antients or Moderns. As for Inſtance, the Cimbri us'd antiently to [a] cover their new-born Infants with Snow, the better to inure them to cold and Labour. The Spaniards us'd to dip them in Rivers [b] in Braſil; the Men who perform the Office of Midwives to their teeming Conſorts, receive the Infant from the Mother, and fairly tear the Navel-String to Pieces; and having waſh'd the Infant, paint it with red and black. They are unacquainted with the Uſe of Swaddling-Clothes, but carry the Child, as ſoon as it is born, to the Hammock; when, if it be a Boy, the Father lays by his Child a little wooden Bow, a few ſmall Arrows, and a little Knife. The lying-in Woman does not meet with better Treatment than her new-born Infant. The Moment ſhe is disburthen'd, ſhe immediately goes and waſhes herſelf, ſets about her Work, and does not find herſelf the worſe for it. If it be ſaid, that this is owing to the Climate, 'twould be a very wrong Aſſertion, ſince the Wives of the Livonian Peaſants uſe the very ſame Cuſtom, both with reſpect to themſelves and their Children, as likewiſe the Savages of North America, according to Father [c] Hennepin. 'Twould be needleſs to quote all the barbarous Nations, to ſhew the Conformity of their Cuſtoms on this Article, and to prove to the Europeans that the Delicacy of their Complexion is much leſs owing to the Climate, than to the Effeminacy which they have inherited from their Fathers, and tranſmit to their Poſterity. The Children of poor People, notwithſtanding the Misfortunes their Parents may labour under, grow ſtrong and robuſt, and are inur'd to Labour and Fatigue, whilſt the Rich bring either weak or deform'd Children into the World, like thoſe tender Plants, the Culture of which gives inexpreſſible Trouble to the Raiſers, at the ſame Time that they are a Diſhonour to Nature.

[a] Mr. Locke has told us the great Advantages of this Way of hardening Children; his Words are theſe: "The "firſt Thing to be taken care of, is, that Children be not too warmly clad or cover'd, Winter or Summer. The "Face, when we are born, is no leſs tender than any other Part of the Body; 'tis Uſe alone hardens it, and "makes it more able to endure the Cold; and therefore the Scythian Philoſopher gave a very ſignificant Anſwer to "the Athenian, who wonder'd how he could go naked in Froſt and Snow. How, ſaid the Scythian, can you endure "your Face expos'd to the ſharp Winter Air? My Face is us'd to it, ſaid the Athenian. Think me all Face, re-"ply'd the Scythian. See his Education, Sect. 5.

[b] Coreal's Voyages to the Weſt-Indies, Vol. I.

[c] Collection of Voyages to the North, Vol. V. That farther relates, that the Women retire to ſome private Place when the Time of their Delivery is at Hand, and return afterwards to their Work. Cælius Rhodig. Lib. xviii. Cap. 22. Lection. Antiq. relates ſomething like this, of a Ligurian, or Genoeſe Woman, and quotes Varro, who aſſures us that the Illyrians in his Time had the ſame Cuſtom.

We juſt before mention'd the Vigour of the American Women. In ſome Parts of South America they not only go to work immediately after their Delivery, but even wait upon their Husbands, who keep their Beds inſtead of the Women. [a] The antient Spaniards, and the Tibarenians, a People bordering on Cappadocia, had alſo this Cuſtom. One would hardly think it poſſible that Nations which lie at ſo great a Diſtance ſhould have communicated ſo odd and unjuſt a Cuſtom to one another, which is ſo far from appearing to be founded in Nature, that on the contrary, ſhe ſeems to dictate, that the Husband ought to aſſiſt his Wife, at a Juncture which is frequently fatal to our Women. It would be impoſſible to juſtify this Cuſtom, but by ſuppoſing that theſe Women have a ſurprizing Vigour, even in the Delivery of their Children. We muſt further ſuppoſe, that this Vigour aſſiſts their natural Activity, and that their Exerciſe, which is infinitely more wholeſome than an Indolence of ſeveral Weeks, like that of our Lying-in-Women, helps the American Women to throw off thoſe Uncleanneſſes which attend upon Delivery. As for the other Part of this Cuſtom, viz. the Men's lying a-Bed, I don't believe it can be accounted for in any reaſonable Manner.

These Obſervations on the American Women oblige us to make a few more. Travellers aſſure us, that as ſoon as theſe Women have conceiv'd, they break off all Commerce with their Husbands; [b] which ſeems ſuitable to the Dictates of Nature. They tell us farther, that menſtruous Women withdraw from Society, which agrees very well with that natural Decorum, that Men never fail to obſerve in their cooler Moments. The Deſign of Nature is to create ſound and perfect Creatures; but it is impoſſible for this to be done, during the periodical Uncleanneſs of Women. The Jewiſh Religion, which agrees very well with the Laws of Nature, is no leſs exact in the Obſervation of this Cuſtom. But we ſhall wave a Subject which properly belongs to the Province of the Phyſician.

'Twould be more difficult to juſtify the Conduct of the Americans, and their Sentiments, with reſpect to their Plurality of Wives; although at firſt Sight a very ſtrong Precedent preſents itſelf in their Favour, I mean the Polygamy of the antient Jews. To this Cuſtom we ſhall oppoſe an Argument, which cannot be thought trifling, viz. that we do not meet in Polygamy with that conſtant and uninterrupted Friendſhip, which ought to be reciprocal between Man and Wife; the Affection that ought to reign in a Family; nor the Happineſs which a good Father ought to procure his Children. 'Tis impoſſible to defend the Polygamy of the Jews by the divine Laws, though many Examples ſeem to favour it. The Laws of Chriſtianity are ſilent, with regard to the Plurality of Wives; it would nevertheleſs be eaſy to produce indirect Prohibitions from that Religion, founded on its Morality, and that Spirit of Juſtice and Humanity, which ſo viſibly diſtinguiſhes it. Theſe Arguments are ſufficiently cogent; but what follows as an Objection againſt Polygamy, ſeems not to bear the ſame Weight, viz. that ſovereign Princes ought to prohibit it, for the Good of their Subjects, and in order to prevent domeſtic Broils. This Argument, I ſay, does not appear convincing enough, ſince both theſe Things might be conſiſtent with Polygamy. The Scriptures furniſh but few Inſtances of theſe pretended domeſtic Broils; and the Mahometans have not experienced many more. The latter take proper Meaſures to ſecure their Inheritances, and to check the Jealouſy and Ambition of their Women; to which may be added, the unbounded Authority of Fathers and Husbands, who take care that Order be obſerved in their Families, and don't ſuffer the Members thereof to oppoſe the Will of their Maſters. A Stickler for Polygamy will ſay farther, that were we to ſuppreſs all that Nature, corrected by Virtue, dictates to Mankind, and whatever the Morality of the Chriſtian Religion inculcates particularly againſt Polygamy, we ſhould not however find, that either States would be overthrown, or Families ruin'd, by a Multiplicity of Wives; that provided Women were kept in a State of Slavery, and conſider'd as Objects given to Man for his Pleaſure, and the Propagation of his Species; that they were treated as Beings inform'd indeed with Souls, but with Souls greatly inferior to thoſe of Men; this would entirely prevent all domeſtic Tumults in Families. In fine, would he continue, no more ſhould be allow'd them, than ſuch a prevailing Friendſhip as a generous Maſter indulges a Servant with, who knows how to pleaſe him. This in reality is the Notion which all Nations that allow of Polygamy, have of Women. 'Twould therefore be impoſſible to juſtify Polygamy by the Principles of Religion; but let us endeavour to plead the Excuſe of thoſe who argue for it from other Principles. One would imagine it was founded in Nature, and that it allows us to compare the whole Female Sex to ſo many Fields, deſigned for Tillage. In which Caſe one [a] Man will be declared able to cultivate ſeveral at the ſame Time, allowing each of them Attendance enough to keep them in good Order, and all this without doing the leaſt Prejudice to himſelf, or the Society he is a Part of. Such is the Notion of the Americans [b], and ſome other Nations, on the Topic before us. But to wave theſe Reflections:

THE American Women nurſe their own Children, which is a Duty that Nature requires from all Mothers. The Jews and Germans were formerly Nurſes to their own Children, as alſo the antient Greeks, as is manifeſt from Homer, &c. Nevertheleſs the Cuſtom of putting Children out to nurſe, became afterwards very common in Greece and Rome. We ſhall not ranſack all Antiquity, to ſhew in what Manner Mothers us'd antiently to treat their Children, having already ſaid enough upon that Head. [c] Another remarkable Cuſtom among the North Americans, is their faſtening their Children to a ſmooth Board, and wrapping them up in a Beaver's Skin, without either Swathes or Bedding, (after the European Manner) or if they uſe any Swaddling-Clothes, they are only ſuch as are cut from large Skins, which don't any Way cramp or hurt the tender Babes. [d] The Female Savages take care to hold the Children, that are thus bundled

[a] The Mahometan Law ſays, that 'tis not only poſſible, but that it ought to be ſo. One would think that Chaſtity, according to their Principles, were a Sin againſt Nature. One of their ſacred Books ſays, "That in the Day "of Judgment, the Earth on which a Man, who had always liv'd in a State of Continence, was us'd to lay him-"ſelf down, ſhall riſe up againſt him, and ſay, what Crime had I been guilty of, that this Man, in Oppoſition to "the Dictates of Nature, ſhould have trod me under Foot? I who labour'd inceſſantly to the Generation and Pro-"duction of Beings." This Paſſage is too beautiful not to merit an Interpretation, as agreeable to our Paſſions, as conformable to the Intentions of Nature. The Perſian Doctors teach, that the Moment a Youth begins to feel any Emotions of Luſt, he muſt immediately be indulg'd in it, by giving up a Woman to his Embraces; and that to ſooth the Paſſion of Love, is a meritorious Action. In conſequence of this Principle, they don't ſcruple to give a She-Slave, or a Concubine, to the Arms of a young Lad, the Moment they diſcover in him the leaſt Tendency to Copulation; whence it may be inferr'd, that he who makes ſuch a Demand, commits no greater Indecency, than if he were to ask for Victuals when he is hungry. See Chardin's Voyages, Vol. II. p. 257. Amſterdam Edit. 1711. A Circumſtance, continues Chardin, that is very particular in a Conduct ſo worthy of Nature unenlighten'd by Reaſon, is, that Mahometans only are indulg'd in this Privilege, and that 'tis lawful for them only to make uſe of Concubines, or to have a Plurality of Wives. This Maxim may indeed make a great Number of Converts to Mahometaniſm. They palliate this Prohibition, with an Argument that is rather waggiſh than ſerious. All Religions, ſay they, have their Auſterities and their Pleaſures, which are inſeparable. The Chriſtian Religion allows the drinking of Wine to chear the Heart, but will permit one Wife only; that of the Mahometans allows a Plurality of Wives, and prohibits the Uſe of Wine.

[b] "A Man that cultivates ſeveral Pieces of Ground, has a much greater Produce than if he were to plough one "Piece only. Old Women are conſider'd as Lumber, and are employ'd in the moſt ſervile Offices, as long as "they have any Strength left." Marriage among them is never the Reſult of Love, and ſeldom gives Birth to it. Coreal's Voyages, Vol. II. All the American Indians are great Sticklers for Nature, and are of Opinion, that ſhe muſt not be ſuffer'd to lie idle, which exactly tallies with the Notion they have of the Female World.

[d] Let your Sons Clothes be never made too ſtrait, eſpecially about the Breaſt. Let Nature have Scope to fashion the Body as ſhe thinks beſt: She works of herſelf a great deal better, and exacter, than we can direct her;

dled up, in ſuch a Manner, that their Heads lie much higher than their Feet; and to prevent their Excrements from prejudicing their Health, they ſet the Rind or Shell of a Birch-Tree, which is made in the Shape of a Gutter, at a little Diſtance from them; and this they fix in ſuch a Manner, as to carry off all their filthy Evacuations. Leſs Care ſtill is taken of Children in South America, ſince thoſe Savages have not only no Manner of Uſe of Swaddling-Clothes, but on the contrary, they give their tender Limbs full Liberty, by laying them ſtark-naked on the Ground, or in a Hammock, till ſuch Time as they are able to go alone. Notwithſtanding this Neglect of them, we yet never meet with any of them who are either lame, crook-legg'd, or crump-back'd; ſo [a] true it is that the Simplicity of Nature, is often preferable to the Over-Fondling of a European Mother. It may, perhaps, be objected, that our Climate would not permit of Children's being treated after this Manner. However, it cannot be denied, but that we truſt too little to Nature.

THE Reflections we have now made, lead us naturally to the Love which Parents bear their Children. [b] We are told, that the Americans carry this to a much greater Height than the Europeans, eſpecially the Greeks, who us'd to expoſe theirs to the wide World; and the Romans, who always ſold their Children, when they were not able to maintain them. We are aſſur'd, that the Livonian Peaſants have the ſame Cuſtom; but then they juſtify this Uſage, which indeed at firſt Sight appears cruel and barbarous, by ſaying, That their Children meet with a much better Fate among Strangers, being then no longer expos'd to the Tyranny of the Livonian Nobility, whoſe chief Characteriſtic is Pride, and who treat their Vaſſals worſe than they do their Dogs. The Americans moreover love to have a great Number of Children; and though they probably may not, like the Jews, look upon a numerous Offspring as a peculiar Bleſſing from Heaven, they yet think it anſwers the Deſign of Nature. We may generally obſerve, that Men ſeldom doubt the Truth of this laſt Reflection; even thoſe who get Children involuntarily, and whoſe ſole Object in the Commerce they have with Women is Pleaſure, are yet oblig'd to let Nature take her own Courſe. Perſons of either Sex, who give into theſe Irregularities, rather hate than love their Children; and 'tis this that creates an eternal Struggle between Nature and Honour; a Struggle that gives riſe to numberleſs Diſorders, and which will laſt as long as the World. Nature is pleas'd that all thoſe whoſe only Aim is the Gratification of their Paſſions, ſhould meet with the Puniſhment due to their criminal Abuſe of her, by giving them Children contrary to their Expectations. Honour, which is only the Effect of that Probity that is engrav'd on the Heart of every Man, purſuant to whoſe Dictates we are, in our ſerious Reflections, oblig'd to confeſs, that every Irregularity in Life is a kind of Violence to the Laws of Nature, deſtroys Creatures which ſhe can conſider no otherwiſe than as ſo many Inſults put upon her by Mankind. We think that 'tis this gives riſe to the Cruelty of thoſe who deſtroy the Offspring of their unlawful Embraces, or ſuch as are the Fruits of the Lewdneſs of both Sexes. As Marriage among the Americans is a more unconfin'd State than among us, it follows, that how ſavage ſoever they may appear in our Eyes, yet they never carry their Inhumanity and Barbarity to ſuch Lengths, as to deſtroy the Fruits produc'd by the Commerce of Man and Woman. To carry this Reflection fur-and if Women were themſelves to frame the Bodies of their Children in their Wombs, as they often endeavour to mend their Shapes when they are out, we ſhould as certainly have no perfect Children born, as we have few well-ſhap'd that are ſtrait-lac'd, or much tamper'd with. Locke on Education, Sect. 11.

[a] Narrow Breaſts, ſhort and ſtinking Breath, ill Lungs, and Crookedneſs, are the natural and almoſt conſtant Effects of hard Bodice, and Clothes that pinch. That Way of making ſlender Waiſts and fine Shapes, ſerves but the more effectually to ſpoil them. Nor can there indeed but be Diſproportion in the Parts, when the Nouriſhment prepar'd in the ſeveral Offices of the Body, cannot be diſtributed as Nature deſigns; and therefore what Wonder is it, if it being laid where it can, on ſome Part not ſo braced, it often makes a Shoulder, or a Hip, higher or bigger than its juſt Proportion. Locke on Education, Sect. 12.

ther; Intereſt, and the Cares of Life, do not bear that Sway among them as with us; they put themſelves to no Manner of Pain about marrying beneath themſelves; entirely free from any ſuch troubleſome Notions, they marry when, and in what Manner they pleaſe. The Children they bring into the World are by them conſider'd as a Help, whereas we often look upon them as a Burden; ſo true it is, that in ſpite of all the boaſted Delicacy of our Manners, we in this Reſpect deviate much more from the Dictates of Nature than the American Savages; but this is not to be wonder'd at, when we conſider that their Occupations are much fewer than ours, their Way of Life more conformable to the Simplicity of Nature, and their Minds independant on the greateſt Part of thoſe Circumſtances in which we make our Happineſs to conſiſt. Experience juſtifies the Truth of theſe Aſſertions. We daily ſee that thoſe who are burthen'd with the feweſt Cares, are by far the moſt careful of their Families; and that ſuch as confine their Happineſs to a few Circumſtances, meet with numberleſs Charms in that Medium, with which Nature is always ſatisfied.

We ſhall dwell but very little on thoſe Exerciſes to which the Americans accuſtom their Children. 'Tis well known that as ſoon as they are capable of running alone, they are taught only to handle the Bow and the Arrow, or a kind of Club, with which they knock down their Enemies: They are alſo taught to run and hunt. Theſe ſeveral Exerciſes make 'em nimble and vigorous; they are very ſeldom troubled with thoſe Diſeaſes that ſeize the Nerves of the Europeans; and Nature, whoſe Courſe they take care not to divert, by a ſoft or ſedentary Life, which our Children are ſo much indulg'd in, takes a Pleaſure in indulging Savages that Extent of [a] Body, and Proportion of all the Limbs, which a human Creature ſhould naturally have. Beſides, 'tis certain that theſe People, who owe more to Nature than Art, have learn'd by Experience, that Exerciſe throws off numberleſs ill Humours, which by their ſtagnating in the Body, prevents the Circulation of thoſe which were deſign'd to feed it and give it Growth. No one can doubt the Truth of this Aſſertion, it being manifeſt from the Methods they employ, to cure moſt of the Diſeaſes they are ſubject to. Beſides, 'tis obſerv'd, that the Number of People, who are both deform'd and ſickly, is very great in ſome Parts of Europe, where the Activity of the Body is diſregarded; and that 'twould be no difficult Matter to levy whole Bodies of lame and crooked People. The antient Greeks alſo made frequent Uſe of bodily Exerciſes, particularly the Lacedemonians, who us'd to conſider all thoſe almoſt as infamous, who did not apply themſelves to gymnaſtic Exerciſes in their Youth; ſo that their Women us'd to learn to wreſtle as well as the Men. Children of five Years of Age were taught a tireſome [b] Dance, which by theſe People was thought a proper Introduction to military Exerciſes. Theſe bodily Exerciſes were not carried to the ſame Length among the Romans. In the Infancy of their Republic its Members were all either Soldiers or Husbandmen; but afterwards devoting all their Thoughts to the Conqueſt of the World, they ſcarce allow'd a few Hours to the Study of Arts and Sciences, which they receiv'd but late from the Greeks. Be that as it will, we may juſtly preſume they were more active than we are. As to the antient Germans, and other Nations, of whoſe Antiquity ſome Footſteps are ſtill remaining, 'tis certain they brought up their Youth much after the ſame Manner as the Americans.

[a] 'Tis generally known, that the Women in China (imagining I know not what kind of Beauty in it) by bracing and binding them hard from their Infancy, have very little Feet. I ſaw a Pair of China Shoes lately, exceedingly diſproportion'd to the Feet of one of the ſame Age amongſt us; their Women's Shoes would ſcarce be big enough for one of our little Girls. Beſides this 'tis obſerv'd, that their Women are alſo very little, and ſhort-liv'd, whereas the Men are of the ordinary Stature of other Men, and live to a proportionable Age. Theſe Defects in the Female Sex in that Country, are by ſome imputed to the unreaſonable binding of their Feet, whereby the free Circulation of the Blood is hinder'd, and the Growth and Health of the whole Body ſuffers, &c. Locke on Education, Sect. 12.

[b] The Pyrric; ſo call'd from Pyrrhus, the Inventor of it.

THIS

THIS is all the Education the above-mention'd People beſtow on their Children; they ſeldom have any Regard to the cultivating the Mind, a Circumſtance ſo neceſſary to fit Man for Reflection, and to raiſe him above the Brutes. They are wholly ignorant of the Sciences, and have no Notion of any Arts, but ſuch as owe their Invention to Neceſſity and the common Demands of Life. All thoſe ſlight Principles they have preſerv'd with reſpect to the Deity, their Original, and their Condition in the next Life; all thoſe Duties of Humanity, which they indulge only to their Friends, and generally refuſe their Enemies; all thoſe faint Glimmerings of Virtue they are obſerv'd to poſſeſs, and thoſe Notions of Equity, by whoſe Informations they ſettle pretty juſtly the proper Bounds between lawful Poſſeſſion and Uſurpation; all this reſults entirely from their Imitation of their Parents; an Effect of that natural Light, which is ſcarce ever extinguiſh'd in Man, notwithſtanding we meet with ſome People towards the Straits of Magellan, who appear ſuch Brutes, as would almoſt perſuade us that they were altogether deſtitute of it. But were we to ſpend but a few Months even among theſe Savages, in all Probability, we ſhould ſoon find, that they are forc'd to obſerve a certain Order, as well as thoſe Precepts, which Nature herſelf dictates to them, and which are only enlarg'd and improv'd by Education. Though we juſt now hinted, that the Americans neglect to cultivate the Minds of their Children, and to inſtil ſuch Principles into them as may be of Uſe in the well regulating of their Lives, we ſhall nevertheleſs meet with ſome Exceptions to this, in the Sequel, when we come to ſpeak to the Mexicans Cuſtom of committing their Children at about fourteen or fifteen Years of Age to the Care of their Prieſts, in order to their being inſtructed in the Knowledge of their Religion, and the Duties of civil Society; and alſo to mention the Principles of Education practiſed by the Peruvians, and ſome other American Nations.

WE ſhall borrow from Leſcarbot, whom we have already made uſe of in ſeveral Places, what relates to the naming their Children. [a] This Author tells us, that in New France the eldeſt Son goes by his Father's Name, with this Difference only, that he adds a Particle at the End of it, by way of Diminutive. As for Inſtance, ſays he, the eldeſt Son of Membertou will go by the Name of Membertouchi, which is as much as to ſay the little or young Membertou. The ſecond has whatever Name his Father pleaſes to beſtow on him; and if there be a third Son, he is call'd by the Name of the ſecond Son, with a Diminutive, as in the firſt; ſo that if the Name of the ſecond is Actaudine, that of the third will be Actaudinech. This Diminutive is ſo varied, as to ſuit with the Name to which it is joined. Thus in Italian; of Fanciullo a Child is made Fanciullino a little Child; and of Ragazzo a Boy, Ragazzetto. Whenever the Father or elder Brother dies, the ſurviving Children change their Names, in order to remove thoſe gloomy Ideas which would naturally ariſe at the Mention of the Name of the Deceaſed. We ſhall obſerve by the Way, that Leſcarbot cenſures thoſe who give Chriſtian Names to Savages, and declares that 'tis direct Prophanation, and to this Purpoſe inſtances Alexander the Great, who would not ſuffer any one to be called by his Name, whoſe virtuous Actions did not render him worthy to bear it.

THE Braſilians give their Children whatever Name firſt comes into their Heads, or the Name of whatever Object is moſt agreeable to them. Thoſe which the Mexicans and Peruvians give their Children are much the ſame. They have alſo ſome, by which they expreſs certain ſhining Qualities, or conſiderable Defects. We ſhall not take notice of ſuch as bear ſome Affinity to the Names of the antient Hebrews, which were often of Uſe to revive the Memory of ſome remarkable Event, and is obſerv'd to this Day, in the Names of the modern Eaſterns. As for the other Obſervations, they might be equally adapted to all Sorts of Names in general.

CHAP. V.

Of the AMERICAN LANGUAGES, &c.

THE American Languages, in the ſame Manner as ours, have peculiar Provinces, Bounds, and Revolutions; and even the [a] Languages of different [b] Provinces vary among them, as much as with the Europeans. Theſe Languages muſt neceſſarily be ſubject to very ſurpriſing and ſudden Revolutions, if it be true that the Canadans Dictionary, or Vocabulary, compoſed by James Quartier, who made ſome Expeditions into that Country about Anno 1533. was not underſtood by the [c] French, that went to Canada in Leſcarbot's Time, who made that Obſervation eighty Years after James Quartier's Arrival in that Country. Theſe ſudden Revolutions muſt be aſcribed to the Corruption which the Europeans have introduc'd in the American Languages, and to the voluntary and often forced Removals of theſe People, whoſe Cantons and Villages fall always to the Share of the Strongeſt, till ſuch Time as theſe are drove out by others.

THE Peruvians had formerly a Language that was peculiar to the Myſteries of their Religion, and was underſtood by their Prieſts only. 'Tis the ſame with ſeveral Nations of our [a] Hemiſphere, and this Affectation extends even to thoſe Things which relate to the Sciences, the Secrets whereof they as it were lock up in a Language that is unknown to the People.

WE ſhall now preſent the Reader with ſome Obſervations on the Canadan Languages, which are borrow'd from Leſcarbot. The Canadans cannot pronounce certain Syllables or Letters; but whether this be owing to Inattention, or a vicious Habit, which might poſſibly be rooted out by Reflection, we cannot determine. 'Tis in this Manner, they change V into B, F into P; and when the Vowel U comes before another Vowel, they pronounce it Ou. To this we may add, that every Tongue has certain Difficulties in its Pronunciation, which a Foreigner can never get over, but by an habitual Attention.

THE French and Dutch cannot pronounce the Engliſh th clearly; nor does the German ch give a Frenchman leſs Trouble, particularly if a Conſonant follow after; and the Germans have no better Succeſs in pronouncing the [c] French Liquids ll. A Perſon who has even made a Foreign Language pretty familiar to him, finds it often a very difficult Matter, to keep himſelf from tranſporting, as it were, the particular Ideas, and the Turn of his native Tongue, into the Language he has learnt. But this is not all: We imprint, as it were, the peculiar Character of our own Nation, on the very Accent and Expreſſion of the Language in which we diſcourſe. The Dutchman ſhall tranſer the Heavineſs and Ruſticity that is natural to his Country; the German, the Harſhneſs and

[b] Leſcarbot ſays, in the ſame Province. One would think that by Province, he means a whole Country, ſuch as Virginia or Florida. [c] Leſcarbot obſerves in his Hiſtory of New France, Book III. Chap. 7. "That the Savages of Canada, have a particular Language that is underſtood by themſelves only; which makes me, ſays he, doubt the Truth of what I ſaid, "viz. that the Language which was in Canada in James Quartier's Time is no longer uſed; for they ſpeak a Language that is more familiar to us, which is mixed with a great many Biſcayan Words, in order to make themſelves "the better underſtood."

[a] The Inhabitants of Siam and the Chineſe. This is generally practiſed all over the Eaſt-Indies.

[c] As in Tranquille.

Blunt-

Bluntneſs of his; the [a] Engliſhman the Fickleneſs, of his Nation; the Spaniard, his Bravadoes; the Italian, his Effeminacy; and the Frenchmen, his Haughtineſs. We may with great Probability ſuppoſe, that the ſame Genius is found in the Weſt-Indians.

THE American Languages furniſh us with two or three more Obſervations. We find by the Specimens which Travellers have given us of theſe Tongues, that the moſt unpoliſh'd are the leaſt compounded; the Reaſon of which is very natural. The Americans may be almoſt compar'd to Children, neither of them have Strength enough to deviate from the Simplicity of Nature; and this Want of Capacity or Experience, obliges them to reduce their Language to a ſmall Number of Terms and Expreſſions, which may repreſent to the Mind a Variety of different Ideas, according to the Object that is ſpoken of. Thus ſeveral American Savages give the Name of Sun of the Night to the Moon; and in like Manner the Jews call'd the Grave The Houſe of the Living. The abovementioned Jews have a Term which ſignifies both [b] to open, and put off, becauſe theſe two Ideas have a near Reſemblance to one another: By the ſame Rule, a Child who ſhould want his Nurſe to pull off his Gloves, or Shoes, would deſire her to open them.

THIS natural Simplicity alſo gives Riſe to thoſe Infinitives, which the Americans and Children often imploy inſtead of the Imperative Mood and the Preſent Tenſe. In a Word, 'tis to this Simplicity we are to impute the Want of Articles and Conjunctions, ſo common in the Languages of the Savages, and in the Expreſſions of Children who juſt begin to ſpeak.

WE muſt make another Obſervation on the radical or primitive Words and Monoſyllables, which may with Propriety enough be called, as it were, the Infancy of a Tongue. This Compariſon is manifeſt from the firſt [b] articulate Sounds form'd by Children when they firſt learn to ſpeak, which are all Monoſyllables; but no ſooner is Speech become a little more familiar to them, than they apply themſelves particularly to Words of two Syllables; but as for Polyſyllables, they are a conſiderable Time before they can be able to pronounce them.

WOU'D it be a Paradox to advance, that Children who ſhould be left to themſelves, (tho' they had before liv'd among grown People) and deſtitute of any Means of converſing together, but by the help of thoſe few Words, which they might have learnt till the Age of five or ſix Years, would of themſelves form a conciſe and ſimple Language compoſed chiefly of Words of one and two Syllables? We believe that this Remark will extend to ſeveral of the American Languages. Theſe Tongues have continued in a kind of [a] The fickle Temper of the Engliſh is made Part of their Character, and ſome pretend to impute it to their Climate; but in my Opinion they would not appear more fickle than other People, were it not that they give themſelves leſs Pains to bridle their Tongues, and dare let the World ſee what they really are, viz. idle and courageous. And if it be objected that they change their Conduct with reſpect to their Princes, that may perhaps be, becauſe their Princes, tired of reigning within due Bounds, alter their Meaſures, which obliges the People to change theirs in their Turn; and this may ſometimes be the Effect of Prudence. Another Proof that the Engliſh are not ſo fickle as is imagined, is, that Advice never makes the leaſt Impreſſion upon them; for when once they have taken a Reſolution, which indeed they often do raſhly, they execute it in the ſame Manner. This is manifeſt from the great Number of People that lay violent Hands on themſelves, and their unequal Marriages. Letters on the French and Engliſh Nations, by Mr. Muralt.

[c] When a Man wants Words to expreſs a ſurpriſing Noiſe, or ſome Senſation with which he is affected, he generally endeavours to mimic the ſaid Noiſe, and to paint his Thoughts in inarticulate Sounds. Nature teaches us to deſcribe with the above-mentioned Sounds, the Noiſe of the Falling of an Houſe, the confuſed Murmurs of a tumultuous Aſſembly, the Countenance and Diſcourſe of an angry Man, and a thouſand other Circumſtances. Inſtinct teaches us to ſupply the Barrenneſs of our Tongue, or the Slowneſs of our Imagination, by theſe inarticulate Sounds. Thoſe who have been concerned in the Education of Children are ſenſible of the Care that is required to correct the Propenſity they have to uſe theſe inarticulate Sounds, which are ever look'd upon as Ill-breeding. Men of no Education, Savages, and the Common People, often make uſe of them as long as they live. Du Bos, Critical Reflections on Poetry and Painting. Vol. i. p. 306.

Infancy,

Infancy, which is owing to the little Correſpondence they have had with the reſt of the World. In a word, both the Simplicity of their Languages, and that of their Ideas, flow from the ſame Original.

WE don't find the Americans to have been acquainted with the Uſe of Letters; but we ſhall take Notice in their proper Place of the Hieroglyphics of the Mexicans, and the Guappas of Peru, which were alſo uſed by ſeveral other Nations of South America. Father Hennepin, and ſome other Travellers tell us, that the wild Americans wonder prodigiouſly how it can be poſſible for us to communicate by Writing, our Thoughts at a Diſtance. They are perſuaded that it can be the Effect of nothing but Magic or Witchcraft.

CHAP. VI.

Of the ATTIRE of the AMERICANS.

ALL the American Savages do not go naked, and there are very few of thoſe who do ſo, but what cover thoſe Parts which Modeſty would have veil'd: However, we are far from ranking Baſhfulneſs among thoſe Ideas [a] which are call'd innate. 'Tis intirely the Reſult of [b] Education and Cuſtom, for Nature has nothing immodeſt in herſelf. Children who never deviate from her, are not aſhamed to appear naked; nor do they in the leaſt bluſh at it: But no ſooner are they taught the Conſequences of Nakedneſs, and the Idea which all Men ought to annex to it, but immediately they are conſcious of what we call Baſhfulneſs, and bluſh like their Parents or their Maſters. Whence is it therefore, that certain Savages, who have not the ſmalleſt Tincture of Education, or the leaſt Idea of Politeneſs and Civility, cover that Part, which if unveil'd would be ſhocking to us? To this we anſwer, That this Cuſtom may have been preſerved by long Tradition, though Time may have obliterated the Cauſe of it. Their firſt Anceſtors might probably have preſerv'd the Remembrance of the Diſobedience of the firſt Man, which has made Nakedneſs ſo immodeſt, that Perſons of the leaſt Chaſtity ſeldom behold a naked Object without bluſhing, as if ſuch a Sight was a real Pain to them. Some Savages are ſo unacquainted with the Uſe of Clothes, that they preſent themſelves before ſuch as are dreſs'd with as much Simplicity and Ignorance, as a Child of three or four Years of Age would do. 'Tis not that they are in Reality more unpoliſh'd than the reſt, but 'tis becauſe thoſe Ideas have been ſooner extinguiſh'd in them, which other Savages, though of as brutiſh a Nature as themſelves, have yet been ſo happy as to preſerve by mere Accident.

THE antient Picts went ſtill naked in the Time of the Emperor Severus; but the Correſpondence they afterwards had with the Romans, gave a ſofter Turn to their Manners; and the Cuſtom of wearing Clothes, which was afterwards introduced among thoſe People, was owing to the Politeneſs and Decorum with which the Romans inſpired them; for 'twas no way the Reſult of Neceſſity. The Hottentots of the Cape of Good Hope, and ſeveral other African Nations, as alſo certain Iſlanders bordering upon Aſia, go ſtill naked. Their jetty Hue, and natural Dirtineſs, ſerves as a kind of Veil to one Part, as Colours do to the other. The Time may poſſibly come, that theſe People will give into Modes, and vary their Dreſs as much as we do. The baſhful Part of them hang a Piece of Linen Cloth or Skin before them, which is tied about them after their Way; and thus equipp'd, they ſtrut about with as much Vanity, as the proudeſt European in the fineſt Dreſs. Let us not therefore imagine that the Cuſtom of going clothed is the Effect of Reaſon and Religion: Wou'd it not be poſſible for us to go naked, and be both rational and religious, and uſe ourſelves to view the human Body in the Simplicity of Nature, in the ſame Manner as we accuſtom ourſelves to look on naked Statues or Pictures? We do not however pretend to juſtify the Cuſtom which the Savages have of going naked; for, not to mention that our Fair Sex would loſe a great many Charms, were they to imitate them, a Man ought never to be a Schiſmatic in Things relating to ſuch Cuſtoms, which, ſo far from being prejudicial to either Religion or Politeneſs, may be of Service to both.

COREAL tells us in his Voyages to the Weſt-Indies, Vol. I. Page 143. "That the Men "incloſe in a kind of Caſe, what Modeſty will not ſuffer to be reveal'd to Sight; and "adds, that in thoſe Places which are not frequented by the Spaniards, theſe Caſes are "ſet off with Gold and Pearls." Compare this Place with another in Brantome's Lives of the Ladies of Gallantry of his Time, where Mention is made of the Uſe which ſome Ladies made of certain Knicknacks.

SUCH Savages of North America as are clothed, wear a Cloke over their Shoulders made of Beaver Skins, and ſew'd together; others wear only a Bear Skin, or that of ſome other wild Beaſt, which they throw lightly over their Shoulders. This is the plaineſt and moſt natural Dreſs, and the firſt that was ever [a] uſed. Thoſe who cover themſelves with Feathers dipp'd in a viſcous Liquor, to faſten them to their Bodies, are one Remove from this Simplicity, and begin to give into the Vanity of Dreſs. The Canadans faſten their Skin-Clokes to their Necks, ſo as generally to leave one Arm bare; but they don't wear their Clokes in their Huts, unleſs the Weather be cold. The Women gird their Clokes about them. In Winter both Sexes add warm Sleeves made of Beaver Skins to their Clokes. Their Dreſs in this Particular differs but very little from that of the [b] antient Germans. Other Savages cover themſelves with a [c] kind of Mat. As to their Legs, Leſcarbot relates, that the Canadans, when they go a Hunting, wear a kind of thick Stockings, which come as high as our Splatterdaſhes; theſe they tie to their Girdles, and the Side outward is filled with Tags that have no Points to them. This Part of their Dreſs is ſomething like our Pantaloons. They ſometimes, inſtead of Stockings, wrap a Piece of Stuff round their Legs, which is faſtened under the Knee, and this they call Mittaſſe, as we find by a Relation inſerted in the Collection of Voyages to the North, Vol. V.

[a] THESE Savages go generally bare-headed, and with their [e] Hair hanging uncurl'd on their Shoulders. The Men ſometimes tie part of it over their Foreheads, and let the reſt hang hang down; ſome let their Hair grow, and others either cut it quite off, or burn it with certain Stones made red-hot. Several Northern Nations let their Hair fall down on one Side, Whisker-ways, and burn the other with the above-mentioned Stones. The Nations to the South of Canada burn it quite cloſe to their Ears. The Floridans, and ſome other Savages, bind it up like a Horſe's Tail; the Men afterwards ſtick ſeveral Feathers on it, made like a Plume; and the Women, as we are told by Leſcarbot, put in a kind of three-pointed Bodkin. Several of theſe People rub their Hair with Oil, in the ſame Manner as the Europeans do with Eſſence, after which they ſtick Down, or ſhort Feathers of Birds, on their Heads. This Ornament is indeed a little whimſical, but is it in Fact more ſo than the Gold Duſt of the Antients, or the Powder with which our modern Fops affect to whiten their Hair, or their Perukes?

WE look upon the Cuſtom of wearing long Hair, ſo general among the Americans, as one of thoſe which Nature herſelf dictates. It was formerly the Practice of the Gauls, and the reſt of the Europeans. As for the Gauls, 'tis well known that one Part of their Country went by the Name of Gallia Comata. We muſt indeed own, that it afterwards became a particular Cuſtom; the French uſed to wear their Hair very ſhort, and none but the Kings of France during the firſt Race, wore it long. The cutting off the Hair of any of the Princes Royal of France, was in thoſe Days a Declaration that he was diſabled from ever ſucceeding to the Crown. Before the Conqueſt of China by the Tartars, long Hair was as much a la Mode among the Chineſe, as ever it had been among the Old French. They flatter'd themſelves, ſays Maffæus, with the Notions, that the Moment they expired a good Genius would carry them up into Heaven by the Hair of the Head. Their Bonzes, indeed, wear it ſhort, becauſe the Quality they enjoy of Privy Counſellors of the Deity, diſpenſes them from ſtanding in need of any ſuch Aſſiſtance.

THE Antients uſed often to go bare-headed, and 'tis obſerv'd that the [a] Egyptians never covered their Heads, but when oppreſſed with Grief. The Romans obſerved that Cuſtom in the Infancy of the Commonwealth, but afterwards laid it aſide. This Cuſtom was perhaps grounded on an Opinion, which indeed appears reaſonable enough, viz. that Air hardens the Head, which Advantage it would want, were it to be cover'd. If this be true, we are not to wonder that the [b] Engliſh butt ſo ſtoutly with their Heads in boxing, ſince they generally go with it uncovered from their very Infancy.

BEFORE we conclude this Article, we ſhall borrow two or three Obſervations from Leſcarbot, wherein he ſhews the Conformity between the Americans and ſome other Nations, with reſpect to the adorning of the Head. " The Goths, ſays he, uſed to let " their Hair hang down in large Curls on their Shoulders, as was before obſerved of the " North-Americans. The Suabians, a People of Germany, uſed to twiſt, knot, and " and faſten it to the Top of their Heads, as has been already related of the Souriquois " and Armouchiquois. The Armouchiquois differ in one reſpect from the Souriquois " and other Savages, viz. that they pull up the Hair that grows on the Forepart of the [b] Mr. Lock ſpeaks in Favour of this Cuſtom——. " Our Bodies will endure any Thing that from the Beginning they are accuſtomed to; and therefore amongſt other Things, I think that when Nature has ſo well covered a Child's Head with Hair, and ſtrengthened it with a Year or two's Age, that he can run about by Day without a Cap, it is beſt, that by Night a Child ſhould alſo lie without one, there being nothing that more expoſes to Head-Ach, Colds, Catarrhs, Coughs, and ſeveral other Diſeaſes, than keeping the Head warm."

" Head

" Head by the Roots, and by that Means are half bald, contrary to the Cuſtom of all " the reſt. Pliny on the contrary informs us, that at the Foot of the Riphean Moun- " tains, was formerly the Country of the Arympheans, who are the Muſcovites of our " Days; that both Sexes among theſe People uſed to be ſhav'd, and look'd upon the wear- " ing of Hair as a Badge of Infamy." Thus a Cuſtom that is approv'd in one Country, " is condemned in another.

CHAP. VII.

Of the ORNAMENTS of the BODY.

THE Americans adorn their Bodies with a kind of Paint, but ſomething coarſer and laid on with leſs Art, than that of our Ladies and Fops: However we may probably ſuppoſe, that the Weſt-Indians are partly prompted to it from the ſame Motive, and that the plain, unaffected Beauties of Nature, do not always appear ſo engaging in their Eyes as to pleaſe altogether, without ſome foreign Aſſiſtance. Our Ladies and Fops, when on the Decline, do alſo paint themſelves, in order to repair the Injuries made by Debauchery and Years: But the Americans do not carry their Refinements to that Exceſs, and employ Colours merely as an Ornament.

THE Cuſtom of Painting is of antient Date, and the Jews were reproached by the Prophets upon that Account. The Romans uſed ſometimes to paint themſelves, and even their Deities, with a red Colour. The Ethiopians, and ſeveral other African Nations, did the ſame. The Picts were not ſatisfy'd with barely Colouring, but uſed to [a] Matacher, or paint their Bodies with Figures of all kind of Animals, even from their moſt tender Infancy. They were ſo much delighted with theſe Ornaments, which in our Eyes would appear very extravagant, that they could not for a long Time be perſuaded to clothe themſelves, for fear of ſpoiling the fine Paintings which adorned their Bodies. The Americans have different Colours for this Purpoſe; for the Face, they frequently make uſe of Blue, Red, Black, and White; however they allow every one to follow his peculiar Taſte. They alſo paint the Head, the Arms, the Legs, and the Thighs, in the ſame Manner; and in order to preſerve the Marks of this Painting during their [b] Lives, they firſt sketch the Out-lines of it upon the Skin, then prick them with a Needle or a little ſharp Bone, till the Blood comes, and afterwards rub the Places ſo prick'd with a Powder, of the Colour that is moſt to the Guſto of the Perſon who is thus embelliſh'd. The Picts [c] did the ſame with an Iron Inſtrument, but the Goths uſed to paint the Body and Face with Vermillion.

LET us now take Notice of ſome other Ornaments, which are more whimſical and extraordinary than Painting. The Virginians [d] ſtamp certain Marks on their Backs, which denote the Chief to whom they are ſubordinate. We find an Inſtance of this among the Romans, the Soldiers among whom were ſtamp'd with the Imperial Mark, which in the Time of Conſtantine the Great was a Croſs upon the Shoulder. The primitive Chriſtians, out of a Principle of Zeal and Devotion for the Croſs of Chriſt, were prompted to ſtamp it on their Hands and Arms: And in our Days, very few go on Pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, and viſit our Saviour's Sepulchre, but bring from thence the like Teſtimony of their Spiritual Enliſting under Chriſt's Banners. The Braſilians have a Way of cutting and ſlaſhing themſelves, which is unknown in Europe. "Such among them, ſays "[a] Coreal, as deſire to be conſidered as Perſons of Figure and Reputation, and have de- "vour'd a great Number of Enemies, cut and ſlaſh their Breaſts, and ſeveral other "Parts of their Bodies, and afterwards fill the Wounds with a corroding black Powder, "that gives them a hideous and frightful Air. Any one who was to ſee theſe Cuts at "a Diſtance, wou'd take them for Doublets cut and chequer'd after the Manner of "our Anceſtors."

to

THO' we have no Example of this Cutting and Slaſhing among us, we yet cannot ſay the ſame of ſome other Ornaments of the Americans. The Difference between them and us, is, that in Europe theſe Ornaments depend entirely on Faſhion, whereas the Americans, who are leſs fickle, always diſcover the ſame Beauties in their Dreſs; and that becauſe, regardleſs of the Cenſure or Approbation of others, they only conſider what may pleaſe their Senſes, or ſooth their Minds with ſome exalted Notions of Glory. 'Tis from this Principle that they employ ſuch Colours as naturally pleaſe the Eye; that on their Holidays they are delighted with the brighteſt; and are pleaſed with their Cuts and Slaſhes, as they are a Mark of their Bravery and Valour. Tho' Faſhion among us extends its Power over Colours, and varies them as it thinks proper, 'tis nevertheleſs certain, that the Senſes will at laſt prevail, ſo that we are obliged to form the ſame Judgment of them as the Savages do. We might ſoon be brought to declare in Favour of Cuts and Slaſhes as Marks of Honour, were our Sovereigns to publiſh a Proclamation, by which all who ſhould not hack themſelves after the Braſilian Mode, ſhould be conſidered as infamous, and unworthy of the public Regard. We then ſhould ſoon ſee thouſands of People diſtinguiſh themſelves by their Slaſhes; and probably ſeveral of the moſt Faint-hearted among us wou'd, when excited by Punctilio, be as forward on this Occaſion as the moſt Courageous. Such as were afraid of Pain, would invent ſome Method to hack themſelves, ſo as not to feel any; and when once we had got ſo far, we ſhould proceed to embelliſh theſe Cuts after the Manner of the Savages, and ſo in a ſhort Time eſtabliſh the [b] Faſhion all over Europe. What we have here advanced is no [c] Paradox; Mankind in general have a natural Averſion for Contempt. A certain Glory and Honour, which ſome of the moſt illuſtrious Braſilians annex'd to Cutting and Mangling, was alone ſufficient to make their Deſcendants pay a blind Deference to this odd Cuſtom, the Neglect of which would have brought them into Contempt.

THE Americans, as well as the Europeans, have Ear-Rings, Bracelets, and Necklaces: But with this Difference, that they are worn by both Sexes among them. The Antients alſo uſed to adorn their Faces with Jewels. The Americans have likewiſe Pendants for the Noſe and Lips. The antient Hebrews uſed to wear Rings on their [d] Foreheads, and even on their Noſes, which Cuſtom prevails to this Day in the Eaſt-Indies. The Braſilians bore a Hole thro' the lower Lip of their young Children, through which they run a Bone as white as Ivory, by Way of Ornament; and ſometimes inſtead of a Bone they uſe a Jaſper-Stone, or a falſe Emerald, and often fix them in their Cheeks. 'Twere needleſs to enumerate all the Nations that uſe Ear-Rings, or thoſe who wear Bracelets and Necklaces. The Americans carry that Cuſtom to a much greater

[b] He might have ſaid, a Mode with all the ridiculous Part of Mankind.

[c] We may very well conclude from this, the Folly there is in giving into every Mode, without examining the Reaſonableneſs of it. How unhappy is the Man whoſe Felicity depends upon the Caprices of others! The wiſe Man, on the contrary, makes it his continual Study to think and Act conformable to the Dictates of Reaſon, and never to ſuffer him to be carried away with the Tide of Cuſtom, tho' ever ſo rapid and violent.

[d] Gen. xxiv. 47.

Length than we do; for they embelliſh their Legs and Bodies with them, whereas we only wear them about the Arm and Neck; but they do not always adorn themſelves with Pearls and Emeralds. The Braſilians and ſome other Nations eſteem prodigiouſly the Shells and Glaſs Baubles which the Europeans carry them. Some Savages, when they cannot procure the above-mentioned Gewgaws, make uſe of little Pieces of Copper, colour'd Stones, and even Fiſh-Bones; but indeed this whimſical Taſte is infinitely preferable to that in vogue among the Hottentots of the Cape of Good Hope, who garniſh themſelves with Guts. Some Nations of Canada, whom [a] Leſcarbot calls the Armouchiquois, " have, as he relates, a Cuſtom to fix on their Wriſts, and on their Legs above the Ancle-Bone, thin Copper-Plates, ſomething like Hand-Cuffs; and to gird " themſelves with Copper Tubes, each about the Length of one's Middle-Finger, all " which are ſtrung together, about the Length of a Girdle; which agrees exactly with " the Deſcription that Herodian gives us of the Picts, who, he tells us, girded their " [b] Bodies and Necks with Iron, and look'd upon this as a great Ornament, and the " Mark of a very rich Man, in the ſame Manner as other Barbarians valued themſelves " for their Gold."

SINCE we are diſcourſing of the Ornaments of the Head, we muſt not omit the Frontlets of Feathers of ſeveral Colours, in great Eſteem among the Braſilians; the Tufts of Feathers worn by the Mexicans, nor of the Crowns of Elk's-Hair painted of a red Colour, and fix'd to a Selvage, which the Canadans faſten upon their Heads. The Europeans have formerly had theſe Ornaments in no little Eſteem; a Man muſt be a great Stranger to it, who does not know, that a Plume of Feathers was once look'd upon as a mighty Ornament; and though the natural Fickleneſs of the French has almoſt baniſhed them from among them, they are not yet wholly laid aſide by ſome other Nations of Europe. The Ladies for a long Time wore Feather Caps, and Tufts of Feathers, and they are not yet quite diſcarded; probably they will one Day or other come into Faſhion again. Faſhions are laid aſide, and revive again over and over, for the Truth of which, we need only appeal to Experience.

THE Bird call'd the Tochan has little thin yellow and red Feathers about its Neck; theſe the Braſilians uſe as Patches; they ſtick them on their Cheeks with Wax, but wear them only on Holidays. It might be made a Query, ſuppoſing our Ladies were to put ſuch red Feathers on their Cheeks, inſtead of Patches, whether or no they would look frightful? But the Solution of this we ſhall leave to the Fair Sex, to our Fops and finical Fellows.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the BEAUTY of the AMERICANS.

AS there are certain Beauties which ſtrike equally on all Men, ſo the Deformity of a Perſon may be ſo great, as to appear ſuch to all Eyes. We do not think there can be any People in the World of ſo groteſque a Taſte, as to admire the Shape of a Cripple, or that of a Crump-Back; or that any one could poſſibly be charm'd with the Beauty of a Man who was to have his Mouth where others have their Ears. 'Tis poſſible that we may not have a juſt Idea of the Proportions of Animals; but 'tis impoſſible we ſhould loſe our Senſes ſo far, as to admire a Man whoſe Head was to be as big as the reſt of his Body, or a Horſe, whoſe four Legs were unequal both in Shape and Proportion: 'Tis plain the Beaſts themſelves abhor theſe Deformities, ſince 'tis obſerved, that they either ſhift or abandon whatever Monſters they bring into the World. Let it not be objected, that the Author of Nature might have created the whole Syſtem of Beings very different from what they are now; he certainly might have done ſo if he pleaſed; but then ſuppoſing he had thought proper to make Man naturally Crump-back'd, he in that caſe would have given certain Proportions to that Deformity, of which we have no Notion, but whoſe Beauties would nevertheleſs have been as affecting and natural, as thoſe of a fine and eaſy Shape.

[a] Ubi ſupra, Chap. xii.

We are of Opinion, that thoſe Savages who bruiſe the Noſes of their Children, or flat their Heads, have not a juſt [a] Idea of Proportion; but we don't ſay the ſame of ſuch as love little Foreheads, or red Hair, &c. for this is not claſhing with the Rules of Proportion. As to the former, we know that the African Blacks prefer flat Noſes and wide Noſtrils to large and Roman Noſes. We meet with People of the ſame, and even of a more depraved Taſte, among the Americans. The Braſilians bruiſe the Tips of their Children's Noſes, which odd Way of deforming the moſt beautiful Part of the Face, with the Holes they have in their Cheeks, would have no pleaſing Effect on an European Eye. The Inhabitants of Miſſiſippi have as extravagant Ideas of Beauty: They love mightily, ſays an anonymous Traveller, ſuch [b] Heads as are almoſt in the Shape of a Mitre. The Particulars of his Relation are too remarkable to be here omitted: "The "Mother lays her Infant on a Board, which is cover'd with a Piece of the Skin of "ſome Beaſt. A Hole is made at the End of this Board, where the Head is placed, "which is lower than the reſt. Then putting the Child, who is ſtark naked, upon it, "ſhe lays its Head backward into this Hole, when ſhe fixes a Piece of Clay on its Fore-"head, and under its Head, and binds it as tight as poſſible between two little Boards. "The Child ſcreams, looks black in the Face, but the Mother pulls the Boards ſo tight, "till at laſt ſhe forces a white clammy Liquor out of its Noſe and Ears. In this Situ-"ation it lies every Night after, till ſuch Time as the Head is moulded into the modiſh "Form."

'Tis obſerv'd that the Savages of North America are of a very dusky Colour, or at leaſt of as olive a Hue as the Spaniards and Portugueſe. We are told, that this Colour is owing to their Uſe of Greaſe and Oil, with which they rub themſelves, in order to ſecure themſelves againſt the Flies and Maringoins, a kind of Gnat; but we don't believe this to be the Reaſon; for the Samoides and Groenlanders, who inhabit a Climate vaſtly colder than that of the Canadans and Miſſiſipians, and who conſequently are not ſo liable to be ſtung by Gnats, are yet much more ſwarthy than the above-mentioned People. 'Tis ſurpriſing that the Americans, who inhabit between the Tropics, ſhould not be as black as the Africans, ſince they both live under the ſame Climate. Thoſe who aſcribe the Blackneſs of the Africans to Noah's curſing the Poſterity of Ham, give ſuch a Reaſon for it, as is tolerable only in a Sermon. To deſtroy it, we need only appeal to the Complexion of the Egyptians, who bore the Name of [c] Ham their Progenitor, for many Ages, and yet are but a little ſwarthier than the Spaniards. We chuſe rather to adhere to the Reaſons that Leſcarbot gives [d] us: "The burning Heats of "Lybia, that make the Inhabitants of it ſo black, are generated by the prodigious "Tracts of Land, over which the Sun ſhapes his Courſe in his Paſſage thither, whence "a more intenſe Heat is always carried by the rapid Motion (of the Sun) which is al-

" ſo increaſed by the boundleſs Sands, that are very ſuſceptible of Heat, and are the " more ſo, becauſe they are not water'd with many great Rivers, as America, where- " in are as many Rivers and Brooks as in any Part of the World; by which Means " they enjoy a perpetual Cool, and the Country is made more temperate: The Soil " alſo being richer, imbibes the Dew better, which falls in great abundance in " theſe Parts, as well as the Rains alſo, for the above-mention'd Reaſons. More- " over, the Sun, after he goes off from Africa, darts his Rays ſo long during his vaſt " Paſſage over the Ocean, that he thereby draws up a great Quantity of Vapours, which " he afterwards lets fall on thoſe Countries: Whence it is that the Cauſe is very dif- " ferent with regard to the Colour of thoſe two People, and the Nature of their Soil."

We cannot but think that the Blackneſs of the Ethiopians, and of the Inhabitants of Guinea, &c. proceeds from the Climate they inhabit, and the Qualities which the Sperm, whence they are produced, acquires in thoſe Countries, and which they afterwards preſerve from Father to Son.

LET us paſs from the Complexion to the Hair. The Inhabitants of both North and South America have generally [a] black and long Hair; but we are told, they are not ſo ſubject to grow grey as thoſe of the Europeans: They are indeed leſs addicted to Riot and Exceſs, nor ſo much conſum'd with the Cares of Life; Circumſtances which haſten old [b] Age. We Europeans are alſo very whimſical in our Taſte, with reſpect to the Beauty of the Hair: Formerly we uſed to like that which inclin'd a little to [c] Carotty, tho' now 'tis become intolerable: [d] The Egyptians alſo had an Averſion to the Yellowiſh and Carrot-pated, and that becauſe the Hair of Typhon, the ſworn Enemy to Oſiris, was of that Colour: And probably the Expreſſion, Tryphon's Hair, might have been a Term of Reproach among them, as Judas's Hair [e] with us. However 'twould be pretty difficult to determine, whether the Fair or the Brown are moſt beautiful, becauſe they both have their Merit. Some like the languiſhing Charms of the Fair, and others the Sprightlineſs and Vivacity of the Brown.

[f] Qui dit brunette il dit ſpirituelle,
Il dit auſſi vive comme un demon.

In Engliſh thus:
The Brunes, in Wit, excel the Fair,
And have a Demon's ſprightly Air.

BUT if we allow the Deciſions of the antient Poets, we muſt pronounce in Favour of the [g] Fair. Beards are not in great Repute among the Savages: The French and moſt other European Nations agree with them in this Particular; for there are but very few Europeans, the Switzers, the Friſons, and the Lutheran Doctors in Germany excepted, but are againſt wearing long Beards; tho' the Arabians look upon them with the utmoſt Awe and [h] Veneration.

[a] The Canadans love black, ſtubborn Hair, and make theirs ſhine with Greaſe; they deſpiſe curl'd Locks, and cannot endure to ſee Men wear Beards, Motte le Vayer, 145th Letter.

[b] We are alſo told, that the Savages do not grow grey as ſoon as the Europeans, and that becauſe they go bare-headed.

[c] This Rule was not without Exception; the Romans hated carotty Hair as much as we do, as is manifeſt from Martial, who, in one of his Epigrams, imputes it as a Blemiſh to Zoilus. We are told that the Jews ſeem'd to like carotty Hair, and 'tis pretended that King David had fair Hair a little inclining to Red.

[e] This is the Opinion of the Vulgar, who imagine that Judas, who betray'd our Saviour, was red-hair'd.

[h] Voyage to the Holy Land.

THE Antients lov'd large blue Eyes; we don't much diſlike them, however we like large black Eyes ſtill better. Wou'd it be believ'd, that Eyes of a greeniſh Caſt were formerly highly eſteem'd by the French; and that a People, whoſe Taſte regulates that of all Europe, could have ever been ſo odd and whimſical in theirs? 'Tis however Matter of Fact. Monſieur de Coucy praiſes green Eyes in a [a] Song of his making. But that Taſte prevails no longer among us: The large black Eye has triumph'd over the blue, the green, and the grey. However we don't much diſlike a black and ſparkling ſmall Eye, called by us a Chineſe Eye, becauſe thoſe People have very little ones, though by the ſame Rule we might as juſtly call them Tartarian or Scythian ones. The Savages of North America have generally pretty large black Eyes; but thoſe of Miſſiſippi are ſmall and agreeable.

THE Americans are tall and well-ſhaped, extremely nimble and active, which having already accounted for, it would be needleſs to repeat in this Place. The Savages who inhabit the Mountains, are nimbler than thoſe that live in the Plains and Vallies; their Food may probably contribute to their Activity; but we may ſuppoſe, that the Air of the Climate does the ſame. We depend as much on the Soil as the Trees and Plants; if the Bud from which we ſpring is tranſplanted into another Climate, it inſenſibly loſes its firſt Qualities, and acquires others. Theſe Changes depend as much on the Influence of the Air, as an infinite Number of other Things. Were we to draw the Miquelets from the Mountains, and people the Marſhes of the Low-Countries with them, their Deſcendants would in Proceſs of Time be as heavy as the Natives of the Country: But if on the other Side, we were to carry theſe latter into the Pyrenees, they would ſoon be as ſprightly as the Miquelets, and the Flemings their Anceſtors would not find in their Deſcendants that Obeſity they ſo much delight in, and that extenſive Corpulence, in which, though the Mind has greater Room to range, it is yet not better lodged upon that Account. But to carry this Matter yet farther, the Inhabitants of a Country may be made to degenerate, by changing their Government, Polity, Cuſtoms, and Religion. Thus the Tartars have depraved the Cuſtoms of the Chineſe, and the Japoneſe thoſe of the Chineſe their Anceſtors. The Chriſtian Religion has occaſioned numberleſs more Changes in Europe than thoſe above-mentioned; nor has that of Mahomet occaſioned leſs in Aſia and Africa. A Proteſtant in his Addreſſes to God, obſerves certain Rules and Decorums which are not proper for a Roman Catholic. Both of theſe at laſt accuſtom themſelves ſo much to their peculiar Decorums, that they become as it were natural to them; and tho' they ſhould afterwards ſhift each other's Religion, any one who ſhould examine both attentively, would find that each of them would ſtill preſerve ſome Tincture of their former Notions. We have another very ſtrong Inſtance to prove how a Nation may not only change their Manners, but even their bodily Qualities, as appears from [b] Ammianus Marcellinus and Cæſar. The former relates that the Gauls are very tall, fair hair'd, with a white Complexion, a ſtern Look, a ſtrong and terrible Voice, brave, great Lovers of Wine, and very neat in their Dreſs. [c] Cæſar deſcribes them as great Lovers of Novelty, fickle, and very ſuperſtitious. Would it be poſſible to diſcover the Modern French, by the Character theſe two Hiſtorians have given of them? The French in general have loſt thoſe bodily Qualities which Ammianus Marcellinus aſcribes

[a] Leſcarbot furniſhes us with the Paſſage of this antient Proficient in Love:

Au commencier la trouvai ſi doucette,

The Meaning of which is, That ſhe appear'd at firſt ſo beautiful in my Eyes, that there's nothing I would not have ſuffered for her ſake; but her roſy Countenance, her ſweet Lips, her green, rolling Eye, have enchanted me to that Degree, &c.

to them. They are at this Time of a middle Stature, black-hair'd, or of a brown or chesnut Colour, the Complexion the same; a masculine, but not a stern Look; a strong and resolute Tone of Voice, but 'tis no Way terrible. They are sober enough, and drink rather to excite Mirth, which they are naturally inclined to, than purely for Drinking sake. However it must be own'd they have still preserved their Neatness, their Love of Novelty, as is but too manifest from their [a] Modes, and the fickle Temper with which Cæsar reproaches their Ancestors: But were that Emperor now living, he would clear them of being inclin'd to Superstition, which surely the modern French can hardly be reproached with. As to Politeness, an Article in which the French are universally allowed to excel, Cæsar allows it to the Gauls of his Time, and declares they were more [b] polite than the [c] Germans.

Hence 'tis manifest, that 'tis not impossible for a Nation to change its Manners and Habits; as also for the Descendants of an active and vigorous Man to lose all their Vigour; which may be owing to the Habit of Mind may they have contracted, either from certain Principles of Religion, their Compliance to the Government under which they live, or their Submission to that Tyrant called Fashion. Almost all Nations, not excepting those that lie most North, have undergone Changes; and if the American Savages have not been susceptible of any, they owe that Happiness to their strict Adherence to Nature. Entirely devoted to her, they seldom do any Thing but in Conformity to her Dictates, and deviate but very little from the Maxims she inspires; but then on the other Side, they are as unpolished almost as Brutes: They have neither the Sentiments, the Distinctions, the Ceremonies, nor the Customs, which in Europe are the genuine Characteristics of a human Creature. Would a Savage but live and dress after our Manner, be a polite Debauchee, and cease devouring his Fellow-Creatures, we then might rank him in the same Class with ourselves. Our very Whims and Excesses still discover something of the rational Creature.

A Cacique who drinks out of a Kettle with two Handles, and quaffs it almost off at a Draught, or who takes the first Woman that pleases him for his Wife, will still be a Cacique; but a Nobleman, who empties ten Flasks of Wine at one sitting, and goes to twenty disorderly Houses in a Night, does no ways derogate from the Dignity of a human Creature.

[a] A Foreigner that stays in France, is surprised at the perpetual Changes which Fashion causes in Dress: He imagines he sees a People who try it in all its Varieties, without finding one that fits them; but in the End there's not one but does fit them. Every Time they get a new Fashion, they affirm very seriously, and prove by good Arguments, that 'tis more becoming, or more convenient, than that they left off, and a Man would almost believe there is some Truth in it. But however, at the End of an hundred Changes, all from Good to Better, they return to the old Fashions, that is, after a great deal of Motion, they find themselves in the Place from whence they set out. Lettres sur les Francois, par Mr. Muralt.

[b] Cæsar, Book 4.

[c] The most inconsiderable Action, and the smallest Motions of a Frenchman are embellish'd with Politeness; he stretches out his Hand, and draws it back politely; he offers it to a Woman going from one Room into another, and runs to do it, just as if the Way was difficult and dangerous. He runs in the same Manner to take up a Glove, or a Handkerchief fallen to the Ground, with as much Precipitation, as if he were to take them out of the Fire; for there's something more than barely taking up a Glove or a Handkerchief.— This is a Play not much unlike that of the Flies that pass away their Time in going under one another; or to speak more honourably of the French Politeness, I say that all the curious Toys that come to us from France, and are admirably well wrought and finished; all these Trinkets in Cases, all these little Moveables with their Springs and Hinges, are a complete Figure of the pretty People of that Nation. Muralt's Letters.

CHAP. IX.

Of the EXERCISES, &c. of the AMERICANS.

WE will begin with Dancing, which is perhaps as old as our grand Progenitor. Though he himſelf might not have invented it, he probably might have ſeen the firſt Rudiments of that Art; and there is no Room to doubt but that the immediate Poſterity of Adam had acquir'd a good Ear, which in Proceſs of Time regulated and meaſured the Steps in that Exerciſe. 'Tis even [a] probable, that Dancing was firſt invented in the Infancy of the World, when Man was not yet a Prey to the Cares of Life, and in a Climate whoſe Fertility and excellent Produce might naturally inſpire Felicity and Mirth. The antient Hebrews uſed to dance to the Glory of the Creator, and the [b] Pagans in honour of their Idols, as has already been obſerved in the Diſſertation prefix'd to this Work. The Eaſt-Indians antient and modern, and the Americans, have made Dancing a Part of their Religious Worſhip. The Floridans dance by way of thanking the Sun, for nay ſignal Favour they may have received; the Canadans alſo addreſs their Prayers to the Gods in dancing. In a word, the Virginians, the Mexicans, the Peruvians, &c. have not only introduced Dancing in their religious Worſhip, but even the moſt frantic Geſtures and Motions; nor have the Mahometans themſelves excluded it their Devotions.

FROM ſacred Hiſtory, let us paſs on to prophane. The Weſt-Indians are of Opinion, that Dancing is a very healthy Exerciſe, and for that Reaſon often preſcribe very violent ones to their Sick. [c] Socrates and ſome other Antients had the ſame Opinion with reſpect to this Art. We have not any way leſſened the Merits of it, but have rather carried it to an Exceſs in the oppoſite Extreme. It muſt be owned that Dancing is now practiſed, rather in order to acquire a good Air, and for the Sake of ſhining in Aſſemblies, than from any View to Health; be that as it will, 'tis now ſo much in Vogue, that the Want of it would be look'd upon as a [d] Defect. The [e] Ladies can hardly bear to hear it run down; they prefer the Nimbleneſs of a Caper, and the regular Steps of a Minuet, to the moſt ſolid Arguments of a Man of Senſe, who has made no other uſe of them than to walk with. The ſavage Americans perform this agreeable Exerciſe after their Manner, and from the ſame Motive with the Europeans, viz. to give Pleaſure to their Gueſts, to entertain thoſe they honour, and divert one another. As we are leſs nimble than they, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe they would carry that Art to much greater Perfection, were their Motions but more exact and regular, they being not only very active, but have alſo a very good Ear. The Dances of the Savages of New France are generally [f] circular, and without ſhifting Places; they dance very nimbly by ſtamping their Feet on the Ground, and afterwards raiſing themſelves up with a half Caper. They clench their Fiſts, and extend their Arms upwards in a threatning Poſture. Some of our Country Dances bear ſome Reſemblance to this Canadan Dance. One of [a] Lucian tells us, that Dancing was firſt invented by the Goddeſs Rhea, and preſerved the Life of Jupiter himſelf from the Cruelty of his Father Saturn, and that there were ſome Theſſalian Statues erected in his Time to the Honour of the beſt Dancers.

[b] The Romans inſtituted an Order of dancing Prieſts under the Name of the Salians.

[c] Socrates, whom Apollo pronounced to be the wiſeſt Man, was not only a profeſſed Admirer of Dancing in others, but learned it himſelf when he was an old Man.

[d] So much of Dancing, at leaſt, as belongs to the Behaviour and handſome Carriage of the Body, is extremely uſeful, if not abſolutely neceſſary. Cowley.

[e] Cleomira dances with all the Elegancy of Motion imaginable; but her Eyes are ſo chaſtiſed with the Simplicity and Innocence of her Thoughts, that ſhe raiſes in the Beholders Admiration and Good-will, but no looſe Hope or wild Imagination. The true Art in this Caſe is, to make the Mind and Body improve together; and if poſſible to make Geſture follow Thought, and not let Thought be employ'd upon Geſture. Spect. N° 66.

[f] Leſcarbot, Book iii. Chap. 15.

the Dancers, probably he that leads up, ſings alone, for they never ſing in Chorus as in our Brawls, except that the Dancers break out into a kind of Exclamation at certain Intervals. We muſt not forget that Dances make a Part in their public Debates, and the moſt ſerious Affairs of their Council. Some Nations of South-America have a Cuſtom ſtill more extraordinary; they proclaim [a] War againſt their Enemies with a Dance. The Conformity we might here take Notice of between the Virginian and North American Dances, and thoſe of our own Nation, would carry us to improper Lengths, not to mention that it would be tedious.

LET us now make ſome mention of the Singing of the Americans, which, though it be altogether rude and artleſs, is yet applied to the ſame Uſe as the reſt of the World make of it, viz. that of praiſing their Gods, and their great Men, in diverting themſelves, and regulating the Steps in their Dances. Though we are pretty ſenſible that the Songs of the Savages are rude and inelegant, they yet are not unadorned with Figures, and with Flights; with Expreſſions that differ from the common Forms of Speaking, a myſterious and intricate Senſe, Inverſions of Phraſes, Sallies that flow from what we call Fire, and in a word, all that wild Enthuſiaſm which reſults from that poetical Fury, which has impoſed on the Bulk of [b] Mankind in all Ages, and made them fancy it to be the Language of the Gods. But why ſhould not the Savages have as great a Share of this Frenzy as ourſelves? Are they formed in a different Manner from the Inhabitants of our Hemiſphere? are not their Organs the ſame as ours? or is the Conſtruction of their Brain different? and conſequently are they leſs ſubject than we, to that Enthuſiaſm which gives Life to Poetry, and to that Irregularity of Imagination which Poets themſelves have called a Drunkenneſs, without perhaps conſidering at the ſame Time the Juſtneſs of the Compariſon, or having Judgment enough to conſider, that all who are delighted with theſe wild Extravagancies, do in ſome meaſure reſemble Drunkards? A Mind thus form'd will run into Poety without the Aſſiſtances of Literature, or a long Detail of Incidents; but then it will require ſome Culture in order to embelliſh Nature, and give a Poliſh to Talents, which we muſt allow the Americans to poſſeſs, unleſs we will contradict all the Teſtimonies of the American Conquerors, and our moſt authentic Relations on that Head; who aſſure us the Americans are acquainted with Poetry; that they compoſe Songs in honour of their Gods and Heroes, as the Europeans at this Day, and the Nations of Antiquity, not excepting the Scythians, the Cimbri, the Goths and Germans, &c. and in a word, that 'tis by the Help of Poetry they have preſerv'd the Memory of ſeveral remarkable Incidents, and many Footſteps of their own Hiſtory. This was even the Practice in the firſt Ages of the World, viz. in the Time of Orpheus, Linus, and Muſæus, who perhaps were at the ſame Time Poets, Prophets, and Hiſtorians. Are we therefore to wonder that the firſt Ages of the World ſhould be overſpread with a Cloud of Fictions, which by the Aſſiſtance of poetical Enthuſiaſm, have, as it were, ſwallowed up antient Hiſtory, and robb'd us of the Knowledge of that of our Anceſtors? For the antient Europeans were everlaſting Songſters, and uſed to throw every Incident which they thought remarkable into imharmonious Jingle, the better to [a] See what has been obſerved thereupon in the Preface to the 4th Volume of Collection of Voyages to the North, and on the Calumet Dance.

[b] It may not be improper to anſwer this Accuſation, and ſhew the Uſe of Poetry to Mankind, as we find it in Mr. Welſted's Writings. "Does not Poetry inſtruct while it pleaſes?" Does it not inſtruct more powerfully too, through its ſuperior Charm of pleaſing? Does not Poetry oblige as much as Books of Humanity? Does it not give us the ſame Profit and Pleaſure, and that in a livelier tho' more indirect Way? Beſides that it impreſſes more ſtrongly on the Memory whatever it inculcates, by the natural Help of Numbers. Moral Writers recommend Virtue, but Poetry adorns it; the Moraliſt gains his Reader to approve of it, the Poet to be in Love with it; the one ſimply propoſes Truth and Virtue to us, the other ſhews them in a Flood of Light, and enforces them as it were with the Power of Enchantment. Is it not, laſtly, the Privilege of Poetry, that it moſtly gives us truer Ideas, and always more elegant ones of the Thing in Queſtion, than any other Sort of Writing? Is there any Thing that ſo much poliſhes Men's Manners, or gives ſo fine an Edge to their Wit? Is it not this which gives the ſtrongeſt Tincture of Good-Nature to the Heart? And does it not keep Men in good Humour with themſelves, and guard them from the Gloomineſs which Care and Diſappointment are apt to ſpread over the Soul? &c.——

tranſmit it to Poſterity. We know that Poetry has this Advantage, and that Cadence, Rhime, and Meaſure, are of great Advantage to aſſiſt the Memory. We are of Opinion, that the Weſt-Indians have experienc'd this as well as ourſelves, who to this Day work up our Prayers in Rhime, for the Uſe of Children and the Vulgar. As to what we juſt now obſerv'd, viz. that Songs were the hiſtorical Monuments of the antient Europeans, and of the Americans at this Time, no one is ignorant of the Advantages of this ſort of Ballads, which are particularly in Vogue all over France; but perhaps every one has not heard, " That [a] Charlemain, ſenſible of the Advantages of this vul-
" gar Species of Poetry, commanded Odes and Ballads to be compos'd, —— in which " the Actions of their Anceſtors were contain'd; and gave Orders for their being got
" by Heart, and ſung by Children, in order that they might be tranſmitted to lateſt
" Poſterity."

THE other Employments of the Savages, as formerly of the antient Europeans, are War and Hunting. Thoſe who live on the Sea-Shore, and on the Banks of Rivers, employ themſelves in Fiſhing. The Canoos of the latter were alſo us'd by the Antients: They are made of Skins ſew'd together; of Oſiers, very neatly wrought; or of Barks of Trees, in the ſame Manner as the Egyptian Barks, which, according to [b] Lucan, were made of the ſame Bark as the Antients made their Paper of. We may ſuppoſe, that the Ark into which Moſes was put, when he was expos'd on the Nile, was a kind of Canoo. The Engliſh, the Saxons, and the [c] Scotch, had Oſier Canoos lin'd with Leather. Leſcarbot thinks that 'tis to the Canoos we owe the poetical Fiction of the Sirens. [d] Perſons who ſaw theſe little Boats at a Diſtance, which were made to hold only one Perſon, were ſimple enough to think the Man and Boat were a Monſter, half Man and half Fiſh.

THE American Savages have neither Walls nor Gates to incloſe their Dwellings; and in this they imitate the firſt Inhabitants of the World. In South America, not far from Nova-Andaluſia, each Savage encloſes and marks out the Limits of his Land with a kind of [e] Net-Work, made of Bexuco, a ſort of Cotton, and raiſes this Wall to about half the Height of a Man. We are told that the Indians look upon the breaking or unravelling this Net-Work, as a very criminal Action; a manifeſt Proof they ſtill preſerve the Principles of natural Equity, even in that thick Miſt of Ignorance with which they are ſurrounded. The Lacedemonians would not ſuffer their Capital to be ſurrounded with Walls, from a different Motive, ſaying, that the Bravery and Valour of their Citizens ought to be their only Defence. The Germans and Engliſh were formerly ignorant of the Uſe of Brick and Lime.

THE Confidence or Sincerity of theſe Savages obliges us to make ſome Obſervations on Theft, which has not been conſider'd in the ſame Light in all Ages. Travellers aſſure us, that the Americans ſeldom filch from one another. Their little Wealth, and the Eaſe with which they procure the Neceſſaries of Life, prevent their giving into a Crime, which the Lacedemonians look'd upon as a Legerdemain Trick, or rather as a Remedy againſt Indolence, and the [f] antient Germans as an Exerciſe proper to preſerve their Youth from Idleneſs; but the latter allow'd of no Thefts but what were committed out of their own Dominions. The Americans may probably be of the ſame Opinion; for they don't ſcruple to plunder the Europeans and the reſt of their Enemies.

Be this as it will, 'tis certain that Theft is abſolutely contrary to the Laws of natural Juſtice, and 'tis ſurprizing the Romans ſhould have indulg'd this Crime ſo far, as to allow it in certain Feſtivals, call'd by them [a] Quadrigariorum luſus. That Hiſtorian indeed tells us, that 'twas done out of Diverſion, as it were, but then how many knaviſh Actions were ſcreen'd under this Veil! [b] The Egyptians had formerly a Prince, Leader, or Captain, of Thieves among them, as at this Time in Paris, and ſome other great Cities. The above mention'd Author quotes another, who aſſures, that the Dominions of the Abyſſinian Monarch are infeſted with ſuch like Wretches. However, theſe Examples don't give the leaſt Sanction to Theft, and it would be a very unjuſt Way of arguing, ſhould any one pretend to prove from thence, that Theft is conſider'd as honourable by the Egyptians, the French, &c. On the other Side, the Japaneſe will not ſuffer any kind of Theft, and puniſh it with ſo much Severity, that they may always leave their Houſes open with Safety.

We paſs on to the Employments of their Women. Leſcarbot begins by that of giving Birth to beautiful Children; and to this Purpoſe is very particular in his Exhortations to all ſuch Women as go to inhabit New France, whom he adviſes to be very prolific, and to bring forth a great many Children, who may ſing the Praiſes of God. He proves the Neceſſity of this Employment from the Etymology of the Hebrew [c] Word, and ſhews, that God form'd Woman, that living Ground, with the ſame Diſpoſitions as that we inhabit. The Wives of the Savages employ themſelves wholly in domeſtic Affairs, ſuch as the Care of the Family, Husbandry, &c. but they are not admitted into the public Councils, nor allow'd to eat with the Men. As the Americans cannot with Juſtice be accus'd of being jealous, neither can they in this Reſpect be compar'd to the Italians and Spaniards, who exclude their Women as much as poſſible from all Society with Men; nor to the Turks and other Eaſtern Nations, who ſhut them up in Seraglio's. We may therefore ſuppoſe, that this is owing to the Contempt they have for the ſofter Sex, which they certainly would not have, were they leſs ſavage. The Gauls, and even the Germans, deſcrib'd by the Romans as a rude clowniſh People, did nevertheleſs treat the Fair Sex with greater Courteſy and Civility; for they admitted their Wives into their Entertainments and Councils, and there were very few Parties of Pleaſure but their Women bore a Part in them. Since Chriſtianity the Taſte for Politeneſs and Gallantry has been greatly improv'd. How many noble Feats of Arms, in honour of the Ladies, do we meet with in the Annals of our gay Anceſtors! how many Lances broke for their Sakes! how many terrible Conflicts to defend their Beauty! how many Duels were fought to force every Body for four or five hundred Miles round 'em, to own the ſuperior Charms of their reſpective Miſtreſſes! Notwithſtanding this, 'tis certain, that the Politeneſs which was ſhewn the Ladies on ſuch Occaſions had ſomething ſavage in it. The faſhionable Devoirs of our Age, with regard to the Fair Sex, ſeldom extend ſo far as to oblige a Man to venture the being run through the Lungs for the Sake of his Miſtreſs; and was any Woman now-a-days ſo blind as to expect ſuch a Piece of Gallantry, ſhe very probably would run the Hazard of growing grey in her old-faſhion'd Notions. Politeneſs is more natural in this Age, or to ſpeak more juſtly, 'tis now a beautiful Varniſh for the greateſt Irregularities. Our Gallantry, being leſs concealed, and more fickle than that of our Anceſtors, has open'd a Door to Contempt and Debauchery. Let us advance a Paradox; the ſavage Americans, notwithſtanding all our boaſted Underſtanding, do yet govern themſelves with greater Uniformity.

We ſhall conclude theſe Remarks with the Submiſſion which the American Women pay their Husbands. We meet with leſs of this among the Americans than with us. As they always confine themſelves religiouſly to their domeſtic Concerns, they never once think of giving themſelves any Airs, like our European Wives, which certainly makes the married State infinitely more happy. 'Tis obſerv'd, that thoſe Marriages are generally happy, where every Thing is kept within its due Bounds, and each Member thereof knows his proper Employment; a Family regulated on this Foot, makes the Wife neither ſuperior nor equal, becauſe the Nature of the Employments of the Wife are ſuch as naturally ſpeak her inferior and ſubmiſſive. Such of our Wives as have not ſeen the ſplendid Part of the World, eaſily acquieſce with this Principle of Submiſſion; but as for the reſt of them, they think Submiſſion becomes none but the Wife of a Topinambou, or a Hottentot.

CHAP. X.

Of the Commerce between the two Sexes, and of the Marriages of the AMERICANS.

THERE is no Nation in the World, whoſe natural Fierceneſs is not ſoftened by Love. The moſt brutiſh Savages have their peculiar Syſtems of Gallantry, and a Tenderneſs which the Fire of Love refines. In this Caſe there is form'd in them a Contraſt or Oppoſition of Softneſs and Severity, which would appear as ridiculous in our Eyes, as the Sight of our Peaſants making love, though in reality neither of them is more odd or fantaſtical than that of our Courtiers. The Principle which gives Riſe to Love, is born among the Savages in the ſame Manner as among us. In what Manner ſoever this Principle, which is the Source of Love, may diſcover itſelf, either in the Heart of a Savage, of an European, or of an old peeviſh Fellow, the Difference will be only in the Manner of its revealing itſelf. The Canadan Savage, who lies down at the Feet of his Miſtreſs, till ſuch Time as the cruel Maid condeſcends to blow out the Match he preſents her with, does therein not act more contradictory to Reaſon, than a very polite European, who dreſſes his Miſtreſs in all the Perfections of Nature, and as eaſily ſtrips her of them the Moment the Fire of Love is extinguiſh'd in his Breaſt; or like the old Churl in [a] Moliere, who after having made a Declaration in Terms ſuitable to his Character, lays aſide all his natural Peeviſhneſs to aſſure his Miſtreſs.

Que ſon amour le touche au dernier point,
Qu'il veut qu'il ait ſa recompenſe.

That is, He is paſſionately in love with her, and is reſolv'd ſhe ſhall reward his Conſtancy.

But who afterwards finding himſelf deceiv'd, wiſhes not only his Miſtreſs, but [b] the whole Sex at the Devil. In a Word, the Europeans and Americans are equally ridiculous on that Head. An old Iroquois dances as gracefully, with his Match in his Hand, in Preſence of a young Girl of his own Country, as an old Gentleman among us careſſes a blooming Maid of fifteen; and Love wantons as elegantly in the Heart of a Boïé as in that of a Prelate. Conſequently the old Gentleman has no Reaſon to laugh at the Iroquois, nor the Prelate at the Boïé: They ought to do each other Juſtice, and allow that they differ only in the Manner; but that Nature is always the Painter: They ſhould ſay to themſelves, that ſuch Ideas as are raiſed by Gallantry, delight us from Habit, not by Reaſon.

As to the American Art of making Love, 'tis plain from what has been ſaid, that we ſhould hardly ever give into that Taſte. However, 'tis confin'd to fewer Rules, becauſe they go to the Mark at once; but notwithſtanding that the Simplicity of this Art gives an eaſy Opportunity of gathering Roſes, yet Thorns will ſometimes ſpring up at the ſame Time. The American Lover makes his Advances to his Miſtreſs; and ſhe, as among us, often draws up her own Conditions. The only Sweetneſs which is here found, is, that they are generally leſs cruel than the European Ladies; and we are firmly perſuaded, that they are not very ſqueamiſh with regard to Decorum. Cupid, who here knows very well what he is about, attacks the Americans with no other Weapons but thoſe of Nature. They are ignorant of the Art of bluſhing at their Wounds, becauſe they don't know the leaſt Immodeſty there is in them; they alſo are as little acquainted with the Languiſhments and Delays which Cuſtom has introduced among us, in the different Methods that are eſtabliſhed to heal theſe Sort of Wounds; but as for them, they have immediate Recourſe to the Cure. The Notion the Savages have of a young Maiden, whom they look upon as a free uncultivated Piece of Ground, that ought to be the Property of the firſt Comer, muſt naturally make the Cure of theſe Love-Wounds more eaſily effected, and conſequently is a great Obſtacle to that delicate Gallantry which employs the moſt beautiful Seaſon of Life among us. But unhappily it is to this Way of thinking, that we are alſo to aſcribe the terrible Diſorders which happen but too frequently among the Americans, and the ſcandalous Proſtitution of their marriageable Women, which was carried to ſuch great Lengths in certain [a] Provinces of Peru, that the moſt diſſolute Women, who had abandon'd themſelves to all kinds of Luſt, ſooner got themſelves Husbands, nay much better Men, than thoſe who had all the Ornaments of Modeſty. Several Pagan Nations allow'd antiently theſe Obſcenities, nor are they altogether laid aſide in the [b] Eaſt-Indies; and what is a thouſand Times more to be lamented, is, that in Chriſtian Countries the ſhameful Marks of theſe Debaucheries, ſo oppoſite to the [c] Dignity of the Religion which our Saviour came to eſtabliſh, are ſtill preſerv'd.

'Tis an eſtabliſh'd Rule among all the Americans, as well as the Europeans, that whenever a Man makes love to a Girl with Intention to marry her, he muſt firſt ask her Father's Conſent; for he is not allow'd to have her but on that Condition. The Lover muſt alſo be induſtrious enough to maintain his Family. The former Cuſtom is agreeable to the Law of Nature, the latter is owing to the Love which Parents have for their Children.

The Name of Savages which we have given to theſe People, makes us falſly ſuppoſe, that they muſt have ſtifled all theſe tender Emotions. We may perhaps meet with ſome, who are ſo brutal as hardly to diſcover any ſuch Symptoms; but then there are none ſo very unnatural as to have loſt them entirely. On the contrary, the Americans ſeem in general to deviate leſs than we do from theſe two Cuſtoms. We have innumerable Inſtances among us, of Children who have withdrawn from the Obedience which they ow'd to their Parents, either from Wantonneſs, or ſome other criminal Motives; of young Women carried off, and of others who get young Fellows to ſteal them; of clandeſtine and ſcandalous Marriages; of young People who marry, though they have neither Inclination nor Abilities to procure themſelves a Maintenance; but ſhould the Reader aſk, whether the Savages ever fall into theſe Errors, our Anſwer is, that we cannot tell. It would be a pretty difficult Matter on this Occaſion to ſtate ſuch Bounds as might be juſt between the Conduct of the Savages and that of the Europeans. However, if we may believe Travellers, the Savage adheres more ſtrictly than we do to thoſe Rules which Nature preſcribes. Let us ſay further, that they have leſs Inducements to violate them than we, as they are not ſurrounded with ſuch a numberleſs Multitude of agreeable and amuſing Objects as dazzle our Eyes, and make us ſometimes almoſt forget the moſt common Precepts of Virtue, continually preſenting themſelves to our Imaginations, and raiſing the moſt horrid Conflicts in the Soul, when Nature and Reaſon refuſe to obey their Call, till at the long Run they encourage us to imitate thoſe among whom we live; a vicious Imitation 'tis true, yet we have not Reſolution enough to ſhun it, for fear of being expoſed to that Cenſure and [a] Ridicule, which too often attend thoſe who preſume to live in a different Manner from their Neighbours. We are told, that the grand Art of Politeneſs is to ſhape our Conduct after ſuch Cuſtoms as have been long eſtabliſhed, and are practiſed by Perſons of a diſtinguiſh'd Rank; but then how many of theſe Cuſtoms are pernicious, and only inflame the Paſſions, and maintain an eternal War with thoſe Duties which Religion inſpires? Woe to the Timon who ſhall take it into his Head to attack them.

[b] Travellers have told us, that there are certain Houſes in China where Curtezans are entertain'd, who have each their ſeparate Cell, over the Door of which ſome emblematical Sentence is writ, deſcribing the Age and Beauty of the Tenant, and alſo the Price. Petronius tells us, that there were Houſes of the ſame Nature in Rome in his Days—— Video quoſdam inter titulos, nudaſque meretrices furtim conſpicientes tardè, &c.

[c] Every one has heard of the Places at Rome, &c. where the moſt infamous Gallantry, and all the Diſorders of licentious Love, are carried on.

Il faut parmi le monde une vertu traitable;
A force de ſageſſe on peut être blamable.
La parfait raiſon fuit toute extremité,
Et veut que l'on ſoit ſage avec ſobrieté.
Cette grande roideur des vertus des vieux ages,
Heurte trop notre ſiecle, & les communs uſages. Moliere's Miſantrope.

Thus Engliſh'd,

The Virtue which the ſocial Life requires,
Is ſuch as ſoft Benevolence inſpires:
But that which flows from a too rigid Mind,
Juſtly deſerves a Cenſure from Mankind.
Reaſon, when perfect, keeps its proper Bounds,
And claims a Wiſdom no Exceſs confounds.
That ſtubborn Virtue on the Mind beſtow'd,
Which fix'd in Greece and Rome its chief Abode,
Offends the preſent Age, and ſhocks the reigning Mode.

The Licentiouſneſs of the preſent Age would furniſh us with an excellent Commentary on theſe Maxims.

LET us now ſee the Notions the Americans have of the Neceſſity of Marriage. If the Rules of Politeneſs oblige us daily to ſoften the Severity of Virtue, and allow us to prefer the Practice of the World to the Auſterities of Wiſdom, 'tis not ſo with regard to Women. Men have taken it into their Heads, to make the Fair Sex Slaves to a Duty which they call Honour. This Honour, not ſatisfied with forbidding them to extinguiſh the raging Fire of Love any other Ways but in the Marriage-Bed, prohibits them alſo from diſcovering the leaſt Deſire of entering into the married State, or declaring their Paſſion in the uſual Form; it obliges the weakeſt Sex to ſuppreſs the leaſt Symptoms of the moſt violent of all Paſſions. If there are any Women in the World, who being inſpir'd with a greater Boldneſs than the Generality of their Sex, do ſometimes break through all Reſtraints, and with an unparallel'd Courage, freeing themſelves from the Captivity of the Tyrant Honour, generouſly diſcover the Sentiments of their Hearts, ſend Challenges to their Lovers, and not ſatisfied with captivating their Hearts at the firſt Onſet, are for ſeizing their Perſons alſo, all ſuch Examples as theſe will ever be look'd upon as ſo many bold Deviations from thoſe Rules of Modeſty, which Men have laid down for the Conduct of the Fair Sex. The ſmall Number of theſe Inſtances inhances their Merit. But has every young Woman Reſolution enough to follow them, and don't we know that the [a] Sublime is above all Rules? Vulgar Souls dare not once depart from them, and the only Refuge they have, is to conceal from the World all thoſe Remedies they employ againſt Love, to exclaim againſt the Injuſtice of Men, and cry out with Amaryllis in Paſtor Fido,

Que votre bonheur eſt extrême,
Cruels lions, ſauvages ours,
Vous qui n'avez dans vos amours,
D'autre regle que l'amour même?
Que j'envie un ſemblable ſort!
Et que nous ſommes malheureuſes!
Nous en qui les loix rigoureuſes
Puniſſent l'amour par la mort.

Traduction de l'Abbé Regnier des Marais.

Thus Engliſh'd,

Ye Bears that haunt the pathleſs Grove,
Ye Lions that in Foreſts ſtray,
How happy is your State in Love!
Since you kind Love alone obey.
But in our Breaſts what Torments reign!
When we reflect on Woman's Breath;
We, whom Man's cruel Laws ordain
For ſpotleſs Love to ſuffer Death.

THE Savages are undoubtedly more unpoliſh'd, but at the ſame Time more human in this Reſpect. Their Ignorance of the Rules of Decorum makes them indulge the Liberty of [b] loving and declaring their Paſſions, and a Maid ſeldom pines for Love; her Sighs are anſwer'd, and her Father, in Compliance with the Inſtitutions of Nature, ſoon ſurrenders up his Daughter into the Arms of her Husband. One Circumſtance very much facilitates the Marriages of the American Women, which is, the little Expence they are at to maintain their Families. We have already obſerv'd, that a Bride's Father requires Induſtry in a Son-in-Law, a little of which will go a very great Way. The only Implements a Savage wants to procure him a Livelihood, are, a Bow and Arrow: He dwells in a Hut; and the principal Articles in his Furniture, are a Hammock and ſome Beaver Skins. Can we think that ſuch a Settlement brings much Care and Trouble along with it? Children are born; the Family increaſes; theſe they bring up to Labour. And till the Children are able to ſhift for themſelves, they range the Woods for their Subſiſtence; and as all this only coſts them a little Pains in Hunting, they are ſure their Arrows will procure them Proviſion.

THE Preliminaries of Marriage laſt ſix Months at leaſt among the Canadans, and ſometimes a Year; during which Time the "Lover, as Leſcarbot informs us, paints "his Face, to make it more beautiful, and wears a new Gown made of Beaver's, Ot-"ter's, or ſome other Kind of Skin, &c." But the Braſilians, who have leſs Patience in their Amours, leave no Interval between Love and Marriage. As ſoon as a Youth is of Age to have any Correſpondence with the other Sex, he is allow'd to look out for a Wife; when he addreſſes himſelf to the young Woman's Parents, or in Caſe they are dead, to her Friends and Neighbours. If they agree, the Match is made, and ſhe immediately becomes his Wife; but in caſe of a Refuſal, he goes away, and makes choice of ſome other Woman: However they don't ſtick to one only.

[a] THE Cuſtom of proſtituting their marriageable Women, ſhews the vaſt Difference there is between the Taſte of the American, and the Delicacy of the European Husbands. The former have no Regard for the Virgin Flower, ſo highly eſteem'd by the Jews, ſo much ſought after by our young Libertines, ſo little known to Phyſicians, and ſo difficult for a Woman to keep. [b] The Eaſt-Indians agree almoſt in Taſte with the Americans on this Head, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. A certain Privilege of the Lord of the Manor, which formerly prevail'd in ſeveral Parts of Europe, proves that the Vaſſal had not always the firſt Fruits of his Wife's Virginity. We are [c] told, "That this Right or "Privilege was upheld in Scotland, a long Time after the eſtabliſhing of the Chriſtian Re-"ligion in that Kingdom; and that Malcolm II. found it a very difficult Matter to re-"peal it: The Wives were obliged to pay to the Lord —— a certain Sum of Money. "We are alſo aſſured, that the Gentry of Savoy and Burgundy enjoy'd the ſame Privi-"lege for many Years; and that the Prebends of the Cathedral of Lyons had alſo a Fin-"ger in the Pye." Did the Inſpirations of Piety prompt thoſe People to yield to theſe Eccleſiaſtics, what the Eaſt-Indians devote to the Service of their Prieſts and Idols? If every one was of his [d] Opinion, who ſaid, that the getting of a Maiden-Head was Porter's Work, there might be ſome Room to juſtify the Cuſtom practiſed in both the Eaſt and Weſt-Indies; and it might be ſaid that the Vaſſal had acted a cunning Part, in leaving this Flower to his Lordſhip's Cropping. The [e] Turks have a much better Notion of the Merit and Scarcity of this lordly Privilege: They are ſo far from indulging it to any Body, that they flatter themſelves their Wives will riſe perfect Virgins at the Reſurrection, and give them, at their firſt Meeting in Paradiſe, what they had taken from them when they were upon Earth. To this odd Cuſtom we may add that of hiring a

[a] We are aſſured that the Inhabitants of Ceilan courteouſly offer their Wives and Daughters to their Gueſts; but they add, that he muſt be of that Quality as may entitle him to that Honour! La Peirerre tells us, in his Account of Iceland, printed in the firſt Volume of the Collection of Voyages to the North, "That the Iceland Maidens offer them-"ſelves as Bed-Fellows to all ſuch Strangers as are not married——and that even their Fathers preſent them to "Strangers; that they think it a great Honour when they get them with Child." —— but a certain Icelander pretends that this is mere Calumny.

[b] The antient Thracians did not believe that the Gallantry of their Maidens was any way Criminal; but they were carefully watch'd after they were married, and the Violation of the conjugal Faith was look'd upon as a Capital Crime.

[e] So much the more ſcarce, that tho' a Girl has not that forward Dexterity of Quartilla in Petronius, ſhe yet may loſe that ſeveral ways, which gives the Right of Sovereignty to the Husband. There are very few but what are bit by this Occaſion. "Some of whom, as Brantome obſerves, are nevertheleſs afterwards entirely well ſatisfy'd, and "firmly believe that they had, like brave and reſolute Soldiers, made the firſt Onſet, and accordingly make their "Boaſts of it the next Morning to their Friends and Companions, and perhaps ſometimes to thoſe very Men who "had been before-hand with them; theſe laugh heartily in their Sleeves, and with their Miſtreſſes too, who ap-"plaud themſelves for having play'd their Cards ſo cunningly."

Woman for a certain limited Time, which was formerly practiſed by the Romans, and at this Day by the Chineſe; tho' if it be duly conſider'd, this is no more than the Fornication known to all Nations, not excepting the Chriſtians themſelves; the Communities or Societies of Women, [a] eſtabliſh'd in the Kingdom of Calecut and ſome Parts of Braſil; the Trial and Purchaſe of [b] Women, indulg'd in ſome Countries to thoſe who are not willing to enter into the Bands of Wedlock for Life; the Plurality of Husbands, which, as we are told, is a [c] Privilege allowed to ſome Women in the Eaſt-Indies; and laſtly, the [d] Marriage of Widows, condemned by the primitive Church, notwithſtanding the Precept of St. Paul, who ſays, 'Tis much better to marry than to burn, (with the Fire of Concupiſcence) general Cuſtoms both in Europe and Aſia. Captain [e] Quartier, ſpeaking of the Canadan Women, tells us, "That they never marry a ſecond Time, but "bewail the Death of their Husbands as long as they live, ſmearing their Faces with "pounded Charcoal and Greaſe, which are the Characteriſtics of a Widow: But as for "the Men, they are allowed two or three Wives." Polygamy is eſtabliſh'd in all Parts of Aſia, Africa, and America; but then, is there not as much Licentiouſneſs in this, as in thoſe Husbands who have their kept Miſtreſſes? If it be true, that there are more Females born than Males, the Polygamiſts follow the Order of Nature, who has ſome De-

[a] The Parthians and Lacedæmonians obſerved the ſame Cuſtom, nor did the wiſe Cato himſelf diſdain to give an Example of it to the Romans, by lending his Wife to his Friend Hortenſius the Orator. The Author of the Letters Hiſtorical and Gallant, tells us of an Incident of much the ſame Nature with this; and Brantome, in his Memoirs of the Ladies of Gallantry, relates the Story of an antiquated Husband, "who allowed his Wife to make Love, and chuſe her-"ſelf a Grand-Vicar, adviſing her only to pitch upon a diſcreet and modeſt Man; promiſing at the ſame Time to "maintain as his own, all the Children that ſhould ſpring from that Commerce: Whereupon ſhe brought him two "or three Children, which the Husband, becauſe he ſometimes had a Finger in the Pye, fancied were partly his, "and the reſt of the World were ſilly enough to believe it: Thus both Husband and Wife were very well ſatiſ-"fy'd, and had a fine Family between them." Could we believe, that the wiſe Solon had himſelf preferred a Law, that if a Woman was not ſatisfied with her Husband, ſhe might have Recourſe to her Parents, and make them ſupply her Husband's Impotency?

[b] In Pegu. The Men here purchaſe Women on Condition of trying their Humour, Behaviour, &c. If they do not approve of them, the Husbands are allowed to ſend them back after having had a Taſte: The Parents, who are the Sellers, take her back and return the Money, but the Taſter is obliged to keep the Children he gets. The Eſſenes, a conſiderable Sect among the Jews, made a Trial for three Years together, whether the Woman they intended to marry, was vigorous enough to bear Children. Joſephus, Book ii. [c] We are told that ſeveral Naires of Viſiapour belong to one Woman. But is it not a Miſtake? The ſame Cuſtom probably reigns among the Naires, as among the noble Venetians, ſeveral of whom, as S. Didier tells us, club together to keep a Girl between them.

[d] This Prohibition appears natural enough; for according to the Length of Man's Life, we are not to expect the Diſſolution of the Marriage-Tie till the Age of ſixty or eighty Years, by the Death of one of the Parties: And what is Love at that Age, but a vain and uſeleſs Fire? An old Widow who marries again, is not in a Condition to bring Children into the World. What ſhould ſhe then do, but feed on Penance in ſome Convent; let her then with a good Grace bid adieu to all the Fruits of Love, and employ all her Thoughts on the next World. The Canadans have a better Rule; for no one among them will marry Women after their nine and fortieth Year. What is paſt is no more than an agreeable Dream: This laſt Recollection of my paſt Delights gives me a great deal of Pleaſure, ſays an old Woman in Brantome, who was taking leave of a Male-Friend of her's, before ſhe took the Veil.

Felicité paſſée,
Qui ne peut revénir,
Tourment de ma penſée,
Que n'ai-je en te perdant perdu le Souvenir!

That is, O my paſt Happineſs, that is to return no more! 'tis this caſts a Gloom on every Thought; Why did I not, in loſing thee, loſe my Memory?

In Canada 'tis otherwiſe than in Europe, where the original Ideas of Nature are leſs blotted from the Mind, or more ſtrictly adher'd to than among us. Our antiquated Widows, when, to uſe the Expreſſion of Brantome, they have not ſix Teeth left in their Heads, will yet marry again like ſo many young Girls; and with one Foot in the Grave, make a laſt Struggle to force from Hymen what he is no longer obliged to furniſh them with. But the worſt of it is, that thoſe old Matrons are ſo very vigorous and alert, that they often ſend their young Husbands packing into the other World: But this does not prevent young Fellows, who live in a trading Country, and have their Fortune to make, from making Love to old rich Widows. We will conclude this Obſervation, which perhaps is too ludicrous, by a very old Cuſtom, which Brantome tells us prevail'd in his Time, in the Iſland of Chio, viz. that every Woman who was reſolv'd to die a Widow, was oblig'd to pay a Sum of Money, by way of Tribute for her being untenanted, and this Tribute was call'd Argomonitic.

ſign in all ſhe does. They make ſome Uſe of an infinite Number of Women, who otherwiſe would be altogether uſeleſs in the World. But Nature may argue as ſhe pleaſes in this Caſe, ſince the Purity of the Chriſtian Religion muſt ever make us diſallow a Plurality of Wives. Leſcarbot is of Opinion, that the ſavage Americans are chaſter than the People of our Hemiſphere, and gives three Reaſons for it; firſt, their going naked, eſpecially with regard to the Head, from which Part the Seed ſprings; ſecondly, their abſtaining from Spices, Salt, and Wine; and thirdly, the Uſe of Tobacco. If the Americans are chaſter than other People, 'tis owing to the little Difficulties they meet with in Love, of which the Reaſon has already been given; to their marrying as ſoon as they feel the Impulſes of Nature, and to that Variety of Objects with which Polygamy furniſhes them. Beſides, we ſhould contradict ourſelves were we to inſiſt on the Chaſtity of the Americans, after having obſerved in what Manner they proſtitute their young Women; as alſo of what is related of ſeveral among them, who are ſaid to be very ſubject to that infamous Diſeaſe which is the Conſequence of looſe and diſorderly Love. The Floridans are ſaid to love in a ſhocking Manner. Their Girls have loſt their Virginity by that Time they are ten or twelve Years of Age. They employ [b] Perfumes, Diſtillations, Fomentations, and other Arts, to force Nature beyond her Bounds. As for the Women in Florida, they [c] employ the Juice of certain Herbs for a Purpoſe mentioned by Brantome's Ladies of Gallantry, and by Venette in his Picture.

THE Americans (tho' perhaps we are to except ſome Savages of Terra Auſtralis, who Travellers aſſure us, have no Rule or Order among them) never marry within three Degrees of Conſanguinity; viz. a Son with his Mother, a Father with his Daughter, or a Brother with his Siſter. Their Marriage-Contracts, Promiſes, and Divorces, are barely verbal; and as for Jointures, they are hardly known among them. Solon and ſome other Greek Sages, would not have any Portions given with Women; but then 'twas from a Motive different from that of the Weſt-Indians. The Indifference which theſe latter have for Riches, is the ſole Cauſe of their deſpiſing a Bait, at which moſt of our European Husbands nibble; but Solon's Deſign was to preſerve domeſtic Peace and Regularity among his Countrymen the Athenians. He was apprehenſive that the Cuſtom of giving Portions with their Women, which undoubtedly was uſed by the greateſt Part of their Neighbours, would be the Deſtruction of both.

LET us in the next Place conſider the Duties of their Women. We ſhall not take Notice of the Tillage of the Americans, which is generally the Buſineſs of their Women, nor of their Family Concerns, nor of the Care they are obliged to take of their Children. There is no Country in the World in which the Wife has not ſome Part in the two laſt Devoirs, how odd and particular ſoever their Cuſtoms may be in other Reſpects. All we ſhall take Notice of, is the conjugal Fidelity which the Savages oblige their Wives to keep ſtrictly, tho' themſelves will not ſubmit to it. We are told, that the American Women are pretty faithful to their Husbands; and that the Men in general have the utmoſt Deteſtation of, and even puniſh with Death, the Incontinence of their married Women; tho' at the ſame Time, they don't much trouble their Heads tho' their Daughters are ever ſo gay, as has been already obſerved. 'Tis eaſy to conceive that this is a very natural Notion, and it wou'd prevail equally among us, did not Religion and Reaſon correct our Natures; at leaſt, if what the World calls Honour did not force us to conceal our Irregularities. But to ſpeak out, —— if it were poſſible to ſuppreſs theſe Notions of Honour, we ſhould immediately ſee thouſands of Girls turn Savages, and wou'd ſeek for thoſe Joys in a Braſilian Celibacy, which they hope to find in a virtuous married Life. Be this as it will, we are told that an American dates the Time of his Wife's Virtue from the firſt Day of their Marriage, and then relies entirely on her Fidelity; whereas among us, the greateſt Debauchee would not willingly run the Hazard of marrying a Woman that had the leaſt Blot in her Reputation, whatever Teſtimonies ſhe might have given him of her Fidelity. But a Savage argues in a quite different Manner; his Notions are, that as a young Woman is a free Agent, ſhe may make what uſe ſhe pleaſes of her Body: But the Moment ſhe has made a Promiſe, ſhe is immediately the Property of the Man who is to take her for his Wife, and ſhe has from that Inſtant loſt the Power which her Liberty gave her. Such is the Principle of the Americans, and 'tis on this perhaps that their Jealouſy is grounded, which, if they really have any, differs vaſtly from that of the Italians and Spaniards, ſince the Americans have neither Bolts nor Grates to preſerve an Honour, which all the ſtrong Holds in the World would not be able to defend, in caſe a Woman had once made a Reſolution of getting rid of it; that they do not put their Women under the Guard of Eunuchs; and that, in fine, they are unacquainted with a numberleſs Multitude of Arts, "which poor, jealous Cuckolds, as [a] Bran-

"tome calls them, put in practice, to bridle, ſhut up, perplex, and keep under their

"has once got that deviliſh Crotchet into her Head, the beſt Remedy, the beſt Guard,
"a jealous Husband can put over his Wife, is to leave her at full [b] Liberty." A Savage has Recourſe to Divorce, the Moment he has Proofs of his being a Cuckold; in which Caſe, we are told, that the Woman being at her own Liberty, and become her own Miſtreſs by this Infraction of the Marriage-Contract, is allow'd to marry another Huſband. The Cuckold muſt be very jealous indeed, who puniſhes the Woman who has violated his Bed with Death. A Frenchman ſeldom has Recourſe to Divorce, much leſs does he attempt to kill his Wife, which neither the Laws of Chriſtianity, nor thoſe of Man do any wan authoriſe; but 'tis neither a Motive of Religion, or a Dread of the Laws, that check the Violence of his Rage. He takes ſuch a Reſolution as his free and fickle Temper inſpires, and pays his faithleſs Partner in the ſame Coin, and has twenty Intrigues; and indeed he acts a thouſand Times more prudently in this than the Italian Cornutos, thoſe gloomy Argus's, who are eternally watching over the pretended Cauſe of their Diſhonour.

A Paris ce n'eſt pas comme à Rome;
Le cocu qui s'afflige y paſſe pour un ſot;
Et le cocu qui rit pour un fort honnête homme.
Quand on prend comme il faut accident fatal,
Cocuage n'eſt point un mal.

The Senſe of which is,

'Tis not at Paris as at Rome; for in the former Place, a whining Cuckold is look'd upon as an Aſs; but one who laughs at his being ſo, paſſes for a Man of Senſe. When a Man behaves with Temper under this Circumſtance, Cuckoldom is far from being an Evil.

As to the Duties which a Husband owes his Wife, they are not carried to any great Lengths among the Americans. From what we juſt now obſerv'd, it does not appear that the Condition of their Wives is better than that of our Servants: But the Jealouſy abovementioned makes the Eaſt-Indian Women to be much more Slaves than thoſe of Ameri- ca. Could any Thing more dreadful have poſſibly entered into the Mind of Man, than a perpetual Priſon, where their Women are ſurrounded, waited upon, and watched, by a Set of Eunuchs, who are often frightfully black and ugly; where they are given up a Prey to a thouſand criminal Reflections, which [a] Idleneſs gives Birth to, and which would never ariſe were they to aſſociate with the reſt of the World. We muſt own that Jealouſy loves to blind itſelf; the Principles of Chriſtianity oblige us to have certain Regards for the fair Sex which are not obſerv'd in Aſia. The Scripture has depriv'd us of the Power of [b] Life and Death over Women; it enjoins us to behave ourſelves with the utmoſt Humanity towards them, and commands us to treat like a Second-ſelf, a Sex which the Alcoran allows to uſe as a Maſter does his Servant. We are not ignorant, that we meet with many Exceptions to the Goſpel-Injunction among us, and that ſeveral Huſbands treat their Wives with more Rigour and Contempt than the moſt odd and unaccountable Turkiſh Husband could poſſibly do; that a great many others cannot perſuade themſelves that a Wife who is married in Preſence of the whole Church, is any better than a good Servant, who is ſolemnly bound to him for Life; in a word, there are ſeveral, who, not ſatisfied with keeping their Wives in a perpetual State of Slavery, but to deny them every Thing that may make Life agreeable, take a Pleaſure in expoſing them to the Contempt of Strangers, rob them of that Privilege which Nature has given them of being reſpected by their Children, and think it a kind of Merit in making them the Objects of Ridicule: But the Behaviour of theſe Husbands is as much deſpiſed by Men of Honour, as that of Coquets and female Libertines. The Principles of the Chriſtian Religion make us deteſt as much the Cruelty of a Husband, as the Lewdneſs of a Woman. The Behaviour of the Americans is vaſtly more regular, and much more conformable to their Notions. Travellers tell us, that the Friendſhip theſe Men have for their Wives, is not like that between Equals; but that it may be compared to the Friendſhip which a Maſter ſometimes has for his Servant, who is obliged to ſupport and protect him. They imagine them to be born for Servitude, and that no more ſhall be indulged them, than the pardoning their Faults. This Friendſhip therefore ariſes only from the Neceſſity the human Species are under of ſatisfying the Cravings of Nature, and the indiſpenſible Obligation of propagating it. We are told, that where theſe Motives are not, their Friendſhip immediately ceaſes; for which reaſon they conſider their old Women as ſo much Lumber. We muſt however own, 'tis very ſurpriſing, that notwithſtanding theſe Principles, Coquets are as rare to be met with in America, as they are common in Europe.

We will conclude theſe Obſervations with the Notions which different Nations have of Baſtards. We make them in ſome meaſure reſponſible for the Crime which thoſe who gave them Life committed, and deſpiſe them as if they themſelves were guilty: But if all is true that is related of the Proſtitution of the American Women, Baſtards in thoſe Countries are not ſubject to thoſe diſagreeable Diſtinctions: And yet we are aſſured, that ſome [c] American Nations are ſo jealous of keeping their Blood pure and unmix'd, that they exclude from the Throne the very Perſon who among us would be the true Heir; and on the contrary ſet the Crown on the Head of the Siſter's Son. The ſame is obſerved in other Inheritances. But how ſhall we reconcile theſe Notions? Be that as it will, the Jewiſh Religion antiently excluded Baſtards from the Prieſthood, and the [d] Chriſtian Church has imitated them in this Reſpect; but they do not meet with ſuch hard Uſage in ſome other Religions, and we are aſſured that the Mahometans look upon all ſuch Children as their Wives [a] bring into the World during their Pilgrimage to Mecca, as legitimate; that they are all adopted into the Poſterity of Mahomet, and have the Privilege of wearing a green Turbant, as being the genuine Offspring of that Prophet; ſuch an Effect has Devotion in the Heart of a Muſſulman as to make him give a [b] Character of Holineſs to what at another Time would raiſe in him the utmoſt Fury of Jealouſy. Some Chriſtians perhaps would go as great Lengths as the Muſſulmen on ſuch an Occaſion. The Antients had not always Baſtards in Abhorrence. The continual Cuckoldoms of their Gods have been particularly taken Notice of, as alſo, that Heaven was peopled with Baſtards during the Time that the Pagan Syſtem prevail'd in the World. 'Twas but reaſonable that the Flaws in the Birth of their Gods and Demi-Gods ſhould plead an Excuſe for thoſe of Men; ſo far from thinking worſe of themſelves for being of a doubtful Original, [c] ſome famous Conquerors were reſolved to have themſelves look'd upon as Baſtards of certain Gods; ſeveral great Men among the Antients have been willing to paſs for the Baſtards of Nymphs, or Demi-Gods, which in thoſe Days was the ſame as if any one ſhould ſay, the Baſtard of ſome He or She-Saint. Let us not omit the Expedient the Lacedemonians made uſe of, after having loſt the greateſt Part of their Men during their bloody Wars with the Meſſenians. They ſent a Body of ſtout young Fellows to their Wives; gave their unmarried Women leave to lie with their Slaves, and allow'd the firſt Comers to cohabit with them in what Manner they thought proper. If it be true, that the natural Way of making Love is often more likely to give Inhabitants to a State than Marriage, we need not wonder that a Race of Baſtards which ſprung from the unlawful Commerce of the Lacedæmonians, ſhould be powerful enough to lay the Foundation of Tarentum in one of the fineſt Spots of all Italy. The Lacedæmonians indeed ſent theſe Baſtards packing, but they could not juſtly reproach them with their Birth, or drive them out of their Country. But our Notions are different from theirs; we think more juſtly than the Antients, tho' at the ſame Time we don't live with more Regularity; we would not ſuffer Recruits of Baſtards to be raiſed among us; for ſuch Levies would be very prejudicial, and depopulate whole Provinces. 'Tis more prudent to bear the Evil with Patience, to ſay nothing, and mutually aſſiſt each other in the Marriage-State.

Le nœud d'Hymen doit être reſpecté,

CHAP. XI.

Of the DIET of the AMERICANS.

WE are neither to look for Luxury or Delicacy in the American Diet. Their Life is an Image of that of the firſt Inhabitants of the World; of thoſe Ages when Mankind fed only on Roots, Acorns, and Fruits. We are no more to wonder how it is poſſible for them to live without a thouſand Things which we make uſe of, than that we cannot bring our ſelves to abſtain from them. But to be more particular; the Americans did not know the Uſe of Bread before the Europeans came among them. They firſt uſed to dry Roots, and afterwards grind or bruiſe them, and theſe they work'd up into a Dough, of which they often made Cakes. Whenever they went a Hunting, on any Incurſion, or to War, they uſed to bake their Bread hard, like our Biſcuits, to ſerve them in their Journeys. The Savages have preſerved all theſe Cuſtoms to this Day. Some of theſe uſe Maiz, a kind of Corn which they commonly eat parched; and 'tis in this Manner that the [a] Jews, and ſeveral other Nations of Antiquity, always eat their Corn. The Food of the old Romans was almoſt as ſimple as that of the Weſt-Indians. The Romans in the Infancy of their Republic, lived as theſe latter, on thick Milk and Roots, which were ofte[illegible]ked on the Aſhes with their [b] General's own Hand: But they afterwards learnt the Art of making Bread, tho' it was many Years after the Foundation of the City.

THE reſt of the Food of the Americans is compoſed of the Fruits of the Earth, Fiſh, and Fowl, and their only Sauce is Hunger; for they are entirely unacquainted with Ragouts, or any ſuch high-ſeaſon'd Meats; we are even aſſur'd that the North Americans are entirely ignorant of the uſe of [c] Salt, which was ſo much eſteem'd by the Antients, that they gave it the Epithet of Divine. The latter uſed it both at their Tables and their Altars, and would often make a Meal upon a Piece of dry Bread and a little Salt. The American Savages to keep their Meat from ſtinking, either broil it over the Fire, or dry it in the Sun; which is very much like the ſmoking of Fleſh, ſo much uſed in Germany.

As to the Drink of the Americans, we muſt firſt conſider it in its greateſt Simplicity. One drinks Water out of Neceſſity, and Wine or ſome other Liquor for Pleaſure. The moſt natural and only Liquid our firſt Progenitors were acquainted with, was Water. Wine, and other ſtrong Liquors were not found out till after the Flood. However, they did not quite leave off drinking Water after theſe artificial Liquors were invented, and the very [d] Heroes themſelves often drank it at their Meals, as appears from Homer. The

[a] Ruth, Chap. ii. ver. 14. And Boaz ſaid to her, at Meal-Time come thou hither, and eat of the Bread, and dip thy Morſel in the Vinegar; and ſhe ſat beſide the Reapers, and he reached her parched Corn, and ſhe did eat, and was ſufficed.

[b] Caius Fabricius was as eminent for Probity and Frugality, as his Valour. —— He refuſed the Preſents which the Samnites ſent him. Their Embaſſadors, after having taken Notice of all the Favours their Nation had received from him, ſince the Concluſion of the Peace, begg'd him to accept a conſiderable Sum of Money which they were ordered to offer him, particularly as he wanted ſeveral neceſſary Pieces of Furniture, and had not an Equipage ſuitable to his Rank and great Merit. Upon which Fabricius laid his Hand upon his Ears, his Eyes, his Noſe, his Mouth, &c. and then ſaid to the Embaſſadors, I ſhall never ſtand in need of any Thing ſo long as I ſhall be able to command the ſeveral Parts I juſt now laid my Hand on; ſo that having no need of Money, I ſhall never receive any from thoſe that want it themſelves. All his Plate conſiſted in a Cup and Salt-Seller; and he would not allow the Commanders of Armies to have more than himſelf. He liv'd upon Roots which he cultivated and dreſs'd with his own Hands.

[d] Nay, they were ſo abſtemious, that very often when the Army labour'd under a great Drought, the Generals themſelves refuſed to drink any Water when only a little had been found, as Mr. Addiſon has finely expreſs'd it, ſpeaking of Cato.

If ſome penurious Source by Chance appear'd
Scanty of Waters, when you ſcoop'd it dry,
And offer'd the full Helmet up to Cato,
Did he not daſh the untaſted Moiſture from him?

American Savages do alſo drink mere Element; but as this cold Liquor has not the Power of reviving the [a] Spirits, of inſpiring Joy, or creating an Appetite, 'tis no Wonder they invented ſtrong Liquors, which however are all very different from thoſe of Europe. As the Caouin of the Braſilians is a Spirit drawn from Maiz, it might perhaps be ſomething like the Spirit extracted from Malt, or Holland's Geneva, with which the Vulgar in that Country fuddle themſelves, was not this Braſilian Liquor made after a quite different Manner. Be that as it will, the Americans drink to as great Exceſs of their ſtrong Liquors, as the People of our Hemiſphere do of Wine, &c. A Braſilian drowns all his Anxiety, and finds an inexhauſtible Spring of Comfort in his Caouin, in the ſame Manner as our Tipplers do in their Beer, Wine, and other ſtrong Liquors. A Floridan taſtes as much Pleaſure in getting drunk with his Caſiné, as our Sailors do in fuddling themſelves with Holland's Gin; and the former ſhall ſtupify himſelf as completely in Battle with this Liquor, as our Soldiers do with Gun-Powder ſteep'd in Brandy, when they go upon an Aſſault. The Aſiaticks make the ſame Uſe of the Juice of Opium. It has already been obſerved, that the Americans are as great Drinkers as many of our European Nations; and if [b] Travellers are to be believed, a Floridan Tippler would knock down the greateſt German or Swiſs Bacchanal. They would conquer the greateſt tippling Heroes of Antiquity, notwithſtanding they uſed to drink out of Bowls that were of ſo capacious a Size, as immediately to knock a young Fellow down; nor would be daunted at the Sight of the prodigious Muſcovite Goblets, which a Stranger is obliged to quaff, and not leave a Drop, tho' he were to ſink under the Table after it; and if the Virginian and Floridan Boiés manfully make Head againſt their Caſiné, the Clergy among us are no leſs valiant in triumphing over Bacchus. The American Women are ſaid to be as great Drinkers as their Husbands; nor are our European Women wholly free from that Vice. The Women in the North Parts of Europe are ſaid to love ſtrong Liquors: Engliſh Women drink [c] Punch and [d] ſtrong Beer to Exceſs: Dutch Women are as fond of ſweet Wine, Brandy, [e] &c. none of theſe look upon the frequenting of Taverns as any way derogatory to their Sex. The Ladies among the French no longer dilute their Wine with Water, but begin to accuſtom themſelves to the Strength of the Juice of the Grape; tho' the Romans for many Years forbade their Women the Uſe of it, becauſe of its ſometimes fatal Conſequence to their Honour. 'Tis certainly a very difficult Matter to preſerve Virtue unſully'd amidſt the Fumes of Bacchus: Wine takes off the troubleſome Veil of Modeſty; gives Life to Love, and throws an agreeable Shade over thoſe Scruples, which Temperance lays too much open. All the Eloquence and Wit of that Love-Declaration which is uninſpired with Wine, is cold and languid, in Compariſon of that Intrepidity which Wine raiſes in the Soul.

Eſperés peu de vos diſcours;
L'amour ne cede pas toujours,
A l'ardeur la plus raiſonable.
Souvent en beuvant de bon vin,
On trouve le plus court chemin,
Pour rendre la belle traitable.

[a] Wine whets the Wit, improves its native Force,
And adds a pleaſing Flavour to Diſcourſe;
By making all the Spirits debonnair,
Throws off the Lees, the Sediment of Care.

We ſee however, that thoſe who uſe themſelves to drinking of Water, generally enjoy a great Fluſh of Health, a chearful Conſtitution, and a clear Mind. See a Pamphlet publiſhed not long ſince, wherein the ſeveral excellent Properties of Water are diſcovered.

[b] Leſcarbot, Coreal.

[c] I believe the Author has not hit upon the Liquor; ſo far from it, that our Engliſh Ladies abhor the very Name of it. One who hated Punch, called to her Servant to bring her ſome Water, a few Lemons, and a Lump of Sugar, but above all not to forget Brandy.

[d] This cannot be ſaid of any of our Engliſh Women, but ſuch as are the mere Refuſe and Dregs of the Society.

[e] Here again the Author is very much out.

That is, Don't flatter yourſelf, that you will gain your Point by your amorous Diſcourſes; Love does not always yield to the moſt juſt and reaſonable Paſſion. But Wine frequently points out to us the ſhorteſt Way, to make the Fair one kind and complying.

We muſt own, that the Simplicity and unpoliſh'd Manners of the Savages, which conſequently muſt be ſo oppoſite to the Politeneſs which is almoſt become natural to us, does not give us an advantageous Idea of their Manner of eating. They eat in a very ſlovenly Manner on the Ground, and with their Fingers, without any Cloth or Covering whatſoever, and they never wipe either their Mouths or Hands. They often give to every Gueſt his Portion of the Entertainment, [a] as antiently among the Greeks. They are ignorant of the Uſe of Forks and Napkins, but as Thick-Milk is one of their chief Diſhes, Neceſſity has taught them to make [b] Spoons, which have a clumſy Reſemblance to ours. [c] Travellers tell us alſo of certain Sticks, which ſome of theſe Nations eat with inſtead of Forks, in the ſame Manner as the [d] Chineſe. The Americans hardly knew the Cuſtom of cutting their Meat; for before the Coming of the Europeans, they us'd to tear it to Pieces without any other Ceremony. [e] In ſome Parts of North America the Maſter of the Feaſt does not eat himſelf, but employs himſelf entirely in waiting upon his Gueſts: In others, he ſings during the whole Entertainment, and when he himſelf does not perform the Part of Choriſter, he ſubſtitutes ſome of his Dependants to officiate for him. 'Tis plain, that all theſe Cuſtoms are ſo very odd and barbarous, that one can hardly forbear looking upon 'em as ſavage; nevertheleſs, there are as many odd Cuſtoms to be met with in our Hemiſphere. We are told that the [f] Chineſe don't aſſiſt at the Entertainments they give; that the Perſians don't make uſe of Knives, but ſet their Meat ready carv'd before their Gueſts. But to wave the Cuſtoms of diſtant Nations, let us look nearer Home for Inſtances of that Ruſticity which we find among the Savages. 'Tis not many Years ſince the Dutch were unacquainted with the Uſe of Table-Cloths and Napkins; a Piece of blue Linen Cloth us'd to go round the Table, and paſſing from Hand to Hand, ſerv'd to wipe the Mouths and Fingers of the Gueſts. Theſe People were not acquainted with any other Fork but their Fingers, which alſo very often ſupplied the Place of Knives and Spoons. 'Tis true, indeed, that the over-great Neatneſs which the Dutch Ladies are ſo fond of in their Houſes, was partly the Cauſe of the lothſome Simplicity in their Manner of eating: But this Motive does not render the Dutch Simplicity either more amiable or worthy of our Imitation than that of the Americans. We ſhall by the way obſerve, that the [g] Dutch and other European Nations have had their Taſte with reſpect to eating, very much refin'd by the French Cooks. The Principles on which they were built, will not be laid aſide very ſoon.

[g] What Service have they done in the World, but only in ſhortening the Life of Man, and oppreſſing it with infinite Diſeaſes? How finely does the excellent Cornaro inveigh againſt Luxury! ——— Let us accuſtom ourſelves to eat only to ſupport Nature; what is more than neceſſary for our Nouriſhment, ſows the Seeds of Sickneſs and Death. 'Tis a Pleaſure for which we muſt pay very dear, and which cannot be either innocent or excuſable, ſince it may be ſo prejudicial to us. How many have I ſeen cut off in the Flower of their Days, by the unhappy Cuſtom of high Feeding? How many excellent Friends has Gluttony depriv'd me of, who might ſtill have been an Ornament to the World, an Honour to their Country, and have occaſion'd me as much Satisfaction in enjoying, as I now have Sorrow in loſing 'em? ——— O unhappy Italy! doſt thou not perceive that Gluttony and Exceſs rob thee every Year of more Inhabitants than Peſtilence, War, and Famine could have deſtroy'd! Thy true Plagues are thy frequent Feaſtings.

THE Antients had their religious Banquets; the Savages have alſo theirs. In theſe they often treat on military Affairs, and they are always accompanied with ſome religious Ceremonies. Theſe Feaſts are always heighten'd with Songs, in honour of their Gods and Heroes, intermix'd with Imprecations againſt their Enemies. We have now laid aſide all ſuch Ceremonies, but will obſerve, that the [a] Germans us'd to treat of Peace and War in their Entertainments. We meet with nothing in our Feaſts that has the leaſt Affinity to that Piety which is aſcribed to thoſe of the Antients, unleſs it be the Solemnity of certain Days, which often excite us to eat and drink with our Friends and Companions, from quite different Motives than thoſe which Religion inſpires. But after all, who can aſſure us that the religious Feſtivals of the Antients had much Religion in them? Let us diveſt ourſelves of our blind Prejudice with regard to Antiquity, and no longer break out into enthuſiaſtic Commendations of the Virtues of our Anceſtors. Antiently the Preliminaries of the Feaſt were devoted to the Gods: They ſacrificed in their Honour; Libations were pour'd out before them, and Prayers were offer'd up to them. A Sign of the Croſs, or a Benedicite, are the Preliminaries of ours. The Grace which the Germans make uſe of, is juſtly proportion'd to the Length of their Meals.

IN Canada the Women don't [b] eat with the Men, but have a ſeparate Apartment for themſelves. The ſame Cuſtom is obſerv'd in Spain and Italy, but from Motives which probably are unknown to the Canadans; but a Frenchman, who is a more reaſonable Creature, and almoſt the only one that is born with an eaſy and unaffected Freedom, does not value the fineſt Entertainment in the World, unleſs it be heighten'd by the Company of [c] Women. The Gauls, their Predeceſſors, had the Fair Sex in equal Eſteem; and the Germans, who are unjuſtly accus'd to love good Wine only, were as fond of the Converſation of Women as the antient Gauls, and both theſe Nations admitted them into their Feaſts and Councils. The antient Romans, who thought of nothing but the Conqueſt of the Univerſe, deſpis'd every Thing that had not ſome Relation to War, and treated their Women and Children in a very rigorous Manner. Gallantry was not introduc'd among the Romans till they began to be ſoftened with Luxury; and their Ladies did not grace their Entertainments, till ſuch Time as the Romans, who in Proceſs of Time were become vaſtly more polite, but leſs warlike than their Anceſtors, had quitted the Banners of Mars, to fight under thoſe of Cupid. The Dutch have their Parties of Pleaſure with Women, but then they might as well be abſent; for nothing is more common than to ſee Men and Women ſeparated from one another in the ſame Room. Both Sexes on theſe Occaſions have their Diverſions apart; and the Lover ſhall take leave of his Miſtreſs with as much Gravity and Reſpect, as if he was not acquainted with her. But the Savages don't withdraw from their Women from any Motive of Reſpect, but merely from the Contempt they have for 'em; 'tis an Air of Superiority they aſſume over a Part of the Creation, which they imagine was made for their Uſe only. 'Tis very probable that this Principle of the Dutch might at firſt flow from the ſame Original with that of the Savages of Canada. The clowniſh Haughtineſs of this Nation gives us Room to believe, that the male Part among them think themſelves vaſtly ſuperior to the Women; and the rude Notions they have of Liberty, hardly allows them to pay any Regard to thoſe Laws of Politeneſs, with reſpect to the Ladies, which are ſo ſtrictly obſerv'd by other Nations. To [a] The antient Perſians had the ſame Cuſtom.

[c] As Frenchmen give too much into Trifles, which makes them ſcarcely Men, the Women have too much Boldneſs, and are ſcarcely Women. The continual Commerce between both Sexes, is, as it were, an Exchange of Characters, which makes each Sex derogate from its proper Character; but the Women fall into a Miſtake, and excel in a great many Things that are out of their Province: They ſing Airs that are too licentious, and ſing 'em well: They drink at Table, and they do it agreeably: They underſtand gaming as well as the Men: They go a hunting with them, and come ſo near the Men in every Thing, that they are ſcarcely Women. I ſpeak this of the Sex in general, for there are a thouſand Exceptions. Muralt's Letters on the Characters and Cuſtoms of the Engliſh and French Nations.

prove in ſome Meaſure what we have advanced in this Place, let us conſider the Signification of that Word, which in Dutch ſignifies a married Woman. It cannot be tranſlated into French but by the two Words [a] Femme Domeſtique, in Engliſh a domeſtic Woman or Houſe-Wife. But after all, it would be very unjuſt to affirm, that the Dutch deſpiſe the Fair Sex in our Age. 'Tis plain they do their utmoſt Endeavour to conquer the prevailing Character of their Country. However, 'tis certain that their Manner of Education makes their young Men not ſeek after the Company of the Virtuous of the oppoſite Sex, becauſe they don't teach 'em to behave with Politeneſs on theſe Occaſions; the Conſequence of which is, that they have no more Notion of Love than [b] Father Philip's Son had when he was twenty. In a Word, we may affirm of this People in general, without affronting any particular Perſon, who may be excepted from the national Character;

[c] Qu'ils ſont tres neuf hors la boutique,
Et quelque peu d'Arithmetique.

That is,

They know nothing but juſt how to caſt up a Sum, and look after their Shops.

On the other Side, as their young Women are but ſeldom admitted into the Company of the other Sex, they are quite ignorant how to defend themſelves againſt their Stratagems, and fall ſo eaſily into their Snares, that 'tis plain they are but little acquainted with the Fickleneſs of Mankind. 'Twould be difficult to name a Country where the Women are more unaffected and ingenuous in Love; nor who more fondly perſuade themſelves, that when a young Fellow is profuſe of ſoft Expreſſions, he certainly intends to marry them.

We are aſſur'd, that the American Savages are exactly obſervant of every Duty of Humanity. As they don't thirſt after Riches, they mutually partake of whatever they may have got by Hunting, and their other Proviſions, nor are ever ruffled by thoſe Cares, which in other Nations diſturb the Tranquillity of Mankind; and which fill them with ſo much Dread whenever they think of Futurity, that we may juſtly apply to them what the Chevalier de Cailli has obſerved of a covetous Fellow, Qu'ils veulent avoir dequoi vivre apres leur mort.

That they are reſolved to lay up Store to ſubſiſt upon after Death.

"The Savages, ſays [d] Leſcarbot, whom we have quoted ſo often, obſerve that mu"tual Love and Charity to one another, which was laid aſide the Moment the Words
"Meum and Tuum were known among us. They obſerve the Laws of Hoſpitality,
"the diſtinguiſhing Characteriſtic of the antient Gauls, who uſed to force Strangers
"and Travellers to come into their Houſes, and accept of whatever Proviſion they had."
We may juſtly ſay in Praiſe of the French, that they exactly copy after the Hoſpitality of the antient Gauls; for no Nation in the World diſcovers more Humanity for Strangers. The Germans have inherited this laudable Character from their Anceſtors, and which was ſo religiouſly obſerv'd by the firſt Inhabitants of the World, that they ſtrove to rival each other in their Kindneſs and Benevolence towards Strangers and Travellers. 'Tis alſo ſaid, that the antient Greeks, and afterwards the Romans, uſed always to keep WHENEVER the Savages of North America aſſemble on any private or public Affair, they open their Debates with a Pipe. 'Tis certain that Tobacco is as much uſed in Aſia as in America. 'Tis one of the greateſt Delicacies of the Turks; nay, their Paſſion for it is ſo great, [a] that ſometimes Turks impaled alive, ſhall, as they writhe on the Stake, beg a Pipe of Tobacco of Travellers as they paſs along. This Weed has been known in Europe about [b] an hundred and fifty Years, ſince which Time it has been in very great [c] Repute, and has gain'd itſelf a Reputation among us, that will probably laſt as long as the World. The Engliſh and Dutch eſpecially ask their Gueſts to take a Pipe. We ſhall make no further Reflections on the Merit of a Weed that is a Friend to Wine, and an agreeable Help to the Meditations of the Learned. Leſcarbot tells us, that the Savages of Canada will ſometimes live for a Week together on Tobacco.

CHAP. XII.

Of their DISEASES, and their Method of curing them.

THE Americans often cure their Diſeaſes by violent Exerciſe. This Method is very agreeable to Nature, which, by the Motion of the Body, throws off a thouſand noxious Superfluities, breaks thoſe groſs Particles which clog the Blood, and by giving it its neceſſary Fluidity, enables it by its Circulation, to diſſolve thoſe groſs Humours which before corrupted it. Theſe Principles are founded on Nature; a Deſire of prolonging Life, and preſerving Health, inſpire us with them; but ſtill they are the Product of repeated Trials, which both we and the Americans have made uſe of. 'Tis certain that [d] bodily Exerciſe alone would cure more People than all the Preſcriptions of the moſt able Phyſicians, were it not for our Luxury, and did not the Fear of Death ſink our Spirits in Sickneſs. The continual Exerciſe of our working People preſerves them from a thouſand Infirmities to which they would be infallibly ſubject, had they Leiſure to be ſick. We are therefore not to wonder, that the Americans are more healthy and robuſt than we, ſince they uſe ſo much Exerciſe.

THE Floridans have the Uſe of Vomits as well as the Europeans, but ſeldom employ them except in violent Diſeaſes. They lance all thoſe Parts that are troubled with the Rheumatiſm. The Braſilians and thoſe of New-Andaluſia alſo uſe Vomits;

[b] We read that the great Sir Walter Raleigh firſt brought Tobacco into England, who is ſaid to have ſmoked a Pipe of it upon the Scaffold, immediately before his Execution.

[c] Philips has beſtow'd a fine Encomium upon Tobacco, in his beautiful Poem upon Cyder.

[d] The firſt Phyſicians by Debauch were made;
Exceſs began, and Sloth ſuſtain'd the Trade.
By Toil our old Forefathers earn'd their Food,
Toil ſtrung the Nerves, and purified the Blood:
But we their Sons, a pamper'd Race of Men,
Are dwindled down to threeſcore Years and ten.
Better to hunt in Fields for Health unbought,
Than ſee the Doctor for a nauſeous Draught.
The Wiſe for Cure on Exerciſe depend;
God never made his Work for Man to mend. Dryden.

but they cure rheumatic Pains by Rubbing. 'Tis probable that the extreme Heat of the Day, and the great Coolneſs of the Night, in the Southern Climes, may have taught theſe People the good Effects of Rubbing. " However ridiculous, ſays Coreal, the " American Manner of curing Diſeaſes may appear to us, we yet muſt ſuppoſe, that " they are grounded on ſome juſt Reaſons." The Braſilians preſcribe a long Courſe of Abſtinence to their Patients, which they authoriſe by that true Aphoriſm; the beſt Way to cure Diſtempers is to ſtarve them out. The Americans alſo ſweat their Sick. Our Phyſicians, both antient and modern, have work'd all theſe different Practices into a Syſtem, which mere Experience has eſtabliſh'd among ſeveral Nations in different Parts of the World. The Peruvians employ'd only Simples in curing their Sick; but in Defluxions, and other external Diſeaſes, they made uſe of natural or artificial Fires, as was antiently the Practice of the Egyptians, who not only made uſe of it to heal Defluxions, but even Diſeaſes of a ſtill more dangerous Nature. The Moors alſo uſe Fire in their Diſeaſes, particularly to cure the Head-Ach.

EVERY one knows that Perſons of the ſtrongeſt Conſtitutions are liable to dangerous Diſeaſes; that a ſingle Atom may be the Cauſe of incurable Evils, and that we are [a] all naturally ſuſceptible of numberleſs Infirmities. We need but caſt an Eye on the anatomical Deſcription of a human Body, to be ſenſible that the Vigour of Man, his Capacity, Knowledge, and Underſtanding, hold, as it were, but by a Thread; and that the Mechaniſm of the ſeveral Springs by which he moves, are vaſtly more wonderful than thoſe of the moſt [b] perfect Watch. 'Tis this Delicacy in his Conſtruction that has given Occaſion to thoſe Sayings, viz. the Tranſition from Health to Sickneſs is imperceptible; Life and Death are contiguous; that we bring Death into the World with us.

To conſider Man in this State of Miſery, there will be juſt Room to wonder how it is poſſible for him to bear up for even but fifty Years againſt a numberleſs Multitude of Cares and Fatigues. He yet deſpiſes 'em, lays himſelf open to them, and bravely ſtruggles with the Evils which ſurround him, and ſpins out his Life beyond the narrow Bounds which are ſet to it. 'Tis not to Phyſic that he owes his Strength, but to a Series of unperplexing Cares, to that uniform Courſe of Life, and that Tranquility and Eaſe which we are but too apt to deprive ourſelves of, in ſpite of thoſe Ideas which Nature inſpires, and ſo plainly points out to the Americans; and, in a Word, to that Diſregard of Wealth which is ſeldom found but among Savages. Travellers inform us that they prolong Life to an [d] hundred and upwards by theſe Methods. [e] Leſcarbot

[d] Lewis Cornaro was an extraordinary and admirable Inſtance of a long Life; for he liv'd an hundred Years healthful in Body, and ſound in Mind —— By his Sobriety and the Regimen he obſerv'd in his Diet, he corrected the Infirmities he had contracted by Intemperance in his Youth; and by the Strength of his Reaſon moderated his Inclination and Propenſity to Anger; ſo that in his old Age he had as good a Conſtitution of Body, and as mild and even a Temper of Mind, as before in the Flower of his Youth he was infirm, and apt to fly out into a Paſſion. —— He died calmly, and without any Pain, being upwards of an hundred, at Padua, where he reſided. Monſ. de Thou.

after having related, that the Savages of North-America generally live to an hundred and forty, or an hundred and ſixty Years of Age, adds, that the Savages of New-France have all their Teeth in the moſt advanced Age: Whereas we have generally loſt ours by that Time we are fifty; nor do we often ſee above ſixty Winters. Neither the Courts of Princes, nor great Cities, can furniſh us with Inſtances of Perſons that live to Fourſcore; but we meet with many of that Age in the Country, in the Woods and Mountains, where Cares, Paſſions, and deſtructive Pleaſures, do not ſo eaſily invade. In the North Parts of Europe, the Mountains of Switzerland, and ſome Provinces of France, we meet with Perſons who live to a very advanced Age; however the oldeſt among theſe are young, in Compariſon of the vigorous old Age and long Life (if Travellers may be credited) which which the Americans attain to.

THE Medico-Prieſts among the Savages often employ Spells and Enchantments to cure their Sick. We have a Set of Wretches among us, who impoſe upon the Credulity of the Vulgar, much after the ſame Manner as theſe American Impoſtors. The [a] Enſalmiſts, or rather Anſelmiſts, pretend to cure Wounds by muttering over a few Words: The Saluеurs, or Saluters, make the Spaniards believe they have the ſame Power, by uttering St. Catherine's Name; others in Italy heal the Bite of a Serpent by the Virtue of St. Paul's Name, and others by that of St. Huber. 'Twere needleſs to run over the numberleſs ſuperſtitious Practices, which have been employ'd in healing Diſeaſes; ſome of them are laid aſide, others ſtill ſubſiſt, and are in great Credit with the Vulgar; and no ſooner will theſe ridiculous Cuſtoms be deſtroy'd, but new ones will immediately ſucceed. The Antients alſo gave into theſe Follies, and we now laugh at them; but the Americans might as juſtly reproach us with others of the ſame Stamp. The [b] Savages ſometimes diſplay their Patience and Reſolution with great Oſtentation. They lay lighted Coals on their Arms [c], and make Inciſions in the Fleſh, &c. To wave many Inſtances of this Nature, the Hiſtory of the Diſcovery of America furniſhes an [d] eternal Monument of the Bravery and Courage which theſe idolatrous People diſcover'd, in the midſt of the cruel Torments the Zeal of the Spaniards made them ſuffer, in order to bring them over to the Chriſtian Religion. The Penances, the Auſterities, and the Diſcipline of Mexico, Peru, Virginia, &c. are found in the antient and modern Forms of Worſhip. But what is moſt remarkable, is, the Diſcipline of theſe young Savages; but the Probation of the Capuchins is not leſs ſo; and if we look among the Mahometans, we ſhall meet with Crouds of Devotees among them, who ſuffer for the Glory of God and Mahomet. The antient Lacedæmonians uſed to try the Patience of their Children before the Altar of Diana; their Boys of fifteen or ſixteen Years of Age uſed to whip themſelves, ſtark naked, in Preſence of the chaſteſt of all the Goddeſſes, till the Blood followed the Stroke. The antient Perſians uſed to make all who were Candidates for a Seat in the College of the Magi, undergo a very long and ſevere Probation; one of the leaſt was that of Fire and Water.

[d] An eternal Monument of the Spaniſh Cruelty and Barbarity, and the natural Reſult of their Superſtition and Bigotry. Condemned may they ever ſtand in the Annals of the World, and branded with an eternal Mark of Reproach!

CHAP. XIII.

Of the CIVILITY of the AMERICANS; their VIRTUES and VICES.

THE American Savages have not that ſhewy Politeneſs, which Cuſtom obliges the modeſt Europeans to obſerve one towards another; they are ignorant of that Exchange of Compliments, and that agreeable but tranſient Affability, which are the two Sources from whence flow all the miſtaken Judgments we are apt to make with regard to the Character of thoſe we converſe with.

THEY are ignorant of every Thing we call Decorum, and lay the leaſt Reſtraint imaginable on the Impulſes of Nature; they neither have that Reſervedneſs, that Neatneſs, nor that Diſcretion, which the Arts of Politeneſs inſpire us with, and have but a very imperfect Knowledge of the Reſpect which is to be obſerved among Equals, or between Maſter and Servant. Theſe ſeveral Qualities cannot be very ſuitable to a way of Life, in which Societies are formed rather from Neceſſity than Pleaſure. To which we may add, That theſe are never acquired but in the Commerce of the World, by frequenting Perſons to whom we owe a certain Deference, either on Account of their Age, their Rank, or their being Foreigners; or Strangers. The American Savages, who look no further than the providing themſelves with the Neceſſities of Life, which Nature never carries to the leaſt Exceſs, have no Notion of thoſe Regards which give Riſe to Dependance among us. In a word, if we except the Submiſſion they pay to their reſpective Chiefs, the Reſpect they pay their Elders, and that of Children to their Parents, we may affirm, they deſpiſe all thoſe Principles on which Politeneſs is founded.

SAVAGES may be juſtly compar'd to Children; the natural Ideas of both are not ſatisfied but with ſuch Things as authoriſe their Independance; and they freely give up every Thing that puts them to the leaſt Reſtraint. From thence we may draw theſe Maxims, that the more independant a People live, the leſs they are apt to give into Politeneſs; that Pride and Ruſticity are generally the Conſequences of a republican Government; and, on the contrary, that the Subordination which is eſtabliſhed in Monarchical Governments, heightens and improves Politeneſs. Such as are acquainted with the Manners of our modern Republicans, and are well read in the Hiſtories of the Commonwealths of Antiquity, will not look upon theſe Maxims as Paradoxes.

WE do not pretend to comprehend the Mexicans and Peruvians under the general Character we have here given of the reſt of the Americans. The Hiſtory of thoſe two Nations furniſhes us with many ſhining Inſtances of their Politeneſs; which, though it be different from ours, is yet not leſs valuable upon that Account, ſince 'tis founded on the ſame Rules on which our ſo much boaſted Good Breeding is eſtabliſhed. The Mexicans uſed to ſoften the Ruſticity which is ſo natural to Children, by Education; they faſhioned their Inclinations, [a] taught them Modeſty and Civility, and even the very Gait they ſhould have in Walking; they uſed to correct the Errors and Lapſes of Youth, and check the Progreſs of the infant Paſſions. Nor were the Peruvians leſs careful in forming the Minds of their Youth. Both thoſe Nations maintained a Subordination which is very eaſily borne with, when founded on a Birth which Providence has allotted us, or a Rank which it aſſigns us, when it is no way influenced by Tyranny. Without this Subordination, Men have no real Regards for each other, and that becauſe they all naturally aim at a proud and inſolent Equality. This is manifeſt in ſome Countries, where the moſt worthleſs and inſignificant Fellow ſhall cenſure the Conduct of [a] Kings, and haughtily compare himſelf to the moſt illuſtrious Perſonages of his Country; and the only Title he has to do all this, is his vaſt and ample Poſſeſſions, which ſuſpend the Judgment of his Fellow-Citizens; but were he once ſtript of them, he would appear as rude and unpoliſh'd in their Eyes as the moſt Savage American.

[b] THE Savages of New France do not obſerve any of thoſe Preludes which are practiſed among us at our Viſits. As for theſe, they go at once where they are to viſit, ſit down the Moment they are got in, begin to ſmoke, and give the Pipe from one to another, till it has gone round. The Germans and Flemmings make the Glaſs circulate in the ſame Manner as the Americans do the Pipe. They all drink round out of the ſame Glaſs, and he who gives the Treat, drinks firſt; however their People of Faſhion begin to lay aſide this Cuſtom. The Floridans at their firſt coming into Aſſemblies mutually ſalute one another, obſerving firſt to pay their Compliments to the principal Man, and the moſt aged Perſons in it. We obſerve the ſame Order in our Salutations.

WE ſalute Perſons who ſneeze, and often compliment them with ſome propitious Wiſh at the ſame Time. The antient Pagans had alſo this Cuſtom; and the Inca [c] Garcilaſſo de la Vega relates, that the ſame was obſerv'd in Florida.

THE Savages have the ſame Principles of Virtue and Vice as we. This is an inconteſtible Propoſition. No one doubts but that an American Infant, and that of an European when juſt born, are directly upon the ſame Level, and that God deſign'd them equally for reaſonable Beings; but ſtill we cannot forbear to make a wide Difference between them and us. Nay, we have almoſt gone ſo far as to conſider them of another Species. Let us endeavour to root out a Prejudice, which, at the Diſcovery of America, occaſioned the Death of many Millions of Inhabitants, and which but too much authoriſes us at this Day, to violate the Laws of Humanity, with regard to their Poſterity. We meet with illuſtrious Inſtances of Valour and Bravery in the Hiſtory of the Diſcovery of this Part of the World: North America exhibits an Intrepidity and Courage, which are not the ſmalleſt Branches of heroic Virtue; in a word, all theſe People have the utmoſt Dread of Reproach, and that Infamy which attends on baſe Actions. "They are, ſays "Leſcarbot, prompted to laudable Actions from a Principle of Honour, becauſe he who "performs any gallant Action, is always honoured, and is ſure to gain Reputation." But then on the other Side, it muſt be owned, that they are ſubject to a Vice which is the very reverſe of Magnanimity, I mean Revenge; this all the Americans in general are but too fond of, and of that kind of it which degenerates into Brutality: But ſtill there is a kind of Generoſity in it; for they exerciſe it only againſt Man, and that becauſe he has Strength to oppoſe it; but [d] then it never breaks out againſt their Women and Children, who are made Slaves for Life; which alſo was the Practice of the Antients.

[a] The ſurpriſing Succeſs of the Romans did not fail to ſwell their Pride, and inſpire them with that Haughtineſs which they preſerved even to the Time of their Subjection. Their Miniſters would often make a Monarch tremble, though ſurrounded with all the Pomp and Majeſty of his Court: They delivered themſelves in thoſe Places in a menacing, terrible, and haughty Tone. The formidable and triumphat Fortune of their Republic ſpake through their Mouths; and their grave, conciſe, and ſententious Manner of Delivery, declared the unlimited Power of their Nation. Such Kings as had the ill Fortune to come under their Yoke, no longer govern'd but under ſuch Reſtrictions as the Romans were pleaſed to preſcribe to them ——— This Haughtineſs in the Body ſoon ſpread itſelf into the ſeveral Members, and from the General deſcended to the Particular. A Citizen of Rome would not have ſmooth'd the Ruggedneſs of his Brow in the Preſence of the greateſt Monarch. Eſſay on the Roman Hiſtory.

THE Peruvians cauſed the firſt Principle which Nature dictates to Man, viz. That of doing as we would be done by, to be ſtrictly obſerved in all Parts of their Empire. We have already given Inſtances of this natural Equity, which is engraved, as it were, on the Hearts of all Men. The Americans obſerve the moſt inviolable Fidelity to one another, and ſtrengthen the Bands of their Societies with ſuch a noble and diſintereſted Spirit, as is not often met with in other Parts of the World. Stratagems, Over-reachings, and Perjury, all which are the Effect of the natural Pride of Man, are reſerved only for their Enemies; for we have a natural Propenſity to exclude from their natural Rights, all ſuch as are not of the ſame Society with ourſelves; but this Propenſity, which is found more eſpecially in War-Time, does not reign with equal Violence in all. Be that as it will, 'tis probable that from the Diſpoſition of the Mind, may ariſe our Contempt of Foreigners and their Cuſtoms; and thoſe injurious Forms of Speech which the French themſelves have not yet laid aſide; ſuch as theſe; he's a German; he takes me for a German; he's as heavy as a Swiſs. We muſt indeed own that theſe Expreſſions hit the Characters of theſe Nations very exactly; but then might not a German as juſtly retort, in caſe he were to give the Idea of a Man of a fickle and wavering Temper, by ſaying, that he's a Frenchman?

THE Americans abhor Covetouſneſs: Inſenſible to all thoſe Pleaſures and Uneaſineſſes which ariſe from Wealth that has been amaſſing many Years, their only Care is to procure ſuch Proviſions as may ſuffice for the Support of Life; but all beyond this they look on as ſuperfluous. 'Tis obſerv'd, that in their Barterings with the Europeans, they generally purchaſe ſuch Things as are uſeful; and if Travellers may be credited, they eſteem them much more than we do. One, among the reſt, obſerves on this Occaſion, that they value Things only in Proportion to the Uſe they think they will be to them; whereas among us, the Value of Things depends often on Fancy and Caprice, and a miſtaken Eclat that only ſooths our Vanity. However, 'tis certain, they are as vain and proud as the Europeans; but then it breaks out in a quite different Manner, and their Ideas are leſs depraved.

THEY love to beſtow Gifts, and ſeldom viſit one another without making and receiving Preſents. But for their Temperance and Sobriety, they cannot be applauded on that Account. We have already obſerv'd how ſubject they are to drink to Exceſs; nor are they leſs moderate on the Article of Eating. Theſe are the Particulars we thought worthy of Notice, with regard to the Virtues and Vices of the Savages. To have ſaid more, would be needleſs, and have even made the Truth of what we ſhould advance on that Head very much ſuſpected. We affirm, that they follow Nature more cloſely than we; but then they are born with the ſame Paſſions, and theſe will, perhaps, diſplay themſelves one Time or other. Let them once be ſurrounded with all thoſe dangerous Objects which deprave our Judgments; when, if they continue Proof againſt Temptation, we then may juſtly ſay, that Nature has been kinder to them than ſhe has been to us.

Of the AMERICAN HUSBANDRY.

WE have but few Obſervations to make on this Head. Theſe People do not till their Ground as we do. [a] " They turn it up with wooden Hooks, (or rather " ſharp-pointed Pieces of Wood) grub up all the Weeds that come in their Way, and " burn them as they lie on the Ground. They employ the Aſhes of theſe Weeds to fatten " the Soil, which Cuſtom is alſo practiſed in ſeveral Parts of Italy. They alſo manure " the Soil with Fiſh-Shells; which being done, they make little Clods of Earth, and " ſet them about two Foot Diſtance from one another, and in the Month of May they " ſow their Corn herein, in the ſame Manner as we do our Beans, ſetting up little Sticks, " and putting four Corns, at ſome Diſtance from one another, in the Hole, and ſet " Beans between every Bed of Corn. Harveſt being over, they hoard their Corn in Pits, " which they dig on the Side of ſome Hill, in order that the Water may run from " them, and line theſe Pits with Matting. This they do, becauſe their Houſes have no " Apartments above Ground, nor Cheſts to put it in; the Corn thus hoarded, cannot " be either ſpoil'd, or devour'd by Rats or Mice.

" SEVERAL Nations of our Hemiſphere, continues the ſame Author, have kept " their Corn in Pits: Which Suidas takes Notice of; and Procopius tells us, in the ſe- " cond Book of the Gothic War, that when the Goths were beſieging Rome, they of- " ten fell into Pits, in which the Inhabitants uſed to hoard their Corn. Tacitus alſo " mentions this Cuſtom among the Germans; and without going any further, Corn is " hoarded in the ſame Manner in ſeveral Parts of France at this Day." At Sowing-time, their old Men aſſemble the People, in order to plough or dig up the Ground, and at the ſame Time prepare for Mirth and Feaſting, as was formerly practiſed, and is ſtill the Cuſtom of all Nations.

CHAP. XV.

Of the WARS of the AMERICANS.

THE Americans never war with one another either from a Principle of Coveteouſneſs or Ambition, but from a kind of Punctilio, which will not ſuffer either Party to yield, and generally for Injuries received, which are tranſmitted from Father to Son like an Inheritance. This warlike Temper may perhaps be as antient as the firſt Settlement of the Aſiaticks in America. Here follows what we think may be advanced on this Head: Man is born a free Agent, and with an Averſion to Reſtraint; but at the ſame Time he loves to triumph over his Fellow Creatures: He cannot bear a Competitor, and yet loves to meet with Emulation; he has no ſooner found one, but not ſatiſfied with diſputing for Precedency, he is reſolved to conquer; and when once he has conquer'd, he does all in his Power to humble his Rival. And where are theſe Rivals to be met with! Heaven is out of his Reach; the Beaſts are not capable of diſputing

with him on the Subject of Honour: Man is therefore obliged to ranſack his own Species for Subjects capable of exciting his Emulation. This is the Source of the continual Wars which reign among the Americans. If we carefully examine the Diſputes, the Punctilios of Honour, the Petty-Wars, and Hatreds of Children, we ſhall find them owing to the ſame Principle. Their Quarrels ariſe from Emulation; they deſpiſe, humble, and mortify the Vanquiſh'd. This latter recovers himſelf, ſhakes off the Yoke, and revenges his Cauſe. The [a] Quarrel becomes a ſerious Affair, when Emulation is ſucceeded by Hatred. 'Tis alſo to this jealous Emulation, the natural Effect of the Pride of Man, that we are to aſcribe the Love the antient Greeks had for War. They were ſo much prejudiced in its Favour, that they look'd upon this Propenſion as the greateſt of all the Virtues; and the better to diſcover the Veneration they had for it, they borrowed from the Name of the God of War the [b] Word that ſignifies the Excellence of Goodneſs. They were always armed, even in their Entertainments, their Recreations, and on thoſe ſolemn Feſtivals which were inſtituted in honour of their Gods, and never loſt Sight of that delightful Emulation, which was the peculiar Characteriſtic of the antient Heroes of Greece. The Americans, in whom that heroic Virtue which we are pleaſed to venerate in the Greeks, and even in the Romans, is leſs conſpicuous, are always armed. The ſame Genius has been alſo obſerved in the warlike Nations of Aſia, and in the antient People of the North. In a word, would one not be apt to imagine that the Spaniards were deſirous of preſerving the Shadow of a Cuſtom, which their Progenitors the Cantabars and Iberians were as fond of as the warlike Nations of Antiquity. 'Tis well known how zealouſly the modern Spaniards wear their Swords by their Sides, and that the meaneſt Artificer of that Country makes it the Characteriſtic of his Nobility.

THE Americans in general are always prompted to War from Motives founded on the Law of Nature, viz. the making of Repriſals. If their Countrymen, their Friends, their Relations, have been cut to Pieces, they muſt be revenged. The old Men are their Orators; theſe ſpirit them up to War, give the Signal for Marching, and never fail as they march along, to inſpire the Warriors with a Thirſt of Revenge. 'Tis well known that the Greeks had the ſame Cuſtom, and that Verſes, conſiſting of Exhortations to fight manfully, and deſpiſe Death, were ſung as the Prelude to the Battle. Muſic was of ſuch a Nature as to cauſe the ſame Effects as Poetry.

WE [d] are told that the Speeches of the Braſilians laſt ſometimes ſix Hours. Some Nations of New-France have a whimſical Way of trying the Fate of War: They make their [c] Women attack them, and fight reſolutely againſt them, as if the Battle were againſt ſo many Men; if the Females are victorious, 'tis a good Omen; but if the Men come off Conquerors, 'tis a Mark of their ill Succeſs. The North-Americans denounce War by ſending back the Calumet, and thoſe of the South by not accepting the Dancers they ſend them. We ſhall take Notice of all the Ceremonies of the Calumet in in another Place. Thoſe who take back the rejected Calumet, withdraw as ſoon as the warlike Dance is ended, and go off unmoleſted by the Enemy, who never offer to vio-

[a] All this ſhews the great Neceſſity of forming the Mind by Education. Mr. de Crouſaz has expatiated finely on this Topic in his Treatiſe on that Subject, Vol. i. p. 9. his Words are theſe: "Education is of the utmoſt Importance to Children; every Thing is of the higheſt Concern in an Age, which all are negligent of cultivating. The "Habits of Men give the deciſive Stroke to their Probity and Imperfections, their Happineſs and Miſery; every "one has his own, and each Man knows which are the moſt predominant. Theſe Habits take Root in our tender "Years; they grow up and get Strength even to old Age, and we ſeldom are able to eradicate them entirely. If "it were poſſible for us to call up in our Minds all the Circumſtances that had paſſed in the Dawn of our Lives, "we there ſhould find the true Cauſes of all thoſe ſecret Inclinations which govern the Man; of thoſe Averſions "which give Riſe to all our Prejudices; of thoſe Whims and Caprices which we wonder at ourſelves for being ſo "implicitely ſubject to; of that Inequality of Temper that degrades us; and of thoſe Taſtes which we cannot "poſſibly juſtify. Every Thing is new to Children; every Thing raiſes their Attention and Admiration: A mere "nothing ſhall delight, or frighten them; every Object makes the deepeſt Impreſſion on their tender Brain.

late the Law of Nations. May not theſe Ceremonies be juſtly compared to ours, of proclaiming War by Heralds and by Sound of the Trumpet? &c.

THE Engagement is firſt begun with Shouts, the ſame as among the moſt civiliz'd Nations. We are told, that the antient Lacedæmonians did juſt the contrary, and began the Battle with the utmoſt Coolneſs, and with a profound Silence. The Braſilians play on a kind of Flute made of the Leg-Bones of their Priſoners. The Sight of theſe Bones, and the Sound of this fatal Inſtrument, ſerve equally to raiſe the Courage of theſe People, of whoſe inexpreſſible Obſtinacy we have ſeveral Inſtances among Chriſtian Nations. The Savage Warriors are never allowed to take Quarter, and they are under ſtill greater Obligations to die with their Weapons in their Hands, and after having cut to Pieces great Numbers of their Enemies. Their Courage is not a tranſient Fury, that yields to a ſlight Oppoſition; nor is it a Fire that blazes one Moment, and the next is extinguiſhed; all which is the Reſult of a violent Hurry of the Spirits, which afterwards ſinking too ſuddenly, leaves the Soul a Prey to Reflections, that ſet Death before it in its moſt dreadful Shapes. They are invincible, unleſs come upon by Surpriſe, and never yield, unleſs they are ſo wounded, as to be deprived of the Power of periſhing manfully in their own Defence. They fight with equal Intrepidity to prevent their Dead from falling into the Hands of their Enemies. The antient Greeks, who were almoſt as fierce and ſavage as the wild Amerians, left their Enemies a Prey to Beaſts, after having maim'd them; but to prevent theſe Inſults, they uſed to fight for the Slain, when they had no other way to reſcue them; and if there were any Princes or Generals among theſe, they uſed to redeem their dead Bodies with Money. A Cartel was often drawn up between both Parties for the burying of the Slain, which Cuſtom has been obſerved in all Ages by civiliz'd Nations. We are told that the Savages of North-America kill all ſuch as are able to make any [a] Reſiſtance; whereas thoſe of the South carry their Priſoners along with them in order to [b] fatten, and afterwards eat them, which is perhaps a kind of Sacrifice, or at leaſt a Religious Ceremony. Several Nations of Antiquity ſacrificed their Enemies to their Gods; which Cuſtom was alſo obſerved by the Mexicans, the Peruvians, and Floridans, as Travellers aſſure us. We meet with ſome Inſtances of this religious Havock in the Scriptures: Suffer us to give this Name to the Methods which the Jews took to extirpate the Canaanites, and other Unbelievers. God was pleaſed to have it ſo for his Glory; and as the Canaanites acted in the ſame Manner in honour of their Idols, he commanded the Jews to make Uſe of theſe Repriſals. We ſhall not take Notice of the other Reaſons which Divines give to juſtify this Procedure.

THE Braſilians make him their Leader or Cacique who has killed the greateſt Number of their Enemies. If [c] Leſcarbot may be credited, who ought to have been very well acquainted with a Country in which he had liv'd for ſo many Years, the Heads or Commanders of the Savages of Canada, arrive at this Honour by an Hereditary Succeſſion of Valour; that is, the Son is choſen to fill up his Father's Employment, in caſe he be as brave; but if he degenerates, they chuſe another. Some faint Traces of this antient Cuſtom is preſerved to this Day among ſome Nations of the Old World. As for the Savages, 'tis very probable their Governments may be founded on the following natural Maxims; viz. "That the Chief ought to owe his Dignity to thoſe only who have "conſented to be his Subjects; that nothing but his Abilities and Courage can qualify "him for that Office; that the Moment his Capacity begins to fail, he muſt ſubmit "himſelf to another Chief." Theſe Maxims are admirable in a State that is wholly founded on perpetual Wars; in this Caſe, the Neceſſity they are under of defending themſelves, determines them intirely to make choice of a judicious and brave Man; but this Method might be of dangerous Conſequence in the European States, where the boundleſs Views of the moſt artful Politicks, and the innumerable Springs of Faction and Cabal, would ſoon throw thoſe Nations into a State of Diſcord and Miſery, and perhaps into an Anarchy, which is much more to be dreaded than the Government of a Prince, who wants the Qualities requiſite in a Monarch. Among us, War gives Riſe to a Body abſtracted from Politicks, which is the Reaſon why its Employments are elective: But in the firſt Ages of the World, Men made no Difference between the General and the King; ſo that Power neceſſarily devolved on the moſt Valiant. This Power was unlimited in caſe of War, but had Bounds preſcribed to it in their Councils and domeſtic Affairs. A judicious Author has finely obſerv'd, that [a] Agamemnon was oppoſed at the Council-Board, but that when he led the Greeks into the Field, he commanded in an abſolute Manner. The Britons, before the Romans had made a Deſcent into their Iſland, choſe Commanders to lead them into the Field; reſerv'd the political Government of the State to the Aſſemblies of the People; and uſed to go arm'd to theſe Aſſemblies, which might probably have a great Affinity to thoſe of the Canadans and Iroquois, both in the Manner of going to, and holding them. Some People of Germany had antiently the ſame Cuſtom; however they at the ſame Time elected a Prince or King, who was no more than General of the Army, (Dux;) and in order to prevent him from doing any Thing at home that might be prejudicial to the State and the Public Safety, the Chief among the People uſed to inſpect all his Actions with a watchful Eye, and preſided in all their public Aſſemblies, in the ſame Manner as the old Men among the ſavage Americans. The Floridans, tho' they are govern'd by Chiefs who are inveſted with a more abſolute Authority, have almoſt the ſame Cuſtom among them, ſince, as Travellers tell us, thoſe Chiefs are always the greateſt Warriors of their Nation.

THE Arms of the Americans are a Bow and Arrows, and a Club; for by this Name we may call the Tacape of the Braſilians, and the Iroquois and Canadan Bludgeons. Theſe Weapons are almoſt as old as the World, and were the only ones uſed in the firſt Ages thereof. All theſe Nations go [b] naked into the Field, but they carry a large [c] Shield along with them, that covers the whole Body after the Manner of the antient Gauls; among whom, "ſuch of them as could not ford the Rivers, got upon their Shields, which "ſerv'd them inſtead of Boats. Each of them has, beſides theſe Shields, his wooden "Club, his Quiver at his Back, and his Bow in his Hand, and walks with a kind of "dancing Steps;" and inſtead of Enſigns and Standards, they carry aloft [d] the Hair of ſuch Enemies as they have knock'd down in the Wars. La Potterie, in his Hiſtory of North-America, tells us, "That they generally carry their Curtezans along with them "into the Field, to amuſe their young Men, and to baniſh from their Minds the Re-"membrance of their having left their Country." Though our Idea of the Merit of the Heroes of antient Greece be ever ſo great, we yet ſhall take the Liberty to compare them to the Warriors of Miſſiſippi and Canada. They always carried their Concubines and Miſtreſſes along with them into the Field, in the ſame Manner as the Iroquois and Hurons; and theſe Concubines were generally Priſoners of War.

The Ambuſcades and Skirmiſhes of theſe Savages has a great Affinity with the Tartarian way of Fighting. Of this ſome Notice has been already taken at the Beginning of this Diſſertation. The Parthians and Maſſagetes, &c. uſed to fight antiently after this Manner. As ſoon as the Battle is ended, the Combatants return home with great Haſte and Precipitation, and cut off the Hair of the Slain; but they don't do this to their Priſoners, till after they have firſt made them ſuffer the moſt inexpreſſible Torments, which always concludes with an Action of the moſt horrid Cruelty, called by them, the [a] Drinking the Broth of their Enemies. And indeed, they drink the Blood of their [b] Enemies, and even give it their Children to drink. In taking off of the Hair, they take off the Skin of the Head, along with it, which is call'd in Engliſh, Scalping; theſe they preſerve as ſo many Monuments of their Bravery, and he who brings off a great Number of Scalps, is look'd upon as a complete Warrior. Were we to take the Scripture in a literal Senſe, we ſhould find that the Jews were as proud of carrying off the Foreskin of a Philiſtine, as an Iroquois is of carrying off the Scalp of a Canadan: Be this as it will, the Antients did not content themſelves with killing their Enemies only, for they afterwards cut off their Heads; return'd to the Camp with this Trophy of their Victory; ſometimes carried thoſe Heads hanging at the Breaſt-Leathers of their Horſes, and afterwards hung them in a ſolemn Manner on the Gates or Walls of their Temples. They often embalm'd them, and preſerved them very carefully, to ſhew theſe Teſtimonies of their Valour to their Friends. The Boiens uſed to take the Skulls of their Enemies, after having cleared them of the Brains, and adorn them with Gold or Silver, in order to make Drinking-Bowls of them. All theſe Cuſtoms ariſe from the ſame Principle, viz. that of Eternizing their Valour, or rather from that Ferocity and Savageneſs to which the Greeks and Romans have given the Name of Virtue.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the LOVE of One's COUNTRY.

THE Love which a virtuous Man has for his Country, is not always the Reſult of Reaſon or Duty: We are not to imagine, that every Time we think on our native Country, all our Regards are employed on the Happineſs of the Government, the Advantage of our Sovereign, and the Preſervation of our Countrymen. This Affection, which was ſo much eſteem'd by the Antients as to be rewarded by Statues, is very often no other than a [c] phyſical or natural Charm, which, as it were, binds us down, and fixes us to that Spot of Ground on which we firſt ſet our Foot. 'Tis the Effect of Education, of Cuſtom, and Complexion; a Conſequence of that Prepoſſeſſion which our Bodies receive from their firſt Plantation; which like Plants, cannot ſuit themſelves to every Climate, and even often grow weaker, and loſe their good Qualities, in a Foreign Soil. 'Tis certain that many People are troubled with what the French call la Maladie du Pais, or the Diſeaſe of one's Country, which is a Hankering a Man has always to it; but the worſt Circumſtance is, that this Diſeaſe is generally attended with an Indiſpoſition of Mind, which the fineſt Arguments cannot cure, and which triumphs over all the Preſcriptions of the ableſt Phyſicians.

WE find in the moſt ſavage People certain Characteriſtics, that form a rational Love for their Country, and by which this Hankering after is diſcovered. The Antients furniſh us with excellent Inſtances of the former; nor is modern Hiſtory leſs Fruitful of Examples equally remarkable: And if we caſt our Eye on the Spaniſh Con-

[b] We ſee the great Averſion the Romans had to this Cuſtom, by what Saluſt obſerves of Catiline; his Words are theſe: Some ſaid at that Time, that Cataline, in order to prevent the Conſpirators from betraying one another, and to unite them the more firmly, by making them aſſociate together in a moſt horrid Action, preſented to each of them a Cup fill'd with Wine mix'd with human Blood; and that after having taken an Oath, they all drank a little of it; and then he open'd his Deſign to them. As for my Part, ſays that Author, I do not know what to ſay of it; and tho' this Circumſtance is ſo very flagrant, I yet cannot give any good Account of it.

queſts in Mexico and Peru, we ſhall there ſee People ſacrificing their Lives and Fortunes for the Love of their Country, and fighting with all the Intrepidity with which a Soldier can poſſibly be inſpired, who is brave but undiſciplined, and who abhors the hateful Tyranny of cruel Conquerors. Why therefore ſhould we not be as juſt to the Americans as we are to the Greeks, the Romans, the French, the Swiſs, and the Dutch, and to all thoſe whoſe Fame has been immortaliz'd by our Hiſtorians, for the glorious Struggles they have made for Liberty and their Country's Sake. The Americans were informed with the ſame Spirit of Bravery as the Europeans; born as free as ourſelves, they were not under any Obligations to deliver up their Liberties and Properties into our Hands. Could it be poſſible for us to be ſo unjuſt as to aſcribe to a ſavage Brutality, the glorious Actions which the Americans perform'd for the Good of their Country? Don Antonia de Solis, Author of the Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Mexico, owns that the Mexicans made the braveſt Struggles, and diſcover'd the utmoſt Efforts of Bravery and Patience in the glorious Defence they made for their Country. Add to this the heroic Speech which the Emperor Guatimozin made to Cortez after the Loſs of his Empire, which has all the Spirit, the Greatneſs of Soul, we ſo much admire in our own Heroes. The Peruvians did not ſubmit to the Spaniſh Yoke, till after having fought with the utmoſt Reſolution, and made the ſtouteſt Reſiſtance, notwithſtanding the Civil Wars which at that Time raged in the Bowels of their Country. The Chilians have for theſe two hundred Years maintained continual Wars for the Sake of their Liberty, and the Floridans are not yet ſubdued. There is no doubt but we ſhall meet ſome genuine Characteriſtics of the Love of their Country, even among the moſt ſavage Americans. The Brutality of the Natives of Braſil, Paraguay, New-Mexico, the River of Amazons, &c. conceals as ſolid Principles under it, as thoſe by which we are actuated.

As to that other Love for one's Country, which rather deſerves the Name of Sickneſs or Infirmity, Men of Senſe will never pretend to conſider it as a Virtue. 'Tis on the contrary a very dangerous Indiſpoſition, which makes us cenſure unjuſtly the moſt valuable Things, prompts us to deſpiſe the moſt laudable Qualities in Foreigners, and is apt to raiſe the moſt unjuſt Prejudice in us againſt their Senſe and Underſtanding. A Man who is infected with this Diſeaſe, is no longer a reaſonable Creature. He is diſguſted and diſſatisfy'd with every Thing: The Trees, the Plants, the Fruits of all other Regions are every Way inferior to thoſe of his native Country. He tells us that a Foreign Soil depraves and corrupts Nature: That the Elements do there contract quite different Qualities from thoſe of his Country, and ſuch as are always noxious; that the Air is infected with the moſt pernicious Influences; the Manners are odd and whimſical, and the Cuſtoms extravagant and ridiculous. They will ſcarce allow a Foreigner the Privilege of being a reaſonable Creature. Every Thing that is not of their native Growth is clowniſh, barbarous, and frightful. Whole Nations, not excepting the moſt learned, cannot forbear giving into this Abuſe. The Greeks and Romans gave the Epithet of barbarous to all but themſelves. The Chineſe boaſt themſelves to be the only knowing People in the World. When the Spaniards firſt began their Conqueſts in America, the Mexicans were prodigiouſly aſtoniſh'd at the Induſtry and Valour of thoſe New-Comers, and imagined, that Politeneſs and Knowledge were confirmed to Mexico only. [a] The Engliſh haughtily boaſt of their own Merit, to the Prejudice of that of Foreigners; and contemn the Manners and Cuſtoms of other Nations, and even take a Pleaſure in aſſuming an Air of Strangers among their Neighbours. The French themſelves are pretty near of the ſame Character, and 'tis well known that they are as blindly fond of their own peculiar Cuſtoms as [a] Mr. Muralt, the Author of the Letters upon the Engliſh and French Nations, is pleaſed to make ſome Apology for the former: His Words are as follow. "Their Pride (or if I dare make uſe of the uſual Term) their Inſo-

"lence, is neither ſo extravagant nor ſo general as People are apt to imagine —— I have not obſerv'd any Inſo-
"lence among them towards Foreigners, at leaſt in the common Affairs of Life: So that I cannot ſee any Reaſon
"for diſtinguiſhing them from other Nations upon that Account; and generally ſpeaking, their Behaviour is far "from being either as harſh or diſagreeable as moſt People imagine.

the People above-mentioned. All Nations prefer their own Country to any other in the World; and how barren and unfruitful ſoever it may be, 'tis yet inexpreſſibly beautiful in their Eyes. Many a Man is delighted with the Croaking of Frogs in his native Fens, whoſe Ears, were he at ſome Diſtance from his Country, wou'd be grated with the Muſic of the Nightingale. Another enjoys the utmoſt Satisfaction, tho' ſurrounded with Wolves and Bears, the Tenants of his Mountains, and is more delighted with the Clowniſhneſs of his [a] Canton, than with the ingenious Politeneſs of the French. One wou'd imagine, that ſuch People are ſomething a-kin to thoſe wild Plants, which will not thrive out of their muddy Bogs, or Mountains. After all, if the [b] Savages of Groenland, notwithſtanding the kind Treatment and Civility they met with at the King of Denmark's Court, could not yet forbear regretting the Poverty of their native Country, or keep them, tho' at the Hazard of their Lives, from attemptingto reviſit the frozen [c] Regions, we are not to wonder that People who travel and poliſh themſelves by Dealings and Converſation with Foreigners, ſhould yet prefer their barren Fields to thoſe of their Neighbours, though ever ſo ſmiling and fruitful; that they ſhould chuſe to inhabit among Rocks, and under everlaſting Snows, rather than in the Neighbourhood of Vines and Orange-Trees; in a word, that they ſhould fondly applaud themſelves at home for the Heavineſs of their Complexions, and ſo coolly prefer it to that Sprightlineſs of Genius ſo much eſteemed by other Nations. We naturally love to form to ourſelves the moſt advantageous Ideas of our Birth, our Character, and our Condition; we do our utmoſt to make Foreigners ſenſible of our pretended Advantages, and endeavour to aſſume a Superiority over them, as far as the Laws of Decorum will permit. Such Perſons as have never ſeen any other Country but their own, have generally this Weakneſs. A young Frenchman that has not yet ſeen the World, will tell us that France is the moſt potent Empire in the World; he fondly imagines that every Knee muſt ſubmiſſively bow to his Monarch; whenever he ſpeaks of the Advantages of his Country, 'tis in the moſt pompous and emphatical Terms; and ten to one but he calls upon the [d] Topinamboux and Margajats as Witneſſes to the Truth of what he advances.

[a] The above-mentioned Mr. Muralt is of Opinion, that the Swiſs have greatly corrupted themſelves by frequenting the French. His Words are as follow: "If by the Unpoliteneſs and Ruſticity the Swiſs are reproach'd with "by the French, is meant their Manner of Doing and Saying all Things naturally, and anſwerable to their own proper "and eſſential Character; if they term Simplicity the Incapacity of counterfeiting or diſguiſing, of attempting to "deceive or impoſe on others by borrowed Qualities, it is a freſh Eulogy given them.——The clowniſh unpoliſh'd "Commonwealth of our Anceſtors, gives the Idea of a Fabric raiſed out of unwrought Fragments of a Rock, that "hath both Majeſty and Solidity. That of this Day, tho' our Nation ſtrives to embelliſh it with the utmoſt Splen"dor and Politeneſs, repreſents nothing but Paint and Varniſh to the Imagination; and I am perſuaded, that the "Cuſtoms, Manners, and Characters of our Anceſtors, had more real Decency and Decorum in them, than the "Manners and Characters we now affect."

[b] Collection of Voyages to the North, Vol. I. "'Tis obſerved that the Swiſs, whom we look upon as the heavieſt Peo"ple in Europe, tho' they nevertheleſs have ſeveral fine Genius's among them of all Profeſſions, do yet diſcover a "Weakneſs in this Reſpect.—— The greateſt Part of ſuch of them as quit their wild and barren Cantons, to travel "into France, or elſewhere, are troubled with a Diſeaſe which they call Heimvei.—— The ſole Deſire of return"ing to their Country makes them ſo weak and conſumptive, that they endanger their Lives, if they don't reviſit "their poor Cottages and barren Mountains." La Mothe le Vayer, Vol. ii. folio Edit. 77th Letter.

[c] I have read ſomewhere, that two Hottentots, or Inhabitants of the Cape of Good Hope, who are a very ſlovenly People, that garniſh themſelves with Guts, being put on board a Ship in order to be brought into England, were inconſolable at the Thoughts of leaving their native Country. One of them, I think, died in the Paſſage; the other came into England, and was treated with the utmoſt Civility and Candour. They cloth'd him in an Engliſh Dreſs, and gave him all the Baubles to pleaſe him that his Countrymen are delighted with, but all to no Purpoſe, for he was continually regretting his native Woods and Mountains. After he had learn'd a little Engliſh, he uſed to roll himſelf along the Ground, and cry out, Coree (for that was his Name) home go, home go. When they found that he pin'd, they ſent him back again into his own Country. He had no ſooner ſet his Foot aſhore, but he ran ſwiftly, in the greateſt Tranſports imaginable, to his Countrymen, and in a little Time recover'd his former Vigour of Body and Conſtitution.

CHAP. XVII:

Of the Traffic of the AMERICANS, their Law-Suits, Slaves, &c.

THE Americans, and particularly the Savages, don't employ Money in their Commerce; it conſiſts wholly in Barter, as was the Cuſtom in the Infancy of the World, when thoſe Arts were not known, which Avarice has ſince invented to enrich the Trader. Antiently the Eaſt-Indians, and ſeveral other Nations, knew no other Way of Trading than this. [a] Lycurgus himſelf enacted a Law among the Spartans, which tended to make Gold and Silver much leſs neceſſary than in our Days.

WE don't find that the Americans have any Notion of what we call Pleading and the Wrangling of the Bar, and conſequently have no Occaſion for Lawyers, and ſuch like vile Agents of the Injuſtice of Mankind. The Mexicans us'd to determine all civil Affairs by the Authority of a Tribunal, from which there was no Appeal. Every Sentence was conciſe, and deliver'd Vivâ Voce; both Parties were preſent, and always brought their Arguments and Witneſſes along with them, ſo that the Cauſe was immediately diſpatch'd. There was no other Method of delaying a Suit, but by appealing to the higheſt Tribunal, and here the King preſided in Perſon. Thrice happy Country! where he who pleaded for his own againſt an Uſurper, was not expos'd to loſe his Suit, by the ſtudied Quibbles of ſuch as pretended to defend his Right. Nor was Juſtice adminiſtred with leſs Diſpatch in Peru than in Mexico. The Floridans have Recourſe to Arbitration, and the Deciſion of their Caciques; from theſe there lies no Appeal. We are alſo told, that the [b] Turks are not plagued with the captious Formalities of our Laws; and that there are more Lawyers in the City of Paris only, than in the whole Extent of the Ottoman Empire. In [c] Perſia every one pleads his own Cauſe, not excepting the very Women, and they have neither Scriveners, Lawyers, nor Counſellors. 'Tis true, indeed, that their Law-Proceedings are pretty much embaraſs'd, but then they have the Advantage of not being perplex'd with long-winded Wranglers, who very often make no other Uſe of the moſt juſt Cauſe, than to fill their own Pockets. Whence is it therefore that Chriſtians, who profeſs a Religion which is founded chiefly on Juſtice and Moderation, ſhould diſcover a greater Spirit of [d] wrangling than all the People above-mention'd? Is it the Reſult of their ſuperior Underſtanding, which makes them more ingenious and ſubtle? But is not this Caſt of Mind owing rather to the Mixture of Laws and Cuſtoms which were form'd in Europe, by that of a numberleſs Multitude of barbarous Nations, who invaded them from the North?

THE Americans have no other Slaves than their Captives, in the ſame Manner as the Nations of Antiquity. The latter us'd often to ſell them, and this was a very conſiderable Branch of their Traffic. The Americans never do this, but keep 'em in their Service, and upon Occaſion give 'em their Liberty, or adopt 'em into their Families. Nevertheleſs theſe Slaves are generally ſacrific'd to their Revenge, and perhaps the miſerable Havock they make of thoſe unhappy Wretches, their Priſoners, muſt be conſider'd as a kind of Sacrifice, as has been already obſerv'd. [e] We are told that the Inhabitants of the Iſland of Chio, were the firſt People among the Antients, who travelled into foreign Countries to purchaſe free People, not Priſoners. To which the Greek Hiſtorian adds, that theſe avaricious Merchants drew down the Anger of the Gods upon themſelves, being cut to Pieces by thoſe very Slaves whom they had depriv'd of their Liberty. Such of our People as carry on this Traffic at this Day, and go to Africa for Negroes, whom they afterwards ſell in the Weſt-Indies, have juſt Reaſon to dread the ſame Fate.

CHAP. XVIII.

HOW odd and ridiculous ſoever the various Methods of bewailing the Dead, eſtabliſh'd in different Parts of the World, may appear to us, 'tis certain nevertheleſs, that 'tis grounded on a juſt, a rational, and natural Principle. No Man can forbear beſtowing this laſt Teſtimony of his Affection on ſuch as have been united to him, either by the Ties of Conſanguinity or Friendſhip; but then the Tranſports of this Grief are the Effect of Complexion or Inclination. The Idea which Men afterwards form'd to themſelves of the State of Mankind after Death, whether from Tradition or Religion, may probably have occaſion'd the adding of ſeveral Things to Complexion and Inclination; at leaſt might have made this juſt, this reaſonable Grief, grow up into a national Cuſtom. We believe that this is what chiefly gave Riſe to all ſuch Funeral Rites as are known to us, not excepting the moſt ridiculous. We ſhall endeavour to make good theſe Aſſertions, by inſtancing the genealogical Proofs, as it were, of two Cuſtoms obſerv'd in ſome Funeral Rites. We are aſſur'd, that 'tis a Cuſtom among certain Nations for People to cut off their Hair in Token of their Sorrow; to ask the Deceaſed why they left the World, and to enquire of them in the moſt ſerious Manner, whether they had not every Thing they wanted in this Life? whether Care had not been taken of them? what was the Subject of their Grief? &c. Probably this Cuſtom may have had its Riſe from what follows: Some Perſon of Diſtinction having loſt a Perſon who was dear to him, gave himſelf up to Tears and Affliction, ſtripp'd himſelf of all his Ornaments, and in the Height of his Affliction tore his Hair, addreſs'd his Plaints to the Deceas'd, chang'd his Wailings to Invectives, was again mov'd with that affectionate Tenderneſs which always breaks out in the firſt Senſations of Grief, addreſs'd the Deceas'd in a Variety of Tones, and would almoſt force him to tell the Reaſon of his Death. No one will diſpute but that Sorrow is naturally violent, and is the Reſult of a Friendſhip equally ſo; but then 'tis of a very vivacious Nature, and is not ſatisfied with dumb Paſſions. We before took notice, that the above mention'd was a Perſon of ſome Rank; this Circumſtance alone was enough to raiſe him a Multitude of Imitators, Subjects, and Servants, who copied his Tears, cut off their Hair out of Friendſhip for him, and directed their Moan to him, &c. We are not to forget, that as the Perſon lamented, and his chief Mourner, are both People of Diſtinction, there might be celebrated for his Sake an annual Solemnity, exactly reſembling the violent, the natural Affliction before deſcrib'd. This Ceremony being imitated by others, grew inſenſibly into a Cuſtom. If to this we add thoſe Notions with which Superſtition generally heightens all [a] Ceremonies relating to the Dead, and thoſe which the moſt ignorant

[a] Mr. Pope has beautifully expos'd the Emptineſs of all theſe Cuſtoms.

What tho' no Friends in ſable Weeds appear,
Grieve for an Hour, perhaps, then mourn a Year;

ignorant Nations have imbib'd, with regard to the Immortality of the Souls, we may by that means probably trace the Original of ſeveral Cuſtoms, that are altogether as whimſical as that of asking a dead Perſon why he left the World.

[a] THE Savages of North-America bewail the Dead, and keep their Corps by them. The Author juſt now quoted, tells us, that they uſe a kind of Balſam to keep the Body from rotting; but a more [b] modern Writer alſo takes notice of a kind of Red-Lead, which they ſpread over the Face of their Dead; which Balſam is by them called the Oil of Animals. 'Twould be needleſs to take notice of the Antiquity of embalming, and its Uſe among the Egyptians, Jews, Peruvians, &c. Theſe Americans alſo bewail their Dead for ſeveral Days together, and ſing Funeral Songs in their Praiſe: This Part of the Ceremony is perform'd by their old Women, and the Relations of the Deceas'd; which Cuſtom was alſo obſerv'd by the Romans, who uſed to hire old [c] Women to weep on theſe Occaſions, and had certain [d] Funeral Songs, which were accompanied with Flutes. Among the Greeks, their Funeral Solemnities were ſung by Men only; but the Jews heighten'd their Songs, Tears, and Lamentations, with Faſtings, Sackcloth, and Aſhes. The Romaniſts and Lutherans ſing alſo at their Funerals. We leave to Relations and Friends that Tribute of Tears which they owe to Nature or Tenderneſs; 'tis even with ſome [e] Satisfaction that we behold the Tears which flow only from Decency, though they appear as natural as the former, in thoſe affectionate Impulſes which ariſe in the Soul at the Sight of a Perſon who while living was united to thoſe who mourn him by a Variety of Relations. 'Tis not our Buſineſs to paſs a Conſtruction on thoſe Tears, which frequently are deceitful, have been ſo common in all Ages, and which Women can ſo eaſily command. Some of theſe ſhall break out into the utmoſt Tranſports of Grief, as naturally as if they had really lov'd. [f] We are told, that the Sorrow of the Women of Gaſcogne and Languedoc is, as it were, a Spring that is very productive of new and out-of-the-way Fits, which dries up two or three Days after the Deceaſe of the Perſon bewail'd: Theſe Fits exhibit themſelves in Tears, Groans, Exclamations, and Sobs. The She-Friends of the inconſolable Woman mix their Tears with her's: They weep becauſe they ſee others do ſo, and ſigh as bitterly as if they were really afflicted. The Concert of Sighs and Tears echoes through all the Neighbourhood, and while the Harmony laſts, the particular Virtues and good Qualities of the Deceas'd are the grand Topics of Converſation. The natural Sprightlineſs of the Inhabitants raiſes a thouſand tender Images in their Minds, which, from the ſame Cauſe, die away as ſuddenly: The afflicted Woman is ſoon able to give Conſolation to thoſe who ſympathiz'd with her in her Sorrow.

SOME American Savages ſmear their Faces with Black, in Token of their Grief; the Jews us'd to put Aſhes on their Heads; the Heroes of Homer and Virgil roll'd themſelves up and down in the Duſt, and cover'd their Heads with it. The North-Americans, during the Solemnity of Mourning, don't cut off their Hair, but affect to expreſs their Affliction, by going in a very poor Dreſs. The Grecks us'd alſo to wear dirty, thread-bare Clothes; but then they cut off their Hair, and threw it on the Corps, which Cuſtom is ſtill obſerv'd by the Women of Florida at the Death of their Husbands, whereof Notice will be taken in the Sequel. The Egyptians, the Jews, and ſeveral other Aſiatics, uſed to tear their Garments in Token of their Sorrow. The firſt did not cut their Hair off, but then they uſed to daub their Faces; abſtain'd from ſeveral ſorts of Food during ſeventy two Days; never waſh'd themſelves, or took any kind of Pleaſure, but wept continually during that Seaſon. The Mexicans employ'd ten Days in ſolemnizing the Funerals of their Dead, and the antient Thracians three Days after their Death. We quote theſe Inſtances to ſhew the Affinity between the Funeral Rites of the Americans, and thoſe of other Nations; but it would be needleſs to be more particular on that Head, ſince we ſhall be obliged to take notice of them afterwards.

THE Americans burn or bury with their Dead whatever they made uſe of in their Life-Time, and even Part of their Wealth. The Mexicans and Peruvians uſed alſo to furniſh their Dead with Domeſtics, to keep them Company, or wait upon them in the next World. In Homer, [a] Achilles cauſes Weapons to be laid on the Funeral Pile of his dear Patroclus; puts twelve young Men to Death for his Sake; gives him Dogs, Horſes, and every Thing he thinks may be agreeable to him in the next Life. The ſame Cuſtom was alſo obſerv'd by the antient Gauls, the Inhabitants of Great-Britain, and the Germans [b].

THE Jews and Chriſtians bury their Dead, which Cuſtom is of great Antiquity, and was practis'd before that of burning, and 'tis obſerv'd that the Romans us'd it in the Infancy of their Commonwealth. The Americans in general bury their Dead, but the Braſilians [c] ſet them upright in Pits dug in the Shape of a Caſk, which are generally made in their Aldeas. The antient Romans, and ſome other Nations, us'd frequently to burn the Dead in their Houſes and Gardens, whence, as Servius tells us, aroſe the Cuſtom of worſhipping the Houſhold Gods, to which the Antients gave the Name of Lares. It was nevertheleſs enacted by the Laws of the twelve Tables, that the Romans ſhould bury their Dead out of the City [d]. The Braſilians have another remarkable Cuſtom, which is to ſing in honour of the Dead every Time they paſs by their Graves: This is a kind of Commemoration which theſe Savages make of their Dead.

THE Savages of Canada, of Miſſiſippi, and ſeveral other Nations of South-America, preſent Gifts to their Dead, which Cuſtom is much the ſame with that of ſeveral Nations of Antiquity, who carried with great Liberality to their Dead whatever they thought might be agreeable to them in the next World.

[a] Feithii Antiq. Homeri, Book I.

[b] We are told that theſe People buried with their Dead whatever they had been poſſeſs'd of; not for them to make uſe of in the next Life, but that nothing might be left which might put the Living in mind of them, and of the Loſs they had ſuſtain'd. In New France the Savages are not allow'd to once mention the Name of a Perſon deceas'd; and they look upon every Thing of this Nature as an Affront.

CHAP. XIX.

In what Manner the AMERICANS tranſmitted any memorable Incident to Poſterity.

WE have aſſerted that the Americans are ignorant of the Art of Writing. However, we are aſſur'd that the Inhabitants of New-Spain, particularly thoſe of Jucutan, made Books with Leaves of Trees, and therein either writ down, or repreſented, their memorable Events. We there ſaw their Method of dividing Time; the Idea they had of the Courſe of the Stars, and their Knowledge in Phyſics. We may therefore ſuppoſe, that their Paper was ſomething like that of the antient Egyptians. The deſtructive Zeal of the Spaniſh Monks and Prieſts, who took every Thing they did not underſtand for ſome magical Operation, or ſuperſtitious Practice, made them condemn all thoſe precious Monuments to the Flames; ſo that 'tis impoſſible to know preciſely what Affinity thoſe Books bore to ours. What we may affirm with greater Certainty, is, that they conſiſted of Hieroglyphics and Paintings, under which hiſtorical Events and the Phænomena of Nature were repreſented. We ſhall take notice of the Mexican Year in the Sequel of this Work, and ſhall now only give a general Idea of theſe Characters or hieroglyphical Paintings. Thoſe People, to point out the Year when the Spaniards enter'd Mexico, painted on a Wheel, which among them is the Emblem of the Revolution of the Year, a Man, clothed after the Spaniſh Manner, with a Hat on his Head; but as this Way of repreſenting Thoughts did not give an Idea of the ſeveral Circumſtances, they ſupplied this Defect, by learning by heart ſeveral Pieces of Poetry or Proſe, compoſed by their learned Men. Theſe Pieces were as ſo many Commentaries to their Hieroglyphics, and were learnt by heart from Father to Son, and by this means were tranſmitted to Poſterity.

As to the Peruvians, they had neither Letters nor Characters after the Manner of the Chineſe, nor Figures as the Arabians, nor Hieroglyphics after the Manner of the Egyptians. However, they had ſome Notion of Painting, but then it was after a very rude and artleſs Manner. They had in general no other Regiſters or Memorials than oral Traditions, and the Quappas or Quippos. Theſe Quippos were Strings made of Cotton or Guts, with other Strings tied to them, and Knots at certain Diſtances, and of different Colours, according to the Incidents they had a Mind to repreſent; and were made either larger or ſmaller, according to the Events they were deſirous of repreſenting. 'Twould be a difficult Matter to conceive all that theſe Strings repreſented, or how far it aſſiſted the Memory. Suffice it that we ſay they ſerv'd them for Annals, Codes, Laws, Rituals, Ceremonials, &c. and that with theſe Strings, Knots, and Colours, they made as many different Combinations, as we with the Letters of our Alphabet. Theſe Quippos were kept by certain public Officers, call'd Quippocamaios, whoſe Employment bore ſome Affinity to thoſe of our Notaries and Secretaries of State.

THE Peruvians alſo made uſe of little Stones, which they threw into the Shape of a Wheel, when they wanted to learn any Thing by Heart, and remember any remarkable Incident; though this did but ill ſupply the Place of Writing, it yet ſhews what ſurprizing Inventions the human Mind is capable of.

AT the Time when America was diſcover'd, thoſe Peruvians, whom the Spaniſh Miſſionaries converted to the Chriſtian Faith, were taught the Principles of Religion by theſe little Stones laid in the Shape of a Wheel, one of which expreſs'd the Credo, another the Pater-Noſter, a third the Ave, &c.

LET us next conſider the Order in which the Mexican Characters, or rather Hieroglyphics, were rang'd. Theſe were often diſpoſed in a circular Manner, from Bottom to Top, or from the Center to the Circumference. All theſe ſeveral Methods have no Affinity with the Way of Writing uſed by the Romans, the Greeks, the Hebrews, or Chineſe.

DISSERTATION,

The RELIGIOUS CEREMONIES of the AMERICANS are explained.

The RELIGION of the SAVAGES of HUDSON'S-BAY, &c.

WE are ſo little acquainted with the North Parts of America, and the Accounts we meet with of it are ſo very uncertain, that it would be almoſt impoſſible to give a rational Deſcription of the Religion of its Inhabitants. Here follows what we have been able to collect on that Head: The Savages about Hudſon's-Bay have no diſtinct Principles of Religion, and [a] every one, as a Traveller has told us, who has given a pretty exact Deſcription of that Bay, forms to himſelf a God according to his own Fancy, to whom he addreſſes himſelf in his Neceſſities; as when he is ſick, &c. But this is ſaying little or nothing. We are not better acquainted with the Notions which the Savages of the Streights of Frobiſher, and thoſe on the Coaſts that lie to the North-Weſt of Europe, have formed to themſelves of the Deity; they may perhaps be the ſame as thoſe of the reſt of the Savages of North-America:

[a] Relation of Hudſon's-Bay, in the Collection of Voyages to the North, Vol. vi. firſt Edition.

rica: But as we are not able to give an exact Account of their Idolatry, it were better to be ſilent on that Head, than to entertain the Reader with idle Fictions.

LA POTTERIE, in his Hiſtory of North-America, Vol. I. 1722. obſerves very juſtly, that the licentious and vagrant Life of the Savages, prevents their attaining to the Knowledge of the true God. This Reflection is juſt, and is verify'd by the Conduct of the Libertines among us. " However, continues the ſame Writer, [a] the Savages are not " inſenſible to the good or ill Fortune that happens to them: They ſeem to have a Prin- " ciple ſomething like that of the Manichæans, by their acknowledging a good and evil " Spirit: They give the Name of [b] Quichemanitou to the God of Proſperity; 'tis to him " they fancy themſelves indebted for every Succour, and that he preſides over all the hap- " py Effects of Nature." The evil Spirit they call Machimanitou, who is an Enemy to the Happineſs of Mankind; they imagine that 'tis he afflicts them, and to him they aſcribe all the Evils they ſuffer. They believe the Sun to be the good, and the Moon to be the evil Principle, which has ſome Affinity with the Opinion of the Antients, who aſcribed evil and [c] pernicious Effects to the Moon. The Savages in Queſtion ſeem to look upon the Sun as the ſovereign Maſter of the Univerſe. They offer him Tobacco inſtead of Incenſe, which they call [d] Smoaking the Sun. Here follows their Manner of performing a religious Ceremony, to which, we believe, we may give the Name of Incenſing. The Chiefs of the Families aſſemble by Day-break at the Houſe of one of their principal Men: The latter lights the Calumet, offers it thrice to the Riſing-Sun, and waving it with both his Hands according to its Courſe, till he comes to the Point from whence he firſt begun, he addreſſes his Prayers at the ſame Time to the Sun, implores his Protection, beſeeches him to direct him in his Undertakings, and recommends all the Families of the Canton or Province to his Care. After which the Chief ſmokes in the Calumet, and preſents it to the Aſſembly, in order that every Member of it may ſmoke the Sun in his Turn.

IT may not be improper, before we proceed further, to give a Deſcription of the Calumet in this Place. [e] " 'Tis a kind of very long [f] Pipe made of red Stones, adorn'd " with the Heads of [g] Wood-peckers, and of a kind of Ducks that perch upon Trees. " The Head of thoſe Birds is of the fineſt Scarlet in the World, and is beautify'd with " fine Feathers. " In the Middle of the Tube, or Body of the Calumet, they hang or fix certain Feathers, taken from the Wings of a Bird, which they call Kibou, a kind of Eagle. They always dance the Calumet before they undertake any conſiderable Enterprize. Father Hennepin gives us a much more accurate Deſcription of this Inſtrument: [h] " The Calumet, ſays he, is a great Smoking-Pipe, of red, white, or black

[a] This is meant only of the Inhabitants of the moſt Northern Parts of America, who trade with the Engliſh and French for Beaver and other Skins.

[b] Manitou is the Name that all theſe People give to a Genius, which they believe reſides not only in ſuch Beings as have Life, but even in inanimate Things. They worſhip this Genius in every Thing that ſtrikes their Senſes. A Bird, an Ox, a Bear, an Arrow, have each their Manitou; every Savage has his particular Manitou, whom he looks upon as his tutelar Deity: Which Opinion is agreeable to that of ſeveral Nations, antient and modern, who believed that every Man had his Familiar or Genius, who preſided over him all his Life-Time. " They ſet it forth " in their Huts, and ſacrifice Dogs or other Animals to it. The Warriors (Ilinois) carry their Manitou in a Mat, " and are perpetually invoking it, to give them Victory over their Enemies. The Quacks, that is, their Jugglers, " addreſs themſelves alſo to their Manitous, &c." See Father Mareſt the Miſſionary's Letter to the Ilinois. Collection 11*th of curious and edifying Letters.*

[c] They aſcribe to Pluto the God of Hell, and to Proſerpine his Wife, who, according to the Opinion of the Antients, is the ſame as the Moon, the Direction of every Thing that was tranſacted between the Earth and the Moon: Theſe two nocturnal Deities were the faithful Depoſitaries of our Evils.

[f] La Hontan relates in his Voyages, that Calumet is a Norman Word, derived from Chalumeau, or Pipe: The Romans introduced it in the firſt Voyages they made to Canada: The Iroquois call it Ganandoe, and the other Savages Pacgan. All Relations agree that the Savages of North-America have the utmoſt Veneration for the Calumet; that they look upon it as a Myſtery, and as a Preſent made by the Sun to Mankind. Further mention will be made of it when we come to give an Account of the warlike Ceremonies of the Americans.

" Marble. 'Tis pretty much like a Poll-Ax; has a very ſmooth Head, and the Tube, " which is about two Foot and a half long, is made of a pretty ſtrong Reed or Cane, " ſet off with Feathers of all ſorts of Colours, with ſeveral Mats made of Woman's " Hair, variouſly interwoven: To this they fix two Wings, which makes it ſomething " like Mercury's Caduceus, or the Wand which Embaſſadors of Peace held formerly in " their Hands. They thruſt this Reed thro' the Necks of Huars, which are Birds " ſpeckled with Black and White, and about the Bigneſs of our Geeſe, or through the " Necks of the above-mention'd Ducks.—— Theſe Ducks are of three or four differ- " ent Colours. Every Nation adorns the Calumet, as Cuſtom, or his own Fancy ſhall " ſuggeſt. The Calumet is a Paſſport to all who go to the Allies of ſuch Nations as ſend " it.—— 'Tis a Symbol of Peace, and they are univerſally of Opinion, that ſome great " Misfortune would befal any Perſon who ſhould violate the Faith of it. 'Tis the Seal " of all Undertakings, of all important Affairs, and public Ceremonies." La Hontan relates, that the [a] Tube of the Calumet is four or five Foot long, and the Body of " this Pipe is about eight Inches (in Diameter, I ſuppoſe) and the Bowl in which the " Tobacco is laid, three."

But to return to the Religion of theſe People: The Ceremony of Smoking the Sun is never performed but on important Occaſions; for they addreſs themſelves, in their common Worſhip, to their Manitou, which they carry always along with them, and which is commonly given them by their Jugglers. La Potterie tells us, in his firſt Volume of the Hiſtory of North-America, that certain Savages who live towards the North Coaſts, are of Opinion, that Storms are raiſed by the Spirit of the Moon's lodging itſelf in the Bottom of the Sea: To pacify it therefore, they ſacrifice to it the moſt valuable Things they have in their Canoo, and throw every Thing into the Sea, not excepting their Tobacco. This Sacrifice is heighten'd with Singing, and certain Ceremonies which they think efficacious in driving out this evil Spirit.

To know the Iſſue of any Affair they addreſs themſelves to their Jugglers, who pronounce their Oracles with great Ceremony, and in a Manner that is artful enough. The Juggler fixes Poles in the Ground, and thereon raiſes a circular Hut, which he ſurrounds with the Skins of Caribous, or other Animals, leaving a Hole at the Top wide enough for a Man to paſs thro': Here the Juggler ſhuts himſelf up alone, where he ſings, ſheds Tears, tumbles up and down, torments himſelf, invokes, breaks out into Imprecations and Exorciſms, and asks the Matchimanitou what is his Pleaſure; who anſwers him with a thundring Noiſe; all which is conſonant to the high Idea Mankind in general have formed to themſelves of the divine Majeſty. This Idea makes them believe, that the Gods muſt neceſſarily deliver themſelves with a mighty Noiſe, and always throw Nature into ſome Confuſion. When Homer's Jupiter contracts his Brow, Heaven muſt tremble. Does he put forth his Voice? All the Elements are in Diſorder. Immediately the Juggler's Enthuſiaſm breaks out in a murmuring Noiſe, like that of a Rock falling, when all the Poles or Stakes are ſhaken with ſo much Violence, that one would imagine all was coming to the Ground. 'Tis in the midſt of theſe ſacred Agitations that the Juggler pronounces the Oracle. This Account is borrowed from de la Potterie.

IF Father [a] Hennepin may be believed, there is not one true religious Notion, or any regular Worſhip among theſe Savages. The Bulk of their Religion conſiſts in a Set of confuſed Notions, and a kind of Veneration for the Sun, whom they acknowledge, but in Appearance only, for the Author and Preſerver of all Things. Whenever the Nadoueſſans and Iſſatis, ſmoke they look up to the Sun; and as this Planet is, at the ſame Time, the only Object that raiſes any Devotion in their Minds, the Moment they have lighted the Calumet, they preſent it to him, and beſeech him to take a Whiff or two. Theſe People, and all the Inhabitants of the Coaſts of Miſſiſippi, pay no other Worſhip to the Sun, than the faint Teſtimonies of that Gratitude which we owe to the Supreme Being. They offer to him the firſt Fruits of all they take in Hunting, in their Commanders Hut, who undoubtedly makes his Advantage of the Oblations which his Subjects devote to that Planet. As ſoon as they perceive Day-break, they waft the firſt Cloud of Smoke that comes from their Calumets towards the Sun, at the ſame Time mumbling over certain Words, which probably are their firſt Morning Oriſons. They afterwards ſmoke towards the four Quarters of the World. We are told that the [b] Ceremonial Habits of ſome of theſe Nations have generally two Suns painted on them, and that wild Oxen, Stags, Serpents, &c. are repreſented on their Bodies.

THE above-cited Friar gives us a more particular Account of the Religion of theſe Nations, and of the Principles on which it is founded, in his third Relation of Louiſiana, entitled, A Voyage into a Country larger than Europe. Here follows the Subſtance of what he ſays: " The greateſt Part of theſe Savages believe the World to have been " created; that Heaven, the Earth, and Men, were made by a Woman, who, toge- " ther with her Son, preſides over the World. This perhaps may be the Reaſon, con- " tinues Father Hennepin, why theſe Savages deduce their Genealogies by Females. The " Son is the Principle of every Thing that is Good, and the Woman the Cauſe of Evil: " However, they are of Opinion, that both are in an equal State of ſupreme Felicity; " that the Woman, being big with Child, fell down from Heaven, and dropp'd on the " Back of a Tortoiſe, who ſav'd her from Shipwreck." Methinks one may diſcover, in this whimſical Syſtem, ſome faint Idea of the Facts contained in the Hiſtory of the Fall, as related by Moſes. " Other Savages of the ſame Continent are of Opinion, that the " World was created by a Spirit, to which the Iroquois have given the Name of Otkon, " thoſe of Virginia, Okée, and other Savages who inhabit the Mouth of St. Lawrence's " River, Atahauta; and that one Meſſou reſtor'd it after the Flood.——They tell us, that " as Meſſou was one Day hunting, his Dogs loſt themſelves in a great Lake, which hap- " pening to overflow, ſoon ſpread itſelf all over the Earth.——They add, that by the " help of ſome Animals, he reſtor'd the World with this Land. The Savages who in- " habit the Head of St. Lawrence's River and Miſſiſippi, tell us, that a Woman de- " ſcended from Heaven, and hover'd ſome Time in the Air, ſeeking where to reſt her " Foot; that the Tortoiſe offer'd her his Back, which ſhe accepted, and choſe that Place " for her Reſidence; that afterwards the Filth of the Sea gather'd itſelf about the Tor- " toiſe, and inſenſibly expanded itſelf to a great Extent of Ground.———However, as " this Woman did not delight in Solitude, a Spirit deſcended from above, who finding " her aſleep, drew near to her; that the Reſult of this Approach was her being with Child;

" that ſhe was deliver'd of two Sons, who came out of her Side. When the Children " were grown up, they exerciſed themſelves in Hunting; and as one of them was a " much more skilful Hunter than the other, Jealouſy ſoon occaſion'd Diſcord: They " liv'd together in an irreconcileable Hatred. The unskilful Hunter, who was of a very " ſavage Temper, treated his Brother ſo ill, as forced him to leave the Earth, and with- " draw to Heaven. After he had thus withdrawn himſelf, the Spirit returned again to " the Woman, and from this ſecond Interview a Daughter was born, who is the grand " Parent of the North Americans." The Reader may find ſome Affinity between this Fiction and the Story of Cain and Abel, as related by Moſes.

We meet with a Syſtem of the Creation, according to the Notions of the Savages, in de la Potterie's Hiſtory of North-America, that differs pretty much from the above-mention'd: " The Savages are ſtrictly of Opinion, that they came originally from Beaſts, " and that Michapous is the Name of the God who created Heaven. They have ſome " Idea of the Flood, and believe that the World began at that Time; that Michapous " created Heaven, and afterwards created all the Animals that were on floating Woods " and Groves; with theſe he made a Caieu, which is a kind of Bridge, and continued " ſeveral Days upon it without any Suſtenance.——Michapous foreſeeing that all theſe " Creatures could not live long on this Bridge, and that his Work would be imperfect, " in caſe he did not take care to ſecure them from Misfortunes, and from being ſtarv'd, " —— and having at that Time Command over the Heavens only, he found himſelf " obliged to addreſs himſelf to Michiniſi, God of the Waters, and would have borrow'd " ſome Land of him, in order to ſettle his Creatures on it; but Michiniſi was not in- " clined to grant him his Requeſt. Michapous ſent the Beaver, the Otter, and a kind " of Rat, one after another, to ſearch for Earth at the Bottom of the Sea, but none of " them brought any Thing, the Rat excepted, and ſhe only a few Particles of Sand." Michapous made a prodigious Advantage of this ſmall Quantity of Sand, ſince it ſerved him for a Leaven to ſwell it up to a high Mountain. The Fox was deſir'd to walk round and round this Mountain, Michapous aſſuring him, that his Perambulations wou'd extend that Piece of Ground. The Fox went round it for ſome Time, in order to enlarge the terreſtrial Globe, but he was ſoon weary, ſo that Michapous finiſh'd the reſt. The Notions the Savages have of ſeveral Phænomena of Nature, ſuch as Earthquakes, Thunder, Lightening, &c. are equally extravagant. Some of them are very whimſical with regard to the Origin of Beaſts and the Creation of Man, which they tell us ſprung from the [a] Putrefaction of the firſt Animals that Michapous deſtroy'd, becauſe of the Diſcord that reign'd ſo much among them. The new-created Men invented the Bow and Arrow, which they employ'd againſt the Beaſts. It happen'd on a Day, that one of them being ſeparated from the reſt, diſcover'd a Hut; here he found Michapous, who gave him a Wife, and eſtabliſh'd the ſeveral Duties to be obſerved between them: Man had Hunting and Fiſhing allotted him for his Part; Spinning, Dreſſing the Victuals, and all the Affairs of the Houſe, were the Woman's Province. Michapous drew up Marriage-Articles for the Companions of this Man, all of them to the ſame Tenor. He gave every one of them away in Marriage with his own Hand, inveſted them with a Power over Beaſts, telling them that he had created them to die, but that after Death they ſhould go into a delightful Place. Men lived in a State of Felicity and Contentment for ſome Ages; but as Mankind were prodigiouſly multiply'd, they were obliged to ſearch for new Countries to hunt in. At length Diſcord and Jealouſy began to ariſe among the Hunters, and to this they aſcribe the Origin of Wars.

Wife

THE ſame Author informs us, that the Savages have Banquets in honour of Michapous, and that they are obliged to eat the Victuals to the very Bones, which they conſecrate to Michapous and the Genii. If the Gueſts don't eat up all that the Maſter of the Feaſt has ſet before them, 'tis a bad Omen for him, and he is to expect a great many Croſſes in all his Undertakings. He tells us that they ſacrifice Dogs to the Sun.

CHAMPLAIN tells us, in his Travels, another Opinion of ſome Savages of Canada concerning the Creation, &c. They tell us that there is one only God, Creator of all Things: That after he had form'd all Nature, he took a certain Number of Arrows, planted them in the Earth, and from thence drew Man and Woman; an Original ſuitable to the Character of thoſe People who live only for the Sake of deſtroying one another by Wars. They believe in a Quaternity, that is to ſay, a divine Eſſence comprehended under four Perſons, viz. God, who is the Father; the Son; the Mother; and the Planet of the Sun; and that this Mother is the Original of Evil.

OTKON, call'd Okée by the Virginians, and Atahauta, called Manitou by the Canadans, &c. are Names which probably may expreſs the ſame Idea in the different Languages of thoſe Nations. 'Tis the univerſal Spirit that gives Being and Motion to Matter; 'tis the firſt Cauſe, of whoſe Power and Faculties the Savages have formed certain very confus'd Notions. But could we expect to meet with even ſo much Reaſoning as this in Savages, ſince, if Father Hennepin is to be credited, they have never made the leaſt Uſe of their Reaſon in any Thing relating to Religion? and that, as he tells us, they are even incapable of making the moſt common and trite Arguments on this Subject. He nevertheleſs aſſures us, That they have ſome confus'd Notions of the Deity. The Savages who inhabit near Miſſiſippi acknowledge the Sun to be God; others, a Genius who preſides in the Air; ſome look upon Heaven as a Divine Being, &c. The Southern Nations ſeem to believe in an univerſal Spirit; they imagine that all Things, not excepting the inanimate, are informed with a Spirit. They offer up Vows and Prayers to them; they invoke the Rivers, the Floods, and thoſe dreadful Caſcades, which in the Relations of Miſſiſippi and Canada are call'd Falls; they accompany theſe Invocations with Offerings, conſiſting of a few Beaver Skins, which they hang on the Branches of a Tree near the Water-Fall. If they happen to meet with any Torrent or Water-Fall in their Way, they throw into it a Gown made of Beaver-Skins, with Tobacco, China, &c. By this Sacrifice, they flatter themſelves they ſhall draw down the Bleſſing of the Spirit that inhabits the Flood. Their Prayers conſiſt in Supplications to the Spirit of the Water-Fall, that he would give them good Succeſs in Hunting, in beſeeching him to ſuffer them to re-croſs it without [a] Danger; in imploring its Protection againſt their Enemies, and its Aſſiſtance in in their intended Revenge. They are no ſooner return'd from their Expedition, but they ſacrifice ſome Priſoners in its Honour. "They, nevertheleſs, continues the ſame "Father, have no outward Ceremony of Religion that gives the leaſt Indication of "their paying any Worſhip to the Deity. We find neither Sacrifices, Temples, Prieſts, "or any Marks of religious Worſhip among 'em. —— All their Belief is, that an uni-"verſal Spirit inſpires 'em with every Thing [a] they ought to do:" That he directs their Thoughts and Dreams; nay, to ſuch Lengths do they carry it, that if they fancy themſelves inſpir'd to kill a Man, or to commit any other wicked Action, they don't believe it would be a Crime to put their Inſpirations in Execution. The Contradictions in all the Reflections which this Father makes with regard to the Religion of the Miſſiſippians are but too manifeſt. What does he call the paying religious Worſhip to any Deity? If they believe there is an univerſal Spirit that governs the World, and pervades all Beings, as well the inanimate as thoſe that have Life; if they imagine themſelves bound to follow his Inſpirations; that they are to truſt in him, and offer up Prayers and Sacrifices to him, what can we call this but a Worſhip and religious Ceremony?

THESE People have their Jugglers, or Mountebanks, who pronounce their Oracles, interpret their Dreams, which they look upon as ſo many Orders and Admonitions from God: They foretel Things that are to come to paſs, and [b] boaſt that Rain, calm or ſtormy Weather, Fruitfulneſs, and good Succeſs in Hunting, is intirely under their Direction. We may believe that they want neither Cunning or Evaſions to defend the Impoſture when the Event does not correſpond to the Prediction. We ſhall not make any further Reflections on their Juggling, which is exactly the ſame with what has been already obſerv'd on that Head.

WE are aſſur'd that theſe Savages aſcribe a reaſonable Soul to ſeveral ſorts of Beaſts, and that they have a peculiar Veneration for the Bones of Elks and Beavers. They fancy that the Souls of thoſe Beaſts come to ſee how their Bodies are treated; that they afterwards acquaint both the Living and the Dead with it; that if theſe Animals happen to be ill treated, they will not ſuffer themſelves to be any longer taken either in this World or the next. We may naturally believe, that the Skill and Subtilty of theſe Animals was what gave Riſe to this Notion. We will conclude this Account of the Idolatry of theſe People, with a Circumſtance worthy their Ignorance, and that Weakneſs of Mind, which is inſeparable from the Cloud with which they are ſurrounded; and that is, the Belief they have in [c] Prodigies, and their Fear of Thunder. Some of theſe, ſays Father Hennepin, in the Place juſt quoted, always carry the Skeleton of a Crow along with them, and affirm that their Lives are in its Power; others have an Owl, the Shell of ſome Sea-Fiſh, or a Bone: They nevertheleſs are frighted at the ſcreeching of an Owl, and look upon it as an ill Omen. We may ſuppoſe that this is not their familiar Spirit.

THE Natches, who are a People of Miſſiſippi, have had a kind of Temple from Time immemorial, in which a Fire is kept continually burning by a Prieſt, whoſe Office it is to take care of [d] the Temple. This Edifice is dedicated to the Sun, from whom they pretend the Family of their Chief is deſcended. The Tenſas, or Taenſas, have the ſame Object of religious Worſhip: Theſe People alſo dedicate to it Temples, Altars, Prieſts with a Fire, which, like the Natches, is kept burning in his Honour. 'Tis well known that this perpetual Fire repreſented the Sun among ſeveral Nations of Antiquity [a]. Whenever the Moon is in the Wane, they carry a great Diſh by way of Sacrifice to the Gate of the Temple, fill'd with their greateſt Dainties, and theſe their Prieſts offer to this deified Planet.

[a] This Principle is very like that of the Quakers among us, who have an Overflow of Light, which ſhines within them ſo powerfully, that it dazzles their Eyes, and dances 'em into a thouſand Vagaries of Error and Enthuſiaſm.

WE ſhall preſent the Reader with the Deſcription of one of thoſe Temples of the Sun, as we find it in the Author of the Relation of Louiſiana, under the Name of the Chevalier de Tonti, printed in the Collection of Voyages to the North, Vol. V. "They tell "us, that it is ſurrounded with a high Wall: The Area within the Wall forms a kind of "Court for the People to walk in. Upon this Wall a great Number of Spikes are ſet, "on the ſharp Ends of which they fix the Heads of their Enemies, or of the greateſt "Criminals. Over the Front is laid a great Log, rais'd very high, ſurrounded with a "great Quantity of Hair, and garniſh'd with a Number of Scalps, like ſo many Tro"phies. The Inſide of the Temple is no other than a [b] Nave, which is painted or vari"colour'd all round the Top, with a great Number of different Figures. In the Mid"dle of the Temple they make a great Fire-Place, by Way of Altar: They always "burn three great Logs, laid end-ways, which two Prieſts with white Hoods ſupply "with Fuel. 'Tis round this flaming Altar that all the Congregation offer up their "Prayers with ſurprizing Howlings. The Prayers are three Times a Day, at Sun"Riſe, at Noon, and at Sun-Set. A Cloſet is made in the Wall, which they call "the Tabernacle of the God. Two Eagles with extended Wings hang in it, and look "towards the Sun." This Deſcription gives us a pretty tolerable Idea of the religious Worſhip of the Miſſiſippians. Would one imagine it were poſſible that Devotion ſhould exhibit itſelf in ſo much Pomp on the Banks of a River, where one would expect to meet with no other than brutiſh and ruſtic Savages? But then is not this Deſcription merely fabulous?

[c] THE Canadans give the Name of Great Spirit to that Supreme Being whom the other Savages acknowledge to be the Univerſal Spirit. Theſe People argue very logically, if we are to give Credit to a Traveller who has borrow'd the Pen and Character of a degraded [d] Monk. He tells us, "That they prove the Exiſtence of a Supreme "Being from the Frame of the Univerſe, which leads us to a Superior and Almighty "Being; whence it follows, that Man was not made by Chance. —— They worſhip "this ſuperior Being after the moſt abſtracted manner imaginable, which they explain "as follows: —— As the Exiſtence of God is inſeparable from his Eſſence, he muſt "comprehend all Things, appear in all Things, and give Motion to all Things. In "fine, this God is all we ſee, all we comprehend; who, as he exiſts without Bounds, "without Limits, or a bodily Subſtance, ought therefore not to be repreſented under

[a] The Romans had their holy Fire, the Preſervation of which was committed to the Veſtal Virgins. Numa fancied it to be the Principle of all Things. —— The Veſtals were oblig'd to keep this Fire with all the Care in the World; and if it happen'd to go out, 'twas thought Impiety to light it at any common Flame, but they made uſe of the pure and unpolluted Rays of the Sun. Every Year, on the firſt of March, whether it had gone out or not, they always lighted it a-new.

This degraded Monk has interſper's'd the greateſt Part of his Writings with Jeſting and Buffoonry, not excepting the Travels of la Hontan, which he imagin'd would be more diverting upon that Account, though often at the Expence of Truth. If the Savages reaſon as juſtly as he makes 'em do, one would be apt to think that they had ſtudied the Evaſions and Subterfuges of the Logic of the Schools.

" the Figure of an old Man, or any other Shape, how beautiful, great, and extenſive " ſoever; for which Reaſon they worſhip him in every Thing they ſee. This is ſo " true, that whenever they ſee any Thing that is beautiful, curious, or ſurprizing, " eſpecially the Sun and other Stars, they cry out in this Manner, O Mighty Spirit! " we ſee thee in all Things. Thus they acknowledge a creating Being, under the Name " of The Great or Mighty Spirit, or the Maſter of Life, whenever they reflect even " upon the moſt trifling Things." Would it be poſſible to paraphraſe better, or juſtify more ingeniouſly, the obſcure and doubtful Manner in which we are told theſe Savages expreſs their Belief, with regard to the firſt Principle of Nature? Nor does he make 'em argue with leſs Subtilty on the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion. He has put into their Mouths all the Scruples and Difficulties that could poſſibly enter into the Head of the greateſt Free-Thinker, who was endeavouring to ſap its very Fundamentals.

The Sacrifices and Adorations of the Canadan Savages.

WE have already obſerv'd, that the Savages of Canada, and thoſe of Hudſon's-Bay, &c. give the Name of Kitchi-Manitou to the Great Spirit. They aſcribe to him every Thing that is good, as on the contrary they attribute to that evil Genius, whom we have already mentioned under the Name of Matchi-Manitou, every Thing that is evil; but beſides theſe, they eſtabliſh good or evil Intelligences, or Spirits, in every Thing that to them appears wonderful; and give to all Things their preſiding good or evil Genii, as they appear to them either uſeful or noxious. La Hontan tells us, that they rank Gold and Silver in the Number of the latter; which Notion is pretty juſt. They are Eye-Witneſſes to Part of the Care and Trouble the French give themſelves to heap up Wealth; but what would they not ſay, were they to ſee the ſordid Avarice of ſome of our Europeans? La Hontan tells us, that the [a] Savages never ſacrifice living Animals to Kitchi-Manitou; but burn in his honour Goods, for which they trade with the French, the Value whereof is ſometimes upwards of fifty thouſand Crowns. Here follows the Deſcription which that Traveller has given us of the whole Ceremony: They chuſe a clear and ſerene Day for the performing of it, when every Savage brings his Offering, and lays it on the Pile. Afterwards, when the Sun is at the Meridian, the young Canadans ſurround the Pile with lighted Barks of Trees, in order to ſet fire to it. The Warriors ſing and dance till the Sacrifice is conſum'd, at the ſame Time that the old Men addreſs themſelves to Kitchi-Manitou, and preſent at Intervals their lighted Calumets to the Sun. The Songs and Dances laſt during the whole Day, and the Homage of the Calumet from the Riſing of the Sun to its Setting, obſerving to worſhip him at his Riſe, his Meridian, and his Setting. The Figure repreſents the Sacrifice of the Canadans in honour of Kitchi-Manitou.

WE ſhall now preſent the Reader with their Form of Prayer. They ſupplicate the Great Spirit, or Kitchi-Manitou, whom they acknowledge to preſide over their Lives, to protect them againſt the Wicked, to grant them his Favour, to preſerve the Strength and Bravery of their Warriors, to ſtrengthen the Spirit of their old Men, and to inſpire them with good Counſels; to increaſe and preſerve their Families, to protect their Children againſt wicked Spirits, and from the Hands of the Wicked, in order that they may one Day prove the Pleaſure and Conſolation of their aged Parents. They beſeech him to ſhed his Bleſſings on the Harveſt, on the Villages, and the Hunters; to teach them his Will in Dreams, and after Death to waft them to the Region of Souls.

[a] Nevertheleſs the Savages of Miſſiſippi ſacrifice Priſoners to the Genii, which they believe preſide over the Waters, as was before obſerv'd.

THE Subject of their Songs is the Praiſes of the Beauty of the Works of Nature, the Goodneſs of God, their Victories, and the Defeat of their Enemies. The Women addreſs Speeches to the Riſing Sun, and preſent their Children to him at the ſame Time. At his Setting the Warriors come out of their Villages to dance the Grand Spirit Dance: However there are no fixed Days for the Sacrifices and the private Dances. Theſe Particulars are borrowed from la Hontan.

WE are perſuaded that a long Reſidence, and repeated Inroads for ſome Years into the North Parts of America, would procure us a clearer, more exact, and more regular Account of the Religion of thoſe Nations; but then the Traveller muſt reſolve to lay aſide all his Prejudices muſt have a greater Stock of Learning and Underſtanding than thoſe generally have who ramble up and down the World, muſt be informed with a Capacity able to diſcover the Original of the Principles of the Savages, and above all, muſt have Patience and Mildneſs to argue and Diſcourſe with them. However brutiſh and ſavage the above-mentioned People may be, yet 'tis manifeſt, that they are not Atheiſts, and that their prodigious Ignorance does not obſtruct their going back to a firſt Cauſe, ſuperior to their Genii, which they imagine to inhabit all Beings. We are aſſured, that 'tis a very difficult Matter to convert them to Chriſtianity, and that they continue fix'd in their Notions, unable to reliſh the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion, to which they liſten with an Indifference capable of confounding the Zeal of a choleric Devotee. They often alledge much the ſame Reaſon for their refuſing to embrace the Principles of Chriſtianity, as an idolatrous Prince in the Eaſt Indies did, to the Archbiſhop of Goa; whoſe Words were as follows: Had God deſign'd me for a Chriſtian, I ſhould have been ſo from my very Infancy [a].

WE are aſſured that there is hardly the leaſt Mark of religious Worſhip among the Savages of Terra-Nova.

Marriage Ceremonies of the Inhabitants of HUDSON'S BAY, MISSISIPPI, and CANADA.

AN [b] Author who has given us a Relation of Hudſon's-Bay, tells us, that its ſavage Inhabitants marry as many Wives as they can maintain; that they alſo have the Cuſtom of marrying their Wives Siſters, from an Opinion they have of their agreeing better together than Strangers. Another [c] Author aſſures us, That the Inhabitants of Louiſiana have the ſame Cuſtom, and that nothing is more common than to ſee four or five Siſters married to the ſame Man. She that firſt happens to be a Mother, enjoys certain Prerogatives, which conſiſt in being exempted from ſeveral domeſtic Cares. As to the Preludes of Marriage, a Savage that is in love with a Woman, does not commonly ſpin out the Time of his Courtſhip to any Length: The Moment his Breaſt is inflamed, he reveals his Paſſion, and in order to obtain the Object of his Wiſhes, he gives an Entertainment to her Family, and makes her Father ſome Preſent; and no ſooner has he obtained their Conſent, but he takes her home to him, without haggling for her Portion.

FATHER Hennepin has been more exact and particular upon the Marriage of thoſe People: He tells us, "That their Marriage is not a Civil Contract: The Husband and "Wife never marry with an Intention of binding themſelves to each other for Life;

[a] Hiſtory of the Chriſtianity of the Indies, by Monſ. de la Croze, Book iv.
[b] Collection of Voyages to the North, Vol. vi.
[c] Ibid. Vol. v.

" they cohabit together ſo long as they agree, but the Moment domeſtic Broils begin " to ariſe, they ſeparate from one another without the leaſt Formality." They marry their Daughters very young; and though the Wife is not old enough to have any Commerce with her Husband, ſhe yet ſuperintends her domeſtic Affairs, while the Huſband goes a hunting, and brings what he kills to her Father. They often marry without any amorous Formality; they have no Love-Toyings, no Converſation, no wanton Careſſes, to create an Acquaintance before they tye the Gordian Knot, which often is fatal in other Places. Let us ſuppoſe, for inſtance, a ſavage Man and Woman together, who never ſaw one another before, and that one of them ſhall ſuddenly have a Deſire of being married; the Party thus prompted will immediately paſs over all the Formalities which ought to be obſerved on thoſe Occaſions. The amorous Savage will, without the leaſt Ceremony, aſk the Perſon he deſigns for his Wife, if ſhe has a Mind to have him; and ſhe anſwers at once, Yes or No, without conſulting her [a] Friends. To this reciprocal Conſent ſucceeds a kind of Ceremony, which we may conſider as the Effect of the Modeſty of the Female Savage, and of her future Oeconomy; which is, that in the Evening of the Wedding-Day the Bride takes her Ax, goes and cuts down Wood in the Fields, and afterwards makes it up into a Load; then lays it on the Ground before the Door of her future Husband's Hut, and ſits down near her Lover, who makes no other Compliment than, that 'tis Time to go to Reſt, and a little after ſlips to Bed to her. Father Hennepin adds, That the Friendſhip of thoſe Savages is very fickle and wavering, and that whenever they happen to meet after falling out, they look upon one another with the utmoſt Coldneſs and Indifference. Whenever they ſeparate, the Wife ſometimes carries away her Clothes and Furs, and ſometimes only takes a Piece of Stuff to make a Petticoat, and a Blanket. The Children follow their Mother, who takes care to provide for them, becauſe the Poſſeſſions of every Family, or every Tribe ('tis thus Father Hennepin expreſſes it) are in common. Some indeed follow their Father; but thoſe Savages who ſeparate themſelves from their Wives, generally leave the Children with them, and tell them that they don't believe them to be their own. This is natural enough, if it be true that they are as eaſy and complaiſant as they are ſaid to be: At leaſt it appears by what Hennepin has related of them, that they have no great Affecton for the conjugal Yoke, and that they ſeparate themſelves from their Husbands without any Reluctance. Nor are the Men more juſt on that Head; when a Savage is out upon an Inroad he ſhall hire a Woman for ſome Days, or Weeks, which does not any Way diſguſt her Parents, becauſe they get Furs by this Cohabitation. The lawful Wife, or which is more proper, the firſt Wife, keeps the Houſe, and ſows the Corn, whilſt the other is roving up and down the Country with her Husband: But as ſoon as he is returned home, he ſends back his Fellow-Traveller with Preſents, and returns to his domeſtic Wife, unleſs it happens that the Charms of the former ſhould efface all the Beauties of the latter. We muſt not omit, that the Wife has the ſame Privilege, and that ſhe is allowed to make herſelf amends during her Husband's Abſence. Notwithſtanding the Account that has been given of the Opinion theſe Savages have of Marriage and of conjugal Fidelity, it yet meets with ſome Exceptions. As we have ſome People among us that are mere Savages upon that Head, they in like Manner have thoſe among them who obſerve ſtrictly all the Duties of a married Life, and who do not look upon it as a Yoke, but a State of Felicity. In a Word, we meet with Husbands in Canada who love their Wives with the utmoſt Tenderneſs.

THE Moment [b] a Man has made ſome Preſents to the Parents of his future Spouſe, ſhe becomes his Property; and 'tis a Purchaſe he has made. It ſometimes, though very

[a] The Reader may obſerve that this contradicts what was obſerv'd Page 43. Line 37. &c. but after all, we do not pretend to anſwer for all the Contradictions that are to be met with in the Relations which Travellers give us of the Religions in America.

[b] Father Hennepin, in the Collection of Voyages to the North, Vol. v.

rarely happens, that the Parents take back their Son-in-Law's Children, and return them the Preſents they had receiv'd: We have already obſerved in the foregoing Diſſertation, that thoſe People have very little Propenſion to Jealouſy: Nevertheleſs, ſome Savages are as jealous as the Italians; and puniſh the Infidelity of their Wives with great Severity. One of theſe Husbands ſhall cut off his Wife's Noſe or Ears, nay, put her to Death; which is attended with no other Conſequence than his being obliged to make a Preſent to the Parents of the Deceas'd, in order, we are told, to dry up their Tears.

[a] SUCH Savages as are bred up to War, do not marry before five and twenty or thirty, for fear of deſtroying their Vigour by cohabiting with Women: Thoſe who have any Commerce with them before that Age, are look'd upon as a kind of Cowards, or at leaſt, as a Set of People that are not fit either for War or Hunting. But the Reader is not to imagine they are chaſter becauſe they live in a State of Celibacy. The Canadans are of Opinion, that a perpetual Chaſtity occaſions Vapours and Pains in the Back; ſo that a young Warrior, who is deſirous of preſerving his Health, [b] muſt run the Match once a Week.

[c] HERE follows an Account of thoſe Canadan Amours as we find it in la Hontan. They never mention their Paſſion to the She-Savages in the Day-Time, but ſay that the Night is more ſuitable to amorous Blandiſhments. [d] " As ſoon as a young Man, after " having paid two or three Viſits to his Miſtreſs, imagines that ſhe looks upon him " with a propitious Eye, he behaves as follows, in order to be fully convinc'd of it. " We are to obſerve, that the Savages live in a kind of Equality, agreeable to the Senti- " ments of Nature, (which makes them not ſtand in Fear of Thieves and domeſtic Ene- " mies) for which Reaſon their Huts are open Day and Night. Two Hours after Sun- " ſet, the Slaves take care to put out the Fire before they go to Bed. Then the young " Savage goes into his Miſtreſs's Hut, wrapp'd up in a great many Clothes, when he " lights a kind of Match at the Fire.....and afterwards draws near her Bed. In caſe " ſhe puts out the Match, he lays himſelf down by her; but if on the contrary ſhe " wraps herſelf up in the Bed-Clothes, he retires; for this is a Sign that ſhe is not pleas'd " with his Viſit. This is the Match, the Ceremony whereof is repreſented in four Com- " partments.

THE ſame Author aſſures us, That theſe amorous She-Savages drink the Juice of certain Roots to prevent Conception, or cauſe Abortion; for if a young Woman ſhould happen to have a Child, ſhe would never meet with a Husband; conſequently they muſt be very nice Artiſts to miſcarry when they pleaſe. " The moſt ſingular Circum- " ſtance, continues the ſame Author, is, that they give their Lovers leave to ſit down by " them on the Bed, only to talk with them a little; but if, among the ſeveral Moments " they ſpend together, one ſhould happen to be more agreeable than the reſt, they will " not ſcruple to grant their Lover the laſt Favours. The Reaſon of this is——the Re- " ſolution they have taken of not being ſubject to their Lovers."—— Which Cuſtom juſtifies what we have already advanced, with regard to the Notion theſe People have of the Freedom in that State of Independance which precedes Marriage.

[b] This is the Term by which they expreſs the nocturnal Rambles of the Canadan Lovers. La Hontan.

[c] We have omitted all the Ornaments and rhetorical Flouriſhes with which the Baron has ſtuffed his Relation, becauſe there is Room to believe he had no other Guide herein than his wild Imagination. It will therefore be much ſafer to give Credit to ſuch a Writer as Father Hennepin, whoſe plain and unaffected Narration is more perſuaſive than all the Ornaments of a Monk, who takes Pleaſure in diſguiſing the Truth.

B. Picart. del:

WHENEVER a Canadan Savage, after having made himſelf famous by his warlike Exploits atchiev'd againſt the Enemies of his Country, takes a Reſolution of marrying, he draws up a Leaſe for a certain Term of Years. They would look upon a Contract for Life as a moſt grievous Puniſhment, or an intolerable Slavery. The Savage therefore looks out a Wife ſuitable to him; after which both Parties agree together, and communicate the intended Marriage to their Relations, who aſſemble in the Hut of the moſt antient Perſon among them: There they make an Entertainment, after the Canadan Faſhion, on the Day appointed, when they meet together with Joy and Satisfaction, ſing, and dance the Marriage-Dance. After theſe Diverſions the Bridegroom's Relations withdraw, the oldeſt four excepted; when the Bride, accompany'd with four antiquated She-Relations, preſents herſelf at one of the Doors of the Hut, where the moſt decrepid of the Bridegroom's four Kinſmen comes to receive her, and leads her to her future Conſort, to a Place where they are both made to ſtand upon a Mat. A Wand is preſented to them, which each of them holds by the End, whereupon the old Men make a few very ſhort Speeches. The Bride and Bridegroom alſo ſpeak to one another alternately, having ſtill hold of the Wand; they afterwards break it into ſeveral Pieces, and diſtribute them to the ſeveral Witneſſes. This Ceremony being over, the Bride is led out of the Hut, and the young Maidens who waited for her at the Door, conduct her back to her Father's Houſe, where her Husband is obliged to viſit her, till ſuch Time as ſhe has made him a Father. When this happens, ſhe packs up her Things, leaves her Father's Houſe, goes home to her Husband, and cohabits with him as long as the Marriage ſubſiſts.

LA POTTERIE, Author of the Hiſtory of North-America, relates ſeveral other curious Circumſtances in his ſecond Volume upon this Head. Whenever, ſays he, an Inamorato is ſure that his Miſtreſs loves him, he addreſſes himſelf to his Father, or his neareſt Relation, who takes upon him to go and viſit his Miſtreſs's Father in the Night-Time. He awakes him, lights his Pipe, and preſents it to him, and at the ſame Time demands his Daughter. When they are come to an Agreement, the young Man's Father aſſembles all his Relations, and declares to them his Intention of beſtowing his Son in Marriage. Theſe Relations bring as many Things into his Hut as they are able to beſtow, by way of Portion for the young Savage. His Mother carries Part of the Goods to the young Woman's Hut, and at the ſame Time the Bride's Mother declares to her Daughter that ſhe has married her to ſuch a one. The Maiden muſt not offer to retract; 'tis even an Honour to her to conſent at once: And from a ſtrange Abuſe, continues the ſame Author, the Fathers, Mothers, and eldeſt Brothers, are allowed to proſtitute ſuch a young Woman, becauſe, ſay they, her Body is not her own, but her Relations. She nevertheleſs bewails her Virginity, as he tells us in [a] another Place. Having received her Preſents, ſhe diſtributes them among the whole Family, notifying to them at the ſame Time the new Alliance. Every one gives ſomething towards the Bride's Portion. The Bridegroom's Mother and Siſter alſo bring Preſents to the Bride, whom they equip in a very ſplendid Manner on her Wedding-Day. This ſplendid Dreſs, as they call it, is their having their Hair perfumed with Bear's Greaſe, and a good Beaver's Skin over her Shoulders. In this Geer ſhe goes to her Mother-in-Law's, who ſtrips her of her Ornaments, and gives her others in Exchange, together with a great Kettle; when ſhe goes back again to her Fathers, where ſhe is again undreſs'd. Her Mother gives her a certain Quantity of Maiz, which ſhe carries to her Husband, who undreſſes her a Third Time; when the two Families divide all the Preſents of the Portion among themſelves.

THE Continence of the new-married Man is very exemplary: He carries it to that Length as to forbid himſelf for ſix Months Acceſs to a Fort, which he has had the Glory of conquering. However the Canadan Laws allow him to conſummate the Marriage four Days after the Solemnity; but he is perſuaded his Abſtinence is an authentic Teſtimony of the great Affection he has for his Wife, and would have it imagined, that he had no other Views, than to reflect an Honour to himſelf by this Alliance. The above-mentioned Author has expreſs'd himſelf pretty nearly in theſe Words; 'tis he is to anſwer for the Truth of it, or for the Flouriſhes with which he may have embelliſh'd it. " At the End of the Year, continues the ſame Author, the Wife returns perhaps to her " Mother's Hut, who now becomes the Proprietor of all her Son-in-Laws Poſſeſſions, " as alſo of whatever he gets either in Hunting or Fiſhing. The Husband not finding " his Wife at home, and imagining ſhe is gone to her Mother's, goes to the Hut at a " Time when he thinks the whole Family are aſleep; but the young Woman's Father " and Mother are upon the Watch, while ſhe, after all theſe Preliminaries, is faſt aſleep " by the Fire-Side, or pretends to be ſo. The Husband is no ſooner come into the " Hut, but he knows the Fire was made upon his Account; whereupon he ſits down " by his Wife. Then his Father-in-Law riſes up with an Air of Coldneſs and Indif- " ference, fills his Pipe, and gives it him to ſmoke. His Mother-in-Law brings him " a Diſh of Meat, and ſets it at his Feet; when he begins to eat, but does not utter " a Syllable." In a word, he continues two Years with his Father-in-Law, during which Time whatever he gets, either in Hunting, Fiſhing, or by Trade, belongs to his Mother-in-Law, as was before obſerv'd. [a] Here follows the Way of Life which the new-married Couple are immediately obliged to lead. Decency does not permit them to ſpeak to one another in the Day-Time, unleſs it be to break out into injurious Reproaches. The Modeſty and Baſhfulneſs of the Savages demand expreſly this Conduct: As ſoon as the two Years are expired, the Son-in-Law leaves his Father-in-Law, and then his Wife and he ſet up Houſe-keeping together, unleſs he has Thoughts of taking a Siſter-in-Law for his ſecond Wife. " The Husband is not allowed to marry any Wo- " man but what he receives from the Hands of the Relations of his Father-in-Law, " who, if he pleaſes, may give him his other Daughters in Marriage; but in caſe he " has no more, the Mother-in-Law adopts ſome of her She-Slaves in favour of her " Son-in-Law, or gives him one of her Nieces." We are told that Intereſt gave Riſe to this Cuſtom. " The Mother-in-Law has all her Son-in-Laws Poſſeſſions, and ſince, " if he were to marry a ſecond Wife in another Family, the Mother of the latter would " have the ſame Right as his firſt Wife's Mother," it has been thought proper to check in ſome meaſure the Inconſtancy of the Savage Husbands, by obliging them to marry only the Daughters in one Family, when they are deſirous of having ſeveral Wives at once. We meet with ſomething like this in the Story of Jacob, who not only married Rachel and Leah, but even their Servants. The firſt Wife has certain Privileges above the reſt, which occaſions Jealouſy among the Women, and is the Cauſe of domeſtic Quarrels; but the common Husband bears all with the utmoſt Patience, and is not a little proud of it, imagining that the Jealouſy of his Wives is a Teſtimony of their Affection.

We next proceed to the Conſequences of Marriage. The [b] Savages of New-France prefer Girls to Boys, and affirm that they are the Support of a Family. A menſtruous Woman withdraws from Society; all the Fires in her Hut are put out; they clean the Fire-Place, throw out all the Aſhes that were on it, and ſtriking Fire with a Flint, light up a new one. This Woman is obliged to live retired for a Week together, in a Hut that has no manner of Communication with the reſt. The reſt don't drink at the Stream ſhe has taſted; they never draw any Water out of it, and ſhe ſets certain Marks which diſcover the Condition ſhe is in. When a Girl finds her periodical Diſtemper coming upon her for the firſt Time, ſhe ſecludes herſelf for thirty Days from all

Society, except that of thoſe Women who tend her, during which ſhe ſmears herſelf with Coal. The Moment a Woman is with Child, ſhe breaks off all Communication with her Husband, till ſuch Time as the Child is two Years old; and when the Time of her Delivery draws near, they prepare a Hut for her, in which ſhe continues thirty [a] Days; and if ſhe lies in of her firſt Child, forty. All theſe Cuſtoms have ſome Affinity with the Jewiſh Law. As to that which prohibits the Man and Woman from cohabiting together till the Child is two Years old, 'tis too reaſonable to conceal its Merit from the Reader; and in caſe it be true, the Savages are not very brutiſh on that Account. The ſame Author adds, that when the Life of a Child-bed Woman is in Danger, they carry her into the Hut in which ſhe uſually lives; but after her Recovery, or in caſe ſhe happens to die, they pull down the Hut, and ſet it up in ſome other Place.

BARRENNESS is one of the chief Cauſes of Divorce among the Americans, though they are allowed to quit one another whenever they pleaſe. La Hontan tells us, That the Canadans generally give a Week's Notice before-hand, when they give the moſt ſpecious Reaſons they can poſſibly invent, in order that their Separation may appear in ſome meaſure conſiſtent with good Manners and Civility. But in general, ſays he, theſe Savages are not ſo very prying, and the only Reaſons they give, is ſome pretended Diſtemper, a Deſire of Eaſe, or a Tranquility neceſſary for the Recovery of their Health. Thrice happy Cure! the Preſcription whereof is of too great a Price in Europe to be as eaſily made uſe of there as in America. 'Tis however certain, that this Remedy would be of vaſt Service to us, as 'tis productive of uncommon Felicity. In Canada, when a Husband and Wife are reſolv'd to quit one another, the Ceremony made uſe of on that Occaſion is as follows: They bring into the Hut where the Marriage had been celebrated, all the little Pieces of the Wand which had been made uſe of on that Occaſion; theſe they burn with Solemnity, which compleats the Divorce without Strife or Diſpute. The Women have the ſame Freedom of marrying again as the Men; however, a kind of Decorum forbids their ruſhing into the Arms of a ſecond Husband during the Life of the firſt. When the Husband and Wife quit one another, they divide the Children equally between them; for Children, ſays la Hontan, are the Treaſure of the Savages. If there is an odd one, it always falls to the Wife's Lot.

THE two Compartments repreſent the Marriage and Divorce of the Canadans.

WHEN a Woman has ſeen Fifty, ſhe never meets with another Husband; the Canadans thinking it very ridiculous to marry a Woman who is too old to bear Children. When once a Woman is upon the Decline, ſhe has nothing charming in their Eyes. What Courſe ſhould thoſe Women take, who find themſelves deſpiſed becauſe they are old? I anſwer, they might conceal, by Art, their Age from the World: But in caſe their Sincerity will not ſuffer them to impoſe upon the other Sex, it muſt be owned that they carry it to much greater Lengths than our European Ladies. An old Woman of Canada, that has got ſtill a Colt's Tooth in her Head, will adopt ſome Priſoner of War, and keep him for her private Uſe. We may naturally ſuppoſe that this Slave is not one of the moſt contemptible Sons of Mars; be that as it will, 'tis natural to believe he is not ungrateful, and that he exerts himſelf to the utmoſt, to ſhew the deep Senſe he has of his Obligations to a Paſſion which gives Life to all Men, and lengthens his own.

[a] La Hontan tells us, that they obſerve a kind of Purification which laſts thirty Days, if they are delivered of a Son, and forty if of a Daughter.

Of the JUGGLERS, and their Manner of treating the SICK, &c.

ALL the Savages above-mentioned are very Healthy, and are free from a great Number of Diſeaſes which attack the Europeans. La Hontan tells us, That the Small-Pox and Pleuriſies are very rife among the Canadans; but as they are very vigorous and robuſt, when a Man goes off the Stage at Sixty, they ſay he died Young; becauſe they often live to an Hundred, and even upwards. A [a] Writer whom we have quoted before, and who has given us a Relation of Hudſon's-Bay, tells us, that the Inhabitants of it enjoy a very vigorous old Age. But when their Vigour is quite exhauſted by Age, they make choice of a voluntary Death, the Manner of which is as follows: The decrepid old Man makes an Entertainment after his Manner, to which he invites his Family, and addreſſes himſelf to them all in a Diſcourſe, the Subject of which turns upon Concord, and the Intereſt of his Family. He then makes choice of that Child who is moſt dear to him, and gives him a Rope, which he ties courageouſly about his own Neck, and deſires him to ſtrangle him, ſaying at the ſame Time, that he looks upon himſelf no more than a Burthen to the World. The Maſſagetes uſed antiently to do the ſame Piece of Service to their old Relations. The Savages of this Bay, continues the ſame Author, eſteem it a Happineſs to die in a decrepid old Age: They feed themſelves with the Thoughts of having a ſecond Birth in the next World, at the Age of the Children who ſuck at the Breaſt, and that they ſhall then live in eternal Youth: But that they ſhould meet with a contrary Fate in the next World, were they to die young; in which caſe they would be born again old and infirm. This ridiculous Notion might probably have been grounded on an Opinion antiently received by the antient Jews and ſeveral other Nations, viz. that Long-Life is the Gift of Heaven, that it is the Reward of Virtue, and that the Gods puniſh thoſe who have not lived a Life of Virtue, by the Infirmities with which they inflict them in this Life, and afterwards by Death.

[b] SWEATING is one of the moſt common Remedies which theſe People make uſe of. They have ſeveral Ways of Sweating; but that which is practiſed by the Inhabitants of the Upper-Part of Miſſiſippi is too remarkable not to be mentioned: They make a Hot-Bath, into which the Patient goes ſtark naked, with others as naked as himſelf, whoſe Buſineſs it is to rub him. This Bath they cover with the Hides of wild Bulls, Flint-Stones, and Pieces of Rock red-hot. The Patient thus ſhut up in the Bath, is obliged to keep in his Breath every now and then, and while the Juggler is ſinging as loud as he can bawl, thoſe who are in the Hot-Bath ſing alſo the while they are rubbing him.

THEY cure Diſeaſes of the Legs and Thighs by lancing the Parts infected, with a Knife made of Stone or Iron. Theſe Inciſions are afterwards rubb'd with Bear's Oil, or the Fat of ſome other wild Beaſt. They alſo have an Antidote to expel the Poiſon of Serpents, and make a Potion that is good againſt Agues.

ALL thoſe who go by the Name of Jugglers act in the double Quality of Prieſts and Phyſicians, which Dignity they cannot attain to, till after having undergone a Probation, [c] the Manner of which is as follows: "They ſhut themſelves up in a Hut during [b] La Hontan gives another Deſcription of the Place where the Savages of Canada ſweat: "'Tis, ſays he, a kind of "Oven cover'd with Mats, Skins, &c. in the Center of it they put a Porringer of burning Brandy, or great Stones "made red-hot, which raiſes ſo intenſe a Heat, as immediately throws them into a Sweat." They never let a Week paſs without Sweating, and make no Scruple of throwing themſelves in the Winter-Time into the Water or Snow, when they are all over in a Sweat.

Les PARENS demandent au DÉFUNT la cause de sa MORT.

"nine Days [a], and are allow'd no other Sustenance than Water; the Novice holding a "of kind Gourd-Bottle in his Hand, full of Pebble-Stones, with which he makes a "continual Noise, invokes the Spirit, beseeches it to speak to him, to admit him into "the Number of the Physicians; the whole accompanied with the most terrible Cries, "Howlings, Distortions, and Agitations, till he puts himself out of Breath, and foams "at the Mouth in the most frightful Manner. As soon as this Hurly-burly, which is "interrupted only by a few Moments of Sleep, that at last seizes him, is ended, on "the ninth Day he comes out of his Hut——when he boasts his having discoursed with "the Spirit, and of having receiv'd from him the Gift of healing Diseases, laying Storms, "and changing the Seasons." Father Hennepin adds, that nothing can be more dreadful than the Cries and Distortions of these Jugglers, at the Time of their practising their pretended Enchantments. 'Tis certain that they carry it on with great Skill and Cunning: But in general, the Cures they may perform by the Help of these Legerdemain-Tricks, appear rather to be owing to Chance, than to any Skill they have in Diseases. However 'tis certain, they are acquainted with several physical Herbs; nor is the Usefulness which arises from their repeated Discoveries in Sweating, Lancing, and rubbing, to be despis'd. 'Twould be as unjust to assert that they perform no Cures at all, as to affirm that the small Number of Persons they cure, is not more than sufficient to support their Credit.

A JUGGLER, says la Hontan, is a kind of Physician, or rather Quack, who having cured himself of a dangerous Distemper, is silly enough to fancy himself immortal, and that he is endow'd with the Virtue of Healing all kinds of Diseases, by his Discourses with good or evil Spirits. —— Every one laughs at these Jugglers behind their Backs, —— and looks upon them as Madmen, who have lost their Senses by some violent Fit of Sickness; they are nevertheless permitted to visit the Sick, whether it be to divert them, or to see these Tumblers jump, scream, howl, &c.——— All this Hurly-burly ends with their desiring an Entertainment of a Buck, or of large Trouts for the Company, who are very merry on these Occasions.

THIS Juggler makes a Visit to the Patient, and examines him very carefully, promising at the same Time to cast out the evil Spirit, when he immediately withdraws alone to a little Tent pitched for that Purpose; here he sings, dances, and howls like a Goblin: He then comes and sucks the Patient in some Part of his Body, and drawing some little Bones out of his own Mouth, tells him that he has taken them out of his Body; that he must chear up, since his Distemper is but a very slight one, and that, to be the sooner cured, he must send his Slaves —— to hunt the Elk and Stag —— on which his Cure depends. The Arts which our Quacks in Europe make use of, in order to maintian their Credit with the Vulgar, are almost as grosly stupid. We must not omit one remarkable Circumstance [b], which is, that in case the Juggler has not Wit enough to invent Reasons to justify his Patient's Death, they often make no Difficulty to kill him upon the Spot.

LA POTTERIE relates in his History of North-America, that this Quackery opens with a Banquet, and that their old Men assist at it; the Physician comes into the Assembly with a Bag on his Shoulders, in which he puts his Medicines, having a Gourd-Bottle in his Hand, with a Stick run thro' it, which serves for a Haft; he then sings upon the Subject of his Medicines, beating Time with his Gourd-Bottle, which is filled with little Stones. On a sudden the whole Assembly are seiz'd with enthusiastic Fits, so that nothing is heard but the mingled Noise of Voices and Gourd-Bottles. Then the Physician takes out his Drugs, breaks out into some Invocations, and begins to sing again

ſtill continuing in the moſt violent Agitations. The Juggler afterwards draws near the Patient with as haughty an Air as the moſt able Phyſician, turning ſeveral Times round the Patient in Cadence, the Aſſembly ſinging at the ſame Time. He afterwards touches every Part of the Patient's Body, and examines it with the Attention of a Man who really is, or would be thought to be, a profound Artiſt; after which he tells him very gravely, that he has a Spell in ſuch a Part of his Body, that he muſt throw it out, that he is going to endeavour at it, that the Diſeaſe is a very difficult one, and that he muſt perform a great many Operations in order to compleat a Cure. The Relations of the Patient liſten to the Sentence of this Æſculapius, rely upon his Honeſty, and beg him to do all he can for their Kinſman. They then ſing upon the Subject of the Wound, or the Part infected, and bring a great Kettle, in which they put the Preſents that are made to the Medico-Prieſt; who, wholly employ'd, in outward Appearance, on the Methods he muſt take to cure his Patient, either meditates, or ſeems to do ſo, on what Medicines will be expedient for that Purpoſe. But now recovering himſelf from a kind of Lethargy, he tells them that he has found out the Diſtemper, which they believing, abandon the Patient entirely to his Care. After he has heartily tortur'd him by the Medicines which he applies outwardly or inwardly, and by the violent Agitations he throws him into, he then tells the Company, he either is, or is not cur'd. A cunning Juggler, tho' he does not cure his Patient, is not at all deſpiſed upon that Account, nor loſes none of that Eſteem which his Art had gain'd him; for he extricates himſelf by aſcribing his ill Succeſs to the Patient's ill State of Health, the Power of the Spell or Charm, and the Will of the Spirits, who, ſays he, do all they can to deſtroy my Work.

THIS juggling Trade is very beneficial; nor is that of the Quacks in Europe leſs ſo. La Potterie tells us, that the Ilinois and the Southern Nations have the moſt able Jugglers among them. Theſe Savages boaſt their being able to kill an Enemy, though at two hundred Leagues Diſtance; for which Purpoſe they make a Figure of him, and therein ſhoot an Arrow juſt oppoſite to the Heart. Others take a Flint-Stone about the Bigneſs of a Pigeon's Egg, and make a Spell thereon, affirming that one of the ſame kind is form'd on the Body of their Enemy.

WE are told of another remarkable kind of Juggling, which is as follows: Whenever a Patient fancies he is bewitch'd, or that the Juggler perſuades him he is ſo, the latter goes to the Patient's Hut, ſurrounded with a Company of his young Diſciples; they then extend the Patient on the Ground before the Juggler, upon the Skin of a Beaver, or of ſome other Beaſt. The Phyſician feels every Part of the Patient's Body with his Hand till he comes to the ſore Part, on which the pretended Spell has been thrown: Then one of the Juggler's Diſciples lays the Skin of a Roe-Buck, made into ſeveral Plaits, upon the afflicted Part, after which the Phyſician throws himſelf with the utmoſt Violence on the bewitch'd Perſon, ſucks his Blood, foams at the Mouth, beats his own Back, nor does he ſpare that of the Patient, whom he beats from Top to Toe, in order to drive out the Charm, which indeed he at laſt effects. The Juggler then ſhews to the whole Aſſembly the Spell, which he had convey'd ſlily into his Mouth, or into the Plaits of the Skin. However, 'tis not always proper to produce the Charm at the firſt Signal, the Juggler muſt have the Art to vary the Operation; and indeed it is ſometimes repeated, but without Succeſs: However, 'tis ſometimes at the Expence of the Patient; but the ſame Maxim prevails among them as with us, viz. that 'tis better the Patient ſhould ſuffer than the Art.

SOME of theſe Jugglers give out certain Secrets of Charms, which are uſeful in War or Hunting. La Potterie, who is not always to be depended upon, becauſe of the Inaccuracy of his Relation, tells us, that the moſt eminent Jugglers are either lame or crook-back'd; back'd; that they ſometimes oblige the Patient to run thro' Flames and Fires of the Village; that in order to heal their Sick, they preſcribe Dances, in which the Men and Maids proſtitute themſelves; that they plunge the Patient naked into the Water or Snows, in the Depth of Winter.

THEY conſecrate, in ſome meaſure, the Medicines they make uſe of; the Ceremony whereof is performed in a very myſterious Manner. They lay them on a Skin, ordain a ſolemn Feſtival, and dance round them a whole Night long. We may naturally ſuppoſe that they have much Efficacy after this. This being done, the Juggler puts all the ſacred Medicines again into his Bag.

THE odd Geſticulations of theſe Jugglers are very well expreſs'd in the firſt Compartment of the Plate repreſenting the Funeral Rites of theſe Nations.

Funeral Rites of the CANADANS, MISSISIPPIANS, &c.

FATHER Hennepin tells us, in his New Diſcovery of a vaſt Country, &c. printed at Utrecht in 1697, that the Nadoueſſans bewail thoſe who fall in War, in order to ſtir up their Countrymen to Revenge, and till ſuch Time as they have ſatiated it. The Relation printed under the Name of the Chevalier de Tonti, in the fifth Volume of the Collection of Voyages to the North, tells us of a People in Miſſiſippi, who fall into Tears at the Sight of a Foreigner. The Reaſon of this is, that they fancy their deceaſed Friends or Relations are only gone a Voyage, and are always expecting their Return; and hope to meet with them among theſe Foreign Travellers. We are likewiſe told that they weep much more at the Birth, than at the Death of their Children; they conſidering their Birth as an Entrance into a State of Miſery and Affliction.

THEY believe in Tranſmigration, and the Immortality of the Soul. Some Savages are of Opinion that they paſs into the Souls of certain Animals; others, that they ſhall enjoy a ſecond Life, (provided they have fought courageouſly, and led a Life of Virtue) in the Society of a Nation that live in the utmoſt Felicity, and have a prodigious Quantity of Game; buf if on the contrary they have led ill Lives, they muſt expect to riſe in the Midſt of an unhappy Nation, who have no kind of Game, and conſequently cannot divert themſelves with Hunting. We find in the Deſcription of Louiſiana, printed in the fifth Volume of the Collection of Voyages to the North, that the Caciques, or Chiefs of the Natches, pretend to be deſcended from the Sun, and that they ſhall return to it after Death. Hennepin tells us, that the Nations who inhabit near Miſſiſippi and Canada, fancy "that the Soul does not quit the Body immediately after Death: That "they bury with the Deceaſed his Bow, his Arrows, ſome Corn, and Meat, in order "that he may not want Proviſions before he arrives at the Region of Souls; and as they "give a Soul to every ſenſible Object, they tell us that Men hunt the Souls of Bea-"vers, Elks, Foxes, &c. after Death." That Rackets alſo have Souls, otherwiſe it would be impoſſible for the Hunters to make uſe of them in paſſing over the Snows in the next World; thoſe of their Bows and Arrows are uſeful to them in killing Beaſts; thoſe of Hooks and Nets in Fiſhing, &c.

[a] IT may not be improper to give a Specimen of theſe Abſurdities, which probably flow from the Notion they have of an univerſal Genius, as was before obſerved. They are

[a] Fame and Glory come too late, when they find nothing of us to crown but our Aſhes. Alas! of what Uſe will thoſe Things be to us, which we muſt ſee and hear, when we have neither Eyes nor Ears. We laugh at the Cuſtom are alſo of Opinion that departed Souls have Society for ſome Time among the Living, and partake in all their Rejoicings; for which Reaſon they leave them a Portion of what they had at their Banquets.

THEY bury their Dead with as much Pomp as poſſible; they dreſs them, paint their Faces and Bodies with different Colours, after which they [a] lay them in Coffins made of the Barks of Trees, the Outſide of which they make exceeding ſmooth with light Pumice-Stones. They then ſet up a Palliſade round the Tomb, which is always raiſed ſeven or eight Foot from the Ground.

WE before took Notice of the Banquets theſe Savages make for their Phyſicians and ſick People. They alſo make Entertainments for their Dead, which are every way ſuitable to the Circumſtances that occaſion them. Every Thing is ſad and mournful: The Parents of the Deceaſed keep a deep Silence, and will not allow Dancing or Singing. All the Gueſts on theſe Occaſions make Preſents to the Parents, which they throw at their Feet, making at the ſame Time a little Compliment after their Way: This, ſay they, is to cover him; that to make a Hut for him, or to ſurround his Grave with a Palliſade, &c.

THEIR Women wear a Mourning Habit for a Year together, during which they are not allowed to take any Diverſion. The Father and Brother of the deceaſed Husband take care of the Widow. La Hontan, on the contrary, relates, that Widowhood among the Canadans laſts no longer than ſix Months: "During which Time, if either "of the ſurviving Parties dreams two Nights together of the deceaſed Husband or Wife, "they poiſon themſelves with the utmoſt Coolneſs and Deliberation. But if the Wi- "dower or Widow dreams but once of the Deceaſed, they ſay that the Spirit of Dreams "was not very certain the Deceaſed was unſatisfy'd with being in the Region of Souls, "ſince he is but juſt gone there, and does not dare to return again." They then think themſelves no longer oblig'd to keep the Deceaſed Company; and indeed it is but juſt they ſhould expect a ſecond Summons on ſuch Occaſions; and though they were not to viſit the Deceaſed tiill after the Tenth, 'twould ſtill be acting a very friendly Part.

SEVERAL of theſe Nations ſolemnize Feſtivals in Honour of the Dead. They take their Bones out of the Graves, and convey them into others, having firſt adorn'd them with Skins, and a kind of China-Necklaces: All this, ſay they, is of Uſe to comfort and relieve the Deceaſed. Theſe Feſtivals are celebrated annually, but not on any fix'd Day, as La Potterie informs us. They ſend Deputies to one another to ſolemnize theſe Anniverſaries. In a word, the North Americans perform very ſcrupulouſly whatever may reflect an Honour on the Memory of the Deceaſed. They weep over their Graves, they groan, ſay Prayers, and make Preſents to the ſurviving Relations, in order, ſay they, to dry up their Tears. They have particular Ceremonies for the Children of ſuch Perſons as are dear to them: They wrap their Bodies in a Skin painted with ſeveral Colours, and afterwards carry them to the Grave on a kind of Sledge: But they don't make any Preſents to the Relations of theſe Children, but on the contrary have ſome Gifts made to of certain barbarous Nations, who lay in the Graves of their Dead the Weapons they had made Uſe of in their Life-Time; and at the ſame Time commend thoſe who fatigue the Brain in order to be admir'd by Poſterity; as if thoſe Organs of our Bodies, by which we convey to ourſelves the Thoughts of others, were not as compleatly deſtroy'd as the reſt; and that 'twas not as equally neceſſary to be animated with Life to hear a Panegyric, as to make uſe of a Spear or Shield. Weekly Medley, N° 44.

[b] La Potterie tells us, That they cover the Body with Barks of Trees, over which they throw Earth and Stones, and ſurround the whole with Stakes to prevent the wild Beaſts from rooting it up. But theſe Funeral Rites are not uſed except in Villages; for when they die in the open Country, they lay them in a Coffin made of the Barks of Trees, which they lodge between the Branches of the Trees, or ſet them on four Pillars.

them, in order to dry their Tears. We are not to omit that the Corps is very well equipp'd. Hennepin tells us, That they have new Shoes on, a Steel to ſtrike Fire with, an Ax, China Necklaces, a Calumet, a great Kettle, Meat, Tobacco, and an Earthen Veſſel full of Sagamite, or Milk thicken'd with Corn. If the Deceaſed was a Warrior, they dreſs him in a military Habit, and give him his Bow and Arrows; the Souls of the latter never fail to follow their Maſters; nay, thoſe of all their Utenſils, not excepting the Souls of their very Kettles which the Warrior had made uſe of in his Life-Time, and are greatly delighted to ſerve him in a delicious Country, which they ſay lies to the Weſt of them, and is inhabited by immortal Hunters: For the only Notion they have of this Paradiſe, is, that they ſhall hunt in it to all Eternity. This ſenſual Notion prevents their comprehending thoſe which we form to ourſelves of the Joys of Heaven. If, after having very calmly liſtned for a conſiderable Time to what is objected with regard to that Inactivity, or rather Uſeleſſneſs of the Senſes after this Life, we ſhould ask, if they don't think our Notions of Paradiſe more conformable to Reaſon than their own, they would anſwer, That they have their Paradiſe, and we ours. Shall it be ſaid after this, that the wild Americans improve in the Chriſtian Religion? Wou'd not a Miſſionary loſe ſome of that Patience which is the greateſt Ornament of our Religion, whenever a Savage ſhould ſpeak to him in this Manner? [a] You have not Senſe enough to ask us what are our Notions of a Place ſo much above [b] our Heads, whither 'tis impoſſible for any Man to aſcend? Canſt thou ſhew us, by the Scripture thou mentioneſt to us, any Man who came from above, and the Manner how he aſcended thither? If the Souls of thy Countrymen go to Heaven, 'tis very happy for them; but as for us, we don't go thither after Death, but paſs into the Regions of Souls, &c. 'Tis not the Strength of the Arguments that confounds the Miſſionary's Reaſon, but the Want of ſome Handle, if I may be allowed the Expreſſion. 'Tis impoſſible to diſpute with a Savage from Revelation, if he does not give any Credit to it. And if they diſpute with him from Nature, how ſhall they inſtil Faith into him by the bare Aſſiſtance of human Reaſon? This would be an Attempt above the Power of Man; 'tis therefore only in the Power of the Holy Ghoſt; it is he, would the Miſſionary ſay, works the Miracles of our Converſions. La Hontan gives us ſome other Particulars concerning the Funeral Rites we juſt before quoted from Hennepin. " When a Savage dies, they dreſs him as handſomely as poſſible, (La Potterie tells us, that they anoint his Body all over, and alſo his Hair, with the Oil of Beaſts) " and then the Slaves of his Relations come and bewail his Death; but that " the Mothers, Siſters, or Brothers of the Deceas'd do not diſcover the leaſt Token of " of Sorrow. They ſay that he is very happy in being out of the Reach of Suffer- " ings, for———they believe that Death is a Paſſage to a better Life. As ſoon as " they have dreſs'd the Corps, they ſet it on a Mat, as tho' he were living. His Re- " lations ſet themſelves round about him, after which they all make a Speech to him; " they repeat to him all his noble Exploits, and the glorious Atchievements of his An- " ceſtors, when the laſt who ſpeaks addreſſes himſelf to him as follows:" (If the Baron has not embelliſhed his Relation with ſeveral Flights of Fancy, we muſt be forced to own, that a Canadan Panegyriſt gives a judicious Turn to every Thing, and that his Thoughts are witty enough.) " Thou art now, ſays the Savage Orator, ſitting in the " midſt of us; thou haſt exactly the ſame Shape as one of us; thou neither wanteſt " Arms, a Head, or Legs; nevertheleſs thou now ceaſeſt to be, and doſt begin to eva- " porate like the Smoke of this Pipe. Who was it that ſpoke to us two Days ago? " 'Twas not thee, otherwiſe thou wouldſt ſtill continue to ſpeak; it was therefore un- " doubtedly thy Soul, that is now in the great Region of Souls, in Company with " thoſe of our Nation. Thy Body which we ſee before us, will in ſix Months be what " it was two hundred Years ago. Thou neither feeleſt or ſeeſt any Thing, ſince thou " thy ſelf art nothing; nevertheleſs, becauſe of the Friendſhip which we had for thy

" The Savages have no Mourning, and never make an eſpecial Mention of the Dead, " that is, they never call them by their Names. They laugh at us whenever they hear " us talk of the Fate of our Relations, Kings, Generals, &c.

" WHENEVER a Savage dies, his Slaves marry other She-Slaves, and become free. They " adopt the Children that reſult from theſe Marriages, and look upon them as Children " of the Nation, becauſe they are born in their Villages and Country; nor is it juſt, " ſay they, that they ſhould labour under the ſame ill Fate with their Fathers, or be " born Slaves, ſince they themſelves do no way conſpire their own Begetting. The " ſame Slaves go daily and offer ſome Pipes of Tobacco at the Foot of their Maſter's
" Coffin, as a Teſtimony of Gratitude for their Enfranchiſement."

LA POTTERIE tells us, Then whenever a Child dies among the Savages of Hudſon's-Bay, the Father or Mother cuts off ſome of its Hair, which they make make up into a Bundle like a Doll, and ſet it in the fineſt Part of their Hut, together with their moſt valuable Goods. The Child's Mother mourns twenty Days, and pours forth her Grief to the Friends of the Family, who come and viſit her. The Husband makes an Entertainment for them, gives them Tobacco to ſmoke, and they in return make Preſents to him. The Friends are obliged to eat every Thing that is ſet before them, but the afflicted Father does not touch a Morſel, but ſatisfies himſelf with the Smoke of his Tobacco.

THE ſame Author relates, that thoſe who are preſent at the Burial, ſtrip the Body, which is their Perquiſite; and in caſe the Deceaſed left nothing behind him, the Relations are obliged to make up the Deficiency. They mourn by not cutting off or greaſing their Hair; by not taking the leaſt Care of their Perſons, and wearing nothing but tatter'd Clothes. The Parents wear Mourning for their Sons: The Sons mourn for their Father, and the Daughters for their Mother.

[a] Hennepin ſays the very contrary, as was juſt now obſerv'd. De la Potterie agrees better with Father Hennepin than with la Hontan in this Circumſtance.

LA HONTAN tells us, That their Councils are compoſed of the old Men of the Nation, who are all upwards of ſixty. The Cryer gives Notice of their Meeting, by proclaiming it aloud in every Street in the Village, when the old Men aſſemble in a Hut, deſign'd for that Purpoſe. Here they ſeat themſelves in the Form of a Rhombus, when having debated upon what is to be done for the Good of the Nation, the Speaker goes out of the Aſſembly: Upon which the young People make a Ring round him, himſelf ſtanding in the Center. They afterwards liſten very attentively to the Debates of the old Men, crying at the End of every Period, That's well.

THE myſterious Ceremony of the Calumet, which is as it were the Seal of all their Debates, is the Reaſon of our giving their Councils a Place among their religious Ceremonies.

Their DANCES.

THE ſame Reaſon obliges us to ſpeak of their Dances in this Place. La Hontan tells us, That they are of ſeveral Kinds; that of the Calumet, the Leader's Dance, the War Dance, the Marriage Dance, and that of the Sacrifice. All theſe differ in the Movement, and the Capers, and have their peculiar Beauties; but that of the Calumet is the fineſt. This is uſed when they are deſirous of receiving Strangers handſomely, or at the Reception of Embaſſadors. If theſe Embaſſadors or Foreigners come by Land, they are obliged to ſend a Meſſenger to the Village, to give Notice of their bringing the Calumet of Peace, when ſome young People advance forward, and range themſelves in an Oval Form. The Foreigners advance forwards; they all dance together, and make another Oval round the Officer who bears the Calumet. This Dance continues half an Hour; after which they conduct the Foreigners to the Banquet. But in caſe they come by Water, they are obliged to ſend a Canoo to the Village, with the Calumet of Peace fix'd in the Prow like a Maſt. The Village ſends out another Canoo to meet the Stranger.

Ceremonies of War uſed by the Canadans and Miſſiſippians, &c.

WE ſhall open theſe Ceremonies with the Deſcription of that of the Calumet. The American Savages have their Calumet of War and that of Peace, which Hennepin tells us are diſtinguiſh'd by the Difference of the Feathers. Whenever a People whoſe Herald has left the Calumet with another People, is attack'd by an Enemy, that which received it is obliged to ſtand by the invaded Nation. In caſe a Mediator, in the Heat of the Battle, preſents the Calumet, there immediately follows a Suſpenſion of Arms: And in caſe both Sides accept of it, and ſmoke out of the Calumet, a Peace is immediately concluded, and every Man returns home: But tho' one Side ſhould refuſe it, they would not hereby violate the Right which the Savages aſcribe to that Inſtrument, and which is the ſame among them as the Law or Right of Nations with us. La Potterie tells us, that by its red Plumage, Aſſiſtance is ſignify'd; white and grey mix'd, ſignify a ſolid Peace, and an Offer of Aſſiſtance, not only to thoſe to whom the Calumet is preſented, but alſo to their Allies. A Calumet that is red on one Side, and white and grey mix'd on the other, is a double Characteriſtic of Peace and War at the ſame Time: Peace to thoſe towards whom the white and grey Side is turned, and War to that People towards whom the red pointed.

THE Calumet Dance is always a Prelude to all great Enterprizes among the Savages. This Dance ſtrengthens Alliance, prepares to War, is a Mark of the Public Joy, the ſame as Bonfires among us, after ſome ſignal Victory, or on ſome Prince's Birth-day, &c. In a word, it anſwers to our Ball, for the Canadan Savages often give ſuch Foreigners as they have a Mind to diſtinguiſh the Diverſion of the Calumet, in like Manner as we entertain them with a Ball.

HERE follows the Deſcription of the Calumet Dance, which La Hontan and other Travellers call the War Dance. 'Tis perform'd in a Hut in Winter Time, and in the open Air in Summer. They then ſurround the Ball-room with Branches of Trees, and ſpread a great Mat made of Bull-ruſhes, painted with ſeveral Colours, and place on this Mat, which ſerves for a Carpet, the Manitou, or tutelary Deity, of the Perſon who gives the Dance. They place the Calumet to the Right-hand of this God; for this Feſtival is celebrated in his Honour, or 'tis he at leaſt that preſides at the Ceremony; and they raiſe round the Calumet a Trophy of Bows, Arrows, Clubs and Axes. After having thus diſpos'd Things in their Order, and a little before the Dance begins, that is to ſay, as the Aſſembly grows more and more numerous, they go and ſalute the Deity. This Homage conſiſts in perfuming him with Tobacco. The fineſt Voices are allow'd the beſt Seats, and the reſt range themſelves in a Ring under the Trees, all ſitting upon their Poſteriors. One of the Chief in the Aſſembly takes up the Calumet, in a very reſpectful Manner, and holding it in both his Hands, dances in Cadence, himſelf dancing at the ſame Time, obſerving always to keep Time with his Fingers. All the Motions of the Calumet are odd and whimſical, and have perhaps their Meaning. They ſometimes ſhew it to the Aſſembly, then preſent it to the Sun, and often hold it towards the Ground; they extend its Wings, as if they were going to ſet a flying; laſtly, they bring it near the Mouths of thoſe preſent, as if they were going to give 'em the Calumet to kiſs. This is the firſt Act of that rejoicing, which we may call a religious Feſtival. They afterwards have a Combat, to which they are animated by the Sound of Drums, or a Kind of Kettle-Drum; and the Voices ſometimes ſing in Chorus with the Warlike Inſtrument. Then the Savage, who has the Calumet in his Hand, invites ſome young Champion to take up the Weapons that are hid under the Mat, and challenges him to fight with him; when the young Warrior taking his Bow, his Arrows, and Ax, attacks him who has the Calumet in his Hand. The Combat is fought in Cadence, when the Calumet, which at firſt ſeemed to quit the Field, is declared to be victorious. They were certain that Fate would declare in its Favour. The third Act of the Ceremony relates entirely to the Conqueror of the young Warrior. He relates his Military Atchievement to the Aſſembly, ſtriking with a Club upon a Poſt that is fixed in the Center of the Circle, at the Concluſion of every Incident, as La Hontan aſſures us; and when he has no more to ſay, the Preſident of the Aſſembly makes him a Preſent of a fine Robe of Beaver Skin; after which the Calumet is given into the Hands of another Savage, and from thence to a third, and ſo on till the whole Aſſembly have performed the ſame Ceremony. If the Calumet is danced upon Account of an Alliance, the Preſident concludes the Ceremony, by preſenting the Calumet to the Deputies of the Nation with whom the Alliance is made.

THESE Savages declare War by ſending back a Priſoner to the Nation with whom they intend to be at Variance, giving him at the ſame Time an Ax, the Haft of which is painted Red and Black, with Orders to give it to his Countrymen. They ſometimes ſend back three or four Priſoners, but firſt make them promiſe not to ſerve in that War.

The

The Proclamation of War opens with a Banquet, to which the [a] General of the Enterprize invites all his Friends. This is a Banquet-Council, which poſſibly may bear ſome Affinity to thoſe of the antient Germans. Hennepin tells us, that they ſometimes make ten or twelve Entertainments before their ſetting out. Be that as it will, the General communicates his Deſign to the Aſſembly, and the Meaſures he intends to follow to put it in Execution. This Preliminary to his Enterprize is accompanied with the Songs and Dances of the Calumet. He there fixes the Day of ſetting out, and the Place of Rendezvous. They generally make choice of the Night, the better to conceal their March; but when it is to be general, the Preparations are made with great Pomp and Splendor. They make Entertainments, and offer Sacrifices; the Wives and Maidens are ordered to proſtitute themſelves, the better to engage their Warriors to exert themſelves for their Country. Finally, they beſtow extraordinary Honours on thoſe Heroes, and reward them before-hand by Gifts and Preſents, for all the Scalps which they promiſe themſelves they ſhall carry off from the Enemy.

La Hontan tells us, that the Savages of Canada begin to enter into the Field at twenty Years old, and never bear Arms after fifty. From twenty to fifty they go by the Name of Warriors. Theſe Warriors never go upon any Enterprize without firſt conſulting their Old Men, and are obliged to propoſe all their Deſigns to them. The Old Men debate thereon; after which the Speaker goes out of the Council-Hut, and declares the Reſolution that was taken in it, in the Manner juſt mentioned.

They are two or three Months in making their warlike Preparations. The General [b] ſings military Songs every Night, faſts once every two Days, does not eat with the reſt, prepares a ſolemn Feaſt before his ſetting out, to which all the Warriors of the Canton are invited; hangs great Kettles and Porcelane-Necklaces on the Poles of his Hut, gives and receives Preſents. Before he goes into the Field, he makes a Speech to the old Men, in which he declares to them pretty near the Time when he intends to make his Excurſions. He then begins to march, and ſings the Song of Death. This Song is made up of all the Terms that Fury can poſſibly dictate. One of the ſofteſt Expreſſions in it, is, that he abandons his Body to the Chance of War. We are told that he ſings and faſts every Day till Night, to the Time of his performing his Enterprize; then his Face is ſmutted with Black, and thoſe of his Soldiers much after the ſame Manner, in [c] order, ſay they, that their Enemies may not ſee them grow pale with Dread. He eats alone. Some Savages of Canada have a ſolemn Feſtival the Day after their ſetting out, by which they implore their great Spirit to grant them a propitious Return. Here follows the Subſtance of the Deſcription of it, as we find it in the Relation of a Traveller, who was himſelf an Eye-Witneſs thereof, and was undoubtedly very well acquainted with the Ceremonies and Cuſtoms of thoſe Nations. "The [d] Day after the ſetting out, ſays "he, (of the Miamis) a ſolemn Feſtival was celebrated, purpoſely that the great Spirit "might grant them a happy Return. They erected an Altar, on which they placed their "Gods; theſe were Bears Skins made up like ſo many Idols, whoſe Heads they had "ſmear'd over with green Earth. As every Zealot paſſed along before theſe Deities, he "bent the Knee in a ſuitable Manner. The Jugglers, and the reſt of the Order, held "their phyſical and juggling Bags in their Hands; affirming, that they marked out all

[a] If the General marches, his Cryer publiſhes throughout the Village, the Day he intends to give the War-Feaſt, when all who have a Mind to be his Gueſts, have their Diſhes carried to the General's Hutt. The Aſſembly being met, the General goes out into the Public Square, having his Club in his Hand, and followed by his Warriors, who ſeat themſelves round him. Immediately ſix Savages, each bearing a warlike Inſtrument, that has ſome Reſemblance to a Kettle-drum, come and ſquat themſelves down at the Foot of the Pole or Stake fixed in the Center of the Circle. At the ſame Time the General looks ſtedfaſtly on the Sun, all the Warriors doing the ſame; when he makes a Diſcourſe, or rather prays, to the great Spirit; afterwards the Sacrifice is offer'd up. La Hontan's Voyages.

THE Warriors carry their Wives and Concubines with 'em into the Field. When they draw near the Territories of the Enemy, they detach ſome Scouts, to prevent the Main Body from being ſurpriz'd. After they have ended their Enterprizes, in which they generally attack their Enemies by Thruſts and Puſhes, or by lying in Ambuſcade, they take off the Scalps from the Dead, and break out into what they call the mournful Shout. They even give the Enemy Notice, running away at the ſame Time as faſt as their Legs can carry them, to come and bury their Dead ; for theſe Savages, though they may appear to our Eyes to be diveſted of all Pity and Compaſſion, are nevterheleſs of Opinion, that 'tis one of the Duties of Humanity to bury the [a] Dead immediately. In the Manner the Ilinois and other Savages of Canada treat the Iroquois, according to La Hontan. All theſe Savages divide the Priſoners they take among their reſpective Families ; but a ſurprizing Circumſtance is, that theſe Captives who are expoſed in a Public Manner, each having a Wand ſeven or eight Foot in Length in his Hand, and ſet off with Tufts of white Feathers, ſing all the Time the reſt are reſolving upon their Fate, though they are almoſt ſure of being ill-treated, and inſulted by their Enemies. der may conſult the Account which Hennepin gives us of this Matter; and what will be mentioned on this Head in the enſuing Article.

[a] As they return from their Expeditions, they make their Court very aſſiduouſly to the Chief Leaders. As ſoon as the Night draws on, and that they are going to incamp, the young Warriors dance the Calumet. The Captain to whom they pay this Homage, ſends a Warrior of his own Family; and this Officer makes them ſmoke one after another in his Calumet of War. We call it a Homage, though it may poſſibly be an Act of Humiliation. Hennepin relates, "That the Ceremony was every Day cloſed by thoſe "whoſe Relations had been killed in War. They took ſeveral Arrows, and laying them "croſs-wiſe, preſented them by the ſharp End to their Leaders, weeping bitterly at the "ſame Time."

THE Commander keeps a Kind of open Table, during the Time that the War laſts, at which the principal Savages are preſent. Here they dance after Dinner, and while one Part of the Aſſembly is dancing, the Tears and Groans of thoſe are heard whoſe Friends or Relations loſt their Lives in the Field. This Ceremony, which at firſt ſeems to be a Public Rejoicing, changes afterwards into a whimſical Intermixture of Joy and Cruelty. Theſe Savages unite tolerably well certain Paſſions, which one would be apt to think incompatible.

The Manner how theſe Nations treat their Captives.

AS ſoon as a Priſoner is bound, he [b] ſings his Death-Song, becauſe he knows 'tis a Thouſand to One if he be pardon'd. When the Campaign, or rather the Inroad, is ended, the Savages return to their Village. In drawing near to it, they break out as many Times into the Dead-ſhout as they have loſt Men; and when they are come pretty near Home, they ſing the Mournful Song as many Times as they have killed Enemies. In the mean Time, their Youth of twelve or fifteen Years of Age make a Lane, and are all armed with Clubs to beat the Priſoners with; they repeat their Blows as ſoon as the Warriors have made their Entry, and that the Scalps of their Enemies appear, which are the Trophies of their Warlike Exploits. The next Day the Council meets to make a Diſtribution of theſe unhappy Wretches, who are always beſtow'd on ſuch Wives as have loſt their Husbands, or ſuch young Women as have loſt their Fathers.

[c] AFTER the Diſtribution, thoſe who thereby become their Maſters, have the Liberty of treating them as they pleaſe, and may either kill or ſave them. They take Care to feed them well, and even give them every Thing that is moſt [d] delicate in its Kind, in Order that they may have Strength enough to ſuffer Death with Bravery and Reſolution.

WE have already obſerved, that the Death of theſe Captives is a Kind of Sacrifice, which is manifeſt from the Sentence that is paſſed on the Condemn'd. La Hontan tells us, that when a Woman to whom a Priſoner has been allotted, is reſolved to put him to Death, ſhe tells him, that as her Father, her Brother, or her Husband, has no Slave to aſſiſt or wait upon him in the Region of the Dead, he muſt therefore ſet out immediately for that Purpoſe. The Perſon to whom we are obliged for the Death-Song, and who was himſelf an Eye-Witneſs to what he relates, adds, that they often ſpeak thus to the Slave condemn'd to die; Thou muſt die to appeaſe the Soul of him thou haſt killed. The Iroquois dreſs up thoſe Captives they condemn to the Flames, as pompous as poſſible. After they have fatten'd him for a conſiderable Time, as was before obſerved, he is adorned with Porcelane Necklaces from Head to Foot, and led to the Stake.

[b] The Song is in this Taſte: "I am brave and intrepid; I am not afraid of any Kind of Death; for I am a War-"rior, and deſpiſe the moſt dreadful Torments: All thoſe whom they terrify are daſtard Souls and Cowards, "and are worſe than Women. The brave don't value Life. May Rage and Deſpair ſeize my Enemies! Let me "devour 'em! Let me drink their Blood, &c." We are obliged to an Inhabitant of New-York for this Song.

AFTER Sentence has paſs'd upon him, he is tied to the Stake, when they burn his Body with Iron Inſtruments, during which he ſings the Death-Song. The unhappy Wretch diſcovers a moſt ſurprizing Conſtancy under theſe Torments; for he is not ſeen to ſhed one Tear, and indeed, were he to do ſo, they would reproach him with his Want of Courage: He poſſeſſes himſelf to a Wonder in the Midſt of his Torments; laughs at his Executioners, and tells them they don't underſtand their Buſineſs. [a]When they have tortured him in the moſt grievous Manner, they take off his Hair together with the Skin, which they leave hanging on his Shoulders; this being done, they lay a Porringer full of burning Sand upon his Head to ſtop the Bleeding. He then is looſed from the Stake, which they call beſtowing Life on the Priſoner, when they bend him towards that Side where the Sun ſets, (the reſt pelting him with Stones as he goes along) for the Savages place the Region of Souls to the Weſt, as was before obſerved. Then they cut and mangle his Fleſh, he being ſtill alive; and when he is dead, they all run in the Night-time, and beat up and down with their Clubs; in order, ſay they, to drive out the Soul of the Priſoner, who probably may have hid itſelf, to revenge the Torments and Inſults they had inflicted on his Body. Some Days after the Execution, a ſolemn Feſtival is made, during which they invite each other to Entertainments. They are ſure not to omit Singing and Dancing; but this Feſtival was chiefly inſtituted for the Diſtribution of the Scalps of ſuch Priſoners as they had taken or killed in War. The Warriors tie to the Scalp a Porcelane-Necklace, repreſenting the Body of the Perſon killed.

IT frequently happens, that a Woman to whom a Priſoner is given as a Slave, yielding to the ſoft Emotions of Pity, gives him his Life, delivers him from the Bonds of Slavery, and captivates him with thoſe of Love. Whatever may have been the Motive of his having Life granted him, he muſt yet be reſtored to that Liberty which the ill Succeſs of War had deprived him of, in a ſolemn Manner. They adopt him; and for this Purpoſe, they carry him to the Water-ſide, in order to waſh him, the Women and young Girls ſtill bewailing the Death of the Savage he ſucceeds: But the Men ſing the War-Songs, and cover the Body of the adopted Perſon with a new Robe of Beaver-Skins; after which he is numbered among the Relations of that Family on whom he had been beſtowed in the Diſtribution of the Plunder. [b]This Ceremony is alſo called Delivery, or Child-birth. They celebrate this Solemnity by an Entertainment, at which Time the Priſoner is adopted either as Son, Brother, Uncle, Couſin, or Nephew, according to his Age or Quality.

CÆLIUS RHODIGINUS tells us, but without quoting any Authority, that the antient Scythians uſed alſo to ſcalp their Enemies.

WE ſhall cloſe this Article with a Cuſtom which muſt naturally inſpire 'em with a prodigious deal of Courage, and that is their never allowing their Priſoners to be exchanged. "As ſoon as they are taken Priſoners, ſays La Hontan, their Relations and "their whole Nation look upon 'em as dead, unleſs they happen to have been ſo much "wounded. ---- that it was impoſſible for 'em to kill themſelves; in this Caſe they are "received, provided they have been able to reſcue themſelves out of the Hands of their E- "nemies: Whereas, were the former to come, they would not be regarded, even by "their own Relations, nor even meet with one ſingle Perſon that would look upon "them."

[a] La Hontan obſerves, that the Priſoners are treated much more cruelly, when there are Proofs of their having killed Women and Children. If it appears that they have killed Men only, their Vengeance goes no farther than the Shooting them with Guns or Arrows.

Superſtitious Ceremonies of thoſe Nations, before they go a Hunting.

HENNEPIN[a] has given us a Deſcription of this Ceremony, as practis'd by the Iroquois and Miſſiſippians. A few Days before theſe People ſet out to hunt the wild Bull, their old Men ſend out five or ſix Hunters to thoſe Places where the Chaſe is to be. When the Hunters are got there, they dance the Calumet, with as much Ceremony as if they were among ſome of their confederate Nations; and at their Return, they expoſe publickly for three Days ſucceſſively, ſeveral great Kettles ſet off with Feathers. During theſe three Days a Woman of Diſtinction walks in Proceſſion with the Cauldron at her Back before a great Number of Hunters. The Company is headed by an Old Man, who with great Gravity carries a Piece of Cloth, or ſomething like it, by way of Standard or Enſign. Hennepin, who aſſures us, that he himſelf ſaw this Proceſſion paſs along, relates, That "this Old Man made the Hunters or Warriors halt three "or four Times, to bewail the Death of thoſe wild Bulls they flattered themſelves they "ſhould kill. At the laſt Halt, the Old Men in the Company ſent out two of their beſt "Hunters as Scouts, to look for wild Bulls. They whiſpered them in the Ear at their "Return, before they begun the Chaſe: They then lighted up Bull's Dung dry'd in "the Sun, and primed, as it were, their Calumets with this new Fire, which they pre-"ſented to thoſe Hunters who had been out upon the Scout, in order for 'em to ſmoke. "The Ceremony ended, an hundred Men went behind the Mountains, and the ſame "Number marched another Way, in order to ſurround the Bulls, &c.

BEFORE a young Hunter goes to the Chaſe for the firſt Time, he is obliged to keep a religious Faſt, to which he prepares himſelf with the Care and Attention that is generally obſerved by thoſe who go through a State of Probation in any Order ſoever, when they are juſt growing up to Manhood. This Faſt continues three Days, during which the Novice is obliged to daub his Face over with Black, and imagines it to be a Homage he is bound to pay the great Spirit. He preſerves a Piece of Fleſh from every Deer, in order to devote it to him; and theſe Pieces are ſo holy, that no other Savage but the Hunter dares to touch them, not even although he were almoſt ſtarved.

Their VOWS.

ALL Relations are ſilent upon this Head of Devotion. Here follows the only Inſtance we meet with of that Kind: [b] Whenever there happens a great Scarcity of Victuals, they promiſe the great Spirit that a Portion of the firſt Beaſt they kill ſhall be given to one of the moſt conſiderable of their Nation, as a Teſtimony of the Love they bear it; and that they will not eat of that Animal before the Diſtribution is made. above-mentioned Author adds, "That they ſometimes keep the Beaſt two Months," till ſuch Time as they meet with a Perſon of Diſtinction, to whom they may give the devoted Morſel; if the Beaſt ſhould ſtink, or rot, during that Time, they burn it, in order to offer it in Sacrifice. Such as don't make any Vow to gain the Favour of the great Spirit, at leaſt take Care to recommend themſelves to the Protection of their Manitou. They preſent a lighted Pipe to him thrice, break out into Lamentations, beſeech him to hear 'em, and recommend their Perſons and Families to his Protection. Mournful Songs bear a Part in this Religious Ceremony.

The Heraldry and Hieroglyphics of the Savages.

WE preſume the Reader does not ſuppoſe the Savages are very well skilled in Heraldry; but as La Hontan has thought proper to give the Name of Coats of Arms to certain rude and ill-ſhaped Figures, which thoſe People paint on the Trees, as ſo many Monuments of their Victories, and which poſſibly they revere as Deities, we ſhall alſo call 'em by that Name, and deſcribe them as follows: Whenever a Party of Savages has gain'd a Victory over their Enemies, the Conquerors, at their Return into their Country, peel the Bark from the Trees to the Height of five or ſix Foot in all Places, where they halt, and then paint on the naked Trunk ſeveral groteſque Images, which are either ſo many Figures that repreſent ſymbolically, or hieroglyphically, the Character they aſcribe to themſelves, or elſe the Images of their tutelary Genius. Theſe Images are made of Coal, ground and beat to Powder in Fat or Oil.

THESE Nations alſo expreſs their Thoughts by Hieroglyphics. La Hontan furniſhes us with ſome Inſtances to this Purpoſe, ſuch as the following: The Arms of France with an Ax and ſeveral Tens over them, ſignify that the French have rais'd the Ax; that is, to ſay, have proclaim'd War, and fought againſt them with as many Warriors as there are Tens in the Figure.

Of their YEAR.

THE Year [a] among the Hurons, and ſeveral other Nations of Canada and Miſſiſippi, is compos'd of twelve [b] ſynodical Lunar Months, but with this Difference, that every thirty Moons they paſs over a ſupernumerary one, which they call the Loſt Moon. All theſe Lunar Months have Names ſuitable to 'em. They give the Name of the Worm Moon to the Month of March, becauſe thoſe Inſects begin to diſcover themſelves at that Time; that of the Moon of Plants, to the Month of April; the Moon of Swallows to that of May, and ſo on. The Flemmings have the ſame Form of Speech in their Tongue: The Month of February is by them called [c] the Month in which they lop or prune the Trees; the Month of April, [d] that in which the Meadows are fit for Mowing. We muſt here explain what we before mentioned of the Loſt Moon of the Savages. [e] Let us ſuppoſe March to be their thirtieth Lunar Month, and that thus it ends the Revolution of thirty Months, in that Caſe there will be a loſt or intercalary Moon between March and April, after which the Month of April will be reckoned as the firſt of the ſynodical Revolution of thirty Months. This we believe is the only Explication that can be given to la Hontan's Relation. Inſtead of reckoning by Weeks, a Calculation never uſed by the Savages, they compute Time from the firſt to the twenty ſixth of their Lunar Months; which comprehends juſt as much Time as is between the Inſtant in which the Moon begins to diſcover the Edge of its Half-Face in the Evening (theſe are la Hontan's Words) till her almoſt diſappearing in the Morning. This is what they call the Month of Illumination: "As for inſtance, a Savage will ſay, I ſet out the "firſt of the Sturgeon Month, which is the Month of Auguſt, and I return'd the 29th of "the Month of the Indian Corn, i. e. that of September; the Day following, which was "the laſt, I lay by. Nevertheleſs, as there ſtill remains three Days and an half of "Dead Moon, (which is their Manner of expreſſing themſelves,) during which Time it "is hid from their Sight, they give them the Name of Naked Days." 'Tis evident that this Way of meaſuring Time is very troubleſome and intricate. They compute their artificial Day and Night by a Quarter, a Half-quarter, Half, three Quarters, Sun Riſing and Setting, Day-break, and Twilight. But if it be objected that this Way of computing cannot be exact, in ſuch Parts of the Year when neither the Sun nor Moon appear in their Horizon, la Hontan anſwers, That repeated Experience, and an extreme Attention, which the Europeans are ſeldom capable of, becauſe of the great Diſtraction of their Thoughts, teach them to know exactly the Hour either in the Day or Night, tho' the Weather be never ſo cloudy.

Of their Memorials, when they treat upon any Affairs.

THESE People expreſs their Thoughts by Hieroglyphics, as was before obſerv'd: But when they treat upon any very important Affair, they make uſe of Necklaces, [a] made of Porcelane Beads, or Pieces of black and white Shells cut long-wiſe, ſtrung and rang'd in ſuch a Manner, as to compoſe a Variety of Figures that look pretty enough. Theſe Necklaces are two Foot long, and about three or four Inches broad. They in ſome meaſure ſupply the Want of Writing, whenever any Treaty or Suit of Law is to be determin'd, &c. Theſe their Warriors uſe as Bracelets and Girdles, and put them over white Shirts. The Reader will have a better Idea of the Uſe of theſe Necklaces, by reading the Negotiations of the French and Engliſh with the Savages, as related by Travellers. Suffice it to obſerve, that every Necklace contains either a Point to be treated on, or ſome remarkable Circumſtance: As for Inſtance, if they are to treat with a Nation with whom they were before at Variance, or if they are to communicate any Affairs to an Ally, they ſend him as many Necklaces as there are Affairs in Agitation. One of theſe ſhall ſignify a Piece of Intelligence, another a Compliment of Condolance, a Reconciliation; ſhall ſhew that they enter into a Deſign, and are reſolved to ſhare in ſuch an Enterprize, &c.

Religion of the Inhabitants of Cibola, of New-Albion, of New-Mexico, California, &c.

IF we may give Credit to the Relation of Friar Mark of Niſa, whom Antonio de Mendoſa, Viceroy of Mexico, ſent with ſome other Spaniards to diſcover the North Coaſts of America, ſituated on the South-Sea, the Government of Zuny or Cibola is ſo well regulated, that we can ſcarce conſider thoſe People as Savages. They dwell in Cities, in which are ſeveral Houſes built of Stone. The Form of their Government is ſuch, as diſcovers that they are not entirely ignorant of thoſe Circumſtances that conduce to the maintaining of Order and Regularity: But nevertheleſs, the little Religion they ſeem to have, is vaſtly odd and whimſical, if we are to give Credit to what Francis Vaſques relates, viz. "That the People of Cibola pay no Adoration to any Thing but Water, "becauſe, ſay they, it contributes to the Growth of Corn and other Food; which is a "Proof of its being the only Support of Life."

THE famous Sir Francis Drake, who made ſo many Expeditions in the ſixteenth Century, diſcover'd New-Albion, ſituated on the South-Sea, in the 38th or 40th Degree of North Latitude. He imagin'd he diſcovered ſome Footſteps of Religion in the Inhabitants of that Coaſt. He ſaw ſome Women tearing their Cheeks, bewailing and inflicting a Variety of Tortures on themſelves; all which, he thought, was ſome Indication of religious Worſhip. He had the Honour to ſalute the King or Cacique of the Country, and all his Court. Their Dreſs and Ornaments, which conſiſted of Feathers, Rabbit Skins, and Lays of Colours, whimſically dawb'd over the Body of the King, and thoſe of his Courtiers, were not able to tempt Drake, in whoſe Favour the King of New-Albion offer'd to abdicate his Crown. His Majeſty ſet it on the Head of that illuſtrious Engliſhman with his own Hand, put the Royal Chain about his Neck, and heightened the whole Ceremony with a Song; but all to no Purpoſe: Sir Francis refuſed the kingly Dignity with as much Generoſity as the New-Albion Monarch had offered it to him. The Reader may poſſibly ask, What Traces of Religion could be diſcovered in this Ceremony? But that muſt be demanded of Drake himſelf. He tells us, that thoſe Savages mixing among his People, wept, groan'd, and tore their Faces, making their Offerings at the ſame Time; and that his Companions endeavour'd to make them underſtand that religious Worſhip was due to the true God only. In the whole he does not inform us, what it was in which the Worſhip of the Savages conſiſted. 'Twould be very difficult to form any ſolid Notions from Conſequences drawn from a few Signs, which are generally fallacious.

ALL that can be ſaid on the Religion of the Savages of New-Mexico, is, that they worſhip Idols. If the Reader goes on to enquire, we will tell him, that the Devotees among the Idolaters have their Oratories, where they worſhip the Devil. Here they offer Meat to him for his Suſtenance: They dedicate to him Chapels, which are built on an Eminence[a]: 'Tis here the Devil goes generally to divert and repoſe himſelf, whenever he is forced to ramble from one City to another. 'Tis to be obſerv'd, that Travellers ſave themſelves from entring into abundance of Particulars, by bringing in the Devil in all the Notions which Idolaters form to themſelves of the Supreme Being. This is the Syſtem of occult Qualities in religious Matters. The Savages of the Provinces of Los Quires ſeem to worſhip the Sun, the Moon, and Stars: This Conjecture is grounded on the Repreſentation of thoſe heavenly Bodies painted on their Tents and Pavilions. We are told in general, that all thoſe People hold a very ſtrict Correſpondence with the Devil.

FERDINAND ALARCHON, imagining that the Californians adored the Sun, made uſe of a very unapoſtolical Method to bring them over; but after all, his Buſineſs was to get his King new Subjects, and to increaſe the Number of good Chriſtians. He declared to them, That he was ſent by the Sun to exhort them to Peace and Unity. Some Indians, who ſuſpected the Truth of his Miſſion, asked, Why he had delay'd to ſend him ſo long? To which he reply'd, That he was too Young: Which Anſwer was perfectly well adapted to a Savage. The Concluſion of the Conference was, that they acknowledg'd him to be the Son of that Planet. This pretended Son, in Order to increaſe the Number of the Elect, raiſed a Wooden Croſs, and commanded his Companions the Spaniards to adore it, as an Example for the Imitation of the Infidels. To theſe he preſcrib'd the Time and Manner of Adoration. As we may take it for granted that he had obſerved they worſhipped the Riſing-Sun in the Morning, he told them that they were to worſhip the Croſs at the ſame Hour. [a] Father Picolo relates, in his Account of California, that he could not diſcover the leaſt Form of Government, or hardly any Marks of Religion, or regular Worſhip, among that People. "They worſhip the Moon, and "cut their Hair (I cannot affirm, continues the ſame Author, whether it be in the "Wane) in honour of their Deities. This they give to their Prieſts, who apply it to "ſeveral ſuperſtitious Uſes."

Marriage-Ceremonies, and other Cuſtoms of the Indians of New-Mexico.

[b] THESE Savages are Polygamiſts. We are told that the Inhabitants of Cibola marry but one Wife. Thoſe of California will not allow their Maidens to keep Company with Men. They puniſh Adultery with Death. The Widowhood of their Women laſts ſix Months, after which they are allowed to marry again.

THE Californians and their Neighbours have Youths among them whom they oblige to go in Womens Apparel: Theſe adminiſter to the moſt infamous Uſes. They are prohibited Marriage, and they carry this laſcivious Cuſtom to ſuch horrid Lengths, that when the Youth whom they proſtitute in this Manner, happens to die, his Brother is obliged to ſucceed him in the ſcandalous Office. Theſe miſerable Wretches make a Duty of this Obſcenity, which we have deſcrib'd in as modeſt Terms as the Subject would admit of; and in Return are maintained by the Charity of the Public, and beg their Bread from Door to Door. The reſt of the Indians of North-America give into the ſame Irregularities, and conceal the Shame of thoſe they abuſe under the Name of Hermaphrodites.

THE Indians of Cinalva adopt Perſons into their Families in the ſame Manner as the Nadoueſſans and other Nations of North-America. They thruſt a little Stick down the Throat of the Perſon who is to be adopted, which forces him to throw up violently whatever he has got in his Stomach; and this they call Regeneration.

[c] WHENEVER any one of them falls ſick, and that his Life is thought in Danger, they immediately dig a Grave. The Moment he is dead, they burn him, together with his Houſe and all his Effects: They bury his Aſhes, and throw a certain kind of Duſt over his Grave, with which thoſe who revere his Memory make a ſtrong Liquor, which they drink to great Exceſs. The Californians alſo burn their Dead, with all that belonged to them. This odd Cuſtom alone plainly ſhews that theſe Savages are perſuaded of the Immortality of the Soul.

Religion of the VIRGINIANS.

WE ſhall begin this Deſcription with a Piece of Hiſtory, which may be of Uſe in proving the Greatneſs of Soul of thoſe People whom we call Savages. [a] Oppechancanough, Emperor of the Virginians, falling unhappily into the Hands of the Engliſh, Sir . . . . . Berkley, Governor of the Engliſh Colony, intended to ſhew him publicly to the People. The Virginian Prince, whoſe Eyes were ſo much weakened by Old-Age, that he was forced to make uſe of one of his Subjects to open them for him, hearing a great Croud of People about him, cauſed them to be open'd immediately. The Sight of ſo great a Multitude threw him into a Rage; whereupon he bid them in a haughty Tone, ſend for the Governour, whom he reproached with his Ill-treatment, and told him with a diſdainful Air, "That if Fortune had made him his Priſoner, he would "not have expoſed him ſo baſely to the Scorn and Deriſion of his People." We have mentioned this Incident, as it may be of Uſe to juſtify the American Indians, with regard to ſeveral groſs and childiſh Ideas, which ſome Travellers have imputed to them, not only in religious Matters, but even with reſpect to the moſt common Notions of Decency and Decorum.

[b] HERE follows what a Native of Virginia has written concerning the Religion of the Virginians: "Theſe Indians, ſays he, look upon thoſe to be guilty of Sacrilege, who "reveal the Principles of their Religion." Whence we are to infer, that in caſe their Neighbours entertain the ſame Opinion, we are not to wonder, that it is impoſſible to reconcile the Aſſertions which we meet with in Travellers who have writ of thoſe Countries; or that a Traveller ſhould contradict all that had been written by one who had viſited thoſe Regions before him. A very little Attention will be ſufficient to diſcover that they often aſcribe to the ſame People, Ideas that are directly contradictory, and ever confuſed; the Reaſon of which is, becauſe they are able to get but a ſuperficial Knowledge of Things, ſwallowing them down in a hurry, without once examining them; but at the ſame Time they ſtrenuouſly maintain, that they are capable of giving a moſt authentic Relation. "One Day, continues the above-cited Author, we met with the Quioc-
"coſan, or Temple of the Indians, at a Time when every Body was aſſembled to con-"ſult upon dividing thoſe Lands which the Engliſh had given them. Overjoy'd to "meet with ſo happy an Opportunity, we reſolved not to loſe it. After having re-
"mov'd from the Gate of the Temple, twelve or fifteen great Logs of Wood with "which it was barricado'd, we entered it, and ſaw nothing at firſt but the bare Walls,
"and a Fire-Place in the Middle. This Houſe was about thirty Feet long, and eighteen "Feet wide, and had a Hole in the Roof to let out the Smoke. The Gate of the Tem"ple was at one End of it. On the Outſide, and at ſome Diſtance from the Building,
"Stakes were ſet up quite round it; the Tops of which were painted, repreſenting
"Men's Faces in Relievo. We did not find one Window in all the Temple, nor any "Place for the Light to enter in at, except at the Door, and the Hole of the Chimney.
"We obſerved farther, that at the End, over-againſt the Door, there was a Separation "made of Matting work'd very cloſe together, which encloſed a Place about ten Feet "in length, and which did not let in one ſingle Ray of Light. At firſt we could hard"ly prevail upon ourſelves to attempt to enter into ſo dark a Place, but at laſt we ven-
"tur'd in, and found in the Midſt of this Encloſure, a Place ſurrounded with Stakes,
"at the Top of which were great Shelves, from whence we drew three Mats that were
"roll'd up and ſew'd together; on one of which ſome Bones were laid, on another an "Indian Hanger, call'd by the Virginians [c] Tomahawk. They had tied to one of theſe

" Tomahawks the Waddles of a Turkey-Cock painted red, and the two longeſt Feathers " of his Wing hung at the End, tied on with a String of about five or ſix Inches " in Length. In the third Mat was ſome Inlaid-Work, which we took for the Idol of " the Indians. This Inlaid-Work conſiſted of a Piece of Wood three Feet and a half " in Length, having a Notch at the Top, for the ſetting in of the Head, with Semi- " circles about the Middle, which were nail'd on four Inches from the Edge, repreſent- " ing the Breaſt and Belly of that Statue. Underneath was another Board, not above " half ſo long as the former, and which they faſtned there with Pieces of Wood, that " being ſet in on every Side, ſtood out about fourteen or fifteen Inches from the Body, " and which, as we imagined, made the Bending in of the Knees whenever they ſet " the Image together. We alſo found in this Mat, ſome Pieces of red and white " Callico, and Rolls made for the Arms, Thighs, and Legs, which they folded over the " Knee.

" 'TWOULD be very difficult to get the Sight of one of thoſe Images at this Time, " becauſe the Indians are extremely careful in concealing them from public View. We " put the Clothes of the above-mention'd Image upon the Circles to make up the Body; " to which we fix'd the Arms and Legs, in order to form ſome Idea of it: But the " Head and the magnificent Bracelets with which they generally adorn it, were not " there, or at leaſt we could not find them. When this Image is clothed with all its " Ornaments, it muſt needs have a very venerable Aſpect in this dark Place, in which " the Light is let in only by raiſing one of the Mats of the Partition, from the gloomy " Light that comes in at the Gate, and the Hole of the Chimney of the Temple. This " Gloom ſerves to heighten the Devotion of theſe ignorant People: But one Circum- " ſtance, which is of great Service in carrying on the Cheat, is, that the Chief Magi- " cian enters unperceived by any one, alone on one Side, and moves the Image up and " down, whilſt the Prieſt ſtands among the People on the other Side, to hinder any " Perſon from being over-curious, under the Penalty of incurring the Cenſures and Indig- " nation of the Deity."

THE Virginians have given ſeveral Names to this Idol. 'Tis call'd by ſome Oka, by others Quioccos, or Kiwaſa. Theſe Names may poſſibly be ſo many Epithets, which they vary according to the ſeveral Functions they aſcribe to this Deity, or the different Notions they may form to themſelves of it in their religious Exerciſes, and common Diſcourſes. " Moreover, continues the above-cited Author, they are of Opinion that " this Idol is not one ſole Being, and that there are many more of the ſame Nature, " beſides the tutelary Gods." They give the general Name of Quioccos to all theſe Genii, or Beings; ſo that we will particularly apply the Name of Kiwaſa to the Idol in Queſtion.

THE Engraver has not here repreſented the Idol Kiwaſa in his Temple; but has placed him in the open Air, in a Hut built of Mats, and on a kind of Seat or Altar, called by the Virginians [a] Paworance. Theſe Savages conſecrate Chapels and Oratories to this Deity, in which the Idol is often repreſented under a Variety of Shapes. They even keep ſome of theſe in the moſt retir'd Part of their Houſes, to whom they communicate their Affairs, and conſult them upon Occaſion. In this Caſe they make uſe of them in the Quality of tutelary Gods, and 'tis they who ſhower down Bleſſings on their Families.

THESE Idolaters often repreſent Kiwaſa with a Pipe in his Mouth; and what is more, he really ſmokes, for the Pipe is lighted. But the Truth is, that a Prieſt conceals himſelf dextrouſly behind the Idol, and ſmokes the Tobacco. The Darkneſs with which the God is ſurrounded, prevents their ſeeing the Smoker, or the People from detecting him; for were they to diſcover him, they would no longer pay the Reverence due to their ſpiritual Directors. The Gods of the Inhabitants of our Hemiſphere have ſweated, groaned, and wept, juſt after the ſame Manner.

KIWASA often manifeſts himſelf in Oracles or Viſions. They conſult him before they go a Hunting, and for Matters of leſs Importance. As Caprice is, among theſe Savages, the Effects of the Inſpirations of a God, if at any Time when they are hunting, the Spirit moves them to play, they immediately fall upon playing, becauſe they think that God has commanded it, and that their Wills ought to be immediately dependant upon his, even on the moſt trifling and ridiculous Occaſions. Whenever they want to conjure him up, four Prieſts go to the Temple of the God, whom they raiſe by the Power of certain Words, of whoſe Signification the People are entirely ignorant. Then Kiwaſa appears under the Figure of a handſome Man, having on the left Side of his Head a Tuft of Hair, which deſcends to his Feet; and appearing thus equipp'd in the Air, he haſtens forthwith to the Temple. Immediately he begins to walk up and down it in great Agitations; but he grows calm on a ſudden, and orders eight more Prieſts to be ſent for: When the Aſſembly is met, he declares his Will to them; which being done, he again ſets out on his Journey for Heaven.

THE Virginians worſhip alſo the Sun. At Day-Break the Devotees of both Sexes go faſting, and waſh themſelves in a running Stream. The Ablution continues till the Sun appears, nor do they ſuffer their Children of ten Years of Age to omit this religious Duty. He is no ſooner above the Horizon, but they offer him Tobacco. The Deity which is here repreſented with the Idol Kiwaſa, is another Object of the Adoration of the Virginians. The Winds and Seas are all under his Direction, and the ſeveral Appendages about his Image are all emblematical.

THESE Idolaters are not ſparing of either Offerings or Sacrifices to their Gods, and the moſt trifling Subject of Fear, furniſhes them with an Occaſion of ſmoking either [a] Fat or Tobacco in honour of thoſe Deities, whom they imagine are ever prepared to oppreſs them. " [b] Whenever they go a Journey they burn Tobacco, in order to obtain the Aſſiſtance of the Sun.——Whenever they croſs a Lake or River, they throw Tobacco " into it, or the moſt valuable Thing they have, in order that the Spirit, who they " believe preſides in thoſe Places, may grant them a ſafe Paſſage over. Whenever they " return from Hunting, from War, or any other conſiderable Enterprize, they offer " Part of their Spoils, of their beſt Tobacco, of their Furs, their Colours with which " they paint themſelves, nay even Fat, and the beſt of their Game. The Antients had " Part of theſe Cuſtoms among them.

" THEY have alſo ſome ridiculous Traditions. There is a Rock on that Side where " the Water-Falls of the River James lie, on which are plainly ſeen ſeveral Marks that " appear to have been made by the Foot of a Giant, and are about five Feet diſtant from " one another. The Indians are of Opinion, —— that one of their Gods having walked " on this Rock, left the Print of his Feet in it."

WE have already obſerved, that the Virginians make uſe of emblematical Figures. " They often erect Pyramids and Stone Pillars, which they paint and adorn after their " Manner: They even pay them all the outward Marks of religious Worſhip, not as " thoſe which are offer'd to the Supreme Being," but in Quality of his Repreſentatives; becauſe they employ them as Symbols and Hieroglyphics of the Sovereign of all Things: They honour his Majeſty before the Sign, or Repreſentative; they honour it in the Sign, tho' at the ſame Time they don't honour the Sign itſelf. 'Tis in the ſame View, " that " they keep certain Stone-Baskets, under which ſome Character of the Deity is un- " doubtedly repreſented. They offer Sacrifice to Rivers and Fountains, and that becauſe " their continual Flowing is an Emblem of God's Eternity.

[a] The Virginians uſe it inſtead of Incenſe.

" THEY erect Altars in all thoſe Places that are remarkable for ſome Incident.——But " there is a private Altar, to which they pay a greater Honour than to any of the reſt. " The High Altar, before the Arrival of the Engliſh in Virginia, was ſituated in a Place " to which thoſe People gave the Name of Uttamuſſak: The principal Temple of the " Country was in the ſame Place, which was at the ſame Time the Metropolitan Seat " of the Prieſts. There were alſo three large Houſes, each ſixty Feet long, all filled " with Images. 'Twas in theſe religious Houſes that they uſed to preſerve the Bodies " of their deceaſed Kings; for which the Natives had ſo great a Veneration, that none " but Kings and Prieſts were allowed to enter them. The People were never admit- " ted into them, nor dared even ſo much as to approach thoſe Sanctuaries without the " Permiſſion of the former. The High Altar was of ſolid Cryſtal of three or four " Inches Square..... On this Altar they uſed to ſacrifice on ſolemn Days." And as Mankind in general are eaſily perſuaded that every Thing which is employ'd in any myſterious Affair, cannot fail of diſplaying itſelf by ſome diſtinguiſhing Characteriſtic, let us not omit " that this Cryſtal was ſo very tranſparent, that the Grain of a Man's " Skin might be ſeen through it; 'twas moreover of ſo prodigious a Weight, that un- " able to draw it any further, they were obliged to bury it in the Neighbourhood," to conceal it from the Engliſh. We have Inſtances of this miraculous Weight in the Religions of our Hemiſphere. How much Pains, how much labour, was employ'd to conquer the Reſiſtance of the God, Demi-God, and other Subalterns of the Deity, whoſe Statues were reſolutely bent not to ſtir from their Places? Among the extraordinary Prerogatives which Homer has beſtow'd ſo liberally on his Gods, he was particularly careful not to omit Weight.

WE before took notice that the Virginians give the Name of Paworances to their Altars; " which is the Reaſon of their having ſo much Veneration for a Bird who is " continually repeating that Name.———They ſay That that Bird is the Soul of one " of their Princes.——They add further, that an Indian — having kill'd one of thoſe " Birds, paid dear for his Raſhneſs; for he diſappear'd a few Days after, and was never " heard of more.——Whenever they come near a Paworance as they are travelling, " they never fail to inform the young People in their Company, on what Occaſion and " at what Time it was built; exhorting them at the ſame Time, to pay all due Re- " ſpect to the Altar." Thus do theſe oral Inſtructions perpetuate among theſe People the Tradition of the Miracles of their Gods, the Wonders of their Religion, and the Doctrine which it teaches.

THE Author from whom we have extracted the above-mentioned Particulars, tells us, " That the Virginians acknowledge a God that delights in doing God, whoſe " Habitation is in Heaven, and whoſe kindly Influences ſhed themſelves upon the Earth: " That he is Eternal, enjoys a perfect Happineſs and Tranquility, and is ſupremely per- " fect, and, what is worſe, he is ſupremely indolent. That he ſhowers down his Bleſ-

ſings

" ſings upon Men, without Choice or Diſtinction; or without troubling himſelf with " their Affairs." That he leaves 'em entirely to their Free-wills, whilſt he himſelf continues in a ſupine [a] Indolence, out of which all the Worſhip they pay him is not able to recover him. That 'tis to no Purpoſe to pray to him, ſince nothing is capable of moving him.

THIS Syſtem does not hang well together, and poſſibly may have been falſely related by thoſe who have written on the Religion of theſe Savages. We have already taken notice, when we mentioned Kiwaſa, that the Virginians imagine themſelves to be immediately inſpir'd by him in all their Thoughts; whence it follows, that he acts upon their Wills, and conſequently concerns himſelf with what Men do. Be that as it will, finding they have nothing to dread from the indolent and inſipid Goodneſs of their God, they endeavour to procure the Favour of an evil Genius, who is of an infinitely more active Nature. We cannot ſay, whether they imagine him to be his Subject, his Equal, or his Lieutenant; or whether it be him they call [b] Oka or Kiwaſa: 'Tis certain however, " That they pay this evil Spirit a very zealous Homage, which very much re- " ſembles the Worſhip the Savages of Miſſiſippi and Canada pay their evil Genius. " The Virginians tell us, that 'tis he who concerns himſelf with the Affairs of this World; " 'tis he, ſay they, viſits us, ruffles the Air, and raiſes Storms, &c. and him we appeaſe " with Sacrifices."

SOME other People of Virginia have a Notion that God, whom they ſuppoſe to be eternal, having made a Reſolution to create the World, firſt formed a Set of Subaltern Gods, to whom he afterwards committed the Government thereof, after having made uſe of their Aſſiſtance in creating it. After this he created the Sun, the Moon, and Stars, whoſe Degree and Quality is inferior to that of other Gods. The firſt Thing thoſe Gods created was Water, out of which they formed all Creatures, both viſible and inviſible. Woman was created before Man, and ſhe had Commerce with one of theſe creating Gods. This is the Origin of Mankind.

Their Prieſts, Soothſayers, Diſcipline, &c.

THE Figure repreſents a Prieſt and a Soothſayer. " The [d] Sacerdotal Veſtment " is like a Woman's Petticoat plaited, which they put about their Necks, and " tie over the Right Shoulder; but they always keep one Arm out to uſe it upon Oc- " caſion. This Cloke is made round at Bottom, and deſcends no lower than the Middle " of the Thigh: 'Tis made of ſoft well-dreſſed Skins, with the Hair outwards.

MAGICIEN de la VIRGINIE.

" THESE Prieſts ſhave their Heads cloſe, the Crown excepted, where they leave only " a little Tuft, that reaches from the Top of the Forehead to the Nape of the Neck, and " even on the Top of the Forehead. They here leave a Border of Hair, which, whe- " ther it be owing to Nature, or the Stiffneſs contracted by the Fat and Colours with " which they daub themſelves, briſtles up, and comes forward, like the Corner of a " ſquare Cap.

" THE Magicians or Soothſayers alſo ſhave their Heads cloſe, and leave only a Tuft " upon it. Over their Ears they wear the Skin of a Bird, whoſe Feathers are of a dark " Colour; and dawb themſelves with Soot, or ſomething like it, in the ſame Manner " as the Prieſts. They hang an Otter-Skin at their Girdle for Modeſty-ſake, and clap " its Tail between their Legs. They alſo tie a Pocket to it, which hangs upon the " Thigh, the Bottom whereof is adorned with a little long Fringe, or tagged Points."

WE are aſſured that the Virginians have a great Veneration for their Prieſts; " and " that the latter endeavour to procure it, by daubing themſelves all over in a very " frightful Manner; dreſſing themſelves in a very odd Habit, and tricking up their Hair " after a very whimſical Manner." Every Thing they ſay is conſidered as an Oracle, and makes a ſtrong Impreſſion on the Mind of the People: They often withdraw from Society, and live in Woods or in Huts, far removed from any Habitation. They are difficult of Acceſs; and don't give themſelves any Trouble about Proviſions, becauſe Care is always taken to ſet Food for 'em near their Habitations. They are always addreſs'd to in Caſes of great Neceſſity: As for Inſtance, they beſeech 'em to ſend Rain, or to help 'em in finding out any Thing they may have loſt: They alſo act in Quality of Phyſicians, becauſe of the great Knowledge they are ſuppoſed to have of Nature. In fine, Peace or War is determined by their Voice, nor is any Thing of Importance undertaken without firſt conſulting them.

" THE Soothſayer is the Prieſt's Aſſociate, not only in the tricking Part, but alſo in " the Profits ariſing from thence, and they ſometimes officiate for one another.

" THE religious Service is performed in a general Tongue, underſtood only by the " greateſt Men of the Nation, and anſwers in ſome meaſure to the Latin." As Witch-craft makes a very conſiderable Part of the Religion of the Country, we ſhall preſent the Reader with a Deſcription of it, as we find it in the above-mentioned Hiſtory of Virginia. " The Virginians, ſays that Author, employ Witchcraft on ſeveral Occaſions; neither " are they ſparing in their Sacrifices to the wicked Spirit. Every Seaſon of the Year " they offer to it the Firſt of their Fruits, of their Birds, Fiſh, Cattle, Plants, Roots, " &c. and repeat their Offering every Time they have any extraordinary Succeſs in War, " Hunting, or Fiſhing.

" [a]CAPTAIN Smith happening to fall into their Hands, they employ'd a Piece of " Witchcraft or Charm upon this Account, which was as follows: The Buſineſs was to " know, if he were well or ill affected towards them, and if any more Engliſhmen were " to come into their Country. Early in the Morning they lighted a great Fire, round " which they drew a Circle of Meal; after which a Man, whom we are to ſuppoſe " was the Chief-Prieſt or Magician, drew near the Fire, making ſeveral very frantic " Geſtures at the ſame Time. He was cover'd with a Skin, and had a Crown of Fea- " thers with Weaſel and Serpents Skins upon his Head. Thus equipped, he began the " Invocation with a thundering Voice, ſinging magical Airs, in which he was ſeconded " by ſix other Prieſts. They repeated the Airs ſeveral Times; and theſe were no ſooner

" ended, but the Prieſt laid a few Wheat-Corns upon the Ground, and the High-prieſt " threw Fat and Tobacco into the Fire. After this they drew two other Circles. The " Prieſts took Sticks, and laid 'em between the Wheat-Corns, which were ranged about " five in a Row ; and this Ceremony laſted three Days."

[a] THOSE Soothſayers pretend alſo to lay Storms; to effect which, they go to the Water-ſide, where they addreſs themſelves to the Water with a hideous Noiſe, accompanied with Invocations and Songs; after which they throw Tobacco, Pieces of Copper, and ſuch like Trifles, into the Midſt of the Water, in order to appeaſe the Deity who preſides over it.

THE Virginians have been accuſed of ſacrificing young Children. Captain Smith, who was wrong inform'd of the Circumſtances of this pretended Sacrifice, which is no more than a Probation that all ſuch go through as are devoted to the Myſteries of Religion, has given us the following Deſcription of it: [b] They painted white fifteen of their beſt-ſhap'd Boys, who were about twelve or fifteen Years of Age: Theſe they carried before a numerous Aſſembly of Prieſts and People, all of them painted ſo artfully, that a Painter could not poſſibly have done better. " The Werowance, which is the Name " the Virginians give to their Princes, preſided in this Aſſembly. The ſeveral Members " of it held Gourd-Bottles and Boughs in their Hands. The Savages ſpent the whole " Morning in dancing and ſinging round the young Boys: In the Afternoon they were " all fifteen ſet under a Tree, and were ſo ranged, as to have a double Lane of People, " armed with Bundles of ſmall Cane, between them. They then choſe five young " Men, who went ſingly, and took out one of thoſe Boys, and led him thro' the Lane, " and ſhielded him, tho' at their own Coſt, and with a ſurprizing Patience, from the " Multitude of Blows, which were ſtruck with the Sticks. During this cruel Exer- " ciſe, the Mothers of the Lads weeping and groaning bitterly, were preparing Mats, " Skins, Moſs, and dry Wood for their Funeral. After this Ceremony they pulled " down the Tree, broke the Trunk of it to Pieces, lopped off the Branches and Boughs, " and therewith made Garlands to crown them, and dreſſed up their Hair with the Leaves " of the Tree they had felled.

" 'TWAS impoſſible to know what became of the Children; but they were thrown " one upon another into a Valley, where the Aſſembly made their Rejoicings. Several " Queſtions being aſked the Werowance with regard to this pretended Sacrifice, he an- " ſwer'd, all thoſe Children were not dead; but that Oka ſucked the Blood from the " Left-Breaſt of ſuch as were fallen to his Share, till they expired; that the five young " Men kept the reſt in the Deſart for nine Months, not allowing them to confer with " one individual Perſon during that Time. 'Tis from among theſe Youths, continued " he, that we chuſe our Prieſts and Soothſayers."

THE Author of the Hiſtory of Virginia thinks, the Reaſon why theſe Medico-Prieſts endeavour to perſuade the People, that Oka ſucks the Blood from the Left-Breaſt of ſuch Children as fall to his Share, is, in order that if any of the Novices ſhould die under the Rigours of their Probation, the Prieſthood may not ſuffer upon that Account. He adds, that Captain Smith gives an imperfect Deſcription of the Diſcipline which all thoſe are obliged to undergo who aſpire at the Dignity of the Prieſthood, or who are ſo far ſpurred on by Emulation, as to endeavour to be one Day received into the Number of their Great Men. This the Virginians call Huſcanawer: Here follows the Deſcription of that Ceremony, as we find it in the Hiſtory of Virginia. " 'Tis generally celebrated " once every fifteen or ſixteen Years, unleſs it ſo happens, that their Youth are capable " of being received oftener into it. All theſe are obliged to go through this Diſcipline, " before they can be received into the Number of the Great Men, or Cockarouſes of the " Nation. —The principal Men of the Place where the Ceremony is to be performed, " make choice of the beſt-ſhap'd, and moſt ſprightly Youths among them —— for their " Huſcanawers. —— Any one who ſhould refuſe to undergo that Diſcipline, would nôt " dare to live among his Countrymen. They at firſt perform ſome of thoſe Ceremonies " related by Smith, the chief of which is Retirement.——— They ſhut them up for

" ſeveral Months together, and give them no other Suſtenance during their Solitude, " than the Infuſion or Decoction of certain Roots that turn the Brain. And indeed this " Liquor, which they call Wiſoccan, together with the Severity of the Diſcipline, makes
" theſe Novices raving mad: They continue for ſome Time in this Condition. In the " mean Time they are ſhut up in a ſtrong Place, built for that Purpoſe. —[a] This In" cloſure is made in the Shape of a Sugar-Loaf, and is open like a Lattice to let in the " Air. — Not above a Month ſince, thirteen Youths were huſcanawed there, and ſet
" at Liberty." Here theſe Novices quite loſe their Memory; they forget their Poſ-ſeſſions, Parents, Friends, and even Language. " When theſe Medico-Prieſts find that the " Novices have drunk Wiſoccan enough, they leſſen the Quantity by Degrees, till ſuch
" Time as their Senſes are returned: But before this happens, they carry 'em about to " their own Cities or Villages, poſſibly to make them known again to the People. The " young Men, after having paſſed thro' their ſevere Diſcipline, dare not ſay they remem" ber the moſt trifling Particulars, for fear of being huſcanawed a ſecond Time, for
" then they are ſo ſeverely handled, that few eſcape with their Lives. A Novice is " obliged to grow deaf and dumb, and muſt pay afreſh for ever Thing he learns.

" WHETHER theſe Youths really loſe their Memories or not, 'tis certain they pre" tend not to know any Thing of what they had learnt before, and that they are at" tended by their Guardians till they have learnt all over again. ——In a Word, they " begin to live again, after having been dead as it were; and become Men, by forgetting
" they had formerly been Children. — The Trouble which thoſe Guardians put them-
" ſelves to, is ſo very great, and they are obliged to obſerve ſo religious a Secrecy during " the whole Courſe of this ſevere Diſcipline, that thoſe who acquit themſelves worthily
" of this Charge, are thought to have performed the moſt meritorious Action that can " be wrought. 'Tis alſo a ſure Way of riſing to great Preferment. But then on the " other Side, they may depend upon their being ſoon ſent out of the World, ſhould
" they neglect but the moſt inconſiderable Circumſtance in their Duty. The Author of " this Relation adds, that thoſe who were huſcanawed in his Time, were handſome, well-
" ſhaped, ſprightly Boys, from fifteen to twenty, or five and twenty Years of Age, and " were looked upon as rich. This, continued he, made me at [b] firſt imagine, that the " old Men had invented this Stratagem, in order to engroſs the Poſſeſſions of their " young People, ſince 'tis certain that they ſhare them among themſelves, or employ " them, as they pretend, on ſome Public Uſe. —— The Indians pretend, that the ſole " Motive of their employing theſe violent Methods, is in order to free their young People " from the dangerous Impreſſions of Infancy, and from all thoſe Prejudices, which they " contract before Reaſon is capable of gaining the Aſcendant. They affirm, that being " then at Liberty to follow the Dictates of Nature, they are no longer liable to be de" ceived by Cuſtom or Education, and are thereby the better enabled to adminiſter
" Juſtice uprightly, without having any Regard to the Ties of Blood or Friendſhip."
The Antients had the ſame Opinion of their Initiations, and thought that they cleared the Underſtanding and rectify'd the Ideas: The Moderns give pretty much into the ſame Notion; but it would be dangerous, and at the ſame Time to no Purpoſe, to make the Application in this Place.

Their

Their FESTIVALS and DEVOTION.

HERE follows what the above-mentioned Author has obſerved on this Head: "We don't find that they have any ſtated Times, or fixed Days, on which they "celebrate their Feſtivals, but that they regulate them only by the different Seaſons of "the Year. As for Inſtance, they celebrate one Day at the Arrival of their wild Birds, "another upon the Return of the Hunting Seaſon, and for the Maturity of their Fruits: "But the greateſt Feſtival of all is at Harveſt-Time. They then ſpend ſeveral Days "in diverting themſelves, and employ moſt of their Amuſements, ſuch as martial Dances, "and heroic Songs."

AFTER their Return from War, or eſcaping ſome Danger, they light Fires, and make merry about them, each having his Gourd-bottle, or his little Bell, in his Hand. They all, Men, Women, and Children, often dance in a confuſed Manner about theſe Fires: One would be apt to imagine that this is their chief Devotion. Some Travellers pretend that they pay a religious Worſhip to Fire on this Occaſion; be that as it will, 'tis this Ceremony which is repreſented by the Figure.

THEIR Devotions in general conſiſt only of Acclamations of Joy, mixed with Dances and Songs, except that in Seaſons of Sorrow and Affliction theſe Acclamations are changed into Howlings. The Prieſts preſide at this Solemnity, dreſs'd in their Sacerdotal Ornaments, Part of which are the Gourd-Bottle, the Petticoat above-mentioned, and the Serpents or Weaſels Skins, the Tails of which are dexterouſly tied upon their Heads like a Tiara, or Triple-Crown. Theſe Prieſts begin the Song, and always open the religious Exerciſe, to which they often add Incantations, Part of the Myſteries whereof are comprehended in the Songs above-mentioned. The Noiſe, the Geſtures, the wry Faces; in a word, every Thing contributes to render theſe Incantations terrible.

WE ſhall here obſerve, that one of their Religious Acts is the throwing the firſt Piece of whatever they eat at their Meals into the Fire. But let us ſay a Word or two more of their Dancing. We muſt conſider it as relative to this Article, ſince it makes ſo great a Part of the Worſhip of the Virginians, that 'tis not eaſy to diſtinguiſh the ſacred from the prophane. "They have two different Kinds of Dancing, according to the "Author of the Hiſtory of Virginia, viz. Firſt, either ſingle, or at moſt in ſmall Com-"panies; or, ſecondly, a great Number together, but without having any Regard either "to Time or Figure. In the firſt Kind one Perſon only dances, or two or three at moſt. "In the mean Time the reſt, who ſeat themſelves down in a Ring, ſing as loud as they "can ſcream, and ring their little Bells. Sometimes the Dancers themſelves ſing, dart "terrible and threatening Looks, ſtamp their Feet againſt the Ground, and make a thou-"ſand antic Poſtures and wry Faces. The other Dance, conſiſting of a large Company, "is performed round Stakes ſet in the Form of a Circle, adorned with ſome Sculpture; "or round about a Fire, which they light in a convenient Place. (The Figure repre-"ſents this Ceremony.) Every one has his little Bell, his Bow and Arrow, in his Hand. "They alſo cover themſelves with Leaves, and thus equipped immediately fall a dancing. "They ſometimes ſet three young Women in the Midſt of the Circle.

"They light Fires every Night, and dance and ſing about them:" Theſe are the Places of Rendezvous of all ſuch as have a Mind to divert themſelves. The Deſcription of a Ball, which the Hiſtorian, who has furniſhed us with theſe Particulars, has copied from a more antient Traveller than himſelf, ſhews, that the Virginians have ſome Taſte for this Diverſion.

Their Ceremonies of Peace and War, and Hieroglyphics.

THE Virginians uſe the Calumet in the ſame Manner as the Savages above-mentioned. Here follows the Deſcription of the Ceremonies obſerved in their Reception of Foreigners. " The Werowance, accompanied with his People, goes " to meet the Foreigners at ſome Diſtance from the Place of his Reſidence; deſires 'em " to ſit down on Mats, which his Attendants bring with them for that Purpoſe; and in- " vites 'em at the ſame Time to the Ceremony of the Calumet, which is followed by " a ſhort Converſation. They then go to the Habitation of the Werowance, who gives " Order for the Waſhing of their Feet, treats them, and afterwards diverts them with " Songs and groteſque Dances. When the Time for going to reſt is come, they make " choice of two of their moſt beautiful young Women to attend upon——the Ambaſſa- " dor, or the principal Foreigners. Theſe young Women undreſs him, and the Moment " he is in Bed, they ſteal ſoftly into it, and lie down on each Side of him. They would " even think they had violated the Laws of Hoſpitality, were they not to ſatisfy all his " Deſires; and this is ſo far from caſting a Blemiſh on their Reputation, that the reſt " of the young Women envy them for what, in their Eyes, is the greateſt Honour " that could be done 'em. But this is granted to none but Foreigners of the firſt Diſ- " tinction."

As ſoon as Peace is concluded, they bury a Tomahawk, as a Teſtimony that all their Enmity is at an End; and this is what the Canadans call burying the Ax. They often plant a Tree over the Tomahawk, to ſhew that their mutual Friendſhip will flouriſh like a Tree.

" WHEN they are upon the Point of making War, the Werowance conſults the Prieſts " and Soothſayers; aſſembles the chief Men of the Nation, and holds a general [a] Council. " The young Men in theſe Aſſemblies, particularly in Caſe they expect a War, paint " themſelves all over with White, Red, Black, and ſeveral other Colours intermixed. As " for Inſtance, they dawb over half their Face with Red, and the other Half with Black " or White. They draw great Circles of different Colours round their Eyes, with mon- " ſtrous Whiskers, and a thouſand other groteſque Figures all over their Bodies. To make " themſelves ſtill more terrible, they ſtick either Feathers, Down, or the Hair of ſome " wild Beaſt, into the wet Paint. Thus equipp'd they go to the Council, and the Mo- " ment they are arrived fall a Dancing, with Arrows or the Tomahawk in their Hands. " At the ſame Time, they chaunt forth the Glory of the Nation and the brave Exploits " of their Anceſtors; making Signs with the Tomahawks that they are going to make a " great Slaughter of their Enemies."

THEY ſeldom fight on Plains, but endeavour to ſurprize their Enemies, and cut 'em to Pieces in ſome Ambuſcade, like the Canadans and the Iroquois. The above-mentioned Writer tells us, " That they ſpare neither Man, Woman, or Child, to prevent their " revenging themſelves;" which would make their Cruelty greater than that of the other Nations of North-America.

THEIR Manner of expreſſing their Thoughts has ſome Affinity to Hieroglyphics; as for Inſtance, they make uſe of certain Repreſentations of Birds, Quadrupeds, or other Things, to expreſs certain Ideas; and 'tis to theſe that la Hontan has given the Name of Coats of Arms. When they are on a Journey, or in War, " they paint certain Marks on " their Shoulders, to diſtinguiſh themſelves from other Nations. Theſe generally mark them-

Their Marriages, and the Education of their Children.

WE are aſſured that the " [b] Indians of Virginia look upon Marriage as a very " ſolemn Act, and that the Vows they then make are thought to be ſacred and " inviolable.——The Husband and Wife are allowed to live apart if there is not a good " Harmony between them; nevertheleſs Divorces are looked upon as ſcandalous, and " the Parties ſeldom carry their Quarrels to ſuch a Length as to quit one another.—— " When they puſh Things to theſe Extremities, all the Ties of Marriage are diſſolved, " and both Parties are allow'd to marry again. ——Each takes thoſe Children he or ſhe " likes beſt,——and if the Parties concerned cannot agree about it, they divide the Chil- " dren equally, and the Man chuſes firſt."

THE Virginians obſerve alſo to withdraw their Women from Society, whenever they are attacked with certain Maladies. We before took Notice of the Licentiouſneſs of the young Women of Canada and Miſſiſippi, but Travellers would perſuade us that the Women of Virginia are vaſtly more modeſt. " Tho' the young Female Indians are ſaid to " proſtitute themſelves for a Trifle, ſays the Author of the Hiſtory of Virginia, I yet " could never find any Room for that Accuſation; ſo that I believe 'tis mere Calumny. " The Indians diſown this Cuſtom, tho' they look upon their young Women as Miſtreſ- " ſes of their own Perſons, and that they can diſpoſe of themſelves as they pleaſe. More- " over I know, that if one of them happens to have a Child, her Reputation is loſt as " long as ſhe lives; and that ſhe will never be able to get a Husband afterwards." How will it be poſſible to reconcile this Apology for the Modeſty of the Virginians with what was ſaid in the foregoing Page? We are told that the Men are apt to be jealous. If that be true, their Honour will not be more ſecure upon that Account. Tho' a Husband were to lay aſide all other Cares, and employ himſelf in that only, he may depend that he would have Work enough cut out for the reſt of his Life. " 'Tis probable that the ex- " cluding the Children of their Princes from the Succeſſion, and the devolving it upon " thoſe of his Brother by the Mother's Side, in caſe he has any, or in Default of that, " to his eldeſt Siſter's Children, may reſult from their Jealouſy; becauſe they think the " Woman's Side to be always the leaſt liable to Impoſture: But the Males in the ſame " Degree of Conſanguinity are preferred to the Succeſſion before the Women, though " the latter are preferr'd before ſuch Males as are in a more diſtant Degree of Conſan- " guinity."

As to their Children, " they plunge them into cold Water the Moment they are born." They educate them much after the ſame Manner as the Canadans and other Savages of North-America, from the Time of their being grown up a little big, till they arrive at the State of Manhood.

IT would be needleſs to repeat that their Prieſts are Phyſicians. 'Tis a Happineſs for Europe, that our Clergy have not yet taken it into their Heads to join the Cure of the Body to that of the Soul. The Virginians cure by Sweating, all ſuch Diſeaſes as ariſe from ſudden Colds or exceſſive Heats. They ſuck Sores, lance Wounds, and apply Fire to Tumours, " by the Means of a Stick of light Wood, which being conſum'd " to a Coal, burns as fierce as a red-hot Iron. They run the other End of the Stick in- " to the Fleſh, and make an Inciſion, which they keep open till all the peccant Hu- " mour is run out of it——They alſo make a little Cone..... with a kind of rotten " Wood, by applying the Baſe to the affected Part; to which Fire is ſet, till the whole " is burnt, and that they have made a real Iſſue."

THE Prieſts ſtudy the Qualities of Plants, but conceal this Science, and the Art of curing Diſeaſes, from the People. They rank this Knowledge among their Myſteries, and are of Opinion, that it ought to be communicated to thoſe only who are deſign'd for the Prieſthood; and ſay, that God would puniſh them were they to diſcover their Medicaments. We ſhall not give a particular Account of the ſeveral Medicaments they make uſe of, becauſe it would be going out of the Bounds of our Deſcription; but we muſt not omit, that the Application is made with a great many wry Faces, Diſtortions, Songs, Howlings, all which prepoſſeſs the Patient and the Spectators in favour of the Phyſician. Could it be poſſible for this Noiſe, this Diſorder, to be the Work of a Mortal? 'Tis undoubtedly God who is the Agent. Probably theſe People argue in this Manner on that Occaſion.

THE Method of their Sweating the Sick is the ſame as that of the Miſſiſippians, to which we refer the Reader.

Their Funeral Rites, and Opinion with regard to the State of the Soul after Death.

WE ſhall begin by thoſe Ceremonies which are obſerv'd with regard to their Sovereigns. " The Virginians preſerve religiouſly the Bodies of their Kings and " of their Chiefs, in the following Manner. They firſt cut the Skin all down the Back, " and take it off whole, if poſſible: They afterwards take the Fleſh from the Bones, " without hurting the Nerves, to prevent the Joints from diſuniting: They then dry the " Bones in the Sun, which they afterwards ſet again in the Skin, having firſt taken " care to moiſten it with Oil or Fat, which keeps it from rotting. After the Bones are " fix'd in the Skin in their proper Places, they fill up the Hollows very dexterouſly with " very fine Sand, and ſew it up in ſuch a Manner, that the Body appears as entire as " if they had not taken the Fleſh from it. After the Corps has been prepar'd in this " Manner, they carry it into a Place made for that Purpoſe, and lay it upon a great " Piece of Wood matted over, that is [a] raiſed a little from the Ground, which they cover " over with a Mat to keep it from the Duſt. They expoſe the Fleſh which they have " taken from the Body to the Sun, by laying it on a Hurdle; and when it is thoroughly " dried, they put it up into a Baſket ſew'd up very cloſe, and ſet it at the Feet of the " Corps. They place an Idol of Kiwaſa in theſe Sepulchres, which they ſay looks af- " ter thoſe Bodies." A Prieſt watches Day and Night in this Mauſolæum by a lighted

Fire,

Fire, and 'tis there that he acquits himſelf of ſome pious Duties which he imagines affect the Deceas'd in ſome Meaſure. If he himſelf does not give Credit to it, 'tis certain he impoſes the Belief of it upon the People. The Figure repreſents the Order the Bodies lie in, and the Ceremony of the Prieſt.

PRIVATE Perſons are not interr'd after the ſame Manner, but are buried in pretty deep Graves, their Bodies being wrap'd up in Skins or Mats, which they afterwards ſet upon Poles, together with the beſt of their Effects, and cover the whole with Earth. After the Burial of the Bodies, the Women put their Faces in Mourning; for this Name we may give to that Colour with which they dawb themſelves, made of Coal ſteep'd in a certain Quantity of Oil, prepar'd for that Purpoſe. In this Condition they howl and mourn for four and twenty Hours ſucceſſively.

THEY believe the Immortality of the Soul, and that it will be either happy or unhappy after this Life, according to its good or evil Actions. Their Hell is a great [a] Ditch, which they place at the Extremity of the Univerſe, where the Sun ſets. 'Tis there the wicked Souls are to burn without having the leaſt Mercy ſhewn them. [b] Others ſay, that they hang between Heaven and Earth. They add, that the Truth of theſe Torments are confirm'd to them by the Dead themſelves, who from Time to Time bring them an Account of what paſſes in the other World, as they formerly did to us, and ſtill do to this Day in ſome Countries. They call this Hell Popoguſſo. The Werowances and Prieſts never fail of going into a Paradiſe, which they alſo place towards that Part where the Sun ſets, and behind the Mountains. It is there that thoſe happy Souls rejoice to all Eternity; and in what ſhould this Rejoicing conſiſt, but in their being crown'd with Feathers, in having their Faces dawb'd over with certain odd Colours, and in being peaceable Poſſeſſors of certain Trifles, the moſt conſiderable of which are Pipes and Tobacco, where they dance and ſing with their Anceſtors. Such is the Object of their Immortality. The whole, indeed, is very trifling, and yet they exclude the common People from the Advantages of it, and do not allow any but their Prieſts and great Men, to enjoy the Benefit of riſing again after Death.

Their YEAR and RECORDS.

" THEY compute the [c] Number of their Years by that of Winters, which they " call Cohonk, from the Noiſe of the wild Geeſe that come only in Winter in " thoſe Parts. They divide the Year into five different Seaſons: The firſt is when the " Trees ſhoot forth or flouriſh in Spring; the ſecond is when the Ears of Corn are " grown and fit to parch; the third is Summer; the fourth Harveſt; the fifth Winter. " They count their Months by Lunations, without having any Regard to the Number " that are in the Year;" and call them, according to the Canadan Cuſtom, by the Names of ſuch Things as are remarkable in thoſe Lunations: " As for Inſtance, they have the " Moon of Stags, of Corn, the firſt and ſecond Moon of Cohonk, &c. They don't di- " vide their Days into Hours; but make three Portions or Parts of it, which they call " the Aſcent and Deſcent of the Sun.

" THEY calculate by Units, Tens, Hundreds, &c. and as to their tranſmitting to " Poſterity the Memorials of Events or Affairs of Civil Life, they uſe certain Strings, " which are ſomething like the Quippos of the Peruvians. They alſo employ certain " Pieces of Wood on which they make Notches, &c.

Religion

Religion of the FLORIDANS.

"THE [a] Inhabitants of Florida are Idolaters, and acknowledge the Sun and Moon "for Deities, whom they worſhip without offering them either Prayers or Sacri- "fices. However they have Temples; but the only Uſe they make of them is to bury "their Dead, and to lodge the moſt valuable Part of their Wealth in them. They al- "ſo ſet up the Spoils of their Enemies at the Gates of theſe Temples, by Way of Tro- "phies." This is all the Account the Inca Garcilaſſo de la Vega has given us of the Religion of the Floridans. We may juſtly compare them to thoſe idolatrous Nations of Antiquity, who worſhipped whatever they thought odd or ſurpriſing, if it be true that the Floridans were ſo ſuperſtitious as to adore a Pillar, which Captain Ribaut had erected upon an Eminence, with the Arms of France, when he diſcover'd that Part of North-America. They offer'd Sacrifices to it, crown'd it with Flowers, and dreſs'd it up with Garlands and Feſtoons; in a word, they omitted no kind of Homage.

THE Floridans worſhip the [b] Devil under the Name of Toia, or rather that evil Principle whom they ſet in oppoſition to their ſupreme Deity. Firmly perſuaded, that it is impoſſible for this laſt Principle to do them any Hurt, becauſe of his great innate Goodneſs, they only bend their Endeavours to appeaſe the other, who, they ſay, torments them in a very grievous Manner. [c] The Devil makes Inciſions in their Fleſh, terrifies them in Viſions, and from Time to Time appears to them, to force them to ſacrifice Men in his Honour. In caſe the Devil does not give himſelf the Trouble to act on theſe Occaſions, the Prieſts have nevertheleſs the Intereſt of the People too much at Heart, to be wanting in the Duty they owe him. We may therefore with great Probability ſuppoſe, that they themſelves are the evil Genius, and that they more than make up for that imaginary Malice which the Fear of the Floridans cauſes them to aſcribe to it.

[d] ANOTHER Author has given us the following Account of the Religion of the Carolinians. They adore one ſole Creator of all Things, to whom their great Pontiff offers "Sacrifices; but they don't think the Affairs of Men deſerve his Care. They ſay, that "he commits the Government of this Lower World to ſubordinate and inferior Deities: "i. e. that he leaves it to the Adminiſtration of good and evil Spirits, to whom the Prieſts "of an inferior Order offer Sacrifices and other Devotions.

THE Savages that inhabit about the Mountains of Apalache worſhip the Sun, as Author of Life and Creator of Nature. One would think they had preſerved ſome Footſteps of the Flood; for they ſay, that the Sun having retarded his ordinary Courſe for twenty four Hours, the Waters of the great Lake Theomi overflow'd in ſuch a Manner as to cover the Tops of all the higheſt Mountains, that of Olaimy excepted; which the Sun preſerv'd from the general Inundation, becauſe of the Temple he had built thereon with his own Hands, and which the Apalachites afterwards conſecrated as a Place of Pilgrimage, where it was uſual for them to pay their religious Homage to that Planet. All ſuch as could ſhelter themſelves in this Place, were preſerv'd from the Deluge. The four and twenty Hours expir'd, the Sun recover'd his firſt Strength, and commanding the Waters to retire back to their juſt Limits, ſcattered the Vapours which they ſpread over the Earth. 'Tis in Acknowledgment for this memorable Deliverance, that the Floridans call'd Apalachites, have thought themſelves obliged to worſhip the Sun. Here follows the Manner how they adored him, and the Particulars of that Worſhip.

The Worſhip which the Floridans pay to the SUN; their Feſtivals, Temples, &c.

WE ſhall begin with the Worſhip of the Apalachites. Their religious Service conſiſts in ſaluting the Riſing Sun, and ſinging Hymns to his Praiſe. They pay him the ſame Homage every Evening. Beſides this, they ſacrifice to him, and offer ſolemn Perfumes in his Honour, four Times every Year, on the Mountain of Olaimy: But as they do not offer any bloody Victim to this Planet, becauſe they look upon it as the Parent of Life, and that they think that he who beſtows it on Creatures, can ſcarcely delight in a Worſhip that deprives them of it, we can hardly give the Name of Sacrifice to the Offerings which they make to it, ſince they conſiſt only of Perfumes which they burn, in Preſents which they make the Prieſts, and in Songs which they ſing in honour of the glorious Planet of the Day. The Eve of the Feſtival appointed for the Offering of Perfumes, the Prieſts withdraw into the Mountains, the better to prepare themſelves for this ſolemn Act of the Day following; the People are ſatisfy'd if they get there before Day-Break. Fires are burning all Night long upon the Mountain; but the Devotees do not dare approach the Temple, or rather Grotto, which is dedicated to the Sun. The [a] Jouanas only are allow'd Acceſs to the religious Edifice, and 'tis to them that the Devotees intruſt their Gifts and Oblations, which the Jouanas afterwards hang on Poles, which are fix'd on each Side of the Gate, where they remain till the Ceremony is ended; after which they diſtribute them according the Donor's Will.

THE Moment the Sun begins to ſhine, the Jouanas ſing forth his Praiſes by falling ſeveral Times upon their Knees; after which they throw Perfumes into the ſacred Fire that is lighted before the Gate of the Temple. Theſe two Acts of Worſhip are followed by a third no leſs eſſential. The Prieſt pours Honey into a Stone made hollow for that Purpoſe, and which ſtands before a Stone Table; and ſcatters about the Stone a conſiderable Quantity of Maiz half bruiſed and clear'd from its Chaff. This is the Food of certain [b] Birds, who the Floridans tell us ſing the Praiſes of the Sun. Whilſt the Prieſts are burning the Perfumes, and ſinging to the Honour of that Planet, the People proſtrate themſelves and pay their Devotions. The Ceremony concludes with Sports, Dances, and Diverſions, and the moſt eſſential Part of the Feſtival ends at Noon. Then the Jouanas ſurround the Table, repeating their Songs and Acclamations; and when the Sun begins to gild the Edges of the Table with his Rays, they throw all the Perfume they have left into the Fire. The Ceremony does not quite end here. After the laſt Oblation of Perfumes, ſix Jouanas choſen by Lot ſtay by the Table, and ſet at liberty ſix Birds of the Sun, which they brought in Cages in order that they might act their Part in the Ceremony. After the myſterious Deliverance of theſe Birds follows a Proceſſion of Devotees, who come down from the Mountain with Boughs in their Hands, and go to the Entrance of the Temple, into which they are introduc'd by the Jouanas. Laſtly, the Pilgrims waſh their Hands and Faces with a ſacred Water. Such is the Deſcription of this Ceremony, which we have borrowed from an [c] Author who had extracted it from the Relations of two Engliſhmen.

THE Temple conſecrated to the Sun, and to its Worſhip, by the Floridans of Apalache, is a ſpacious Grotto, made by Nature in the Rock, on the Eaſt-Side of the Mountain. We are told that it is two hundred Feet long, and of an Oval Form; that the arched GARCILASSO, in his Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Florida, gives a Deſcription of another Temple of the Floridans of Cofaciqui, which ſeems to have been uſed only as a Burying-Place for the great Men of the Country. The Spaniards found in thoſe Temples great wooden Trunks or Cheſts, that were placed round the Walls on Benches raiſed two Foot from the Ground. " In theſe Trunks the dead Bodies were laid, which were em-" balm'd in ſuch a Manner, as not to caſt forth any offenſive Smell. There were alſo " leſſer Cheſts, and Reed Baſkets very curiouſly wrought. The little Cheſts were filled " with Men and Womens Clothes, and the Baſkets with Pearls of all ſorts." The Temple of Talomeco was the Burying-Place of the Caciques of the Country; the Deſcription which Garcilaſſo has given us thereof, juſtly merits to be inſerted in this Place. " The Temple of Talomeco, which is the Burying-Place of the Caciques, is, ſays he, " above an hundred Paces long and forty wide; the Walls are of a Height proportion-" able to it, and the Roof is very much rais'd, to ſupply the Defect of the Tiles, and " to give the greater Slope to the Waters. The Roof is made of very ſlender Reeds, " ſplit in two, with which the Indians make very handſome Mats that are like the Ruſh " Carpets of the Moors. Five or ſix of theſe Carpets, laid one upon another, keep the " Rain from piercing thro' and the Sun from coming into the Temple; in which Par-" ticular they are imitated by their common People and Neighbours, who employ their " Mats to the ſame Uſe. Upon the Roof of this Temple a Variety of Shells of different " Sizes are ſet, and ſeveral Fiſhes ranged in a very beautiful Order. But it is ſcarce " poſſible to think whence they were brought, ſince thoſe People live ſo far diſtant " from the Sea, unleſs we ſuppoſe they took them out of the Rivers with which that " Province is water'd. All theſe Shells are plac'd inſide-out, to make the greater Show; " always ſetting that of a large Sea-Snail between two little ones, with Spaces between " the ſeveral Pieces, fill'd with ſeveral Strings of Pearls of different Sizes, like ſo many " Feſtoons, faſten'd from one Shell to the other. Theſe Feſtoons of Pearl, which reach " from the Top of the Roof to the Bottom, heightned by the Luſtre of the Mother-of-" Pearl, and of the Shells, look wonderful pretty when the Sun ſhines upon them. The " Gates of the Temple are proportionable to the Bigneſs of it. At the Entrance of it " are twelve gigantic Statues made of Wood. They are repreſented with ſo ſavage " and threatning an Air, that the Spaniards ſtood a conſiderable Time to view them; " and indeed thoſe Figures were worthy the Admiration of antient Rome. One would " imagine that thoſe Giants had been ſet there to guard the Door; for they make a " Lane on both Sides, and leſſen gradually in Bulk. The [a] firſt are eight Foot high, " and the reſt ſomething leſs, decreaſing gradually in Height, like the Pipes of an " Organ.

" THEY have Weapons anſwerable to their Stature; the firſt on each Side have Clubs " ſet off with Copper, which they hold lifted up, and as it were ready to fall on thoſe " who ſhould be ſo bold as to enter in; the ſecond have Poll-Axes, and the third a kind " of Oar; the fourth Copper Axes, the Edges of which are made of Flint; the fifth " ſtand with their Bows bent, ready to let fly the Arrow. Theſe Arrows are very cu-" rioufly wrought, the Tips of which are made of a Piece of Stag's Horn very nicely " wrought, or elſe of Flint-Stone whetted as ſharp as a Sword. The laſt Giants have " very long Pikes tipp'd with Copper at both Ends, and ſtand in a threatening Poſture " like the reſt; all after a different, but very natural Manner.

" THE Top of the Walls in the Inſide of the Temple, are adorned agreeably to the " Outſide of the Roof; for there is a kind of Cornice made of large Sea-Snail Shells, " ranged in very good Order, with Feſtoons of Pearl between them, hanging from the " Roof. In the Space between the Shells and Pearls, we ſee the hollow Place which joins " to the Roof, a great Number of Feathers of various Colours, ſet in a beautiful Order. " beſides this Order obſerv'd above the Cornice, there hangs from all the other Sides of " the Roof ſeveral Feathers and Strings of Pearls, all held together by imperceptible " Threads, fix'd at Top and Bottom, in ſuch a Manner that thoſe Works ſeem ready " to fall every Moment.

" UNDER this Ceiling and Cornice, and round about the Temple on the four Sides, are " two Rows of Statues, ſtanding one above another, the one of Men, and the other of " Women, of the Size of the People of the Country. Their ſeveral Niches, which " were made only as an Ornament to the Wall, join to one another, which would o- " therwiſe have been too naked. All the Men have Weapons in their Hands, on which " are Rolls of Pearls, each conſiſting of four or five Rows, with Tufts at the End, made " of very fine Thread of various Colours. The Statues of the Women have nothing in " their Hands.

" AT the Foot of theſe Walls are ſet wooden Benches very well wrought, on which " the Coffins of the Lords of the Province and thoſe of their Families are placed. Two " Foot above thoſe Coffins, the Statues of the Perſons buried there are ſet in Niches in " the Wall. They repreſent them exactly as they were at the Time of their Deaths. " The Women have nothing in their Hands, but the Men are arm'd.

" THE Space between the Images of the deceas'd Perſons, and the two Rows of Sta- " tues which begin beneath the Cornice, is fill'd with Shields of different Magnitudes, " made of Reeds, ſo ſtrongly interwoven, as not to be penetrated by a Croſs-Bow or a " Gun. Theſe Shields are all garniſh'd with Pearl and Tufts of ſeveral Colours, which " makes them much more beautiful.

" IN the Middle of the Temple are three Rows of Boxes or Cheſts, ſet on Benches " ſeparated from one another. The largeſt of theſe Cheſts ſerve as Baſes to the leſſer, and " theſe to the leaſt; theſe Pyramids conſiſt generally of five or ſix Cheſts. As there is " a Space between the ſeveral Benches, the Paſſage is left clear, ſo that one may ſee every " Thing that paſſes in the Temple.

" ALL theſe Cheſts are full of Pearls; the largeſt Pearls are in the greateſt Cheſts, " and ſo in proportion to the leaſt, which are fill'd with nothing but Seed-Pearl. Theſe " were in ſuch prodigious Quantities, that the Spaniards affirm'd, that nine hundred Men " with three hundred Horſes, would not have ſufficed to carry away at once all the Pearls " depoſited in that Temple." However, this will not be found ſo extraordinary, ſince we are told that the Americans of this Province, depoſited every individual Pearl they had met with in ſeveral Ages together, in thoſe Cheſts; and hence we may infer, that had the Spaniards kept all the Gold and Silver which they have brought from Peru in their own Hands, they would by this Time have had enough to cover a great Number of their Churches.

" THEY alſo found a great Number of Bundles of Shamoy, or wild Goats Skins of dif- " ferent Colours, beſides ſeveral Sutes of Skins with the Hair dyed of different Colours; " ſeveral Gowns of Cats, Martens, and other Skins, which were all as well dreſſed as they " could have been in Germany or Muſcovy.

" The Spaniards went into them, and found them fill'd with military Weapons. In the " which go three or four Times round. That Part of the Pike which lies on the " Shoulder is adorn'd with Shamoy of various Colours, having Tufts of Pearls at the " End of it, which makes them much more beautiful. In the ſecond Hall were Clubs

" like thoſe of the Giants, ſet off with Rings of Pearl, and adorn'd up and down with " Tufts of different Colours, ſet round with Pearls. In the third were Pole-Axes em-
" belliſh'd like the reſt; in the fourth were a kind of Spears ſet off with Tufts near the " Iron and the Handle; in the fifth were a kind of Oars adorn'd with Pearls and Fringes;
" in the ſixth were very beautiful Bows and Arrows. Some are arm'd with Flint-Stones, " ſharpen'd at the End like a Bodkin; Swords, Iron Pikes, or Points of a Dagger with

" Cow-Hides, brought from far, adorn'd with Pearls and colour'd Tufts. In the eighth " were Shields made of Reeds, finely interwoven and ſet off with Tufts and Seed-
" Pearls."

SOME Savages of Florida ſacrifice their Firſt-born to the Sun, or rather to their Sovereigns; at leaſt 'tis certain, that the cruel Ceremony is perform'd in Preſence of one of thoſe Princes or Caciques, whom they call Paraouſtis. Whilſt the Mother of the Infant covers her Face, weeps and groans over the Stone againſt which the Victim is to be daſh'd to Pieces, and that the Women who accompany her ſing and dance in a Circle, another Woman ſtands in the midſt of the Ring, holding the Child in her Arms, and ſhewing it at a Diſtance to the Paraouſti. This Woman dances in the ſame manner as the reſt of her Companions, ſinging at the ſame Time the Praiſes of the Paraouſti. After this the Prieſt, whom we ſee at a Diſtance in the Figure, ſurrounded with ſix other Floridans, daſhes out the Child's Brains. We are to obſerve, that the Victim muſt always be a Male Infant.

[a] THE ſame Savages offer to the Sun, with great Solemnity, the Repreſentation of a Stag; and chuſe for that Purpoſe the Skin of the largeſt Stag they can meet with. They firſt ſtuff it with all kind of Herbs; then adorn it with Fruits and Flowers, and lift it to the Top of a high Tree, with its Head turn'd towards the Riſing-Sun. This Ceremony is perform'd ever Year about the End of February; and is always accompanied with Prayers and Songs, which are chaunted forth by the Paraouſti and one of the principal Jouanas at the Head of thoſe Devotees. The Floridans beſeech the Sun to bleſs the Fruits of the Earth, and preſerve its Fruitfulneſs, and leave the Stag's Skin hanging on the Tree till the Year following.

THEY have another remarkable Feſtival. [b] The People aſſemble under the Direction of a Paraouſti, in order to go and pay their Devotions to Toia. Travellers not knowing what Toia was, at once gave it the Name of the Devil. We have already obſerved that Toia is the evil Principle. Be that as it will, this Ceremony appears to be an Act of Contrition, or deep Sorrow of Mind, by which they imagine they ſhall obtain the Favour of that Idol. The Floridans meet together in a large open Place, which the Women adorn and get ready the Day before the Ceremony. The Aſſembly is no ſooner drawn up in a Ring, but three Jouanas, painted from Head to Foot with various kinds of Colours, preſent themſelves in the midſt of it with Drums, dancing and ſinging to the Sound of them, making very extraordinary wry Faces, and throwing themſelves into a thouſand fantaſtic Shapes. The Aſſembly anſwers in Chorus to the Muſic of the Prieſts, who have no ſooner danced up and down three or four Times, but they ſuddenly quit the Diverſion, and fly to the Woods. 'Tis there they conſult Toia. This myſterious Flight interrupts the Devotion, but the Women continue it during the whole Day with Tears and Howlings. Theſe cut and flaſh the Arms of their young Girls with Muſcle-Shells, and throw into the Air the Blood which ſtreams from the Wound, as a Homage due to Toia, invoking that Idol thrice. Two Days after the Jouanas return from the Woods, where they had withdrawn themſelves to conſult it, and dance upon the very ſame Spot which they had left ſo ſuddenly. The Dance concludes with an Entertainment; for as they had faſted three Days, it would have been almoſt impoſſible for them to have continued any longer without eating: But they were indiſpenſably obliged to faſt, ſince the Gods reveal themſelves with greater Freedom to ſuch as obſerve that Duty. The Brain, on theſe Occaſions, is not clouded by thoſe Vapours which ariſe from Food, and is more ſuſceptible of the Impreſſions of Enthuſiaſm.

WE ſhall conclude theſe Deſcriptions with the following Obſervation, viz. That the Floridans as well as Mexicans boaſt their having a Prophecy which gave them Notice of the Coming of the Spaniards.

Their PRIESTS, DISCIPLINE, &c.

THEIR Prieſts, like thoſe of the other American Nations, are likewiſe Phyſicians, as alſo the Paraouſti's Counſellors and Miniſters of State. They carry themſelves under this triple Character with Gravity and Modeſty, and are ſurpriſingly abſtemious. Before their Promotion to the Prieſthood, they are obliged to ſubmit to a very long Diſcipline under the Direction of other Prieſts, who inſtruct them in the Myſteries of Religion, and prepare their Minds, as it were, for the Reception of thoſe Ideas, which they are to inſtill afterwards into the People. They are trained up in Faſting, Abſtinence, Retirement, and in a Deprivation of the Pleaſures of Senſe; but then its Auſterities are ſoften'd by Viſions, and an intimate Correſpondence with the Deity. This is the Account that Travellers give of it, which, whether it be exact in every Particular, we ſhall not take upon us to determine. However, we are not to doubt but the old Prieſts tell their young Fry, that they muſt at leaſt appear thoroughly convinced of the Holineſs of a Vocation, which inveſts them at one and the ſame Time with Power both over Body and Soul. This Diſcipline continues three Years.

THEY hang at their Girdles a Bag fill'd with phyſical Herbs and other Medicaments; which is alſo the Cuſtom of the Virginian Prieſts. They are pretty well skill'd in the particular Uſes of Medicaments, and the Properties of Simples. They alſo employ Vomits, Sweating, and Lancing. They do not wipe away the Blood which runs from Wounds, but ſuck it with their Mouths, and often thro' a Straw or Reed. The Floridans are of Opinion, that 'tis impoſſible but the Breath and Touch of the Medico-Prieſts muſt be of Service to the Sick. [a] A Modern Writer informs us, that the Prieſt mumbles over certain Words in theſe Operations. If all theſe Medicines are of no Effect, the Bath is preſcrib'd; and if that fails, he ſets the ſick Perſon at the Door of his Hut with his Face turn'd towards the Riſing Sun; when the Medico-Prieſt earneſtly entreats that Planet to reſtore the ſick Man to his Health, by the gentle Influence of its Light. This is the laſt Refuge of both Patient and Phyſician.

CEREMONIE, observée par un des ROIS de la FLORIDE, avant que de faire une Expedition.

Un des ROIS de la FLORIDE, consultant son MAGICIEN, avant que de marcher a l'Ennemi.

THESE Prieſts are clothed in a Mantle of Skins, cut in to Pieces of unequal Bigneſs; which Dreſs is ſometimes made in the Form of a long Gown: In this caſe they tie it about them with a leathern Girdle, at which the Bag hangs in which they put their Medicaments. They go with their Arms and Feet uncover'd, and wear a Fur Cap made like a Cone; their Heads are often adorn'd with Feathers, which they wear inſtead of a Cap.

Their MILITARY CEREMONIES.

THE Floridans are of a very revengeful Temper, which is alſo peculiar to the reſt of the American Nations. [a] The former, to ſtir themſelves up to Vengeance, hold certain Aſſemblies, in which one of them is placed by himſelf at a Diſtance. Then another riſes up, and taking a Javelin in his Hand, ſtrikes the former with all his Strength, the wounded Perſon not offering ſo much as to flinch; after this the Dart is preſented to others, who all ſtrike him till he falls down wounded to the Ground. This being done, the Women and young People raiſe him with Tears in their Eyes; give him Caſina to drink, which is the common Liquor of their Warriors, and convey him to a Hut, where they again weep round him. The Women and Maidens get ready ſome Medicaments to heal his Wounds, the Aſſembly at the ſame Time drinking, rejoicing, and ſinging the brave Exploits of their Anceſtors, and ſtirring up one another to Revenge. The whole Solemnity is a Commemoration of the Death of their Countrymen. The wounded Man is, in their Eyes, an Image of all the ill Treatment they have met with from their Enemies; and this Spectacle inſpires the whole Nation with an irreconcileable Hatred.

BEFORE their marching out to War, they hold a Council, in which the Jouanas give their Opinion. Nothing is there reſolved upon, till they have firſt been made privy to it, and alſo conſulted the Oracle of their Idol. The Fumes of the Caſina contribute no leſs than the Oracle to their taking thoſe deſperate Reſolutions, which are the only ones they are ſenſible of: But none except the Warriors are allowed to drink Caſina, nor they neither, till after having firſt given Proofs of their Valour.

[b] BEFORE they ſet out upon their Expeditions, the Paraouſti turns himſelf towards the Sun, conjuring it at the ſame Time to be propitious to him; when taking Water in a wooden Porringer, having firſt broke out into ſeveral Imprecations againſt the Enemy, he throws the Water up in the Air, in ſuch a Manner, that Part of it falls down again upon the Warriors, crying aloud at the ſame Time, May you in like Manner ſhed the Blood of your Enemies! He then takes ſome Water a ſecond Time, which he throws upon the Fire that ſtands by him, and addreſſing himſelf to the ſame Warriors, May you, ſays he, deſtroy your Enemies as ſpeedily as I put out this Fire! Both theſe Ceremonies are accompanied with hideous Cries and pathetical wry Faces.

[c] THOSE of the Jouanas whom they conſulted upon the Fate of the Expedition, are altogether as whimſical. The pretended Magician lays himſelf upon a Shield, in a Poſture which it would be needleſs to expreſs, ſince a verbal Deſcription could never come up to the Engraver's Art. We muſt refer the Reader to the Plate, obſerving at the ſame Time, that the conſulted Prieſt draws a Circle of unintelligible Figures, himſelf ſtanding in the midſt of them. Theſe Figures have at leaſt this Uſe, viz.

that they ſerve to give the People a higher Idea of his Knowledge. He recovers himſelf out of that unnatural Poſture, after having continued a Quarter of an Hour in the moſt violent Agitations, made the moſt frightful wry Faces, and thrown himſelf into as violent Diſtortions as the higheſt Convulſions could have occaſioned: Then the God leaves his Miniſter, who now grown frantic, riſes up, goes to the Paraouſti, and acquaints him with the Reſult of the ſpiritual Conference; relates to him the Number of his Enemies, the Manner of their Encampment, and the Succeſs of the Expedition; of all which we are aſſur'd they give a perfect Account.

THEY ſcalp their Enemies in the ſame Manner as other Nations of North-America, and hang the Legs and Arms of their Slain upon Poles ſet up for that Purpoſe. [a] An Aſſembly gathers round thoſe Poles to hear the Curſes which a Jouana pronounces againſt their Enemies. Three Men kneel before the Prieſt, who has a little Idol in his Hand. One of theſe three beats Time with a Club upon a Stone, and anſwers the Prieſts Imprecations, during which the other two ſing to the Noiſe of their Gourd-Bottles.

SUCH Women as have loſt their Husbands in War, implore the Aſſiſtance of the Paraouſti, and preſent themſelves before him with Eyes full of Tears: A ſurpriſing Teſtimony of the Love they bear them! Whether this Grief be real or feigned, we are not to doubt but thoſe Tears are of great Service in ſtirring up the Revenge of the Warriors.

THEIR Hermaphrodites, whom we before obſerv'd to live a very odd kind of Life are employ'd in carrying their Burdens and Proviſions for War. They alſo make uſe of them to carry their Sick and wounded. Theſe Hermaphrodites wear long Hair, like Women, and are very much deſpiſed by their Warriors.

Their Funeral Rites, and Notions with regard to the Immortality of the Soul.

THE Floridan Women above-mentioned are not ſatisfy'd with ſhedding Tears at the King's Feet, to excite him to revenge the unhappy Death of their Husbands, but weep and groan over their Graves; and as a laſt Teſtimony of their conjugal Affection, theſe diſconſolate Widows cut their Hair quite off, and ſcatter it over them. Some People, who are ſo ſilly as to believe that a Husband's Death merits an Eternity of Affliction, would cry out that they would never alter their Condition; but ſuch are greatly miſtaken, for they, as well as our Widows, have their ſtated Times of Widowhood. The Floridan Women are not allow'd to marry again till their Hair is grown as long as it was before, i. e. till it deſcends below their Shoulders.

THEY inter their Paraouſtis in the moſt magnificent Manner poſſible. The Sepulchre is ſurrounded with Arrows, with the Points fix'd to the Ground: Over it is placed the Cup which the Monarch made uſe of in his Life-Time. They ſpend three Days in Tears and Faſting over the Grave, by way of honouring his Memory. The Paraouſtis, his Allies, bemoan his Death with the ſame Solemnity: They ſhave their Heads as a Teſtimony of their Affection. In fine, hir'd She-Mourners lament his Death thrice every Day, viz. in the Morning, at Noon, and at Night, for ſix Months together. They burn every Thing that belong'd to him in his Life-Time, and obſerve the ſame Ceremony at the Death of their Prieſts. They burn them in their Houſes; after which they ſet fire to the Houſe, and every Thing that is in it. [a] We are told that the Floridans, after having burnt thoſe ſacred Bodies, beat the Bones to Powder, and a Year afterwards give them the Deceaſed's near Relations to drink. [b] The Floridans of thoſe Provinces which Ferdinand de Soto viſited, buried live Slaves along with their Monarchs, to wait upon them in the other World.

[c] THE Inhabitants of Apalache embalm the Bodies of their Relations and deceaſed Friends, and leave them almoſt three Months in the Balm. They are afterwards dry'd with aromatic Drugs, wrapp'd up in rich Firs, and laid in Cedar Coffins, which the Relations keep for twelve Moons at their own Houſes: They then carry it to the neighbouring Foreſt, and bury it at the Foot of a Tree. But they ſhew a greater Regard for the Bodies of their Paraouſti's; for they firſt embalm them, then dreſs them up with all their Ornaments, ſet 'em off with Feathers and Necklaces, and afterwards keep 'em for three Years together in the Apartment where they died, all which Time they lie in thoſe wooden Coffins above-mentioned; at the Expiration of which, they are depoſited in the Sepulchres of their Predeceſſors upon the Side of the Mountain of Olaimy. They are let down into a Cave, the Mouth of which they ſtop with great Flint-Stones, hanging on the Branches of the neighbouring Trees the Weapons they made uſe of in War, as ſo many Teſtimonies of their Bravery. 'Tis further ſaid, that the neareſt Relations plant a Cedar near the Cave, which they dreſs with Care in honour of the Deceaſed. Whenever the Tree dies, they immediately plant another in its Place.

THE Apalachites believe the Immortality of the Soul, and that thoſe who have liv'd a Life of Virtue are carried up into Heaven and lodg'd among the Stars; but they fix the Habitation of the Wicked in the Precipices of the high Mountains of the North, among the Bears, and in the midſt of Ice and Snow. [d] The other Nations of theſe wide-extended Countries believe alſo that the Good ſhall be rewarded, and the Wicked puniſh'd after this Life. They call Heaven the High World, and by Way of Oppoſition, the Lower World, that which ſhall be the eternal Habitation of the Wicked. Cupai, that evil Genius, whom the reſt of the Floridans call Toia, and we the Devil, reigns in this latter Place.

THE [e] Indians of Carolina believe the Tranſmigration of Souls; and whenever any of 'em die, they bury Proviſions and ſome Utenſils along with 'em for their Uſe.

WE ſhall take notice of one Cuſtom of the Floridans of Hirriga, which has ſome Relation to that of the Apalachites. [f] Theſe Savages bury their Dead in Foreſts. They lay their Bodies in Wooden Coffins cover'd over with Boards, which are not fix'd to one another, but held down only by the Weight of ſome Stones or Pieces of Wood which they lay upon the Coffin; and as the Province of Florida abounds with a great Number of wild Beaſts, they appoint Slaves to guard the Bodies.

Their Marriage-Ceremonies, and the Education of their Children.

THE Indians of Florida generally marry but one Wife, who is obliged to be true to her Husband, upon Pain of being expoſed to a ſhameful Puniſhment, or even of being put to a cruel Death. The great Men of the Nation diſpenſe with the Cuſtom which allows but one Wife to the common People, for they marry as many as they pleaſe; but then one of them only is look'd on as the lawful Wife, all the reſt being conſider'd as Concubines. The Offspring of the latter do not enjoy an equal Portion of their Father's Wealth, as the Childrem of the former do.

THE Apalachites do not marry out of their Families. Among them Parents often make a Match for their Children from their Infant Years, who ratify what they had agreed upon when themſelves come to Age. They are allow'd to marry in any Degree of Conſanguinity, next to that of Brother and Siſter.

THE latter give to their Male-Children the Names of the Enemies they have kill'd, of the Villages to which they have ſet fire, or of ſuch of their Priſoners as have died in War. The Girls bear the Names of their deceaſed Mothers or Grand-Mothers, for they obſerve never to let two Perſons of the ſame Family go by the ſame Name. Both Boys and Girls are under their Mother's Direction till twelve Years of Age, after which the Father undertakes the Education of the Boys.

WE are aſſured that Husbands have no Commerce with their Wives from the Time of their Breeding, till after their Lying-in. They are even ſo ſcrupulous, as not to eat any Thing they may have touch'd during the Time of their Child-bearing.

[b] THE Floridans who inhabit near Panuco, do not marry young, and nevertheleſs we are aſſured they are ſcarce Maids by that Time they are "ten [c] or twelve Years of Age." The Women of the Lucayan Iſlands wear a [d] Cotton Apron for Modeſty Sake; and their young Women wear them as ſoon as they are fit for Marriage.

Of their RECORDS.

THE [e] Floridans of Carolina make uſe of Hieroglyphics and Emblems to record their Events. They take care to inſtruct their Children in every Thing which relates to their Families and their Nation, in order that the Hiſtory of them may be tranſmitted to lateſt Poſterity. They erect a little Stone Pyramid in thoſe Places where a Battle has been fought, or a Colony ſettled. The Number of the Slain, or that of the Founders, or of thoſe who firſt inhabited the Place on which theſe Pyramids are erected, is ſeen by the Number of the Stones.

Religion of the Inhabitants of the Caribee Iſlands.

THE Spaniards have deſtroy'd the greateſt Part of theſe Iſlanders, and the reſt of the Europeans, who copied after them, have not treated them much better; but ſtill none of them have been able to deprive thoſe unhappy Savages of the Liberty of exclaiming againſt their Injuſtice, and the Cruelties they have ſuffered under the Government of their new Maſters. " [a] You have driven me out of my Habitation, ſays the " Caribee, which you had not the leaſt Right to do, neither can you have the leaſt " Pretenſions to it. You are continually threatening to turn me out of the little that is " left me; muſt then the poor Caribee be forced to take up his Habitation in the Sea " with the Fiſhes? Your own Country muſt certainly be very miſerable, ſince you quit " it to turn me out of mine. Whence is it that you take ſo much Pleaſure in tor- " menting me?" Ambition and Avarice have obliterated in our Minds all the Maxims of the Goſpel. Our Conqueſts will indeed have one ſpecious Pretext, viz. that of winning over the Souls of the Americans to Chriſt; but then a converted Indian will anſwer, " Why do you not therefore conſider me as a Brother, ſince Chriſtianity ſets " Mankind in a State of Freedom; and at the ſame Time that it exhorts us to Humi- " lity, fills our Minds with a Spirit of Tenderneſs and Humanity; a Spirit which you " have never once breath'd with regard to us? " To all this we make no other Anſwer, than that our Intereſt calls for their Subjection; that we want Slaves to cultivate our Lands; that we have diſpoſſeſſed theſe Savages of them in order to improve them, and to ſearch into their Bowels for Wealth, of which they were wholly ignorant; and ſo great is our Infatuation, as to imagine that theſe venal Motives ſuit with the gentle Spirit of Chriſtianity. But ſurely this cannot ſurprize us, when 'tis to be conſidered that ſome have endeavour'd to juſtify the cruel Havock which has been made of the Americans by Principles drawn from Religion; and have fancied that the Behaviour of the Jews towards the Canaanites gave a ſufficient Sanction to theſe barbarous Proceedings!

THE almoſt total Extirpation of the Caribees gave Occaſion to this Digreſſion; they ſeem to have been deſtroy'd with a more violent Spirit of Fury than the reſt of the Americans; and one would think that their Conquerors, in order to palliate their inhuman Butcheries, had endeavour'd to make them paſs for the moſt unnatural Monſters, who had neither Law, nor Religion; and, in a word, that had nothing human about them but their Shape.

IF we may believe [b] Rochefort, the Caribees, ſo far from worſhipping a Deity, have not ſo much as any Word to expreſs it; ſo that whenever we ſpeak to them concerning the Supreme Being, we are obliged to make uſe of a great deal of Circumlocution, to give them an Idea thereof. They conſider the Earth as a kind Parent that nouriſhes her Creatures; but they do not underſtand what we mean by Divine Eſſence, or the other Myſteries of Religion. The ſame is related of the greateſt Part of the Americans. 'Tis probable they confuſe theſe Barbarians with too great a Multitude of Ideas and Arguments. They are for having them comprehend the Deity at once in the ſame Manner we do, and require them to believe, at the firſt Word, and on their bare Word, a Set [c] of People who declare certain Myſteries to them, of the Truth whereof they them-

[b] The Hiſtory of the Antilles. He would have expreſſed himſelf more exactly, had he ſaid, That the Idea they form to themſelves of the Deity was different from ours. Tho' we quote this Author, we yet believe we ought to be cautious in giving credit to all he ſays, ſince his Accounts are not always accurate.

ſelves were not convinced till after long Experience, a continual Courſe of Study, and a multitude of Reflections; to all which, a Catechiſm taught them in their Youth, had led the Way, the better to prepare their Minds for imbibing the Principles of the Chriſtian Faith. If it be true, that theſe Savages have not Capacity enough to underſtand abſtracted Subjects, we ought before all Things to poliſh their Minds, form them to Reflection, and make them Men before we go about to make them Chriſtians.

[a] THE Caribees acknowledge a good and an evil Principle, and call them Maboia. Rochefort tells us, that they believe there are a multitude of good Spirits, and that each Savage imagines he has one to himſelf, to whom they give the Name of Chemen. Other [b] Travellers tell us, that they ſay Louquo or Looko was the firſt Man, from whom all Mankind are deſcended; that he created Fiſhes, and roſe again three Days after his Death, and afterwards aſcended into Heaven. That after Louquo's Departure, the terreſtrial Animals were created. They believe that the Earth and Sea were created, but not the Heavens. They have alſo ſome Idea of the Flood, and aſcribe the Cauſe of it to the Wickedneſs of Mankind in thoſe Ages. Maboia, ſay they, is the Author of Eclipſes: And that notwithſtanding their firm Perſuaſion of the Power and Malice of this evil Spirit, they nevertheleſs [c] pray to it, "but then 'tis after a very irregular Manner, "without having any fix'd Time or Place for that Purpoſe; without once endeavour-"ing to know him; without having the leaſt diſtinct Idea of him; without having "the leaſt Love for him; and, in a Word, only to prevent his doing them any harm: "Whereas they ſay, that ſince the good Principle is kind and beneficent, it were "needleſs to pray to it." The Savages mentioned in the preceding Articles have the ſame Sentiments. They are of Opinion that the Sun preſides over the Stars, and that the latter are Chemens, who are ſuppoſed to ſuperintend over Meteors, Storms, &c. We are not to omit, that theſe Savages have their Heroes, or rather Demi-Gods, who are now Stars and Chemens.

THEY offer Caſſave, and the Firſt of their Fruits to their Chemens; and ſometimes out of Gratitude make a Feaſt to their Honour. Rochefort tells us, That theſe Offerings are not accompanied with either Adoration or Prayers, they placing them only at one Corner of the Hut on a [d] Table made of Ruſhes and of Latanier, a Tree which grows in this Country. Here the Spirits aſſemble to eat and drink thoſe Oblations; a Proof of which is, that the Caribees aſſure us they hear the Veſſels in which the Preſents had been laid, move up and down, as alſo the Noiſe which the Mouths of thoſe Gods make at the Time of their eating.

THE ſame Author relates, That they make little Images reſembling the Form under which Maboia reveals himſelf to them, in order to prevent his doing them any Harm. They wear thoſe Images about their Necks, and pretend that it gives them Eaſe. Moreover, that they faſt and flaſh themſelves for his Sake. We are obliged to obſerve in this Place, that Rochefort, Father Labat, la Borde, and ſome others, both Proteſtants and Roman Catholics, unanimouſly declare, that theſe People are tormented with the evil Spirit, who beats, ſcratches, nay, even wounds them in a moſt cruel Manner, in order to force them to execute all his Injunctions with the utmoſt Exactneſs: All which may be true for what we know. We have already obſerved, that the North-Americans are alſo afraid of being tormented by the Devil; and ſhall find in the Sequel of this Work, that thoſe of South-America are expoſed to the ſame Perſecution. Father Labat aſſures us, that the Power of this Angel of Darkneſs has no Manner of Aſcendant in thoſe Places where a Croſs is ſet up; and Rochefort informs us, that "the Devil has "not the Power to torture the Savages when they are in the Company of Chriſtians.—— "The Savages, whenever the Grand Adverſary of Mankind begins to afflict them, "run as faſt as poſſible into the next Chriſtian Houſe they meet with, where they "find a ſure Aſylum againſt all the Aſſaults of that furious Aſſailant: And adds, that "Baptiſm infallibly preſerves thoſe Savages from the Devil's Blows." From theſe two Authorities receiv'd from Perſons whoſe Principles are ſo very different, we may however draw this Inference, that the Devil is equally afraid both of Proteſtants and Roman Catholics.

THEY have an infinite Number of Omens and Superſtitions, two of which only ſhall be mention'd. They pretend that Bats are Chemens, whoſe Office it is to watch during the Night. They often preſerve the Hair or the Bones of ſome of their deceaſed Relations in a Gourd-Bottle, which they conſult upon Occaſion; and their Boias, whom we are going to mention, make them believe that the Spirit of the Deceaſed acquaints them with the Deſigns of their Enemies.

Of their PRIESTS and DISCIPLINE, &c.

THESE Boias, who are the Medico-Prieſts of the Caribees, have each their particular Genius, whom they pretend to conjure up by humming over certain Words, and the Smoke of Tobacco. They never call upon this Genius or Demon but in the Night-Time, and that too in a Place where there is neither Fire nor Light. We are told that theſe Boias are Wizards, and have the Secret of killing their Enemies with Charms which they employ againſt them.

THE old Boias make all their Candidates to the Prieſthood go thro' a pretty ſevere Diſcipline: The Novice is obliged from his Infancy to abſtain from ſeveral kinds of Meats, and even to live upon Bread and Water in a little Hut, where he is viſited by No-body but his Maſters, who make Inciſions in his Skin. But they do not ſtop here: They give him Tobacco-Juice, which, as it purges him in a violent Manner, frees him, ſay they, from all terreſtrial Uncleanneſs, and prepares his Mind for the Reception of the Chemen. They then rub his Body over with Gum, which they afterwards cover over with Feathers, in order to make him exact and diligent in his Conſultations of the Genii, and ready to obey their Orders. They teach him to cure the Diſeaſed, and to conjure up the Spirit.

THE Caribees aſcribe their Diſeaſes to Maboia. As thoſe People are obſerved to be of a very melancholy Caſt of Mind, we may probably ſuppoſe that the nocturnal Apparitions of the Devil, and the Torments which he inflicts upon them, are in reality no more than the Chimæra's of a Brain very ſuſceptible of the Impreſſions of Fear. We may aſcribe Part of the magical Operations of the American Prieſts to the ſame Cauſe; for to impute them all, would be going too far. Whenever they are deſirous of knowing the Iſſue of any Illneſs with which they are troubled, they firſt lay the Offering intended for Maboia upon a Matoutous, and then ſend for a Boia in the Night-Time, who immediately orders the Fire to be put out, and turns out all thoſe Perſons of whom he has the leaſt Suſpicion. After this he goes into a Corner, where he orders the Patient to be brought to him, then ſmokes a Leaf of Tobacco, Part of which he bruiſes in his Hands, and ſnapping his Fingers at the ſame Time, blows what he has rubb'd into the Air. The Odour of this Perfume brings the Chemen, who anſwers the Demand of the Boia; when the latter draws near to his Patient, feels, preſſes, and handles ſeveral Times ſucceſſively that Part where the Pain lies, if it be an outward one; pretending at the ſame Time to draw out from thence that which occaſions it, and often ſucks it. Theſe Savages alſo make uſe of the Bath and Lancing. If this Conſultation with the Spirit does not give the Patient any Eaſe, the Boia Phyſician reſumes his Prieſtly Function, and after having given the Patient ſome Conſolation, to prepare him for his Journey into the next World, he declares to him that his God, or, if the Reader pleaſes, his Devil, is deſirous of his Company, and to deliver him from the Miſeries of this Life.

IF the ſick Perſon recovers, they make a Feaſt in honour of Maboia, and ſet Victuals and Drink for him upon a Matoutou. The Caſſave and the Ovicou which they preſent to him, continue all Night upon the Table, and as, to ſpeak with theſe Savages, the Spirit eats and drinks only in a ſpiritual Manner, every Thing they had ſet for him over Night is found untouch'd in the Morning. The Boia takes Poſſeſſion of theſe Oblations, and the Caribees look upon them with ſo much Awe and Veneration, that none but their old Men and the chief Perſons of the Nation are allow'd to touch them. When the Feaſt is ended, they black the Patient with Juniper Apples, which makes him as ugly as the Devil himſelf.

Their Feſtivals, Aſſemblies, and Wars.

THEY have frequently Feaſts, or rather drunken Entertainments. It is in this Manner they ſolemnize the Return from an Expedition, the Birth of their Children, the Time appointed for the Cutting off their Hair, and that of their Beginning to go to War. The Holding a Council of War, the Selling of any Wood or Grove, the Grubbing up of a Piece of Ground, the Building of a Canoo, are all conſidered as Solemnities. They call theſe Feaſts Aſſemblies, or drunken Entertainments, Vin.

THEY obſerve a Faſt upon their arriving at the State of Puberty, and their being made Captains, upon the Death of a Father or Mother, Wife or Husband; this laſt Article is very ſurpriſing after what has been before obſerv'd of the little Affection which we are aſſured a Husband has for his Wife, and, as we may naturally ſuppoſe, a Wife for her Husband. If that ſaying be true, that Friendſhip always meets with a reciprocal Return, and that according to the Maxim of Count de Buſſi Rabutin, all thoſe who love are ſure of being belov'd, it may on the other Side be as true, that Hatred will be repaid with Hatred. The Caribees alſo faſt after having kill'd an Arouague, i. e. an Enemy.

THEY have no ſtated Time for holding their Aſſemblies of War. As [a] to all thoſe of another kind, we have already obſerved that they eat, drink, and get drunk in them; to which we ſhall add, that in theſe they cut one another to Pieces in cold Blood.

WHENEVER they are about making War, ſome old Woman draws up the whole Deſign, and makes a Speech to the Company in order to ſtir them up to Revenge; and when ſhe ſees that by the Strength of her Harangue and of the Ovicou, which is their Drink, the Aſſembly begin to give manifeſt Tokens of their being inſpired with Rage and Fury, ſhe then throws into the midſt of them ſome broil'd Limbs of thoſe they had kill'd

in War; after which, a Captain ſeconds the old Lady, and makes a Speech upon the ſame Subject.

THEIR Manner of making War is to come upon their Enemies by Surprize, and to fall upon them in Ambuſcade. " [a] They cover themſelves all over with Boughs and " Leaves, and mask themſelves with an Indian Cane Leaf call'd Baliſier, by making " a Hole for their Eyes to look thro'. Thus equipp'd, they ſtand up cloſe to a Tree, " and wait till their Enemies come by, in order to beat their Heads to Pieces at one " Blow with their Bouton, (Club) or to ſhoot them with their Arrows after their being " paſſed by." Whenever they fall upon a Houſe that is cover'd with Leaves of Cane-Sticks or Palm-Trees, they ſet Fire to the Roof, by pouring down Arrows upon it, to which they tie an Handful of Cotton, which they light juſt when they let fly.

THEIR Arrows are always poiſon'd. " They are full of little Notches, which make " ſo many Tongues, very neatly wrought, and cut in ſuch a Manner as not to hinder " the Arrow from penetrating, but from coming out again without widening the Wound " conſiderably; or by driving it back to the oppoſite Part to draw it out by making a " freſh one. They always make two Cuts in that Part where the Reed is grafted at " the ſharp End, in order that when it is enter'd into the Body, the reſt of the Arrow " may fall, and at the ſame Time leave the poiſon'd End in the Body." They treat their Priſoners of War much after the ſame Manner as the Canadans do theirs.

THE Caribees are jealous of their Wives. A bare Suſpicion of their having violated the Fidelity they owe their Husbands, gives them a Power to kill their Wives without any further Ceremony. The Husband is not liable to be call'd to an Account for an Affair of this Nature, becauſe the Women of theſe Iſlands are their Husband's Slaves; and, notwithſtanding the Rigour of their Slavery, we are nevertheleſs " [b] aſſured that they obey with ſo much Exactneſs, Silence, Sweetneſs, and " Reſpect, that their Husbands are very rarely oblig'd to remind them of it: An Ex- " ample worthy the Imitation of the Chriſtian Wives, who are daily inſtructed from " the Pulpit, but to no Purpoſe, in the Duties of Obedience and conjugal Fidelity. " This Doctrine will probably be inculcated to them as long as the World ſtands, but " will have as little Effect upon them as the Preaching of the Goſpel has with regard " to the Caribees." In fine, the Female World are here ſuch complete Slaves, that a Woman is never known to eat with her Husband, or even in his Preſence.

THEIR young Girls about twelve Years of Age, wear the Apron, which is the Characteriſtic of Modeſty and Chaſtity. In the Lucayan Iſlands, when a [c] Mother knows by certain natural Symptoms that her Daughter may aſſume the Name of Woman, the Relations meet together and make a Feaſt; after which they give her a Cotton-Net fill'd with Herbs, which ſhe wears afterwards about her Thighs, for before ſhe went ſtark-naked. 'Tis true indeed, that Nakedneſs does not make any Impreſſion upon their Senſes; and we are aſſured they have ſo much Virtue as to ſay, that when they are naked they are to be look'd upon only in the Face. [d] We are alſo told, that when a young Maiden is of an Age fit for Marriage, ſhe is obliged to live for ten Days together upon dry Caſſave; if in this Time ſhe does not die with Hunger, 'tis a Proof that ſhe will be a good Houſe-wife.

SUCH young Caribee Women as are marriageable, are not allow'd to have any Commerce with their young Men. Their Mothers never ſuffer 'em to go out of their Sight. "Nevertheleſs, ſays Father Labat, a young Woman very ſeldom lives to that Age, "without being ſingled out before by ſome young Savage, who conſiders her the Moment he has made his Declaration as his future Wife, till ſhe may be of an Age of "being ſo in effect. Among theſe Savages, Relations are permitted to marry with one "another, a Woman not being allow'd to refuſe her Kinſman; they often pitch upon "'em when they are but four or five Years of Age. A Brother does not marry his "Siſter, nor a Son his Mother." Rochefort aſſures us, "That they look upon this "Crime with Horror; but that they allow ſo general, ſo extenſive a Liberty, with re-"gard to all the other Degrees of Conſanguinity, and the Plurality of Wives, that a "Man often marries three or four own Siſters, who at the ſame Time are either his "Neices or Couſin-Germans. They reaſon thus, that as they have been brought up "together, they will therefore love each other the more, and preſerve a greater Har-"mony." But here their Notions differ greatly from ours.

WE muſt not omit a very whimſical Cuſtom. It ſometimes happens that a Caribee ſhall before-hand demand the Offspring of a Woman with Child, provided it be a Girl; which if they grant him, he marks the Woman's Belly with Rocou. As ſoon as the Girl is ſeven or eight Years of Age, he goes to Bed to her, in order to inure her to the Sports of Venus.

A FATHER upon the Birth of his firſt-born Son withdraws from Society, and keeps a very ſtrict Faſt for thirty or forty Days together. [a] Another Traveller adds, that the Husband goes to Bed, and acts the Part of the Lying-in-Woman. They neither give us the Origin or Reaſon of this Cuſtom. Here follows another that is altogether as whimſical: The Time preſcrib'd for Faſting being expir'd, they pitch upon two young [b] Caribees to flaſh his Skin, and to cut and hack his Body all over: They then rub the Wound with Tobacco-Juice, after which they ſeat him in a Chair painted red. The Women bring in Victuals, which the old Men preſent to the wounded Perſon, and feed him as we do a Child. In like Manner they pour Drink down his Throat, holding his Neck at the ſame Time; and when he has done eating, the old Men preſent him with two Pieces of Caſſave, which the poor tortur'd Father holds in his Hands. The Ceremony is perform'd in a large open Place, during which he gets aſtride upon two Caſſaves, which he is afterwards obliged to eat. We may very well ſuppoſe 'em to be bloody. They then ſmear the Child's Face over with Blood, which they ſay contributes to the making him brave and courageous; and the more patient the Father is, the more his Son will be valiant. But this is not all; he is oblig'd to abſtain for ſix Months together from various Things, every Time any of his Wives are brought to Bed. The Moment the Child is born, he is bath'd in Water, and if it happens in the Night-Time, the Father bathes himſelf alſo; then the Mother begins to flatten the Infant's Forehead, and to ſquaſh its Face, which they think an Addition to its Beauty. We may naturally ſuppoſe that the Education they beſtow upon them is of a Piece with the reſt.

THEY name the Child about a Fortnight after its Birth, which they take from ſome of the Anceſtors of their Family, from ſome Tree, or other Object that is agreeable to them; in a Word, from any Thing that either pleaſes or ſtrikes their Senſes. The Child is nam'd with Form and Ceremony, and has its Godfathers and Godmothers, if we may call thoſe by that Name who bore a Hole in the Child's Ears, in his Lower-Lip, and between his Noſtrils. They put Threads into theſe Holes, to which Pendants hang dangling; but they delay the Ceremony in caſe the Child be too weak to go thro' it. At two Years of Age they perform the Ceremony of cutting off its Hair.

Their FUNERAL RITES.

WHENEVER a Caribee dies, they call all his Relations together, to ſhew 'em that he died a natural Death; and if only one of theſe ſhould have eſcap'd ſeeing the Deceaſed, the united Teſtimony of all the reſt would not be ſufficient to perſuade him that he died according to the common Courſe of Nature, but he would imagine they had all conſpir'd his Death, which he would think himſelf oblig'd to revenge, by killing ſome one or other of them. They lay the Deceaſed in a Well, which they dig in a Corner of a Carbet, or Caribee Hut, about four Foot in Diameter, and ſix or ſeven deep. He is here laid all on a Heap, his Elbows on his Knees, and the Palms of his Hands on his Cheeks. He is painted red, with Whiſkers and black Strokes of a richer Dye than thoſe commonly uſed, which are generally made of Junipa. They bind his Hair behind his Head; his Bow, his Arrows, his Club, and his Knife lying by his Side. They put him in Sand Knee-deep, which they only do to keep him fix'd in that Poſture; for the Sand does not come up as high as the Top of the Pit. After all the Relations have examin'd the Body, they fill up the Hole. Another Traveller adds, that they bury with him [a] a Servant to attend upon him, and his Dog to watch him.

We may eaſily imagine that their Mourning is whimſical enough. They firſt lay the Corpſe into the Pit, then light a Fire juſt by, when every one ſquats himſelf round about it. The Men ſet themſelves behind the Women, and invite 'em to weep, by giving 'em a Tap on the Arm: They then all roar and cry together, breaking out into long and repeated Exclamations on the Death of the Deceaſed, at the ſame Time aſking him what made him die.

They believe that the human Body is inhabited with a Variety of Souls, and that that of the Heart is immortal. They aſſign one Soul to the Head, which is the ſecond in Dignity. The others, ſay they, are ſeated in the Joints and thoſe Parts of the Body where a Pulſe is felt.

The firſt is immortal, which after its leaving this World, goes and inhabits another young, beautiful, newly-created Body in the next. The other Souls continue upon Earth, and tranſmigrate into the Bodies of Beaſts, or are changed into evil Genii. We are certain of one Circumſtance, which is, that all their Notions on this Article are very irregular and incoherent; for they ſay that the Soul, although immortal, is nevertheleſs a Body of a very thin and delicate Subſtance. But this Idea is not peculiar to them, ſince ſome Fathers of the Church have given into it. They look upon this Soul as a ſenſual Being, which is neceſſitated to eat, drink, and divert itſelf in the next World; but then if we aſk what Places are the Scenes of theſe Pleaſures? ſome of them will anſwer, that the Soul will go into certain fortunate Iſlands, where their Enemies will be their Slaves; and others, that it will be plung'd up to the Neck in a Flood of Pleaſures.

Their RECORDS, &c.

WHENEVER they have ſet a Day for the tranſacting of any Buſineſs, they take a certain Number of Peas, and put one every Day into a little Gourd-Bottle, till the whole are put in; by which they know that to be the Day they had fix'd upon. They have another Way of eaſing their Memories, which is as follows: They take a Rope, and tie as many Knots in it as they have Things to remember, which differs very little from the Quippos of the Peruvians. They alſo make as many Marks upon certain Pieces of Wood, as they intend to employ Days in preparing an Affair.

THEY regulate their Months by Moons, and reckon their Years by Harveſts; but in general compute 'em by the Courſe of the ſeven Stars, or Pleiades.

Religion of the Savages of Hiſpaniola.

'TWOULD be needleſs to ſay much upon this Head, becauſe the [a] Religion of theſe Savages is the ſame with that of the Inhabitants of the reſt of the Antilles. We will only remark, that theſe Savages pretended their Demons had formerly foretold that their Country would be conquer'd and deſtroy'd by a bearded Nation who wore Clothes, who would ſuppreſs their Worſhip, aboliſh their Cuſtoms, and murder their Children. In Commemoration of this Oracle, they eſtabliſh'd a Form of Prayer, accompanied with Offerings, in honour of their Demons; but the Time fix'd for putting a Period to the Power of theſe infernal Spirits was come, and they were oblig'd to ſubmit.

THERE was no Difference between their Prieſts and thoſe of other ſavage Nations, and their Dances were exactly the ſame with thoſe already mention'd. Theſe Dances, which were intermingled with Songs, and which they conſider'd as a religious Act, and we as a prophane, was call'd Areita in their Language. Theſe Songs, whoſe Subjects were the Exploits of their Anceſtors and the great Atchievements of their Countrymen, might be conſider'd as the Annals of their Nation; and they danc'd to the Sound of a kind of Drum, made of a hollow Piece of Wood. Tobacco was the Incenſe with which they perfum'd their Idols. The Prieſts, whom the Fumes of Tobacco either fuddled or ſtupified, were cunning enough to make an Advantage of this Delirium, by perſuading the People that the incoherent Rhapſodies they then utter'd, were ſo many Oracles with which the Demons inſpir'd 'em.

[a] Some Spaniards, who were preſent at the firſt Conqueſts which were made in America, tell us, that the Inhabitants of Hiſpaniola look'd upon the Cbemens, or Zemes, for 'tis thus they have expreſs'd it, as the Meſſengers, the Agents, or Mediators of a ſupreme, ſole, eternal, infinite, almighty, inviſible Being: They imagin'd that thoſe Zemes preſided over all the Affairs of Men. They gave the Name of Jocanna and Guamanocon to this ſovereign God, who, nevertheleſs, according to them, was a created Being, ſince they tell us of his Mother, who went by five ſeveral Names. Whenever they went to War, they uſed to fix two little Zemes upon their Foreheads.

We have already obſerv'd, that thoſe Zemes were of Wood, Stone, Cotton, &c. The Savages of Hiſpaniola worſhipp'd one under the Figure of a Woman, by whoſe Sides were placed her two firſt Miniſters of State, both of them ready to execute her Orders. One of theſe, who acted the Part of an Herald, convened the other Zemes, in order to raiſe the Wind, to bring down Rain, &c. as Occaſion might require. The other was commiſſion'd to puniſh thoſe with Floods and Inundations who did not pay the Homage they ow'd to their Miſtreſs. We have borrow'd theſe Remarks from a Treatiſe of Peter Martyr, entitled de rebus oceanicis & novo orbe, &c.

CEREMONIE Religieuse des Habitans de l'Isle ESPAGNOLLE

THE religious Worſhip they paid theſe Demons has ſomething remarkable in it. * The Caciques always caus'd the Solemnity of it to be proclaim'd by Heralds, and uſed on the Day appointed for the Ceremony, to walk in Proceſſion by Beat of Drum at the Head of their Subjects of both Sexes, who were dreſs'd in their beſt Geer, but the Maidens were naked. The whole Company went afterwards to the Temple of theſe falſe Gods, who were there repreſented in a very groteſque and frightful Manner, and as they are drawn by our Painters when they repreſent the Devil. The Prieſts uſed alſo to worſhip theſe Idols, and pray to 'em with ſo much Zeal, or rather with ſo many Cries and Howlings, as muſt neceſſarily terrify a Company of poor Wretches who had not Cunning enough to find out the Tricks which thoſe inſidious Prieſts conceal'd under their pretended Devotion. 'Twas then they preſented the Oblations of the Devotees to their Gods, which were partly Cakes brought by Women in Baskets, adorn'd with Flowers; after which, as ſoon as the Prieſt had given the Signal, they danc'd and ſang the Praiſes of the Zemes, whom we before call'd Chemens, and offer'd their Cakes; the whole concluded with the Praiſes of their antient Kings, or Caciques, and with Prayers for the Proſperity of the Nation. The Prieſts uſed to break theſe Cakes into ſeveral Pieces, and divide them among the Men. They were oblig'd to keep for a Twelvemonth in their own Houſes thoſe Pieces of Cake, which were hallowed by their having been made an Oblation to the Zemes. They were conſider'd as ſo many Preſervatives againſt ſeveral kinds of Accidents. When the Proceſſion, which is here repreſented, was got to the Door of the Temple, the Caciqne, who was at the Head of it, ſet himſelf down at the Entrance, when the Proceſſion went in, ſinging all the Way, and paſs'd, as it were, in Review before him. When they were got to the Idol, they thruſt a little Stick down their Throats, in order to make 'em vomit; for they were obliged to preſent themſelves pure and unſullied before their God, and with their Hearts, as it were, on their Lips.

THEIR Zemes reveal'd themſelves to the Prieſts, and ſometimes to the People. Whether this were an Artifice of the Demon, or a cunning Trick of the Boia, they judg'd of the Anſwer which the Oracle had given by the Countenance the Prieſt put on. If he danc'd and ſung, it was a good Sign; if he diſcover'd a ſorrowful Air, the People were ſad and dejected, gave themſelves up to Grief and Tears, and faſted till there were ſome Hopes of their being reconcil'd to their Gods.

THE Account they give of the Origin of Mankind is ſo very odd and whimſical, that we can ſcarce prevail upon ourſelves to give it a Place in this Work. Men, ſay they, came out of two Caverns of a certain Mountain. Out of one of 'em came thoſe whom we may call the Good; that is to ſay, the Flower and choiceſt Part of Humankind; and from the other, the moſt vile and worthleſs Part of 'em. The Sun greatly enrag'd at this, turn'd him into a Stone who keeps the Opening of the Mountain, (probably to prevent the Birth of Mankind,) and metamorphos'd theſe new-created Beings into Trees, Frogs, &c. Notwithſtanding which, the World grew more and more populous. In ſhort, this is full as ridiculous as thoſe Notions of ſome of the Antients, who made Mankind to ſpring from Oaks. The Sun and Moon themſelves came out of a Grotto in the Iſland, to enlighten the Univerſe: Its Reputation, indeed, was ſo great, that the Savages of Hiſpaniola uſed to go in Pilgrimage to it with as great Pomp and Devotion, as thoſe in any other Part of the World. The Cave was embelliſh'd with Pictures in the Indian Taſte; but before they enter'd, they always paid their Devotions to two Devils who guarded the Entrance thereof.

POLYGAMY was eſtabliſh'd in this Iſland; for they were allow'd to take as many Wives as they could keep, and their Caciques had thirty at leaſt. Such Writers as have writ on America relate, that when they died, they uſed to diſpatch two or three of them to attend upon 'em in the other World. Notwithſtanding this Plurality of Wives, they yet were addicted to a Crime equally whimſical and deteſtable; a Subject worthy the Eulogiums which an [a] Archbiſhop and an Abbé have preſumed to conſecrate to it. They believed there were ſuch Things as Spirits, and fancied that the Dead uſed to run up and down in the Night-Time; which indeed was a Subject worthy the Exerciſe of their Piety, in caſe they had had the Wit to do ſo. Theſe Ghoſts would nevertheleſs ſometimes play their Gambols with Women; but whenever they happen'd to meet with any Occaſion of putting their Activity in Practice, they were found much leſs alert than the Living. They were not allow'd to put on a human Shape but with certain [b] Reſtrictions, which made them neither agreeable to the Women, nor formidable to their Husbands.

'TWOULD be no eaſy Matter to reconcile the Politeneſs of theſe People with the Barbarity of their Religion, the greateſt Part of the Worſhip whereof conſiſted chiefly in ſacrificing Men, and ſhedding their Blood before Idols; but it would be full as difficult, to reconcile the Cruelty with which the Spaniards treated the People whom they conquer'd in this powerful Empire of America, with the Calm, the gentle Spirit of Chriſtianity. The ſame Fury inſpir'd the Zeal of both. The former, hurried on by a blind Superſtition, ſacrificed Men to their falſe Gods; the latter, prompted by a cruel Zeal, heighten'd by the moſt inſatiable Avarice, extirpated, to the Glory of the true God, a Nation who deſtroy'd their Fellow-Creatures to honour the falſe Deities. This Pretence was ſpecious enough, and nothing could flatter more agreeably the Paſſions of thoſe Chriſtians who firſt undertook the Conqueſt of America. 'Tis indeed true, that as they had form'd a Reſolution of making a more lawful Uſe of the Wealth of thoſe Regions, of conſecrating their Conqueſts to God, and to bring over to him many thouſands of Elect among the Americans, by the prevailing Force of Example, they thought themſelves empower'd to employ the ſecular Arm, whenever they ſhould think it requiſite, and to ſeize upon what they had no manner of Right to; as they by that means diſarm'd Impiety, and depriv'd the Devil of his Power to hurt. The Reader will perhaps ſay, that theſe Reaſons are abſurd; but ſuch an Aſſertion would be unjuſt; for Practice and Experience have ſhewn that they are of excellent Uſe, though the Americans could not be prevail'd with to give into 'em; and that 'twas nothing but their Ignorance made them exclaim againſt the Tyranny as well as [c] Morals of the Spaniards.

THE firſt Inhabitants of Mexico were a Set of Savages, who differ'd but little from thoſe of the moſt northern Parts of America [d], whence they are ſuppoſed to come originally. They liv'd by hunting in Foreſts and Mountains, without any kind of Order or Government. They worſhipp'd the Sun, and ſacrificed Birds to him. Theſe Savages, who were call'd Chicamicas, and ſpent their Lives in this Manner, left the beſt Lands deſart and uncultivated; but the Navatelcas, under which Name were included ſix or ſeven Nations who came out of the North, got Poſſeſſion of theſe Lands by inſenſible Degrees, and afterwards peopled and cultivated them. Theſe Colonies were form'd in the ninth Century, if we may believe the Hieroglyphics of the Mexicans. Three hundred and two Years after this firſt Expedition, they undertook a ſecond, which was that of the preſent Mexicans; an Expedition vaſtly more remarkable than the former. The latter ſubdued the Navatelcas under the Conduct of Mexi, their Captain and Lawgiver. They were ſure of meeting with Succeſs in this Expedition, becauſe Vitzliputzli, the God of the Nation, had aſſur'd him that he would conquer the Territories he was going in queſt of. Mexi march'd at the Head of theſe Adventurers; and four Prieſts, to whom his Oracles were pronounc'd, carried him in a little Trunk made of Reeds. Vitzliputzli declar'd to 'em the Manner how he would be worſhipp'd, and himſelf inſtituted the Ceremonies, and gave 'em Laws. Whenever they encamp'd, they erected a Tabernacle in the Midſt of the Camp, and placed the little Trunk or Ark upon the Altar. They never march'd or encamp'd till after having firſt conſulted the Idol, and receiv'd his Orders. Their March was very long and ſlow. 'Twas their Cuſtom to leave their old Men and the Infirm in all thoſe Places where they uſed to pitch their Camps, in order for their forming Colonies. One Day, as ſeveral of the latter were waſhing themſelves, Vitzliputzli commanded the Mexicans to ſteal their Clothes, and to go off immediately. The forſaken Savages, offended at this Inſult, chang'd their Manners, Cuſtoms, and Language, preſerving at the ſame Time an implacable Hatred againſt their antient Countrymen. Vitzliputzli manifeſted his Power by Miracles, which it were needleſs to trouble the Reader with.

BEING at laſt arriv'd at the promiſed Land, the God appear'd to a Prieſt in a Dream, and commanded him to ſettle himſelf in that Part of the Lake, where an Eagle ſhould be found ſitting on a Fig-Tree which was planted in a Rock. The Prieſt related his Viſion, upon which they ſought for the Place by the above-mention'd Tokens. Some Time after they found the Fig-Tree, growing out of the Rock, and the Eagle ſitting upon it, holding a ſmall Bird in his Talons; and 'twas on this Spot that the famous City of Mexico was built. The next Day the Mexicans made a Tabernacle for the Idol, till ſuch Time as they might build a Temple. The City was by his Command divided into four Quarters, or Diſtricts, and Vitzliputzli's Tabernacle remain'd in the Middle, who enjoin'd 'em to eſtabliſh a tutelary God over each Diſtrict.

THE Reader may obſerve, that this Story of the firſt coming of the Mexicans to Mexico, agrees in a great many Circumſtances with that of the Entrance of the Iſraelites into the Land of Canaan. Might it not poſſibly have happen'd, that the Mexicans may have preſerv'd, in the Hiſtory of the Foundation of their State, (allowing for the Errors they may have made in Chronology) ſome of thoſe Incidents which we meet with in the Hiſtory of the Jews? For as they came originally from the North of America, or rather from the North of Aſia, they might probably have had among them ſome of the Poſterity of the antient Jews, who were diſpers'd up and down after the Aſſyrians had ruin'd their State.

'TIS plain from what has been juſt now related of Vitzliputzli's Power, that the Mexicans acknowledge a Supreme Being under that Name, notwithſtanding what the Spaniards affirm'd of their having no Word to expreſs the Deity; ſo that they were obliged to make uſe of the Word Dios, to denote that Being whom we call God. Be that as it will, the Mexicans worſhipped Vitzliputzli, as the ſovereign Lord of all Things, and Creator of Heaven and Earth, and added the Epithet Ineffable to that Supreme Deity: But notwithſtanding the great Idea they had form'd to themſelves of this Firſt Cauſe, they yet could not perſuade themſelves that 'twas poſſible for it to govern the World without the immediate Aſſiſtance of a numberleſs Multitude of Genii. The Author of the Conqueſt of Mexico tells us, that they were ſo ſilly as to believe, " That there were not " any Gods at that Time in the other Parts of Heaven, till ſuch Time as Mankind grew " more and more miſerable, in proportion as they grew more numerous. They look'd " upon their Gods as ſo many propitious Genii, who were ever multiplying as Mortals " ſtood in Need of their Aſſiſtance."

THE greateſt God after Vitzliputzli, was the Sun. Vitzliputzli was an Idol made of a very precious Wood, repreſented under an human Shape, ſeated in a Chair of Sky-colour'd Blue, ſupported by a Litter, having four Serpents Heads at the four Corners: The Forehead of the Idol was of a blue Colour, and had a blue Streak croſs the Noſe, which went from Ear to Ear. [a] A Dutch Author relates, That this Idol had Wings like thoſe of a Bat, large round Eyes, a Mouth that reach'd from Ear to Ear; but he does not ſay whence he borrow'd theſe Particulars. We had better ſtick to the Deſcription which the Author of the Conqueſt of Mexico and his Tranſlator have given us of that Idol, which they tell us was placed on a very high Altar, and ſurrounded with Curtains. " He was repreſented under a human Shape, ſitting on a Throne ſupported by " an azure Globe, which they call'd Heaven: Four Poles or Sticks came out from two " Sides of this Globe, at the Ends of which Serpents Heads were carv'd; the whole " making a Litter, which the Prieſts carried on their Shoulders, whenever the Idol was " ſhewn in Public. It had on its Head a Helmet of Feathers of different Colours made " in the Shape of a Bird, the Bill and Tuft whereof were of burniſh'd Gold. Its Coun- " tenance was hideous and ſevere, and was made ſtill uglier by two black Streaks which " went the one croſs its Forehead, and the other croſs its Noſe. He held in his Right " Hand a waving Snake, which ſerv'd him as a Cane; he held four Arrows in his Left " Hand, which he look'd upon with Veneration, as being a Preſent from Heaven; and " a Buckler cover'd with five white Feathers ſet croſs-wiſe. Theſe ſeveral Ornaments, " Marks, and Adders, had a myſterious Signification couched under them. The Globe " denoted the extenſive Power of Vitzliputzli, who was cover'd over with Pearls and " Jewels.

TLALOCH, whom ſome Writers confound with Teſcalipuca, of whom we ſhall ſhortly ſpeak, was an Idol pretty much reſembling that before deſcrib'd. The Mexicans [b] looked upon thoſe Gods as Brothers, and ſuch great Friends, as to divide between themſelves the ſovereign Power in War; that their Strength was equal, and their Wills the ſame: For which Reaſon they offer'd the ſame Victim and the ſame Prayers to both. They had equal Thanks paid for any good Succeſs; and, to uſe the Words of the Tranſlator of the Conqueſt of Mexico, they held the Scales of Devotion they paid them In æquilibrio, as it were.

TESCALIPUCA was the God of Penance: The Mexicans uſed to call upon him in Adverſity, becauſe they imagined he puniſhed the Sins of Mankind with Plagues, Famine, &c. We ſee him here repreſented in two different Manners: In the firſt he is ſeated in a Chair placed in the midſt of the Altar, being an Image made of Stone, as black and ſhining as Jet, and covered with Jewels, repreſented under an human Shape like that of Tlolach and Vitzliputzli; having Gold Ear-Rings, a Jewel or Trinket fix'd to a Chain of the ſame Metal which went round its Neck, and cover'd its Breaſt all over; and a little Tube of Cryſtal about ſix Inches in Length, was ſtuck thro' its lower Lip. They ſometimes fixed a green or blue Feather at the End of the Tube, which was done out of Judgment, not Caprice, it being one of the Symbols of that falſe Deity. From its Hair, tied up with a golden Fillet, there hung an Ear, which was another Symbol, by which the afflicted Soul and repenting Sinner was taught, that he might confide in the Divine Mercy, who would liſten to his Prayers. He held four Darts in his Right Hand, ſignifying the Puniſhment for Sin, and the Vengeance of Heaven, which manifeſts itſelf to Man by Plagues, War, Poverty, and Famine. His left Hand held a golden Mirror extremely ſmooth, and ſo bright as to receive the Objects very clearly and diſtinctly. With the ſame Hand he held behind this Mirror a Fan made of Feathers of all kinds of Colours, ſignifying that nothing was hid from that vindictive God. Round the Idol were a great Number of emblematical Figures, whoſe Signification we did not learn. The other Form, under which they repreſented this Idol, was the ſame as the foregoing, viz. that of a Man ſeated in a majeſtic Manner on a Throne ſupported by a kind of Altar, and hid behind a red Curtain, on which Skulls and Men's Bones were either embroider'd or painted. This Idol had as hideous a Look, and its Poſture was as dreadful and terrible as the other. Its Right Arm was up-lifted, as ready to hurl a Javelin it held in its Hand; its Left ſupporting a Shield, whence iſſued out four Arrows round five Pine-Apples ſet croſswiſe. The Body of the Idol was Black, and its Head was cover'd with Quails Feathers; the whole ſurrounded with a great Number of ſymbolical Figures, and Things of ineſtimable Value.

THE [a] Mercury and Plutus of the Mexicans was alſo repreſented under an human Shape, except that it had the Head of a Bird, with a painted Paper Mitre upon its Head, and a Scythe in its Hand. The Body of it was covered with Jewels of extraordinary Value; a Habit very well adapted to him whom they worſhipped as the Beſtower of Treaſures.

TOZI, that is to ſay our Grand Mother, was of mortal Extraction. Vitzliputzli procured her divine Honours, by enjoining the Mexicans to demand her of her Father, who was King of Culhucacan, for Queen; this being done, they alſo commanded him to put her to Death, afterwards to flay her, and to cover a young Man with her Skin. It was in this manner ſhe was ſtript of her Humanity to be tranſlated among the Gods: And 'tis from this Apotheoſis, that theſe Savages, whoſe Superſtition was vaſtly barbarous and cruel, dated the Cuſtom of ſacrificing Men to Idols.

THE Mexicans ador'd another Idol, made of all the Seeds of the Earth kneaded together with the Blood of certain young Children who were marked out for the Sacrifice; the Hearts of theſe innocent Victims being firſt tore out of their Bodies. The Heart was offer'd to this Idol, which the Prieſts conſecrated with the utmoſt Solemnity in Preſence of all the People. It was uſual for their Devotees to adorn with Jewels the God whom the Prieſts had created; but no Layman was ſuffer'd to touch it after its Conſecration. They renew'd the Idol from Time to Time, when 'twas their Cuſtom to pull the old one into ſeveral Pieces, and afterwards to diſtribute them among the Devotees as ſo many Relics, when happy was he who could get a Piece of them; for they pretended that theſe Relics were of excellent Uſe in preſerving from Dangers. The Soldiers always carried them with them to War. The Prieſts at the ſame Time that they perform'd this Solemnity of Conſecration, made alſo a holy Water, which was uſed at the Coronation of their Monarchs, and when the Bleſſing was given to ſuch Generals as were ſent into the Field.

WE ſhall mention the God of Hunting, and the Ceremonies of Penance and Mortification, when we come to give the Deſcription of the Mexican Feſtival. Suffice it that we have given an Account of their principal Deities in this Place; not but they had others whoſe Worſhip was as ſolemn as thoſe above-mentioned; but their Number was exceeding great, being upwards of two thouſand, who had all their reſpective Temples, Ceremonies, and Sacrifices. " [a] There was hardly a Street without its tutelary Divini-" ty, nor was there ſcarce a Diſeaſe but had its peculiar Altar, and to theſe the Mexicans " uſed to flock in order to be cured. Their crazy Imaginations uſed to form to them-" ſelves Gods from their Fears, not conſidering at the ſame Time, that the Power they " aſcrib'd to one, leſſen'd the Power of the other." And not ſatisfy'd with having peopled Heaven with Gods of all Ranks and Kinds, they treated one of their Priſoners as tho' he had been a God, for a whole Year together, and ſometimes for ſix Months only, according to the Deity for whom they deſign'd him, and whoſe Name they gave him; after which they ſacrificed him to the Idol. The Inhabitants of Marſeilles had formerly this cruel Cuſtom; theſe uſed to pamper a Man with the greateſt Dainties for a whole Year together, then led him with great Solemnity all about the City, after which they ſacrificed him.

Their TEMPLES.

THERE were eight [b] Temples in the City of Mexico, equally magnificent, and built pretty near alike; but that of Vitzliputzli excell'd the reſt in Bigneſs, which was of ſuch prodigious Extent, that a City of five hundred Houſes might have been built in the Court of it. We ſhall give the Deſcription of this great Edifice, as we find it in the Author of the Hiſtory of Mexico: This Edifice was once the Center of the Mexican Idolatry.

" THEY firſt enter'd into a large Quadrangle, ſurrounded with a great Stone Wall, " where ſeveral Serpents in Relievo, twined one in another on the Outſide of the Wall, " ſtruck Terror into the Beholder; particularly at the Sight of the Front of the firſt " Door, which was fill'd with them, under which ſome myſterious Signification was " couch'd. Before arriving at this Gate, there ſtood a kind of a Chapel, which was " full as terrible; 'twas built of Stone, raiſed thirty Steps, having a Terras at Top, on " which ſeveral Trunks of great Trees, all lopp'd of an equal Height, were planted on " a Level at equal Diſtances, on which Poles were laid from Tree to Tree. On each " of theſe Poles hung the Skulls of ſeveral unhappy Wretches who had been ſacrificed, " whoſe Number, which it would be impoſſible to relate without Horror, was always " equal; for the Miniſters of the Temple took care to ſupply thoſe which through Time " dropt off, with others.

" THE four Sides of the Quadrangle had each a Gate, exactly facing one another, " and look'd to the four Cardinal Winds. Four Stone Statues were placed over each " Gate, which ſeem'd to point out the Way, and to command thoſe to return back, " who were for going thither with an irreligious Heart; theſe were conſider'd as Por-" ter-Gods, upon which Account they were ſaluted at going it. The Apartments of the " ſacrificing Prieſts and Miniſters were built in the Inſide of the Wall of the Quadrangle, " together with ſome Shops that went round the whole, which however took up but " little Room, its Extent being ſo vaſt, that eight or ten thouſand Perſons uſed to dance " therein at eaſe, on their moſt ſolemn Days.

" IN

" In the Center of this Quadrangle, a great Stone Edifice was erected, which in fair " Weather was ſeen to top the higheſt Towers in the City. It always leſſen'd in Big- " neſs upwards, till it form'd a half Pyramid, three Sides of which were ſhelving, and " the fourth ſupported a Stair-Caſe. It was a ſumptuous Pile of Building, and built " according to the beſt Rules of Architecture. It was an hundred and twenty De- " grees high, and built ſo ſtrong, that its Top, which was flat, was a Square forty Foot " on each Side, and was finely paved with Squares of Jaſper-Stones of all kinds of " Colours: The Pillars or Props, which like Balliſters or Rails went round this Place, " were winding like a Snail-Shell, and both Sides of it faced with a black Stone " which looked like Jet, carefully and dextrouſly ſet together, and faſten'd with a Bi- " tumen of a red and black Colour, which was a great Ornament to the whole " Building.

" On the two Sides of the Rail or Balliſter, at that Part where the Stair-Caſe ended, " two Marble Statues ſupported, in an Attitude that very well expreſs'd their Labour, " two very odd-faſhion'd Candleſtics. At ſome Diſtance from hence, was a Stone of " a green Colour five Foot in Height, ſharp-bottom'd: Here the unhappy Wretch, who " was to be ſacrificed, was laid on his Back, when they ripp'd up his Stomach, and tore " out his Heart. Above this Stone, and oppoſite to the Stair-Caſe, was a large ſtrong " Chapel, the Roof of which was of a rare and precious Wood, under which their Idol " Vitzliputzli was ſeated, on a very high Altar with Curtains round it.

" In another Chapel, to the Left of the firſt, and built in the ſame Taſte, and of " equal Bulk, was placed the Idol Tlaloch. The Treaſure of theſe two Chapels was " of an immenſe Value; the Walls and Altars were cover'd with Jewels and precious " Stones upon Feathers of various Colours.

" The Temple of the God of the Air was round, ſignifying the circular Motion of the " Air round the Earth. The Entrance of this Edifice reſembled the Mouth of a Ser- " pent when wide open; and to make it ſtill more terrible, they had fill'd it with the " Figures of all kind of Monſters."

The Temple of Teſcalipuca was a lofty Pile of Building, and built with as much Regularity as that of Vitzliputzli; no Layman was allowed to enter into this holy Place. Theſe Temples were look'd upon as Cathedrals. We ſhall not mention the numberleſs Multitude of Temples which were met with in the different Parts of the City, and which poſſibly might have nothing either great or remarkable in them ſave the Name only; but there is one Circumſtance which is not to be parallel'd among the Pagans of Antiquity, viz. That this unaccountable ſuperſtitious People had erected certain dark Houſes purpoſely to lodge an infinite Number of Idols of Gold, Silver, &c. cover'd, or rather cruſted over with Blood, with which they were every Day ſmear'd. Nor did the Stink of theſe Charnel-Houſes, whoſe Floors were cover'd over with Blood, any way leſſen their Devotion: But none but the Nobility were allow'd to enter into them; and to heighten the Dignity of this Privilege, the Prieſts would not even admit any of theſe to enter in, till they had firſt ſacrificed a Man.

Their SACRIFICES and PENANCE.

AS it would be no eaſy Matter to find any Species of Idolatry among the Antients as extenſive as that of the Mexicans, it would be full as difficult to meet with any Sacrifices ſo barbarous and inhuman as theirs; not that we are ignorant they were practiſed by the Antients, ſince we have given Inſtances of it: But 'tis certain that nothing can be compar'd to this execrable Worſhip, unleſs it be that of the Carthaginians, and the Canaanites from whom they are deſcended. The bloody Sacrifices of the Mexicans were perform'd in this manner: The Victims deſigned for Sacrifice were led to the Charnel-Houſe, which, as we ſee in the Figure, riſes like a kind of Plat-Form or Terraſs, ſupported by ſeveral Trunks of Trees. The Victims, who were cloſely guarded by ſome Mexican Soldiers, waited at the Foot of the Terraſs till ſuch Time as they ſhould be put to Death; and to heighten their Diſtreſs, a great Number of Skulls hanging on the Poles which went from Tree to Tree, were continually preſenting themſelves to their Sight; theſe were the Skulls of ſuch as had been ſacrificed before them. A Prieſt holding in his Hand an Idol made of Wheat, Maiz, and Honey, drew near to theſe unhappy Wretches, and preſenting it to each of them, cry'd out at the ſame Time, There is your God. This done, they withdrew, going off on the other Side of the Terraſs, when the Victims where immediately brought upon it; this being, as we have already obſerv'd, the Place appointed for the Sacrifice. Here it was that ſix Miniſters of the Idols ſlaughter'd theſe [a] Victims. After having tore out their Hearts, they threw the Bodies down the Stair-Caſe from the Top of the Terraſs to the Bottom. We are aſſured that all thoſe who had taken any of theſe unhappy Wretches in War, uſed to divide them among themſelves, and eat them. They never ſacrificed leſs than forty or fifty of theſe Victims at a Time; and thoſe Nations who either border'd on, or were tributary to the Mexicans, imitated them in this bloody Worſhip. The famous [b] Ferdinand Cortez relates, that the Inhabitants of Mechoacan firſt proteſted they would abandon a Worſhip which was as injurious to the Deity as unworthy of Humanity. We muſt not omit that thoſe Prieſts who ſacrificed Men, were diſtinguiſhed by the Title of Miniſters of Sacred Things; and that this Employment was the higheſt Dignity of the Prieſthood. To the High-Prieſt alone belong'd the Privilege and Honour of ripping up the Victim's Stomach; and this he performed ſo very dexterouſly, as, upon any other Occaſion, would have raiſed the Wonder and Admiration of the Spectators. It is true indeed, that as the Stone on which the Victim was laid, was very ſharp and pointed, his Body, which reſted altogether upon the Loins, made the Dexterity of the Prieſt leſs ſurpriſing.

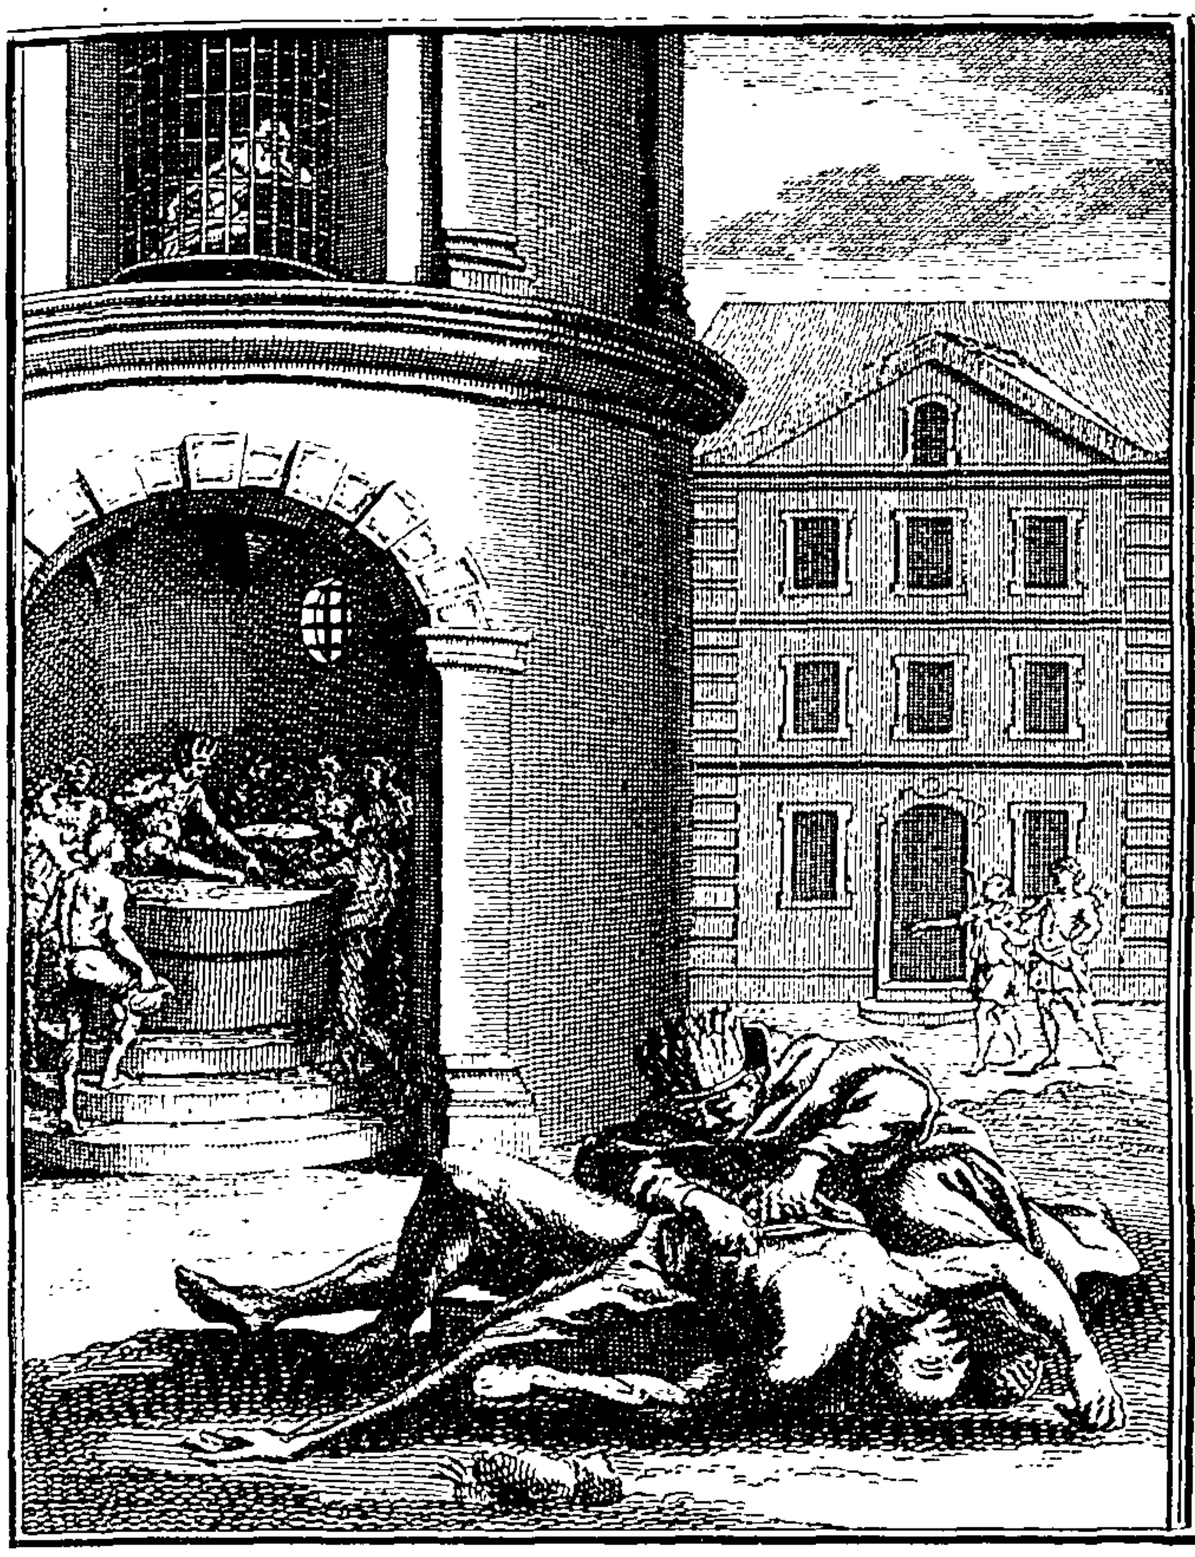
It was a Cuſtom among them on certain Feſtivals, to dreſs a Man in the bloody Skin, juſt reeking from the Body of one of their Victims. [c] A Spaniſh Author aſſures us, that even their Kings and Grandees did not think it derogatory to their Honour to diſguiſe themſelves in this Manner, when the Captive ſacrificed was a Perſon of Diſtinction. Be that as it will, the diſguiſed Perſon uſed to run up and down the Streets, and Places of public Reſort of the City, to beg the Charity of all thoſe he met with, and to beat ſuch as refuſed. This bloody kind of Maſquerade continued till ſuch Time as the Skin-Coat began to ſtink. The Money that was collected in this devout Ramble, was employ'd in pious Uſes.



Another religious Ceremony, which indeed does not ſeem altogether ſo barbarous as the former, was the Duel of the Victim; if we may give this Name to the Liberty he was allow'd of defending himſelf againſt the Prieſt who was to ſacrifice him. The Captive, whoſe Feet were tied to a Stone, parried the Inſtrument with which the Prieſt ſtruck at him, and even attack'd him, as we ſee in the Figure. If he had the good Fortune to gain the better of the Prieſt, he was releaſed, and look'd upon as a brave Man; but if the Prieſt came off Conqueror, he firſt kill'd him, then flay'd off his Skin, and, as we are told, had his Limbs dreſs'd and ſerv'd up in one of thoſe they call'd their religious Meals.

[a] Two of theſe Prieſts took the Victim by the Feet, two others held his Arms, a fifth held his Head, and the ſixth ripp'd open his Stomach, whence they tore out his Heart, and held it up, ſtill ſmoking, to the Sun; after which, turning himſelf towards the Idol, he threw the Heart in his Face.

It was always their Cuſtom, before they ſet down to eat, to offer to the Sun and to the Earth, the Firſt-Fruits of their Meats and Drink, as alſo of their Corn, Fruits, and Flowers. They had other religious Cuſtoms, infinitely more abſurd than the foregoing, tho' the Principle from whch they flow'd, was not altogether to be condemned; which was the laying themſelves under a Neceſſity of doing certain Things, not excepting the moſt unſeemly, for the Love of their Gods: For they not only eat, drank, carried weighty Burdens, anointed and beſmear'd themſelves out of Love to them, but even ſtoop'd to the vileſt Offices, purely to do them Honour.

Their Penance was at laſt as ſevere as that of other Religions. The Prieſts, as Mediators between the Gods and Men, offer'd up Victims for Sinners, and alſo took upon themſelves the Iniquities of the People. When this ſolemn Penance, as repreſented here, was to be undertaken, it was their Cuſtom to meet together at Mid-Night in the Temple of the Idol, when one of them uſed to call the People together to their Devotions with a kind of Horn, while another was incenſing the Idol. Then one of the Miniſters of the falſe Gods began the Penance, conſiſting in a ſmall Effuſion of Blood which he drew from the Ancle, by pricking it with a Manghey-Thorn or a Stone-Lancet. After this he rubb'd his Temples and Ears with this Blood, then went and waſhed himſelf in a certain Water, which from that Circumſtance was call'd The Water of Blood. 'Twas their Cuſtom, the better to teſtify the Merit and Truth of this wonderful Penance, to ſhew to the People the Inſtrument which had been made uſe of on that Occaſion. The other Puniſhments which their Prieſts inflicted on themſelves before Teſcalipuca, or the God who preſided over Penance and Afflictions, were to whip one another with Thongs of Manghey made up in great Knots, and to ſtrike one another with great Stones, &c. In the next Article we ſhall take notice of the Diſcipline and Auſterity of theſe Miniſters of the Mexican Idols; and ſhall, before we conclude this Head, obſerve, that they uſed to incenſe theſe falſe Gods three Times a-Day, viz. in the Morning, at Noon, and at Midnight; and that they were obliged to officiate by Turns in the Temple, in order to keep in the ſacred Fire, which was to burn perpetually in honour of the Gods.

Their PRIESTS, DISCIPLINE, &c.

IN the fourth Compartment of one of the foregoing Plates, two Mexican Prieſts are repreſented; one of which holds the ſacred Knife in his Hand. The firſt of theſe Prieſts, or rather the High-Prieſt, was called Topilzin in the Mexican Language. 'Tis pretended, that his Dignity was equal to that of the Pope. He wore on his Head a Crown of beautiful Feathers of various Colours, with golden Pendants, enriched with Emeralds, at his Ears, and a ſmall blue Tube, like to that of the God of Penance, ran through his Lip. He was clothed with a Scarlet Robe, or rather Mantle. The Veſtments of their Prieſts were frequently chang'd according to the different Seaſons or Feſtivals.

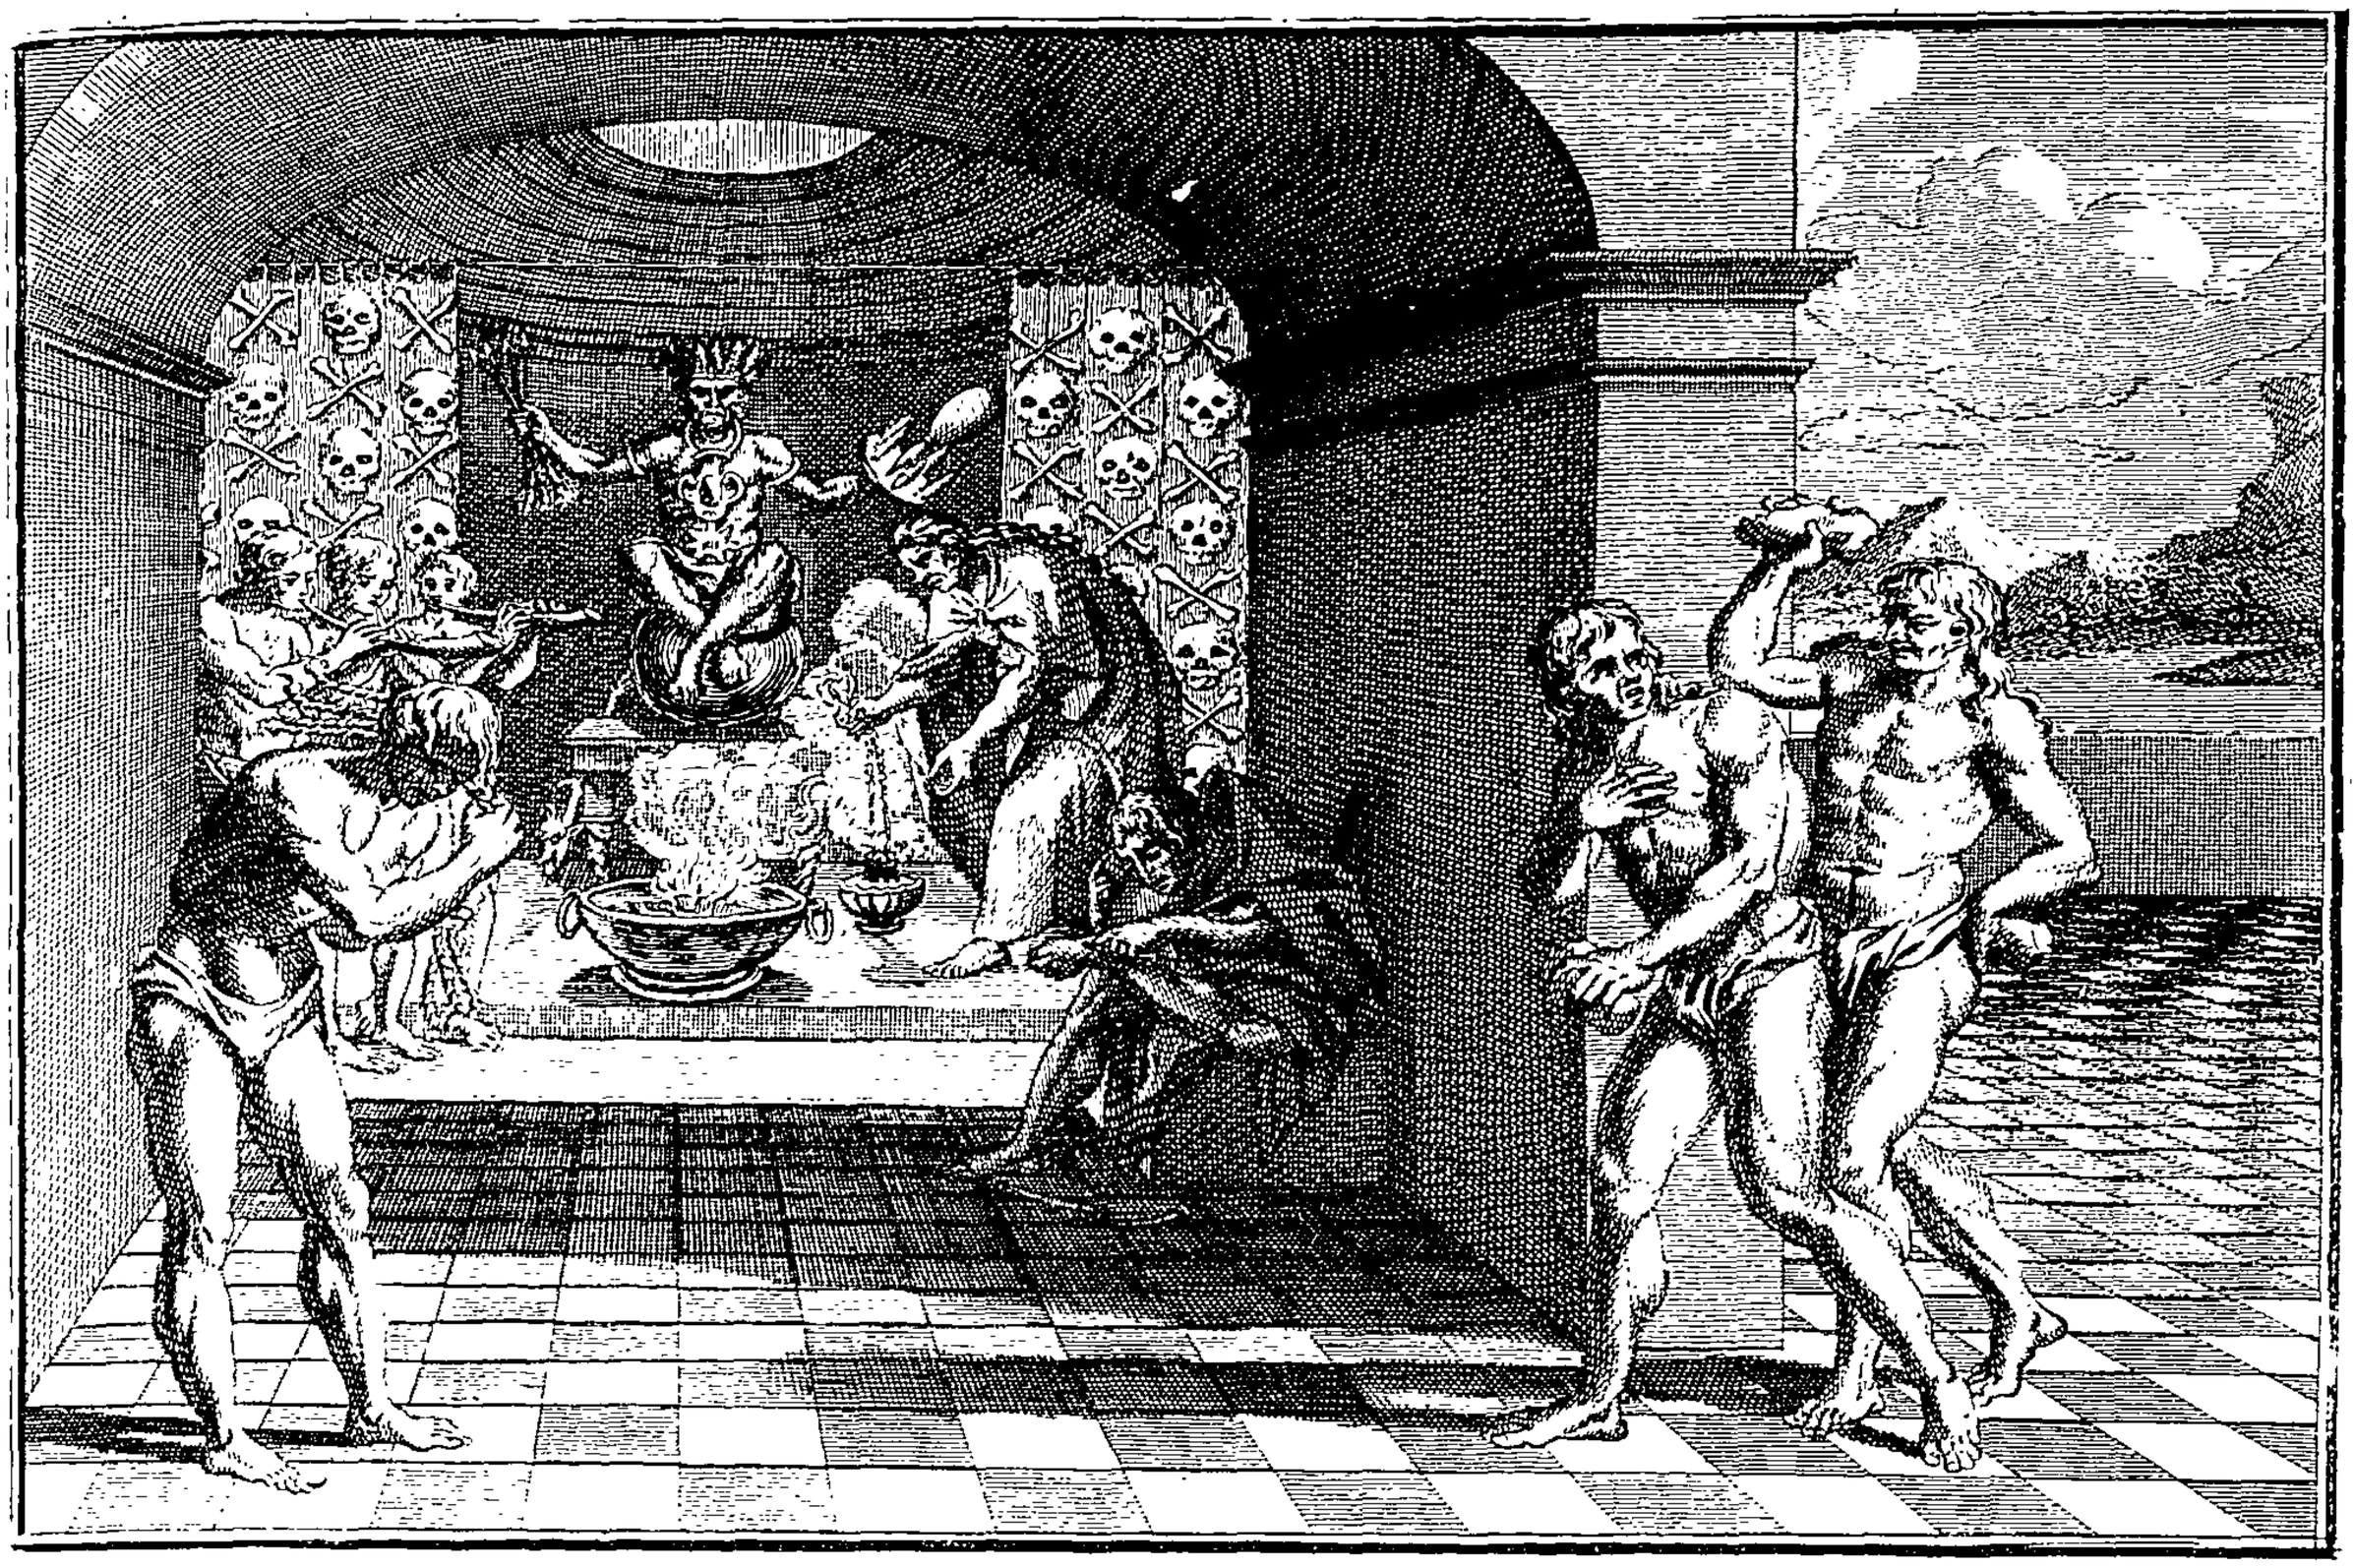
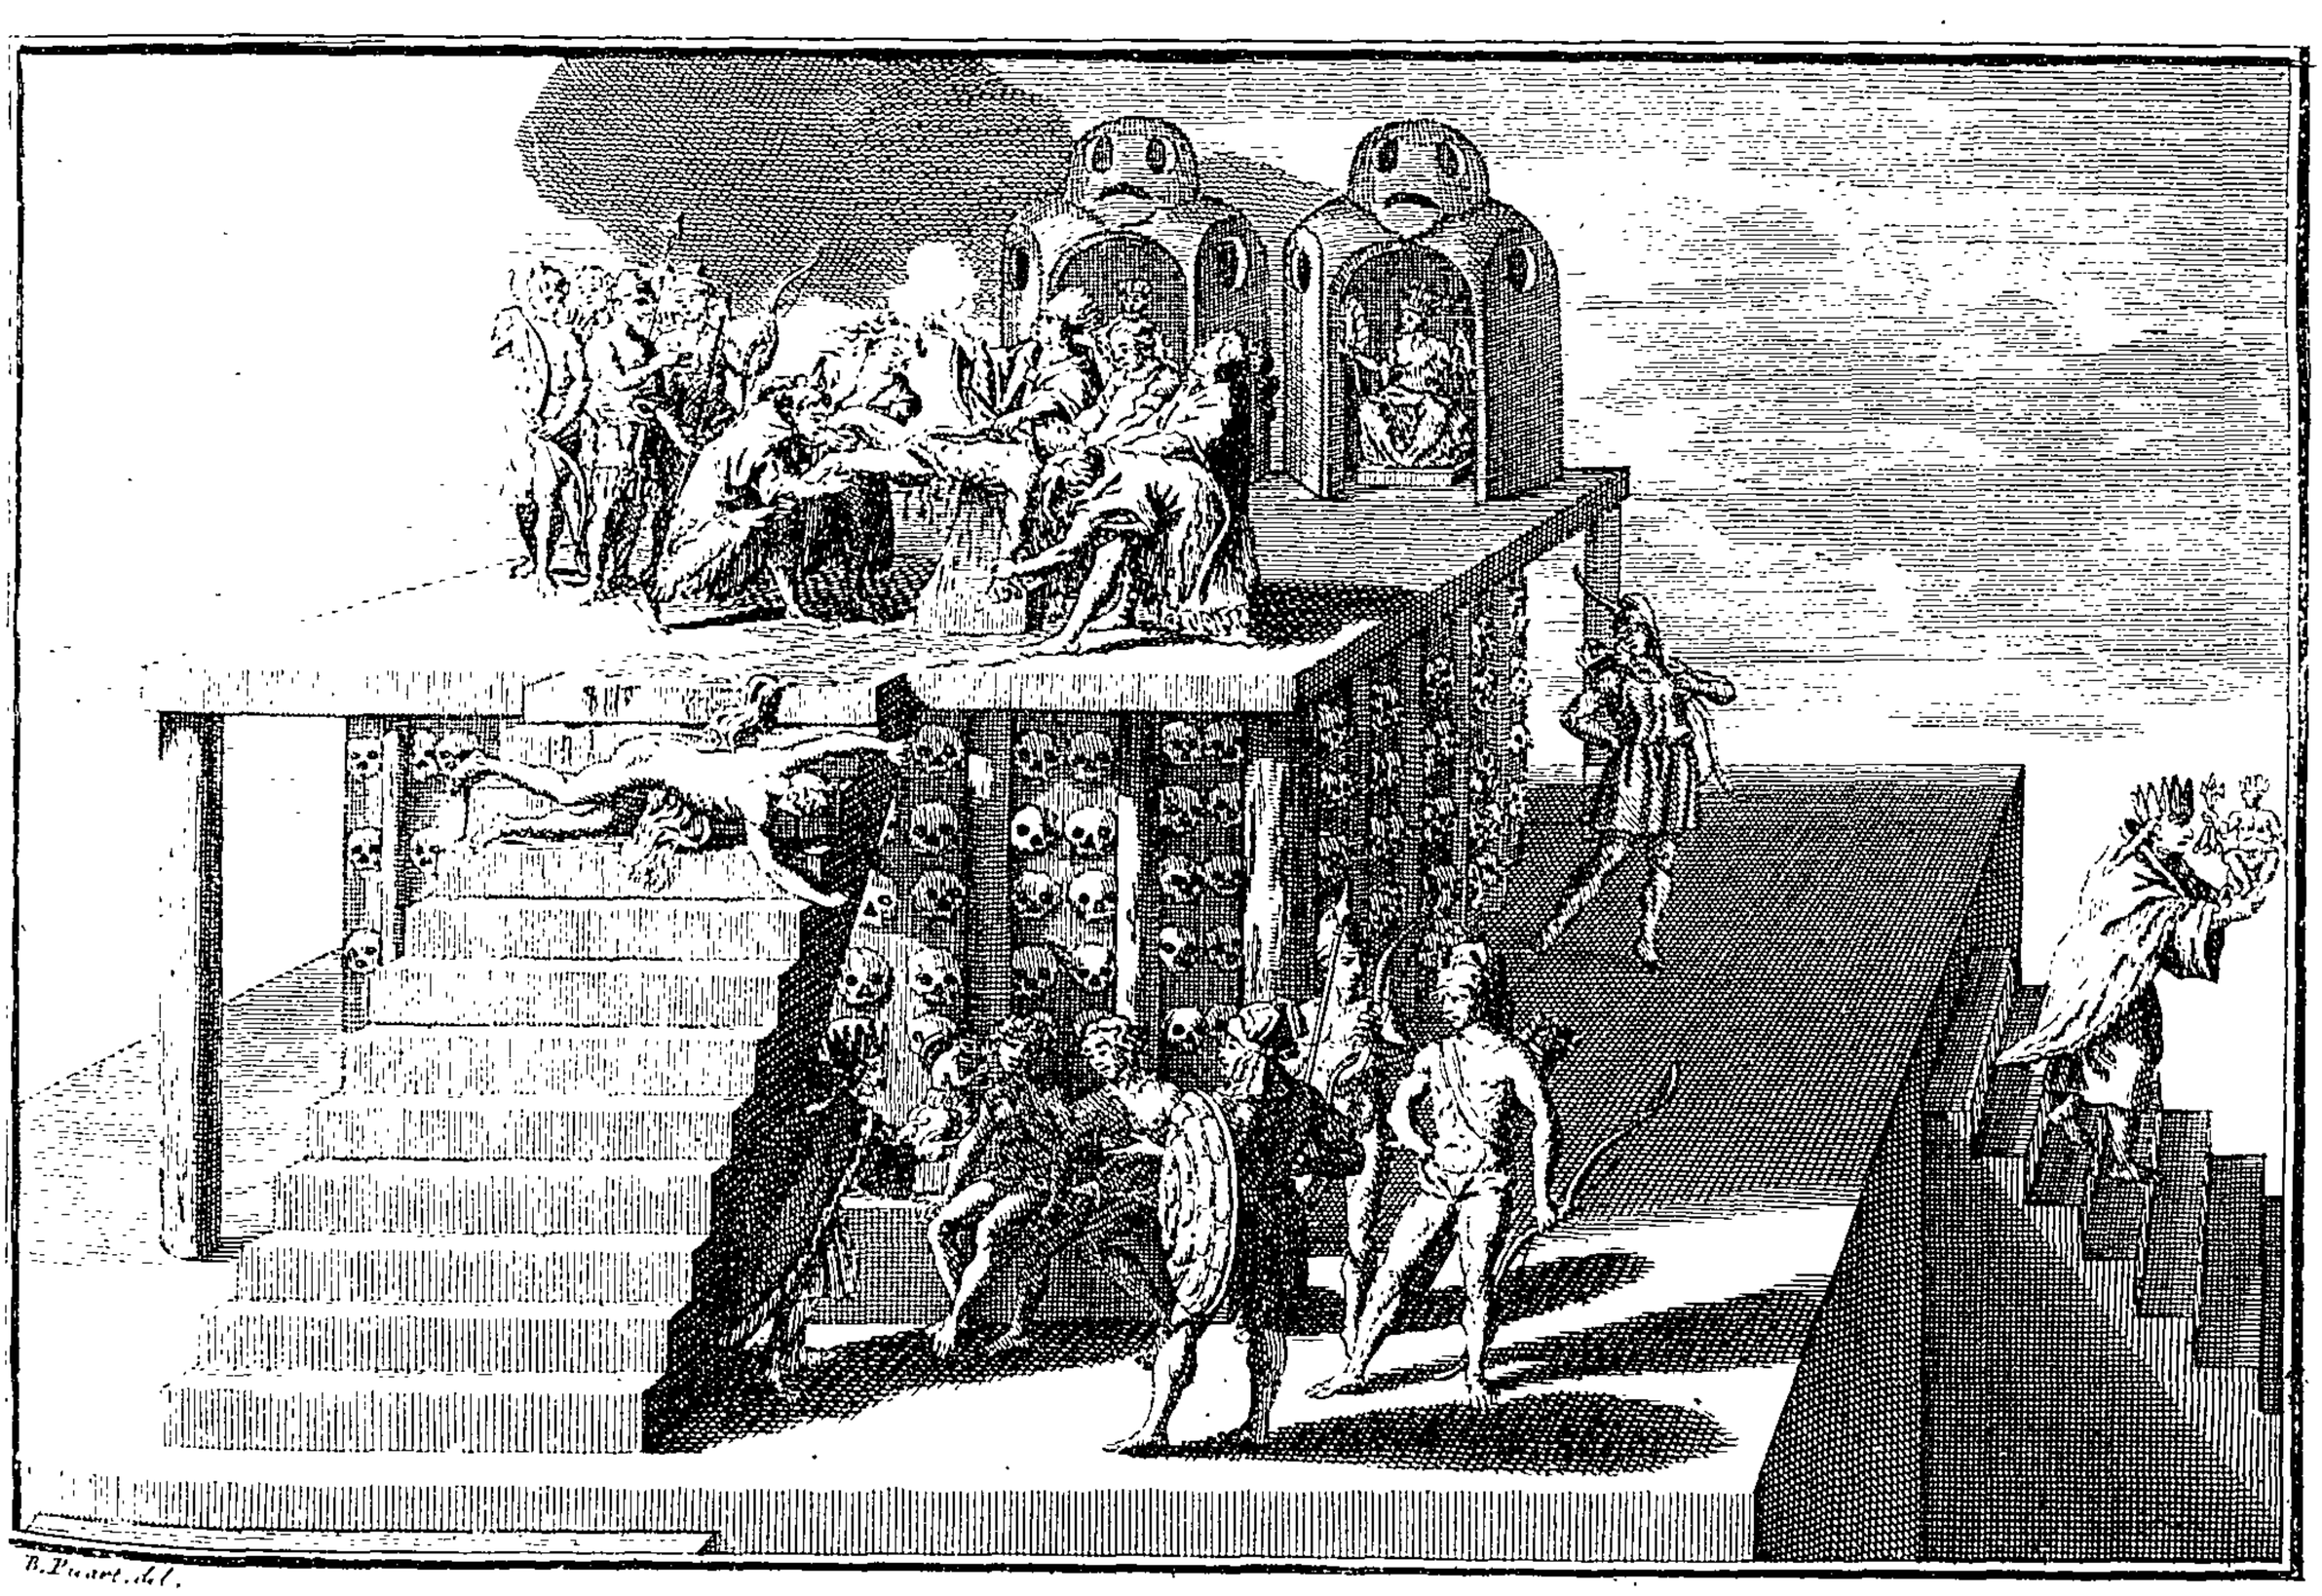
The Prieſthood of Vitzliputzli was hereditary, and that of the other Gods elective. Children were often, as we ſhall ſee in the Sequel, deſtined from their moſt tender Years to the Service of Idols, and officiated as Clerks and Singing-Boys, when but mere Striplings. The Prieſts uſed to incenſe four Times a-Day the God whoſe Miniſters they were: But at Midnight the principal Miniſters of the Temple roſe to perform the nocturnal Office, viz. to ſound a Trumpet and Horn for a long Time together, and to play on certain Inſtruments accompanied with Voices, which together celebrated the Praiſes of the Idol. After this, the Prieſt, whoſe Turn it was, took the Thurible, ſaluted the Idol and incenſed it, himſelf being clothed in a black Mantle. In fine, after the Incenſing was over, they all went together into a Chapel, where they practiſed all thoſe rigorous Penances, whereof an Idea has been given in the preceding Article.

THESE Prieſts uſed to obſerve a very rigorous Faſt; they faſted for five, ſix, and even ten Days together, which they commonly did when the Time of their ſolemn Feſtivals drew nigh. During theſe Faſts, ſuch of them as were married, uſed to abſtain from all Commerce with Women. Their Chaſtity would undoubtedly have been glorious, had it been built on a reaſonable Foundation; but that Confidence, or rather Principle of Preſumption, which prevails ſo much over thoſe who deſire that Applauſe for Things of Form which they cannot merit by a ſolid Virtue, ſullied all the Glory of this forced Continency. Theſe, in order to pleaſe their Gods, uſed to practiſe all thoſe Things which deſtroy Procreation, not even ſparing thoſe Parts which Nature had appointed for that Uſe. They would not allow themſelves to drink ſtrong Liquors, and devoted Part of that Time in whch Men give to Sleep, to the Severity of the Diſcipline.



ALL theſe Prieſts were poſſeſſed of great Revenues, and received the Oblations which the People made to the Idols, which brought them in immenſe Sums, particularly at the Time of their grand Feſtivals. 'Twas at theſe ſolemn Seaſons they uſed to inſtruct 'em in their Duty, by cerain Exhortations which they pronounced before them.

NOR was the Conſecration of theſe Prieſts leſs remarkable than their Function. They uſed to anoint them from Head to Foot: Their Hair, which they always wore very long, and which they did not preſume to cut during the Prieſthood, was continually moiſten'd with a kind of black Perfume that was partly made of Roſin; this would undoubtedly have been very loathſome, had not the Reſpect which immediately ariſes at the Sight of ſuch Things as are look'd upon as ſacred, metamorphos'd it into an agreeable and even divine Object.



THE knotted Treſſes of the ſacrificing Prieſts of Mexico, reſembled a Roll of Braſil Tobacco, ſix Inches in Breadth, and of Length proportionable to it. Whenever theſe Prieſts uſed to ſacrifice upon the Mountains, and in thoſe almoſt ſubterraneous Places in which Part of their Idols were lodged, they then employ'd an Ointment, with certain myſterious Ceremonies, much more ſolemn than the above-mentioned. It was of Uſe, ſaid they, to [a] diſpel Fear, and invigorate Courage; and was made of the Juice of the moſt venomous Reptiles. Such Youths as were under the Diſcipline of theſe Prieſts, uſed to hunt theſe Animals, in order to ſtock themſelves with them againſt they wanted them. The Prieſts burnt theſe venomous Creatures at the Altar of the Idol, the Aſhes of which were pounded in a Mortar mix'd with Tobacco, to which they added live Scorpions and ſome other venomous Inſects: They heightned this Compoſition with an Herb which has the Property of diſturbing the Brain, as alſo with Soot and Roſin: This is what they call the Repaſt or Suſtenance of the Gods. To theſe, the Sorcery of thoſe magical Sacrificers owed its Succeſs; it was theſe gave them an Opportunity of holding a Correſpondence with Devils, ſhielded them from the Fury of Tygers and Serpents, and laſtly, inſpired them with that Spirit of Cruelty, which excited them to ſacrifice their Fellow-Creatures to Idols, without the leaſt Pity or Compaſſion. They alſo pretended that this Compound had the Virtue of healing Diſeaſes: But this was not the only Superſtition that reign'd among them, ſince they had ſeveral other kinds of Enchantment, as well as Methods of divining, which it were needleſs to mention in this Place.

THEY had an Order of Veſtals, who were clothed in White, and call'd by the Name of Daughters of Penance. Theſe were admitted into the Order at twelve or thirteen Years of Age, and were oblig'd to have their Heads ſhav'd, at a certain Seaſon excepted, during which they were ſuffer'd to let their Hair grow. Theſe Nuns were under the Direction of an Abbeſs, whoſe Office was to keep the Temples clean, and they alſo [a] dreſſed the ſacred Meats which were preſented to the Idols, and which aftewards ſerved as Food to their Miniſters. They were employ'd alſo in making Carpets and ſuch like Ornaments for the Temples and the Idols. They roſe at Midnight to adminiſter to the [b] Gods, and to exerciſe certain Auſterities which the Rules of their Order obliged them to obſerve. Above all, they were bound to preſerve their Chaſtity unſullied, the Violation of which was puniſhed with Death. This Continence was not indeed to be perpetual, ſince, as they were ſent to the Convent only to fulfil ſome Vow which their Parents had made to the Gods, they were allow'd to marry after a certain Term of Years. 'Tis even probable that this Abbeſs or Matron might, properly ſpeaking, ſuperintend a kind of Nurſery in which the young Ladies of Quality ware [c] educated, ſince they were never taken from under her Care, but only when their Parents intended to ſettle them in the World.

THEY alſo had a Seminary or Convent for their Youth, like that of the Nuns. They were often admitted into it at ſeven or eight Years of Age. As they were obliged during the Time they liv'd in theſe Houſes, to lead a Life very like that of our Monaſtics, we may not improperly conſider them as a Body of Religious. Theſe Youths uſed to have the Tops of their Heads ſhaved, the reſt of their Hair ſcarce covering their Ears; but it fell as low as their Shoulders behind, except when they uſed to tie it up in a kind of Tuft. They wore a Linen Veſtment. Theſe young Religious look'd after the Temple, and led a moſt exemplary Life of Poverty and Chaſtity till the Age of twenty, or till ſuch Time as they met with an Opportunity of ſettling themſelves by Marriage, or ſome other honourable Means. Moreover, the Prieſts had alſo in their Service a Set of Youths who were employ'd in Matters of leſs Importance. Theſe latter uſed, on certain ſolemn Occaſions, to adorn the Temples of the Gods with Feſtoons. 'Twas their Office to preſent the Prieſts with the Water with which they waſhed themſelves both before and after the religious Service; 'twas they gave them the Lancets and the Knife uſed in the Sacrifice, and alſo followed thoſe mendicant Friars who uſed to beg from Door to Door. In caſe they at any Time did not get Alms ſufficient for their Purpoſe, they were allow'd the Liberty of going into a Field, and of taking as much Corn as they thought neceſſary, no one daring to hinder them. They had alſo, [d] beſides thoſe Youths who were educated under the Religious above-mentioned, ſeveral Devotees who uſed to retire into theſe Convents to fulfil ſome Vow they had made. Some prayed to the Gods for Children, others for Riches, and others again for long Life. All theſe Devotees ſet apart ſome Hours to this Retirement, and in all probability enjoin'd themſelves ſome of the Auſterities above-cited, in order to make themſelves more worthy of the Bleſſings of Heaven. They were permitted to walk in the Proceſſions, but were not allowed to ſing in them, nor to go up the Steps which led to the Temple.

[a] Or rather the Loaves, which they preſented to the Idols. Theſe Loaves were generally made in the Shape of Feet and Hands.

[b] They uſed to ſtab their Ears and other Parts of their Body with a Lancet, and ſmear their Cheeks with the Blood which trickled down from theſe Wounds.

Their FESTIVALS.

THE Mexicans, at the End of every Month, which among them conſiſted of twenty Days, as we ſhall ſee in the Sequel, uſed to obſerve a ſolemn Day of Devotion intermix'd with Rejoicings. They then ſacrificed ſome Captives, and ran up and down the Streets clothed in the Skins of ſuch miſerable Victims as had juſt been flay'd: They danc'd, they ſang, they collected Alms for the Prieſts; which among them, as in other Places, was look'd upon as the Effect of a real Piety. When Corn of all Sorts began to ſprout up, they uſed to go to a certain Hill to ſacrifice a Boy and a Girl about three Years old, to Tlaloch, the God of the Waters; and becauſe thoſe Children were born free, they did not tear out their Hearts, but contented themſelves with cutting their Throats, after which they laid their Bodies in a new Mantle, and buried them in a Stone Sepulchre. Theſe bloody Sacrifices were renewed when the Corn was grown up about two Foot high, at which Time they ſacrificed four Children of ſix or ſeven Years of Age, to the ſame God. Theſe latter were born Slaves. They then carried their Bodies into a Cave appointed for that Purpoſe. The Mexicans tell us, that the Origin of this cruel Ceremony was owing to a great Drought, which afterwards occaſioning a Famine, forced them to abandon the Country. In fine, when the Corn was fit for reaping, each Owner took a handful of Maiz out of his Field, and offer'd it to the God Tlaloch with Atolle, which was a Liquor made of Corn and Copal, a precious Gum uſed in incenſing the Idols. In the Beginning of the Summer, they uſed to crown the Gods with Flowers, and ſpend a whole Day in Mirth and Rejoycing. The great Men of the Empire were obliged to go to the Capital on another Holiday, on the Evening of which they dreſſed up a Woman who was to repreſent the God of Salt, and partake in the public Rejoycing; but they ſacrificed her on the Morrow, and that Day was wholly employ'd in Devotion and the Worſhip of the Idols. The Trades-People uſed alſo to celebrate certain bloody Feſtivals, in honour of their Mercury, in the Temple which was conſecrated to him. Not to mention another Feſtival, when they uſed to flay a Woman, and clothe an Indian with her Skin, who, thus equipped, danced for two Days together with the reſt of his Fellow-Citizens; nor that which was ſolemniz'd at their entring into the Lake with a great Number of Canoos, when they uſed to drown in a ceremonious Manner a Boy and Girl, whom, as they ſaid, they ſent to keep Company with the Gods of the Lake; they nevertheleſs uſed to ſpend the Day in Faſting and Devotion.

THE great Feſtival of Vitzliputzli was celebrated in the Month of May. Two Days before which, the Nuns uſed to make a Figure of Maiz and Honey, repreſenting that God. Then after having dreſſed it in as magnificent a manner as poſſible, they ſeated it on an azure Throne, which was ſupported by a kind of Shaft. The Nuns, who on that Feſtival, uſed to call themſelves the Siſters of Vitzliputzli, carried it in Proceſſion on their Shoulders to the Area before the Temple, where the young Monks, before-cited, received the Idol, and after having paid Homage to it, carried it alſo on their Shoulders to the Steps of the Sanctuary. 'Twas here the People came and worſhipped this Image of Vitzliputzli, and humbled themſelves before it by putting Duſt on their Heads; which Cuſtom was alſo obſerved in the Worſhip that was paid to the other Idols. The Nuns were dreſſed in White, and crown'd with parch'd Maiz. They wore Chains about their Necks made of Maiz, which they uſed to twiſt about their Left Arms. Their Cheeks were painted with a pretty thick Vermillion, and their Arms cover'd over from the Elbow to the Wriſt with the Feathers of a red Parrot. The young Men were dreſſed in Red, and wore Maiz Crowns, in the ſame manner as the young Veſtals.

[a] We have not inſerted the Names of theſe Feſtivals, as not thinking it neceſſary.

AFTER

AFTER this Humiliation, theſe Devotees uſed to go in Proceſſion, and make Stations in three different Villages; whether it were from Cuſtom, or poſſibly the Holineſs of thoſe Places where the Stations were kept. They then firſt ſacrificed upon a Mountain at a League Diſtance from Mexico. The Proceſſion made a Tour of about four Leagues, and uſed on their Return to conduct the Idol into its Sanctuary with the Sound of Drums, Trumpets, and Horns. They then cover'd it over with Roſes, and uſed to ſtrew all ſorts of Flowers on the Pavement and about the Temple. Laſtly, the Veſtals came out of the Convent, carrying Pieces of the Dough with which their Idol was made, made in the Shape of Bones: Theſe they gave to the Monks, who laid them at the Foot of the Idol. Theſe Pieces of Dough, which were commonly called Vitzliputzli's Fleſh and Bones, were ſolemnly conſecrated by the Prieſts with certain particular Ceremonies, accompanied with Dances and ſpiritual Songs in honour of the Idol. They paid the ſame Worſhip to this conſecrated Dough as to the God, of which it was at firſt no more than a Type and Figure. After the Conſecration was ended, the Men were ſacrificed, the whole Ceremony concluding with Dances and Songs. Then followed a religious Piece of Worſhip, which [a] has ſome Conformity with the Chriſtian Communion. The Prieſts ſtript the Dough-Idol of all its Ornaments; broke them into ſeveral Pieces, and likewiſe the little conſecrated Loaves: Theſe they diſtributed to the People in the Form of a Sacrament, and the Aſſembly communicated in a Manner which reſembles ſo much the Practice of the Chriſtians in that Particular, that we can ſcarce forbear conſidering this Piece of Idolatry as an Uſurpation of the Devil over the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion. This Communion was accompanied with an Exhortation, by which the People were inform'd that they eat the Fleſh of their God; and they even adminiſtred this kind of Sacrament to the Sick. We ſhall conclude the Deſcription of this religious Act with two Remarks: Firſt, that the Communicants gave a Tythe of Maiz by way of Oblation; and, ſecondly, that the Feſtival concluded with a Sermon, which one of the moſt antient of the Prieſts pronounced to the People.

THE Feſtival of Teſcalipuca was celebrated the nineteenth of the ſame Month, when the Prieſt granted the People a Remiſſion of their Sins. At the ſame Time they ſacrificed a Captive, which we may almoſt conſider as an imperfect Image of the Death which our bleſſed Saviour ſuffered for the Redemption of Mankind. The Mexicans might perhaps have preſerv'd ſome Footſteps of that memorable Incident. On the Eve of the Feſtival, the Prieſt of Teſcalipuca ſtript himſelf of his Veſtments, when others were given him by the Mexican Nobility, who came together with the reſt of the People, in order to reconcile themſelves to this Idol of Penance. They open'd the Temple-Gates to all repenting Sinners; when one of the chief Miniſters of the God diſcover'd himſelf to the Spectators, and blew his [b] Horn; turning himſelf to the four Winds, as if he were calling all the Earth to Repentance: After which he took up Duſt, and carried it to his Mouth, pointing at the ſame Time to the Heavens. Every one imitated the Prieſt; after which, nothing was heard but Voices, intermix'd with Sighs, Tears, and Groans. They roll'd themſelves in the Duſt, calling at the ſame Time upon the divine Mercy, when the Terrors which trouble the Conſciences of the blindeſt Sinners, actuated in ſuch a manner on the Minds of the Mexicans, that they uſed to call to their Aſſiſtance the Shades of Night, the Winds and Storms, the better to eſcape the Fury of that God, whoſe Vengeance, they ſaid, was ever impending in order to chaſtiſe the Wicked. And as the Notions which even falſe Religions exhibit to thoſe whom they are deſirous of leading into the Paths of Virtue, are ſtrong enough to ſtrike the Hearts of the Vicious with Remorſe, and even to make them ſenſible that Vice is contrary to Humanity, it ſo happen'd that all ſuch as were conſcious of Guilt, made a public Confeſſion of it; unable able to reſiſt the Terror with which their Conſciences were ſtruck by the Sound of the Horn. All theſe Agitations, ſo ſalutary in outward Appearance, ſince they inſpir'd the Hearts of the Mexicans with Repentance for ſome Time, concluded with burning a great Quantity of Incenſe in honour of the Idol whoſe Feſtival they ſolemniz'd. They blew the Horn for ten Days ſucceſſively, viz. from the ninth of May to the nineteenth, all which Time was ſpent in Tears and Affliction. On the laſt Day, Teſcalipuca was carried in Proceſſion. The Image of the God, ſurrounded with Branches of Manghey, ſtuck full with Prickles, was ſeated in a Machine ſurrounded with Curtains, which probably was like a Litter. This Machine was carried in Proceſſion round the Temple by Prieſts ſmear'd with Black, who wore the Livery of their God, and whoſe Hair was partly twiſted up with a white String. Two Miniſters of the Idol walk'd at the Head of the Proceſſion, with Thuribles in their Hands; every Time they incenſed the People, the whole Proceſſion lifted up their Arms in a devout manner, looking at the ſame Time on the Sun and the God of Penance. During this Ceremony, the reſt of the Devotees ſcourg'd themſelves with Ropes made of Manghey. Some adorn'd the Court and Temple with Branches, and ſtrew'd the Way with Flowers.

AFTER the Proceſſion and the Scourging of Penitents, every one made his Oblations. Some brought Jewels and Works of Gold and Silver; others Incenſe, precious Wood, Maiz, &c. the Poor offer'd Quails, and theſe the Sacrificers, after having cut off their Heads, threw at the Foot of the Altar. Then the People made a Feaſt, very much reſembling thoſe which the antient Heathens inſtituted in honour of their Gods. Whatever Meats were given to the Idol, were call'd ſacred Viands, and were ſerv'd up by Veſtals who were led to it by an old Prieſt dreſs'd in a kind of white Surplice, and were by him conducted back to the Convent, after having thus ſerv'd up at the Table of the God. But when the Time for their clearing the Table was come, the Youths and Miniſters of the Temple took away the Meats, and carried them to the Prieſts, who alone had the Privilege of eating them. After the ſacred Repaſt was ended, they made a Sacrifice of him who that Year had been the living Image of the God of Penance; and the whole Ceremony ended, like thoſe of other Feſtivals, with Dances and ſpiritual Songs.

THE Mexicans uſed to celebrate a Jubilee every four Years, which was nothing more than the Feaſt of Penance, ſuch as we have already deſcrib'd it, except that it was more ſolemn; there being at that Time a more general and plenary Remiſſion of Sins. We are aſſured that the Mexicans ſacrific'd ſeveral human Victims at that Seaſon, and the Youth uſed to make a kind of Challenge who ſhould firſt, and in one Breath, get to the Top of the Temple. This Enterprize was a very difficult one, ſince it gain'd all thoſe prodigious Applauſe who had the Glory of coming firſt to the Goal; not to mention that they were diſtinguiſh'd from the reſt of their Countrymen: They moreover had the Privilege of carrying off the ſacred Viands, of which we are aſſur'd they almoſt made the ſame Uſes, as Chriſtians do of Relics.

QUITZALCOALT, the Mercury of the Mexicans, was particularly worſhipped by all thoſe who were concern'd in Traffic. Forty Days before the Feaſt of this God, the Merchants purchaſed a Slave of a very fine Shape, who during that Time repreſented the Deity to whom he was to be ſacrificed as a Victim on the Day of the Feſtival; but they firſt waſh'd him in the Lake of the Gods, which was the Name they gave to the Water which fitted him for the fatal Apotheoſis which ended with his Death. They afterwards adorn'd him like the God whom he was forced to repreſent; when he ſpent all the Time of his Deification in Dancing and Rejoycings. They joined with him in his Pleaſures, and worſhipped him; but for fear, leſt he ſhould be forgetful of his fatal Deſtiny, two antient Miniſters of the Idol refreſh'd his Memory with it nine Days before fore his being ſacrificed. [a] He was oblig'd to wait his Fate with Patience and Reſignation. If he diſcover'd the leaſt Sorrow on that Account, the two Prieſts gave him a Liquor to drink, which, by reſtoring him to his wonted Mirth, made him undoubtedly inſenſible to his Fate. The Day of the Feaſt being come, they again ador'd the miſerable Victim, and incens'd it ſeveral Times ſucceſſively. In fine, they ſacrificed it at twelve at Night, offer'd its Heart to the Moon, and afterwards threw it before the Idol; then the Body was thrown down from the Top of the Temple, as was practis'd in the Worſhip of Vizliputzli, and the whole concluded with a Dance.

THE Prieſts of this Deity perform'd a Ceremony which was odd enough, and that was the Commanding every Body to retire by Beat of Drum, the Sound of which was heard all over the City. At Day-break they uſed to call up the People to Work. This Function was performed by the Prieſts, each of whom had it in his Turn every Week.

THE God whoſe Worſhip we have deſcribed, was ador'd after another manner at [b] Cholula. He was there look'd upon as the God of the Air. He was alſo conſider'd as the Founder of the City, the Inſtitutor of Penance, and the Author of Sacrifices. His Idol was repreſented in almoſt the ſame Attitude as we ſee it in the Figure. Its Cloke was powder'd with red Croſſes. As this Deity had, during his Reſidence here, been a Lover of Faſting and Works of Penance, Devotees uſed faſt, and draw Blood from their Tongue and Ears, to make themſelves agreeable to him. This God concern'd himſelf alſo in all warlike Affairs. They ſacrificed five Boys and as many Girls of three Years old, in his Honour, before they took the Field.

IT is to the Idol of Cholula that they aſcribed the famous Predictions relating to the Ruin of the Empire of Mexico: Predictions which were follow'd by Prodigies, the Particulars whereof it would be needleſs to relate; eſpecially as there is great Reaſon to believe that they were very much heighten'd by the Credulity of the Poeple.

IN fine, the Mexicans, and particularly the Inhabitants of Tlaſcalla, worſhipped one God, who, during his Abode in this World, had been a great Hunter. He was honour'd with a ſolemn Party of Hunting, as we ſee it repreſented in the Plate. Whilſt the God ſtood on an Altar placed on the Top of a Mountain, round which they had lighted ſeveral Fires, the devout Hunters purſued the wild Beaſts, who, in order to eſcape the Violence of the Flames, fled towards the Top of the Mountain. They uſed to knock theſe Beaſts down before the Idol, and ſacrifice their Hearts in his Honour. The Chaſe concluded with Songs of Mirth and joyful Acclamations, after which the Hunters brought back the Idol in Triumph, and a ſolemn Feaſt concluded the Devotion of that Day.

[a] Theſe two Prieſts uſed to proſtrate themſelves before the pretended God, repeating theſe Words to him, Lord, thy Pleaſures will end nine Days hence. He was obliged to anſwer them with a chearful Air, Be it ſo, and continue his Mirth.

[b] The Mexicans uſed to go on Pilgrimage to this Place, which was looked upon as holy Ground, becauſe it contained more than four hundred Temples of the Gods within its Walls.

Their Ceremonies of PEACE and WAR, and HIEROGLYPHICS.

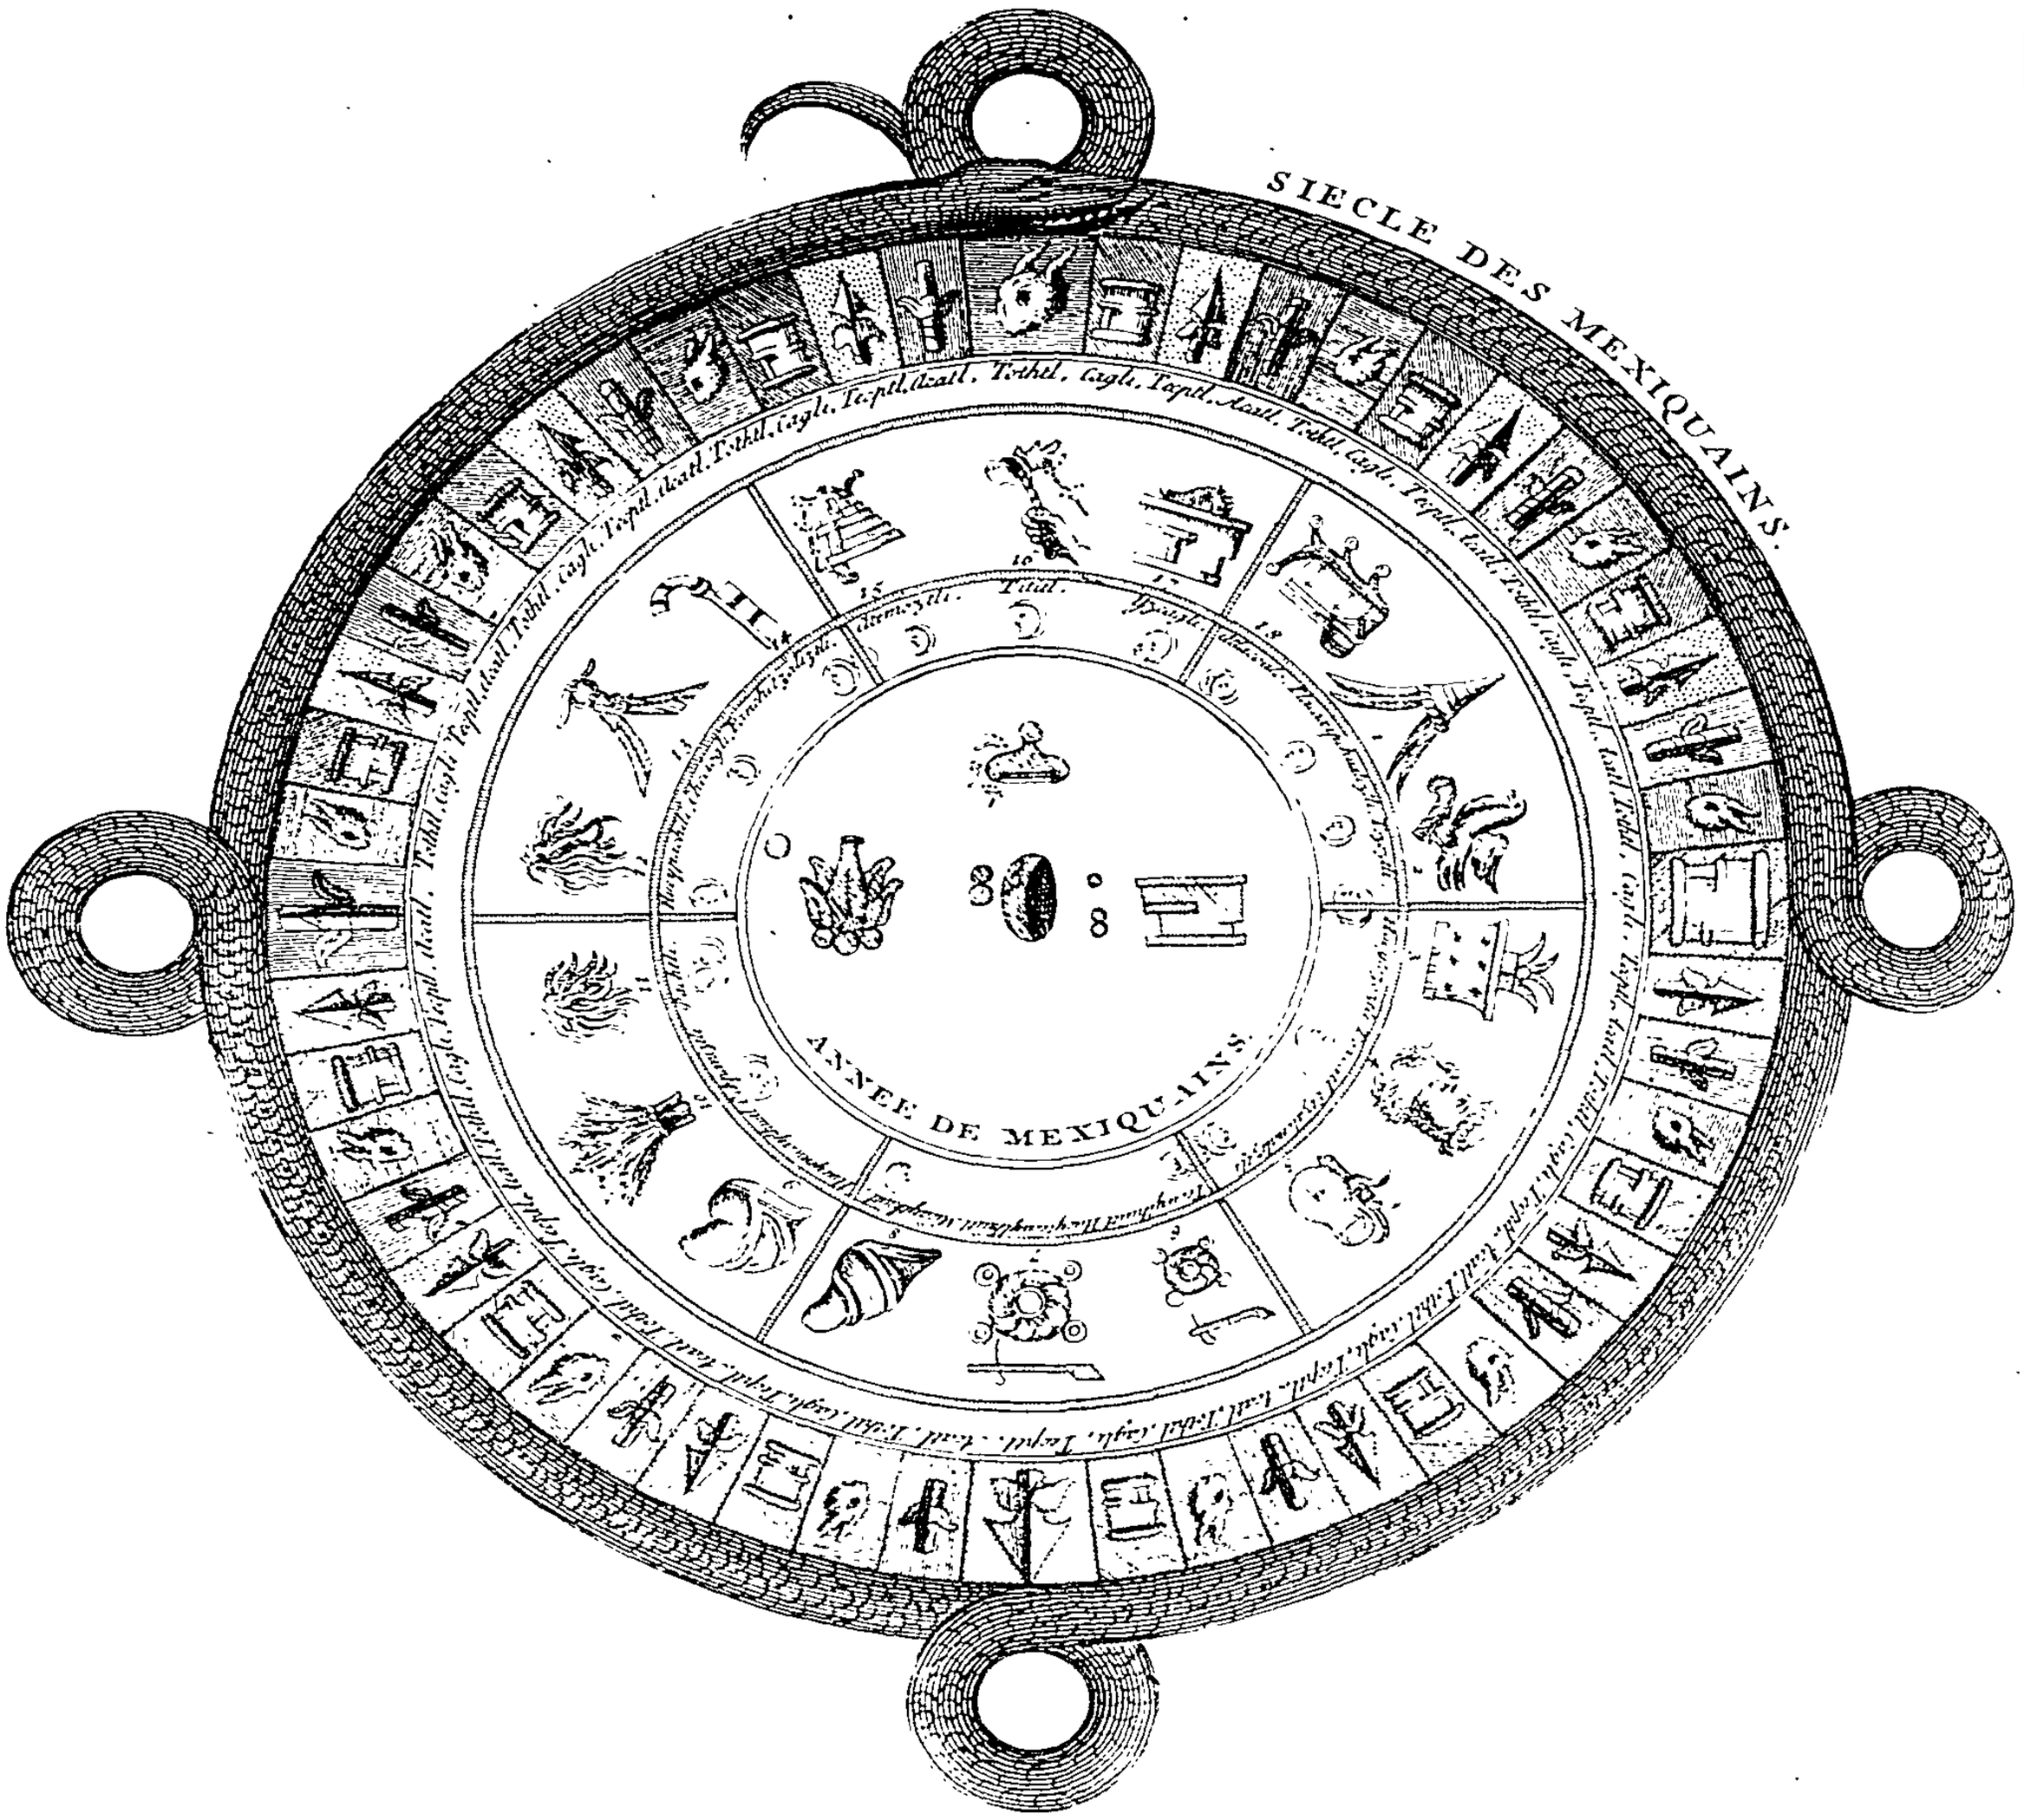
AN Ambassador was distinguish'd by a Mantle or Riding-Cloke of Cotton, embroider'd with a Fringe, interwoven with Knots. He held in his Right Hand a very broad Arrow, with the Feathers upwards, and in his Left a Shell, in the Shape of a Buckler. The Subject of the Embassy was known by the Feathers of the Arrow, the Red denouncing War, and the White denoting Peace. The Ambassador was to be respected at the Sight of these Tokens, but he was not allow'd to turn out of the royal Roads of the Province through which he pass'd, upon Penalty of losing his Right of Jurisdiction and Immunity.



THE Sacrificers denounced War by the Sound of an Instrument which they call'd the sacred Trumpet, because none but the Sacrificers were allow'd to sound it, to animate, by the Command of the Gods, the Hearts of the Soldiers. The Sound of this Instrument was harsh, and breath'd gloomy Notes, very well adapted to inspire the Soldier with a new Bravery, by consecrating, says the Translator of The Conquest of Mexico, the Contempt of Life from a religious Motive. The Mexican Troops were kept under very strict Discipline, and were very obedient. We shall not take notice of their Method of fighting, having confin'd ourselves to religious Ceremonies only, but shall only observe, that the taking a Prisoner was thought a more heroic Action, than the killing an Enemy [b]; and he was look'd upon as the most valiant, who brought the greatest Number of Victims for the Sacrifices.

THEIR Writing consisted in certain hieroglyphic Paintings, by whose Assistance they call'd up certain memorable Incidents in the Mind; for they had not, like the Europeans, the Use of Letters. They used to paint the Objects on Calicoe, prepar'd on Purpose for the Pencil. To these Images they added Numbers, or some other Signs [c], " which they dispos'd in so exact and regular a Manner, that the Number, the Cha" racter, and the Figure, mutually assisted each other in expressing the Thought, and " form'd a complete Argument. This subtil Invention resembled the Hieroglyphics of " the Egyptians; and the Mexicans were so skilful therein, that they had whole
" Books drawn up in this Manner, in which they preserv'd the Memoirs of Antiquity,
" and transmitted to Posterity the Annals of their Kings." They also by this Method preserv'd the Ceremonies of their Religion; the Books which treated thereof were kept in their Temples.

THE Mexican Emperors used to cause the Exploits of their Heroes to be sung in these Temples, and particularly the illustrious Actions of the Kings their Predecessors. They taught their Children these poetical Compositions, which supplied the Place of History to those who did not understand their Paintings, and the Hieroglyphics of their Annals. Thus did they learn to understand the Advantages of military Virtue, in an Age when they were incapable of putting it in Practice. However, it was at least an excellent Preparative to that Heroism, which a young Soldier was obliged to exhibit in his first Campaign.

Les MEXIQUAINS expliquoient leurs pensées, et donnoient une idée des choses sensibles par des Hieroglyphes, à la façon des anciens Egyptiens, c'est de cette maniere que leur Siecle et leur année etoient representez. une Roue peinte contenoit l'espace d'un Siecle distingué par années et chargé des evenemens memorables. le Siecle etoit de 52. Années Solaires chacune de 365. jours, 4. indictions de 13. Ans chacune formoient la division de la roüe & respondoient aux 4. parties du Monde de la maniére suivante.

Un Serpent environnoit cette Roüe, et marquoit par ses 4. noeuds les 4. divisions, l'Hieroglyphe de la premiere, qui marquoit le Midi, etoit un Lapin, sur un fond bleu, que l'on appelloit TOCHTLILA. de la seconde pour l'Orient, une canne sur un fond rouge. on l'apelloit ACATL. de la troisiéme pour le Nord. une épée avec une pointe de pierre sur un fond jaune. on l'appelloit TECPATL. de la quatriéme pour l'Occident, une maison sur du verd. on l'apelloit CAGLI. Entre ces quatre divisions, il y en avoit douze petites dans lesquelles les quatre Hieroglyphes etoient distribuës successivement en donnant à chacun sa valeur numerale jusqu'a 13. qui étoient le nombre d'années qui composoient l'indiction. on faisoit la même chose dans la deuxiéme indiction. avec les mêmes noms depuis un jusqu'à 13. dans la troisiéme & dans la quatriéme jusqu'à ce que le cercle de 52. Their CALENDAR, &c.

" [a] THE Mexicans uſed to regulate their Calendar by the Motion of the Sun; for " they knew how to take its Altitude and Declination, and by that means " found the different Seaſons. Their Year conſiſted of three hundred and ſixty five " Days, which they divided into eighteen Months, each Month containing twenty " Days, making the whole three hundred and ſixty Days, the five remaining being " look'd upon as ſo many [b] intercalar Days: Theſe they added to the End of the Year, " in order to equal the Courſe of the Sun. During theſe five Days, which they ima- " gin'd their Anceſtors had left purpoſely as ſo many Chaſms, they abandon'd them- " ſelves entirely to Indolence, and ſought only to trifle away the reſt of the Time as " agreeably as poſſible. The Artificers uſed to leave their Work, and the Shops were " ſhut; no Cauſes were carried on in the Courts of Judicature, nor Sacrifices made in " the Temples. They uſed to viſit one another, and devote themſelves to every kind of " Recreation, in order, as they ſaid, to compenſate for all the Vexations and Miſeries " they were to undergo the approaching Year, which began the firſt Day of Spring, " and differ'd but three Days from our ſolar Year, which they took from our Month " of February.

" THEIR Week conſiſted of thirteen Days, all of them call'd by different Names, " which were diſtinguiſh'd in their Calendar by different Figures. Their Age conſiſted " of [c] four Weeks of Years."

THE Revolution of the Age of the Mexicans is explain'd at the Bottom of the Figure where it is repreſented. The Author of that Explication tells us the Reaſon why they began to compute their Years from the South. " Whenever they afflicted and " humbled themſelves the laſt Day of their Age, it was uſual for them to kneel down " on the Tops of their Houſes, with their Faces turn'd towards the Eaſt, to ſee whe- " ther the Sun would again begin his Courſe, or if the World was at an End; and " as, when they were in this Poſture, they had the South to their Right Hand, they " drew this Conſequence from it, viz. that the Light had begun in that Quarter. " They alſo imagin'd that Hell lay northward, and therefore that it would have been " ridiculous to think the Sun had begun his Progreſs from that Quarter."

[d] As they had learnt from Tradition, or by ſome other Means, that the Univerſe is to be deſtroy'd, and that they imagin'd its Deſtruction would happen at the End of four Weeks of Years, when the laſt Day of the fifty two Years was come, every one prepar'd himſelf for the general Deſtruction of Nature. Then the Mexicans diſpos'd themſelves to die, though in perfect Health: They broke to Pieces all their Diſhes and Plates, as being of no farther Uſe to them: They put out the Fire, and ran up and down all Night long, like Men out of their Senſes, and no one dar'd to give over, till ſuch Time as he knew whether they were really going into the Regions of Darkneſs, or not. They began to take breath as ſoon as the Day began to break and diſcover itſelf to their Eyes, which were inceſſantly turn'd towards to the Eaſt; and when the Sun diſcover'd itſelf, he was ſaluted with the Sound of all their Inſtruments by Hymns and Songs, which expreſs'd the Tranſports of their Joy. Then the Mexicans congratulated one another upon their being certain of the World's laſting one Age longer at leaſt. They went to the Temples to thank the Gods for it, and receiv'd new Fire from the Hands of the ſacrificing Prieſts. This new Fire was lighted before the Altar, by the rubbing of two Pieces of dry Wood very hard one againſt the other; after which, each of them provided himſelf afreſh with every Thing that was neceſſary for his Subſiſtence, and the Day was celebrated by public Rejoicings. Nothing was to be ſeen all the City over but Dances and other active Exerciſes, which were conſecrated to the Renewal of the Age, in the ſame Manner, ſays the Author of the Conqueſt of Mexico, as the ſecular Games at Rome. 'Tis very probable that the Mexicans had borrow'd from their Anceſtors the Idea of the End of the World, and that the latter had brought it with them from Aſia, where it has been receiv'd in all Ages. It appears alſo that this People had ſome Knowledge of Aſtronomy, ſince the Spaniards found in the Province of Jucutan ſome Mexican Books which treated on that Branch of the Mathematics. The Monks, better acquainted with their Breviaries than Aſtronomy, burnt thoſe Books, and imagin'd that each of thoſe Schemes was capable of raiſing the Devil.

The Coronation of their MONARCHS, &c.

WE take notice of this Ceremony, becauſe it is partly a religious one. The Emperors or Kings of Mexico were at firſt elected by the Voices of the People, but the whole was manag'd by the Nobles. They were afterwards choſen by four Electors: Theſe choſe for their Kings ſuch Youths as were brave, and fit for War, who were oblig'd to give Proofs of their Valour; nor were they crown'd immediately after their Election. The newly elected Monarch was "[a] obliged to make a Campaign at "the Head of his Troops, and to gain ſome Victory, or win ſome Province from the "Enemies of the Empire, or the Rebels, before he was crown'd, or ſuffer'd to aſcend "the Throne. No ſooner had the Merit of his Exploits made him appear worthy "of reigning, but he return'd triumphant to the Capital. The Nobles, the Miniſters, "and ſacrificing Prieſts, accompanied him to the Temple of the God of War, where "he deſcended from his Litter; and after the Sacrifices were ended, the electoral Princes "clothed him with the Imperial Mantle and other Robes of State. They put into his "Right Hand a golden Sword, adorn'd with Flint-Stones, which was the Symbol of "Juſtice. He received with his Left Hand a Bow and Arrows, which denoted the "ſovereign Command over their Armies; after which, the King of Tezuco ſet the "Crown on his Head, which was the peuliar Office of the firſt Elector. One of the "principal Magiſtrates afterwards made a long Harangue, to congratulate the Prince "in the Name of the Empire; intermixing it with Inſtructions, in which he repre-"ſented to him the Cares and Obligations of thoſe who are raiſed to the ſovereign "Dignity, and how attentive he ought to be to the Happineſs and Proſperity of his "Subjects, &c." The High-Prieſt, clothed in his pontifical Veſtments, crown'd the Kings as it were. 'Twas he anointed them; for which Purpoſe a thick Liquor, as black as Ink, was employ'd; but we don't know what it was made of. The above-mention'd High-Prieſt bleſs'd the King, and ſprinkled him four Times together with a conſecrated Water; putting a Cowl over his Head, on which Bones and Skulls were painted, and a black Robe over his Body, over which they put another blue one, painted in the ſame Manner as the Cowl. All this was undoubtedly done to teach him, that Kings are as much ſubject to Death as the moſt wretched Mortal; and that all which remains of this Grandeur, which is ſo much envied by the Plebeian, is a rotten corrupted Carcaſe. They ſurrounded the new King with certain Drugs, which, according to them, had the Virtue of preſerving him from Diſeaſes and Inchantments. After this he offer'd Incenſe to Vitzliputzli, and the High-Prieſt made him take an Oath, by which he bound himſelf to maintain the Religion of his Anceſtors, the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Empire, and to treat his Subjects with Clemency and Gentleneſs. He moreover took an Oath, that the Sun, during his Reign, ſhould give its Light, and Rain fall in its proper Seaſons; that the Rivers ſhould not ravage the Country by Inundations, the Fields be curſed with Barrenneſs, nor Mankind annoy'd by the malignant Influences of the Sun. " This Contract, ſays the Author of the Conqueſt of Mexico, has Something " very whimſical in it. Nevertheleſs, it may be ſaid, that the People pretended by this " Oath to engage their Sovereign to reign with ſo much Moderation, as not to draw " down the Anger of Heaven by his own Guilt, well knowing that Chaſtiſements and " public Calamities fall often on Subjects, who ſuffer for the Crimes and Irregularities " of their Monarchs."

Their MARRIAGE-CEREMONIES and DIVORCES, &c.

MARRIAGE was ſolemniz'd by the Authority of the Prieſts, and a public Inſtrument was drawn up, wherein was mention'd the Particulars of the Wife's Fortune, which the Husband was obliged to return back again in caſe of a Separation. " [a] After their having agreed upon the Articles, the Couple went to the Temple, where " one of the ſacrificing Prieſts examin'd their Reſolutions by certain preciſe Queſtions " appointed for that Purpoſe. He afterwards took up the Woman's Veil and the Huſ- " band's Mantle; and with one of his Hands tied them together at one Corner, to ſig- " nify the inward Tie of the Wills. [b] They then return'd to their Houſe with this " kind of Engagement, accompanied with the ſacrificing Prieſt. [c] Then, in Imitation " of what the Romans practiſed with regard to the Lares, they went and viſited the " Hearth or Fire, which they look'd upon as the Mediator of the Diſputes between " the Husband and Wife. [d] They uſed to go ſeven Times round it ſucceſſively, the " ſacrificing Prieſt walking before; after which Ceremony they ſat down, in order to " be equally warm'd by the Heat of the Fire, which gave the laſt Perfection to Mar- " riage." The Bridegroom had two old Men for Aſſiſtants or Witneſſes on his Part; and the Bride two old Women. The Mexican Hiſtory, repreſented in Figures and Hieroglyphics, adds, that in the Beginning of the Night, a kind of She-Mediator, accompanied by four Matrons, with each a Torch in her Hand, took up the Bride on her Back, and carried her to her Husband's Houſe. The Parents of the latter, who were gone to meet the Bride, led her into a Place where the Bridegroom was waiting for her; and here the reſt of the Ceremony was completed in the Manner above-mention'd. Then follow'd the Marriage-Feaſt, and after having ſufficiently entertain'd themſelves with Eating and Drinking, the old Men took the Bridegroom aſide, and the old Women the Bride, in order to inſtruct them in ſuch Particulars as were uſeful and neceſſary for their Change of Condition, and how they might beſt anſwer thoſe Duties, to which they had bound themſelves by their Marriage-Contract. Laſtly, the old People withdrew, when the married Couple put the finiſhing Stroke to the Work.

HERE follows what was generally obſerv'd by the Mexicans: Nevertheleſs, ſome Provinces of the Empire either added or retrench'd from theſe Particulars, according as Caprice dictated. At Tlaſcalla they uſed to ſhave the Heads of the married Couple, to teach them, as it were, that it was now proper for them to lay aſide all youthful Amuſements. In Mechoacan the Bride was obliged to keep her Eyes fix'd on the Bridegroom while the Ceremony was performing, without which the Marriage wanted one

[b] The Prieſt conducted them back to their Houſes bound in this Manner to each other.

[c] Among the Romans, the married Couple drew near the Fire and Water, which were ſet at the Entrance of the Houſe.

Degree of Perfection. Was it done to denote to the Wife, that it was her Duty to read her Will, her Deſires, and Caprices, in her Husband's Eyes? In another Province of this Empire 'twas a Cuſtom to carry off the Bridegroom, in order that it might be thought he was forced to marry againſt his Will; or perhaps to denote, that if Men were not prompted to propagate their Species in a lawful Way, by the Dictates of Nature and Reaſon, hardly any Man would ever enter into that State, or embaraſs himſelf with the Cares of a Family, but would prefer the begetting a long Succeſſion of Baſtards, and abandoning them to the wide World, to the beautiful Harveſt which Hymen beſtows after a Toil of many Years. In the Province of Panuco, the Husband purchaſed his Wife, (which was, in ſome Meaſure, the giving her a Portion) for a Bow, two Arrows, and a Net. After the Marriage, the Wife's Father did not ſpeak a Word to his Son-in-Law during the firſt Year; and the latter, as ſoon as he was made a Father, abſtain'd from all Commerce with his Wife for two Years. During the firſt twenty Days of their Marriage, the Macatecas, another Nation ſubject to the Empire of Mexico, faſted, pray'd to their Gods, offer'd Sacrifices to them; and, from a penitential Motive, drew Blood from themſelves, and rubb'd the Mouth and Face of the Idols with it. Whence this whimſical Piece of Devotion, at a Seaſon that claims nothing but Mirth and Feſtivity? Did it ariſe from Fear, or a Principle of Duty? 'Tis probable that they might be partly influenced by Fear; but how ſpecious ſoever the Motive of that Piety might appear, the Europeans would think that Husband a Madman, who ſhould give himſelf up to Faſting and Praying to God, in thoſe firſt Days which ſeem ſo naturally adapted to Mirth and Jollity. And ſince Reaſon dictates to us to ſuit the ſeveral Circumſtances of Life, and proportion them to one another, 'tis manifeſt, that he who falls down to Prayers in a Seaſon which naturally calls him to an Exerciſe of a quite different Nature, offends againſt that juſt Proportion.

DIVORCES were very common in Mexico. "Nothing more was requir'd in that Caſe "than the mutual Conſent of both Parties; ſo that they had no Occaſion of going "before the Judges, but they themſelves decided it upon the Spot. The Woman kept "the Girls, and the Husband the Boys; but the Moment a Marriage was thus diſ"ſolv'd, the Parties were, on Pain of Death, forbid to cohabit together again; and "the Danger of relapſing was the only Remedy the Laws could think of applying "againſt Divorces, which the natural Levity and Inconſtancy of thoſe People made "but too common among them. They made the Chaſtity of their Wives a Point of "Honour; and, notwithſtanding their Propenſion to Luſt, they [a] nevertheleſs puniſh'd "an Adulterer with Death." However, they at the ſame Time allow'd of common Strumpets and public Stews.

The Ceremonies uſed at the Birth of their CHILDREN, and the Education they gave them.

THE new-born Infants were carried in a ſolemn Manner to the Temple, and the Prieſts, when they received them, repeated certain Exhortations on the Miſeries and Troubles to which they are expoſed by their Birth. If it was a Nobleman's Child, they put a Sword in its Right Hand, and in its Left a Shield, which the Prieſts kept for that Purpoſe. If it were an Artificer's Child, they performed the ſame Ceremony with Tools or mechanical Inſtruments. After which the Prieſt carried the Child near the [b] Altar, and drew ſome Drops of Blood from its Ears and privy Parts with a [b] Some ſay that he laid him on the Altar.

Manghey

Manghey Thorn, or Stone-Lancet. He afterwards threw Water on the Child, or plung'd it into the Water, uttering certain Imprecations at the ſame Time.

THIS kind of Circumciſion, and the Immerſion which follow'd it, reſembled in ſome meaſure the Circumciſion of the Jews, and the Baptiſm of Chriſtians. We find in the Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Mexico repreſented in Figures, that the Midwife took the Child four Days after its Birth, and carried it naked into the Yard, where ſome Ruſhes were prepared, on which they ſet a Veſſel of Water: The Midwife plung'd the Infant into this Veſſel, and when the Immerſion was ended, three little Boys of three Years of Age named the Child with a loud Voice. Twenty Days after its Birth, the Father and Mother carried their Child to the Temple, and preſented it to the Prieſt with an Oblation, and from that Time they devoted it to ſuch a Profeſſion as was moſt agreeable to its Parents. In caſe he were deſign'd for the Prieſthood, he was put into the Hands of the Prieſts at fifteen Years of Age; if for War, he was given at the ſame Age to the Perſon whoſe Buſineſs it was to inſtruct their Youth in the military Arts. In this laſt Caſe, the Oblation was given to him.

THE Parents of the Children uſed to ſuperintend their Education, till ſuch Time as they were fifteen Years of Age. It ſeems they have been pretty ſtrict, and that nothing was omitted which might conduce to check the Licentiouſneſs of Youth. They were brought up in Sobriety from their moſt tender Infancy; and they increaſed every Year the Quantity of their Food in ſo judicious a Manner, as can never be ſufficiently applaud-ed. A Child of four Years old was exerciſed in Things ſuitable to its Age, and from that Time they prevented the Growth of a Habit of Idleneſs ſo common among us, and which at the ſame Time is of ſuch fatal Conſequence, as to make a Man's whole Life vicious and miſerable. They never chaſtiſed them with any Severity till ſuch Time as Reaſon began to dawn; but before they proceeded to Chaſtiſement, they firſt employ'd Threats and Advices for a long Time together; as well to give the Child ſome Time for Reflection, as an Opportunity to thoſe who were impower'd to correct them, to exert their Prudence. At nine Years of Age, a ſtubborn or rebellious Child was chaſtiſed very rigorouſly: He was ſtript ſtark naked, when tying his Hands and Feet, they pricked his Body all over with Manghey Thorns. The Daughters were not puniſh'd quite ſo rigorouſly. A Child of ten Years old was beat with a Stick; at eleven he was ſmok'd at the Noſe with dry Axi, which put him to exceſſive Pain; and in caſe theſe Chaſtiſe-ments did not produce a Reformation, he was carried with his Feet and Fiſts tied, in-to a damp dirty Place, where he was left a whole Day together expoſed to the Incle-mencies of the Air, and the ſcorching Heat of the Sun. In fine, at fifteen Years of Age, the Youth was either put under the Direction of the Prieſt, or the Perſon who was appointed to inſtruct their Youths in the Arts of War. The latter chaſtiſed the young People according to the Enormity of the Faults which may be committed in the moſt frail Period of human Life; when the Paſſions, left to themſelves, generally fall into a Courſe, which, tho' it may ceaſe with the Faculties of the Senſes, does neverthe-leſs not bereave the Mind of its Activity. Drunkenneſs in young People was puniſhed with Death, but the old People were indulged in it.

IN order to give the Reader an Idea of the Exerciſes in which the Youth were em-ployed in the Schools and Seminaries, we ſhall copy what the Author of the Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Mexico has written on that Subject. " They had, ſays he, public " Schools, where the Children of the common People were inſtructed in every Thing " that was proper for them to know; and other Colleges or Seminaries which were " much more conſiderable, where the Children of the Nobility were educated from " their moſt tender Years till ſuch Time as they were in a Capacity of making their " Fortunes, or purſuing the Bent of their Genius. There were in theſe Colleges, Maſ-" ters appointed for the ſeveral Exerciſes of Children; others for thoſe a little older;

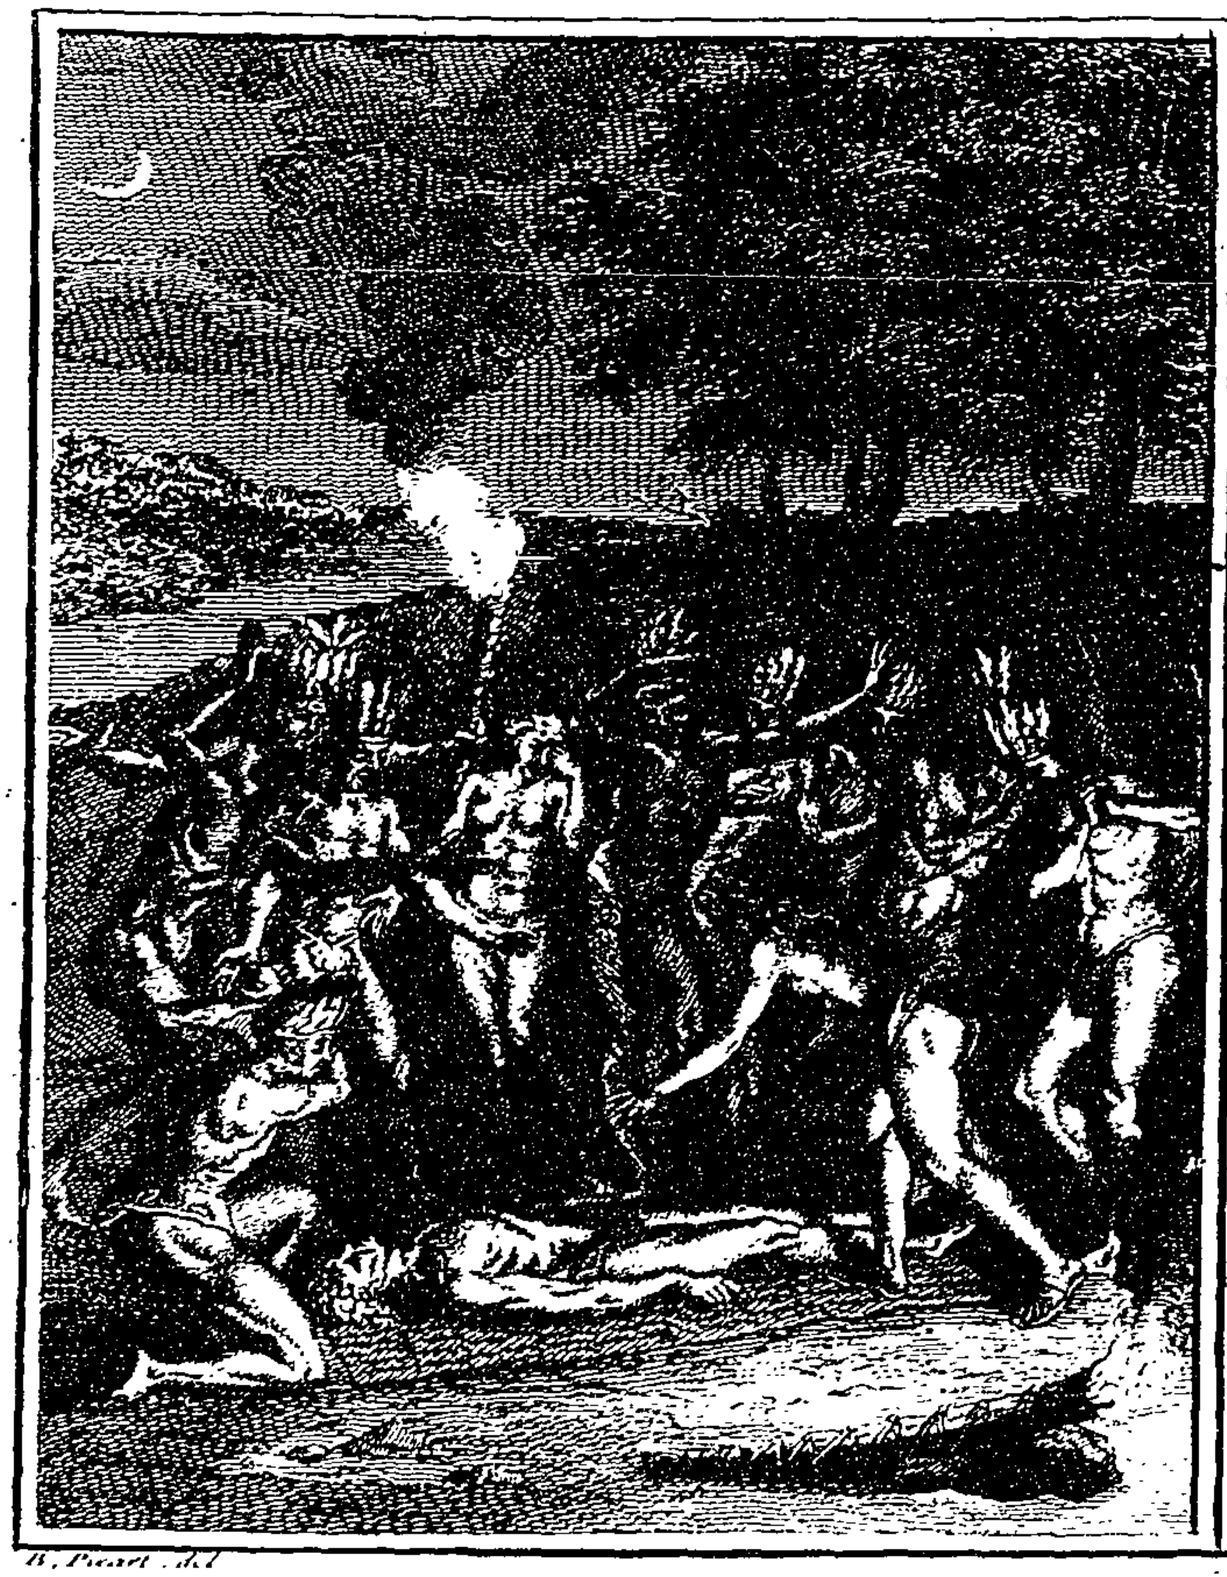
" and, laſtly, others for ſuch as were advancing towards Puberty. The Maſters had " the ſame Authority and Reſpect ſhow'd them as the Miniſters of the Prince, which " was no more than Juſtice, ſince they taught the Elements of thoſe Exerciſes that " were to be one Day uſeful to the State. They firſt began by teaching their " Children to read the Characters and Figures of which their Writings were com- " poſed; and exerciſed their Memories in making them repeat hiſtorical Songs, the " Subjects whereof were the great Actions of their Anceſtors, and the Eulogiums of their " Gods. From thence they went to another School, where they were taught " Modeſty, Civility, and, according to ſome Authors, a regular Way of walking and " a proper Geſture. The Maſters of this School were more conſider'd than the former, " becauſe that they by their Employment were appointed to ſuperintend the Inclina- " nations of an Age which ſuffers both its Errors to be corrected, and its Paſſions to be " controul'd. And at the ſame Time that their Minds were thus enlightned in this " State of Obedience, their Bodies waxed ſtrong, and they were removed to the third " School, where they grew very expert in the moſt violent Exerciſes. 'Twas here " they exercis'd their Strength in lifting Burdens, and in wreſtling; they challeng'd one " another in Jumping or Running, learnt to manage their Weapons, fence with Swords, " and fight with Clubs; to hurl the Dart, and direct the Arrow with Strength and Ex- " actneſs. They obliged them to ſuffer Hunger and Thirſt. They had ſtated Seaſons " when they were obliged to ſuffer the Injuries of the Weather, till ſuch Time as they " were expert and skilful, when they returned home to their Parents, and were em- " ploy'd according to the Character which their Maſters gave of their Genius, either for " Religion, for the Arts of Peace, or thoſe of War: The Nobility had the Choice of one " of thoſe three Profeſſions, which were equally honourable; but they generally in- " clin'd to that of War, becauſe it gave them a better Opportunity of making their " Fortune.

" THERE were alſo other Colleges of Matrons devoted to the Service of the Tem- " ples, in which the young Ladies of Quality were educated, who were put under their " Direction in their moſt tender Years. Theſe kept them under a very ſtrict Con- " finement, till ſuch Time as they were removed from it, in order to be ſettled in " the World with the Approbation of their Parents, and the Permiſſion of the " Emperor. They were all very skilfull in thoſe Works which adorn a Female Cha- " racter.

" SUCH as had a Genius for War, were obliged at their leaving the Seminary, to " ſubmit to another very rigorous, as well as remarkable Probation. Their Fathers " uſed to ſend them into the Army, in order to inure them to the Fatigues of the " Field, and to make them ſenſible by this Trial, what they engaged themſelves to " ſuffer, before they embraced the Profeſſion of a Soldier. They then were employ'd " only as Tamenes or Porters, carrying their Baggage upon their Backs between the reſt, " in order to mortify their Pride, and accuſtom them to Labour.

" WHOEVER among theſe Novices changed Colour at the Sight of the Enemy, or " did not ſignalize himſelf by ſome heroic Action, was not admitted into the Ar- " my; by which Means theſe Novices were of great Service during the Time of " their Probation, becauſe they all, to a Man, endeavour'd to diſtinguiſh themſelves " by ſome gallant Exploit, ſuch as ruſhing headlong upon the Enemy in the greateſt " Dangers."



THERE is a great Affinity between this Way of educating Youth and that of the antient Greeks. Our Notions on that Head are very different; but if we except what Chriſtianity rectifies by the Purity of its Morals, can we affirm that our Method of Education tion is much ſuperior to theirs? And can the Europeans juſtly boaſt that they make their Youth more upright, or more uſeful to the State? that they make the Heart leſs corrupt, or form more ſprightly Genius's? Do they furniſh the State with a great Number of Citizens, worthy of being compared with thoſe Greeks and Romans, thoſe brave and magnanimous Nations, who had been taught to deſpiſe Dangers and their own private Intereſts, whenever thoſe of their Country call'd for their Aſſiſtance? We are far from inuring our Children to Labour and Fatigue, which at the ſame Time that they invigorate the Body, ſtrengthen thoſe Organs, and the Springs which give a Motion to the Spirits. We are in general very negligent in all thoſe Things which inure the Body to Fatigue; and as to the Mind, we uſually give our Youth a very faint Idea of their Duty: Whence it comes to paſs, that they are ſcarce able to reſiſt the multitude of falſe Principles with which they are, as it were, ſurrounded, at their Entrance on the State of this World.

THE Plays and Sports of theſe Mexican Youths were in ſome meaſure intermix'd with Religion. One would think that theſe People were of Opinion that no Recreations could be lawful where theſe had not a Share. They uſed to play about the Temple, and the Prieſts were the Judges of their Sports; 'twas they decided the Diſputes which aroſe among them, and adjudged the Prize to ſuch as deſerved it. The toſſing of a Ball was one of their chief Diverſions, in which they uſed to diſpute for Victory with greater Solemnity than in the reſt of their Exerciſes: "[a] For the Prieſt "aſſiſted at it, together with the God of the Ball; and after having ſeated himſelf "at his Eaſe, they conjur'd the Tennis-Court by certain Ceremonies, in order to cor- "rect the Chances of the Play, and to diſtribute an equal Portion of Fortune among the "ſeveral Players."

Their FUNERAL RITES, &c.

THE Mexicans believed the Immortality of the Soul, and the Eternity of Rewards and Puniſhments. [b] They placed the Manſion of the bleſſed near the Sun. Among theſe happy Souls, thoſe were allowed the firſt Places who had been kill'd in Battle, or had been ſacrificed to the Gods. Prepoſſeſſed with the ſame Notion as the Antients, eſpecially the Greeks, viz. that Courage was the chief of all the Virtues, and being perſuaded that the ſacrificing of Men was the moſt heroic Act of Religion, 'tis no Wonder that they aſcribed the moſt ſupreme Felicity to their Heroes, and to ſuch Men as devoted their Lives to pleaſe the Gods. They aſſigned different Manſions in the other World to the Souls of the Departed, according to their different Deaths; as for inſtance, ſtill-born Children did not reſide with thoſe who died of old Age, nor ſuch as died of Sickneſs with thoſe who were put to Death for their Crimes: And even with regard to the latter, Parricides did not inhabit in the ſame Manſion with the other kind of Murderers. They eſtabliſhed, as we ſee, different Degrees of Puniſhment; and, in all probability, different Degrees of Reward.

BURIALS, and all Funeral Rites, were regulated by their Prieſts. They generally buried their Dead in their Gardens, or Houſes, and commonly choſe the Court-Yard for that Purpoſe: They ſometimes buried them in thoſe Places where they ſacrificed to the Idols. In fine, they frequently burnt them, after which they buried their Aſhes in the Temples, together with their Moveables, their Utenſils, and all they thought might be uſeful to them in the next World. They uſed to ſing at Funerals, and even made Feaſts on thoſe Occaſions; which Cuſtom, how ridiculous ſoever it may be, yet ſome Chriſtian Nations have not been able to prevail upon themſelves to lay it aſide. Above all, they buried their great Lords in a very magnificent manner, and uſed to carry their Bodies with great Pomp and a numerous Train into the Temples. " [a] The Prieſts " walk'd firſt with their Pans of Copal, ſinging funeral Hymns in a melancholy Tone, " accompanied with the hoarſe and mournful Sound of Flutes. They lifted the Body " ſeveral Times on high, whilſt they were ſacrificing ſuch as were appointed to ſerve " thoſe illuſtrious Dead. The [b] Domeſtics were put to Death to keep their Maſters " Company. 'Twas a Teſtimony of great Affection, but very common among the " lawful Wives, to ſolemnize by their Deaths the Funerals of their Husbands. They " buried a great Quantity of Gold and Silver with the Deceaſed for the Expences of " his Journey, which they imagined was long and troubleſome." The common People imitated the Grandees in proportion to their Subſtance. The Friends of the Deceaſed came and made Preſents to him, and talk'd to him as though he were ſtill living: The ſame Ceremonies were practiſed whether they burnt or buried the Dead. We muſt not omit, that they carried the Atchievements and Trophies of the Deceaſed, in caſe he were a Man of Quality; and that the Prieſt who read the Funeral Service, was dreſs'd in thoſe of the Idol whom the [c] Nobleman repreſented. The Funeral laſted ten Days.

The Ceremonies practiſed at the DEATH of their EMPERORS.

[d] PRIDE and Vanity, as in all other Places, exerted their utmoſt Efforts at the Death of the Mexican Monarchs. If a Perſon upon his Death-Bed ſincerely acknowledges the Emptineſs of all human Grandeur, his Succeſſors do not imitate him in every particular. Various Intereſts, whether true or feigned, oblige them to ſtifle thoſe Ideas, whoſe Force they yet muſt one Day feel. Whenever the Emperor was ſick, they uſed to mask the Faces of the Idols, and never took them off till he was either Dead or recovered. If he died, his Death was publiſhed, together with an Edict by which all his Subjects were commanded to bewail it. The whole Body of the Nobility was invited to his Interment. They uſed to guard the Emperor's Body the firſt four Nights after his Death; after which they waſh'd it, and took a Tuft of his Hair, which they preſerv'd as a Relic; that Tuft, according to the Mexicans, repreſenting the Soul. They put an Emerald into his Mouth, wrapp'd him in ſeventeen Mourning Mantles very richly wrought, on the laſt of which the Image of that Deity was repreſented which had been the peculiar Object of that Monarch's Devotion: They cover'd his Face with a Mask, and carried him in that manner into the Temple of this Idol. The Clergy of the Temple received it at the Gate, ſinging the Funeral Service after the Mexican manner; which being done, the High-Prieſt pronounced ſome Words, when they threw the Body into the Fire with every Thing that had been appointed for his Uſe. They ſtrangled a Dog, who was to be his Guide in the other World, and ſacrificed ſeveral Days ſucceſſively a great Number of Slaves and others to attend upon him. In fine they put the Aſhes and the Tuft of Hair into a Coffin, the Inſide of which was adorn'd with all kinds of Pictures repreſenting Idols, and laid the Image of the deceaſed Prince on the Coffin. Thus concluded a Ceremony, when he who had lived in the utmoſt Pomp and Splendor, was going to be confounded with Worms and Corruption.

THE Kings of Machoacan were buried with much the ſame Pomp. The Figure repreſents not only the Funeral Rites of the Mexicans, but thoſe of Venezuela, concerning which we have nothing particular to add.

The Religion of the Inhabitants of Campeche, Jucatan, Tabaſco, Cozumel, &c.

THE Deities repreſented in this Figure were worſhipped at Campeche, and probably in other Places. The Devotees of the Eaſtern Coaſt of Mexico went and ſacrificed to the Idols in the Iſland Of Sacrifices. The Author of the Hiſtory of the Conqueſt of Mexico has not given us a Deſcription of it, but ſatisfies himſelf with ſaying, "that "the Spaniards found Idols there of various, but dreadful Shapes. They were, con-"tinues he, placed on Altars, to which they aſcended by Steps, near which were ſix "or ſeven hundred Bodies newly ſacrificed, and quarter'd, after having tore out their "Bowels."

THERE was formerly at Campeche a ſquare Theatre or Scaffold, built of Earth and Stone about four Cubits high. Upon the Theatre was fix'd the Marble Statue of a Man, whom two Animals of an extraordinary Shape ſeem'd ready to tear in Pieces. Near this Figure a Serpent was alſo repreſented, forty ſeven Foot in Length, and of a proportionable Thickneſs, which ſwallow'd up a Lion. Theſe two laſt Figures were made of Marble like the reſt, and encloſed in ſome meaſure by Palliſadoes. On the Pavement were Bows and Arrows, Bones and Skulls. [a] This is all we are told concerning theſe Figures, which poſſibly might have ſome myſterious Signification couch'd under them.

THE Savages of Jucatan had alſo a kind of Circumciſion; but we are not told that it differ'd from the Ceremonies obſerv'd by the Mexicans at the Birth of their Children. There were Croſſes found among the Savages: 'Twould be no eaſy matter to gueſs what Uſe theſe Idolaters might apply them to, and the Origin of them; for we cannot depend upon the Truth of what they told the Spaniards, viz. That formerly a Man who was more beautiful than the Sun went into that Province, and left that Memorial thereof among the Inhabitants.

WE are told that the [b] Iſland of Cozumel went by the Name of the Idol which the Inhabitants worſhipped. "The Temple of this Idol was built of Stone, of a ſquare Fi-"gure, and in a pretty good Taſte. The Idol was repreſented under the Figure of a Man, "with a terrible and hideous Air." They had made a Back-Door behind the Idol, through which the Prieſt pronounced the Oracles unſeen; but the Devotees, when they addreſſed their Vows to the Idol, fooliſhly imagined it really anſwered them. [c] There were alſo ſome other Figures of Marble and Earth reſembling Bears. We are told that theſe Gods were their Doneſtic Deities, or the Lares of the People of that Country.

IN the ſame Iſland the God of Rain was worſhipped under the Figure of a Croſs. Whenever a Drought happen'd, they uſed to go in Proceſſion to beſeech it to ſend Rain. They ſacrificed Quails in its Honour, offer'd it the moſt exquiſite Perfumes, ſprinkled it with Water, and undoubtedly repeated the Oblations, the Prayers, and Aſperſions ſo frequently, and ſo long together, that at length the Clouds had Leiſure to gather in the Sky. It rain'd, when, lo! the Miracle.

THE Idols of Tabaſco, and the Sacrifices which were made them, are repreſented in the Figure. They uſed to rip up the Victims Breaſt and tear out his Heart; they afterwards ſet, or rather encloſed the bloody Body of the Victim, in a Hollow made in that Part of the Lion's Neck which is repreſented in the Figure. The Blood of the Victim fell into a Stone Reſervoir, on the Side of which was placed a Stone Statue repreſenting a Man, who ſeemed to look ſtedfaſtly at the Blood of the ſacrificed Victim. As to the Heart, the ſacrificing Prieſt, after having torn it out, ſmear'd the Idol's Face with it, and then threw it into the Fire which was lighted for that Purpoſe.

RELIGION of the Nicaraguans.

THESE Savages uſed to ſacrifice Men in the ſame manner as their Neighbours, and worſhipped the Sun and ſeveral other Deities. Some of their Prieſts might be conſider'd as Confeſſors, ſince they were appointed to hear Confeſſions, and enjoin Penance; they alſo pointed out the Feſtivals and other Solemnities, preſcrib'd the manner of the Sacrifices, and gave the Form of Prayer, &c. Theſe Prieſts liv'd in a State of Celebacy.

HERE follow the moſt remarkable Circumſtances in their Sacrifices. The ſacrificing Prieſt turn'd thrice round the Victim, who was always a Priſoner of War, ſinging at the ſame Time in a moſt lamentable Tone. He then ript up his Breaſt, ſmear'd his Face with the Blood of it, and cut the Body to Pieces, after having firſt taken out the Heart. This the Sacrificer gave to the chief Prieſt, its Hand and Feet to the King, and the reſt to the People. The Head was fix'd on a Stake, which was called by the Name of the Province againſt whom they were making War; we may naturally ſuppoſe the Victim was of that Country. They often ſacrific'd Children, and even Men of the Country, on thoſe Stakes; but they were obliged to purchaſe them before they could offer them in Sacrifice, and a Father was allow'd to ſell his Child for that cruel Ceremony. Thoſe who had the Happineſs of being ſacrificed in this manner, enjoyed the Privileges of Deification, and paſſed from this mortal to an immortal Life. All the religious Ceremonies of theſe Savages were intermix'd with Prayers, Vows, Promiſes to the Gods of a ſincere Repentance, and Proceſſions in their Honour. In theſe the Prieſts aſſiſted, clothed in Callico Mantles, which deſcended to the Leg; the Laity carry'd Banners, on which were repreſented, in their Taſte, ſuch Gods as were the Objects of their Worſhip; the Youths aſſembled alſo in it with Bows and Arrows in their Hands. The chief Prieſt walk'd at the Head of the pious Band, carrying an Image of ſome Deity of the Country fix'd at the End of a Lance. The Prieſts ſing till they are arriv'd at the Place where the Idol is to halt, when they ſtrew the Place where it is ſet down, with all kind of Flowers; then they leave off ſinging, and the chief Prieſt draws Blood from ſome Part or other of his Body in honour of the God. The pious Band follow his Example, ſome letting themſelves Blood in the Tongue, others in the Ears, and others a great deal lower, as they think proper; but the Blood, from what Part ſoever it be drawn, is always uſed in ſmearing the Idol's Face. During this Act of Devotion the young People dance and make merry. They ſometimes conſecrate the Maiz in theſe Proceſſions, which indeed is whimſical enough. They ſprinkle it with Blood, which is far from having a Property of inſpiring the Mind of Man with Works of Piety. When the Conſecration is ended, they begin to eat.

THEIR Temples are low and dark; [a] the great Altar ſtood formerly before one of them. 'Twas here the ſacrificing Prieſt made an Exhortation to the People, which ſerv'd as a Prelude to the Sacrifice.

Their MARRIAGE CEREMONIES.

NOTWITHSTANDING that Polygamy is allowed among them, they yet have but one lawful Wife. The Prieſt takes the Parties betroth'd by the little Finger, and leads them to an Apartment near a Fire which is lighted purpoſely for that Ceremony. He inſtructs them immediately in their Duty, and in all thoſe Particulars which he thinks neceſſary to be obſerved by them in this Tranſition from one State to another, which indeed is vaſtly more dangerous for a European than an American Husband. The Moment the Fire is extinguiſhed, the Parties are look'd upon as Husband and Wife; but if the latter, whom the Husband ſuppoſed to be a Virgin, ſhould happen to be found otherwiſe when they come to a Scrutiny, he immediately puts her from him without the leaſt Formality, unleſs he is willing to leave the Determination thereof to his Cacique, by giving him leave to make an Experiment on her Virginity. The only Puniſhment inflicted on a Woman who had violated her conjugal Faith, is to divorce her. She is indeed prohibited from marrying again, but here ſhe's no loſer: Nevertheleſs on certain Feſtivals, the Husband allows his Wife the Privilege of taking a Deputy; which indeed is a more graceful way of enliſting themſelves among the cornuted. We may even preſume, that the only Expedient to meet with ſome Conſolation in Cuckoldom, and perhaps to avoid falling under its Juriſdiction, is to permit, and not to prohibit. After all, whatever Violation Hymen may ſuffer,

In Engliſh thus:

Husbands, 'tis beſt to ſhut your Eyes,
And not affect to ſeem too wiſe.

WE are told, that in this Country the Relations of an adulterous Woman are diſhonour'd; that the Man who violates a Woman is made a Slave, or oblig'd to give her a Portion; that a Slave who has any Commerce with his Maſter's Daughter, is buried alive with her; and that in order to prevent any Commerce of this Nature they admit of Stews. Let us add, that theſe ſeveral Cuſtoms ſeem very repugnant to one another.

THE Reader will obſerve, that we have mention'd the Cuſtoms of theſe Nations as tho' they really exiſted at this Time. Nevertheleſs 'tis probable, that if they really do ſo, 'tis only among a ſmall Number of Indians, who are confin'd to the Woods and Mountains, for the Chriſtians have aboliſh'd them in all other Places.

Religion of the Savages of Darien, Panama, New Granada, and Cumana.

WE are aſſur'd, that the Indians of the Province of Darien have neither Temples, Altars, or any exterior Marks of Religion. [a] They nevertheleſs believe, that there is a God in Heaven, and this God is the Sun, the Moon's Husband, to both which they pay equal Adoration. As to the evil Principle, they ſtand in fear of it, becauſe it hurts them, and worſhip it in order to draw down its Benevolence upon them. They preſent to it Flowers, Fruits, Perfumes, and Maiz. As to the frequent Apparitions we are told of, we may reaſonably conclude, without wronging our Judgment, that 'tis no more than the Effect of their Imaginations, perhaps of their Melancholy, and probably the Artifice of their Prieſts, who are at the ſame Time Phyſicians and Politicians. Let us not omit, that they are alſo the Miniſters of War.

[b] THE pretended magical Incantations of theſe Prieſts are always perform'd in ſecret. Theſe ignorant People are eaſily perſuaded, from their aſtoniſhing and uncommon Cries, Diſtortions, wry Faces, and Howlings, that ſome Myſtery muſt be couch'd under them. We are told that the Soothſayers in their repeated Cries, mimic the Howling of Beaſts, and ſometimes the Melody of Birds. Theſe Cries are likewiſe heighten'd by the Noiſe of certain Stones, which undoubtedly are ſtruck in ſome Cadence; with the Sound of a kind of Drum made of Cane or Reed; with that of a Flute made of the ſame Materials; to which if we add the Rattling of the Bones of certain Beaſts tied together, the Reader will have a complete Idea of the Muſic which accompanies the Inchantments of thoſe Prieſts. However, they don't all howl together. The Time for the Noiſe is follow'd by a deep Silence, when the Oracle pronounces the Anſwer.

[c] THEIR Way of healing the Sick is very extraordinary. "They ſeat the Patient "on a Stone, (or Something elſe which is nothing to the Affair,) which being done, "the Medico-Prieſt takes a little Bow and ſome ſmall Arrows, and ſhoots them as "quick as poſſible at his Patient, who is ſtark naked. They are ſo skilful at this Exerciſe, that they never miſs their Mark. Moreover, there is a Stay put to the Arrow, which hinders it from piercing beyond ſuch a Depth. If the Arrow ſhould "open a Vein that's filled with Wind, and that the Blood ſhould ruſh out with Violence, the Phyſician and thoſe who are preſent at the Operation leap for Joy, and "diſcover by their Geſtures, that the Operation has been ſucceſsful."

THE Savages that inhabit between Carthagena and Panama, uſed formerly to worſhip, and perhaps ſtill do ſo, the Stars and the Devil; that is to ſay, the evil Principle. As the Syſtem of their Religion agrees with what has been already obſerv'd with regard to that of the Savages of Darien, we ſhall not make any further Reflections on it in this Place. Such as live higher up in the Country, and in thoſe Places where the [d] Indian Kings had their Palaces on [e] Trees, did alſo worſhip the Sun, and ſeem'd to look upon him as the principal Deity.

RIO GRANDE, which empties itſelf into the Gulf of Uraba, was formerly call'd Dabaiba, from an Idol that was very famous among theſe Savages. Here they uſed to go in Pilgrimage, and burnt Slaves by Way of Sacrifice in his Honour. They uſed to worſhip this God or Goddeſs, by faſting for three or four Days together; by Auſteri-ties like to thoſe before-mention'd; and by petty Acts of Devotion, ſuch as Sighs, Groans, Extaſies, &c. [a] We worſhip, (ſaid they to the Spaniards, when they queſtion'd them about their Religion,) one God, Creator of Heaven and Earth, whoſe Mother is Dabaiba. This Dabaiba had led a very virtuous Life in this World, and was conſequently very much eſteem'd, and after her Death was deified, and became the Mother of God. When ſhe is angry, ſhe ſends Thunder and Lightening upon Mankind. This is the Subſtance of the Religion of thoſe Savages.

THEIR Prieſts make a Vow of Chaſtity, and if ever they violate it, they are infallibly ſton'd and burnt. The Devotees are oblig'd, during their Faſting, to ceaſe from all Correſpondence with their Wives. Notwithſtanding the rigorous Puniſhment which is inflicted on all ſuch Prieſts as violate their Chaſtity, they yet preſerve the Authority they have arrogated to themſelves in all Places, and nothing is tranſacted without their Advice.

WE are told that the Savages of the Valley of Tunia worſhip the Sun and Moon, and an Idol call'd Chiappen. Before they ſet out to War, they ſacrifice Slaves and Priſoners in his Honour, and ſmear the Body of the Idol with the Victims Blood: They never go on any Enterprize without firſt asking his Advice, and imploring his Aſſiſtance; for which Purpoſe they undergo a Penance for two Months together, during which they abſtain from Salt and the Commerce of Women; but we are not told the Reaſon of their abſtaining from Salt. They have now, or had at the Time of the Spaniards coming among them, certain Houſes or Seminaries for educating the Youth of both Sexes.

WE have not much to ſay concerning the Cures which were perform'd by their Prieſts, who when they find themſelves unable to heal their Patients, abandon them to their Gods; but before they come to this Extremity, they lay their Hand on the afflicted Part, mumble over regularly a few Words, make an Inciſion, and give a certain Potion.

THE Inhabitants of Cumana and Paria [b] look upon the Sun and Moon as their Gods. Thunder and Lightening always follow the Anger of the former, and whenever he is eclips'd, they employ the moſt ſevere Mortifications to engage him to reſtore his Light. They pull their Hair to Pieces, and cut themſelves with Fiſh Bones; the Women tear their Faces, and the young Girls draw Blood from their Arms. In the mean Time the Sun reſumes his wonted Power, which he had loſt only in the Imagination of the Ignorant; but all Men are not oblig'd to underſtand Aſtronomy. Theſe Savages are alſo of Opinion, that Comets are ill-boding and pernicious; upon which Account they make a great Noiſe, beat on a kind of Drum, and exorciſe them in order to frighten and drive them at a Diſtance. To the Worſhip of the Sun and Moon they add that of ſome other Idols, and among the latter, Travellers have taken particular Notice of a Croſs, ſhap'd like that of St. Andrew, which is a Preſervative from Spirits, and all thoſe evil Genii who ramble about in the Night-Time. We are aſſur'd that this is the Reaſon of their fixing Children to that Croſs.

[c] BESIDES certain Compoſitions made of Roots and Herbs, which are often mix'd with the Fat of Birds, or Quadrupeds, to which ſeveral Ingredients are added, unknown to the People, the Medico-Prieſts of Cumana ſuck the infected Part with their Mouths. Theſe two Things are perform'd with an Air of Gravity, which is apt to prejudice the

People

People in their Favour; and they at the ſame Time mumble over ſeveral Words to aſſiſt the Operation. But if after all this, a Cure is not effected, they then affirm that the Patient muſt abſolutely be poſſeſſed with an evil Spirit. Then the Medico-Prieſt rubs his Patient with all his Strength, begins to mutter over his Words again, exorciſes the pretended Spirit, and ſucks as hard as poſſible in order to drive him out. After this he takes a Piece of Wood, whoſe Virtue is known only to the Operator; when he rubs the Mouth, the Throat, and Stomach of the Patient therewith, and with ſo much Violence, that at laſt the Patient vomits Blood. Immediately the Operator repeats his Incantations, ſtamps his Foot, cries, and makes a thouſand new Diſtortions, when lo! the Devil appears. This is Something which comes out of the Patient's Body, or which ſeems to come out by a legerdemain Trick of the Prieſt; 'tis then carried out of the Hut, the followingWords, which probably may have a peculiar hidden Virtue, being ſpoken at the ſame Time, May the Devil go out from hence. In caſe the Patient ſhould happen to die, after ſo much Care and Pains have been beſtow'd upon him, the operating Prieſt cries out, His Time was come, which does no Way leſſen his Reputation in the Minds of the People.

THEY adviſe with their Prieſts in all Affairs relating to Peace or War, and conſult their Gods in Caves or Solitudes. They purpoſely make choice of the Night for the performing of their magical Ceremonies, and the darker it is the better. They conjure the Devils by their Cries, by a great Noiſe, and their magical Songs, in the Preſence of ſeveral young People. The Perſon whom they commiſſion to conſult the Oracle of the Idol, is ſeated, and the reſt are ſtanding. While the Devil is expected, the Magician makes much leſs Noiſe; and the Moment he appears, it ceaſes entirely, when the Conjuror proſtrates himſelf, and gives the Signal for the Homage that is to be paid him. This is the Account which the old Spaniſh Writers give of the antient Superſtitions of the Americans, they being Eye-Witneſſes to them. They add, that one Day certain Friars undertook to exorciſe the Prieſt who was raiſing the Devil, and that by the Power of the Signs of the Croſs and holy Water, which was wonderfully aſſiſted by a Stole that was put about the Conjurer's Neck, he anſwer'd very penitently to all the Queſtions which the Friars put to the Devil. Among other Things, they asked him where the Souls of the Indians would go after their Deaths? The Anſwer he made was, To Hell.

SUCH as are deſign'd for Prieſts, are initiated in the Prieſthood from their Infancy. They oblige thoſe Children to retire for two Years to the moſt remote Parts of the Woods, where they are not allow'd to feed upon any Thing that has Blood in it, or ſee any Women; but muſt forget their Kindred, and are not allow'd to ſtir out of their Caverns. The old Piaias, which is the Name of theſe Indian Prieſts, viſit and inſtruct them in the Night. When the Probation-Time of theſe young Candidates is expir'd, their Piaias give them a Certificate, upon which they are look'd upon as licens'd Prieſts, and Doctors in Phyſic and Magic.

Their

Their MARTIAL CEREMONIES, &c.

THE Savages of Darien, as well as thoſe of North-America, have a ſolemn Smoking-Feaſt, in order to take their Reſolutions with regard to War. As they have no Diets or Parliaments among them; the Reſults whereof are expected for ſeveral Years together; or Subſidies, which it is a hard Matter to levy; or Taxes invented by ſome Farmer of the Revenues, we may ſuppoſe that they immediately ſet out the Moment after they have taken a Reſolution of making War. The Women march to the Field as well as the Men, and handle the Bow and Arrow much better than ours do the Needle and Diſtaff.

THEY burn their Priſoners of War, but [a] pull out one of their Teeth before they execute them. The Savages of Panama imitate their Neighbours of Darien in this Cuſtom. We are not to doubt but this laſt Practice was in ſome Meaſure a religious one, ſince the moſt ſolemn Oath among the latter was that of ſwearing [b] by the Tooth.

THE Savages of Darien and Panama always come into the Aſſembly of War, or that of the State, in a decent Habit; that is to ſay, with a Calico Veſtment over their Shoulders, a Scarf upon their Thighs, a Ring on their Noſes or Mouths, a Necklace of Teeth or Shells round their Necks. We muſt not imagine that theſe Necklaces are as light as thoſe of our Women. Thoſe of theſe Savages weigh twenty five or thirty Pounds, and very often reach down to the Navel. Some of them wear ſeveral together, but they all weigh no more than a great Necklace. They don't go to Council with thoſe ceremonious Gewgaws, but their Women follow the Men, and carry after them the ſeveral Ornaments which they are oblig'd to put on when they are ſummon'd to appear in the Council. But 'tis certain that theſe Counſellors give themſelves very little Trouble with regard to the Gravity requiſite on thoſe Occaſions. They dance in their Formalities without the leaſt Ceremony; when, being ſeated in their ſeveral Places, a Boy lights a Roll of Tobacco, and wets that Part of it a little which is lighted, to keep the Tobacco from burning away too faſt; after this, he puts it to his Mouth as if it were a Pipe, and goes from one Row to another with the Roll of Tobacco, when he ſmokes in the Faces of all the Counſellors, who receive his Whiffs with great Satisfaction, and undoubtedly look upon it as a Token of Honour and Reſpect.

ALL theſe Savages never allow any Quarter to their Enemies; in caſe they don't cut them to Pieces immediately, they are kept only in order to be ſacrificed to their Idols, to be knock'd down, or burnt in their ſolemn Aſſemblies. The Fear of Death would be a thouſand Times more dreadful than Death itſelf, did not their Captives diſcover ſuch an almoſt unaccountable Intrepidity in their Slavery, which poſſibly may flow from a Principle that is not to be deſpis'd.

[c] THE Savages of New Granada and Cumana caſtrate all their young Captives, and afterwards fatten them, imagining that Men are like Capons in that reſpect. They wear the Teeth of their murder'd Enemies about their Necks, and always have an Idol marching at the Head of their Armies, in whoſe Honour they ſacrifice Slaves or Captives before the Battle begins.

[c] Authors cited by Purchas.

THE Savages of Venezuela paint or roco their Bodies in as many Places as they have kill'd Enemies. The firſt Time they ſlay an Enemy, they paint their Arms; the ſecond, their Breaſts; and the third, they draw colour'd Lines from the Noſe to the Ears.

Their MARRIAGE and FUNERAL RITES.

THE Savages of Darien are allow'd a Plurality of Wives, and have even the Liberty of ſelling them the Moment they ceaſe to be agreeable in their Eyes. They have alſo Proſtitutes among them, and if we may give Credit to what Travellers relate, their Daughters are not cruel; nevertheleſs, as they look upon an immature Pregnancy as ſcandalous, they immediately employ certain Herbs in order to procure Abortion.

As ſoon as the young Women of Darien and Panama are of an Age fit for Marriage, and diſcover ſome Symptoms of their Maturity, they give them the Apron, and they are no longer ſuffer'd to appear in public. They are veil'd in their Houſes, and even in their Father's Preſence. Happily for the Girls they marry them out of Hand, and by that means prevent the dangerous Inſinuations of a [a] Director, who, regardleſs of the Honour of Families, frequently deſtroys in a Moment, all that Virtue had been inculcating into Youth for fourteen or fifteen Years together. " [b] Corcal relates, that the Weſt-In- " dians in general declare for Nature, and are of Opinion that ſhe is not to be ſuffer'd
" to remain idle; whence neither their Men or Women are ever ſuffer'd to languiſh
" long, nor do they once make any of thoſe Reflections which may be any way con" ducive to check the Irregularities of Love. 'Tis to their early and ſpeedy Marriages, " and the little Trouble they have in meeting with Partners for Life, that I aſcribe the " ſmall Number of Adulterers of either Sex among theſe Savages.

" THEY do not uſe much Ceremony in their Marriages; the whole Amour and " Gallantry on both Sides goes no further than in asking each other the Queſtion; at " leaſt a young Woman is allow'd to inſinuate, that ſhe deſires ſuch an one for her " Husband; whereas among the Europeans, Decorum forbids the Woman making the " leaſt Overture. After they have enquir'd into each other's Inclinations, and are agreed " upon the Matter, they immediately marry; and all the Gueſts that are invited to " the Wedding, bring each of them a Preſent, conſiſting of Axes and Stone-Knives,
" Maiz, Eggs, Fruits, Fowls, Hammocks, Cotton, &c. which they leave at the En" trance of the Hut, and withdraw till ſuch Time as the Ceremony of making the " Preſent is ended. After this they begin to ſolemnize the Marriage, the Form of " which is as follows: The Bridegroom preſents each of the Gueſts with a great
" Gourd-Bottle full of Chicali, which is the Drink of theſe Americans, at the Door " of the Hut. All the Gueſts, not excepting the little Children, drink in this Man" ner at the Door; after which, the Fathers of the Bride and Bridegroom come in " alſo, holding their Children. Then the Bridegroom's Father makes a Speech to " the Aſſembly, holding in his Right Hand a Bow and an Arrow, with the Point
" turn'd towards them. After that, he dances and makes a thouſand odd Poſtures;
" which throw him into ſuch a violent Sweat, that he at length is oblig'd to give over
" through Fatigue. The Dance is no ſooner ended, but he kneels down, and preſents
" his Son to the Bride, whoſe Father, being in the like Poſture, holds alſo his Daugh" ter by the Hand; but the Bride's Father dances likewiſe in his Turn, and makes the

[a] THE Bride's Father (where there is no Father, her Uncle, or ſome other near Relation) watches her for a Week in the Apartment where he lies. To what ſhall we aſcribe this? To paternal Affection, or the Bride's Reluctance, who cannot prevail with herſelf to ruſh boldly into the Arms of a Husband? Authors are ſilent on this Head; and be that as it will, a Week after ſhe is deliver'd up to her Husband.

WE have already [b] obſerv'd, that the Wives live in great Subjection; but are they the more unhappy on that Account, ſince they know no Condition that is better than their own? Polygamy, whoſe very Name would frighten our Ladies, and perhaps make them more humble and reſerv'd when they would be ſurrounded with ſeveral Rivals, is not capable of cauſing the leaſt Emotion in the Breaſt of a female American. Thoſe of Darien and Panama not only employ themſelves in domeſtic Affairs, but alſo in ploughing, digging, and grubbing up the Ground, in ſowing Maiz, in planting and pruning the Trees. Theſe Employments ſeem too rough for Women; but then 'tis certain, that Women in the Infancy of the World underwent thoſe Toils, and Uſe is a ſecond Nature. The American Women have no Taſte for Exceſs and Gluttony, nor are they form'd for ſpending whole Nights at Cards, and rambling from one Ball or Maſquerade to another. That Way of Life might ſeem as painful to them as that of ploughing, or following a Husband to the Field would be to our Wives. " [c] Notwith-" ſtanding that the Women of the Iſthmus of Panama are thus employ'd in all kinds " of ſervile Buſineſs, either in the Houſe or in the Field, and are in ſome Meaſure " their Husbands Slaves; they nevertheleſs acquit themſelves of every Duty with ſo " much Chearfulneſs and Speed, that one would imagine it was Choice, not Neceſſity. " They are generally good-natur'd, courteous, and obliging one to another, eſpecially " to Strangers, on whom they are always ready to beſtow thoſe Favours which are " lawfully due to their Husbands only. The Women are very reſpectful and ſubmiſſive " to their Husbands, who in return are tender and loving. I never ſaw, continues the " above-mention'd Writer, any Indian beat his Wife, or make uſe of reproachful " Expreſſions."

As to their Children, they [d] plunge them in cold Water as ſoon as they are born. The Mother is plung'd afterwards in the ſame Manner. They then tie the Child to a Piece of Macau Wood, and as his Back always lies upon it, he runs no great Danger of being either crooked or crump-back'd. The Children of both Sexes, till ſuch Time as they arrive at Puberty, go as naked as Adam and Eve in Paradiſe: Then the Girls wear an Apron, and the Boys a Funnel, whoſe Uſe it were needleſs to mention.

WE are but very little acquainted with their Funeral Rites: They preſent Victuals to the Souls, and celebrate Anniverſaries for the Dead, which conſiſt in carrying yearly a little Maiz and Chicali to the Grave of the Deceaſed. They have ſome Idea of the Rewards and Puniſhments in the other Life.

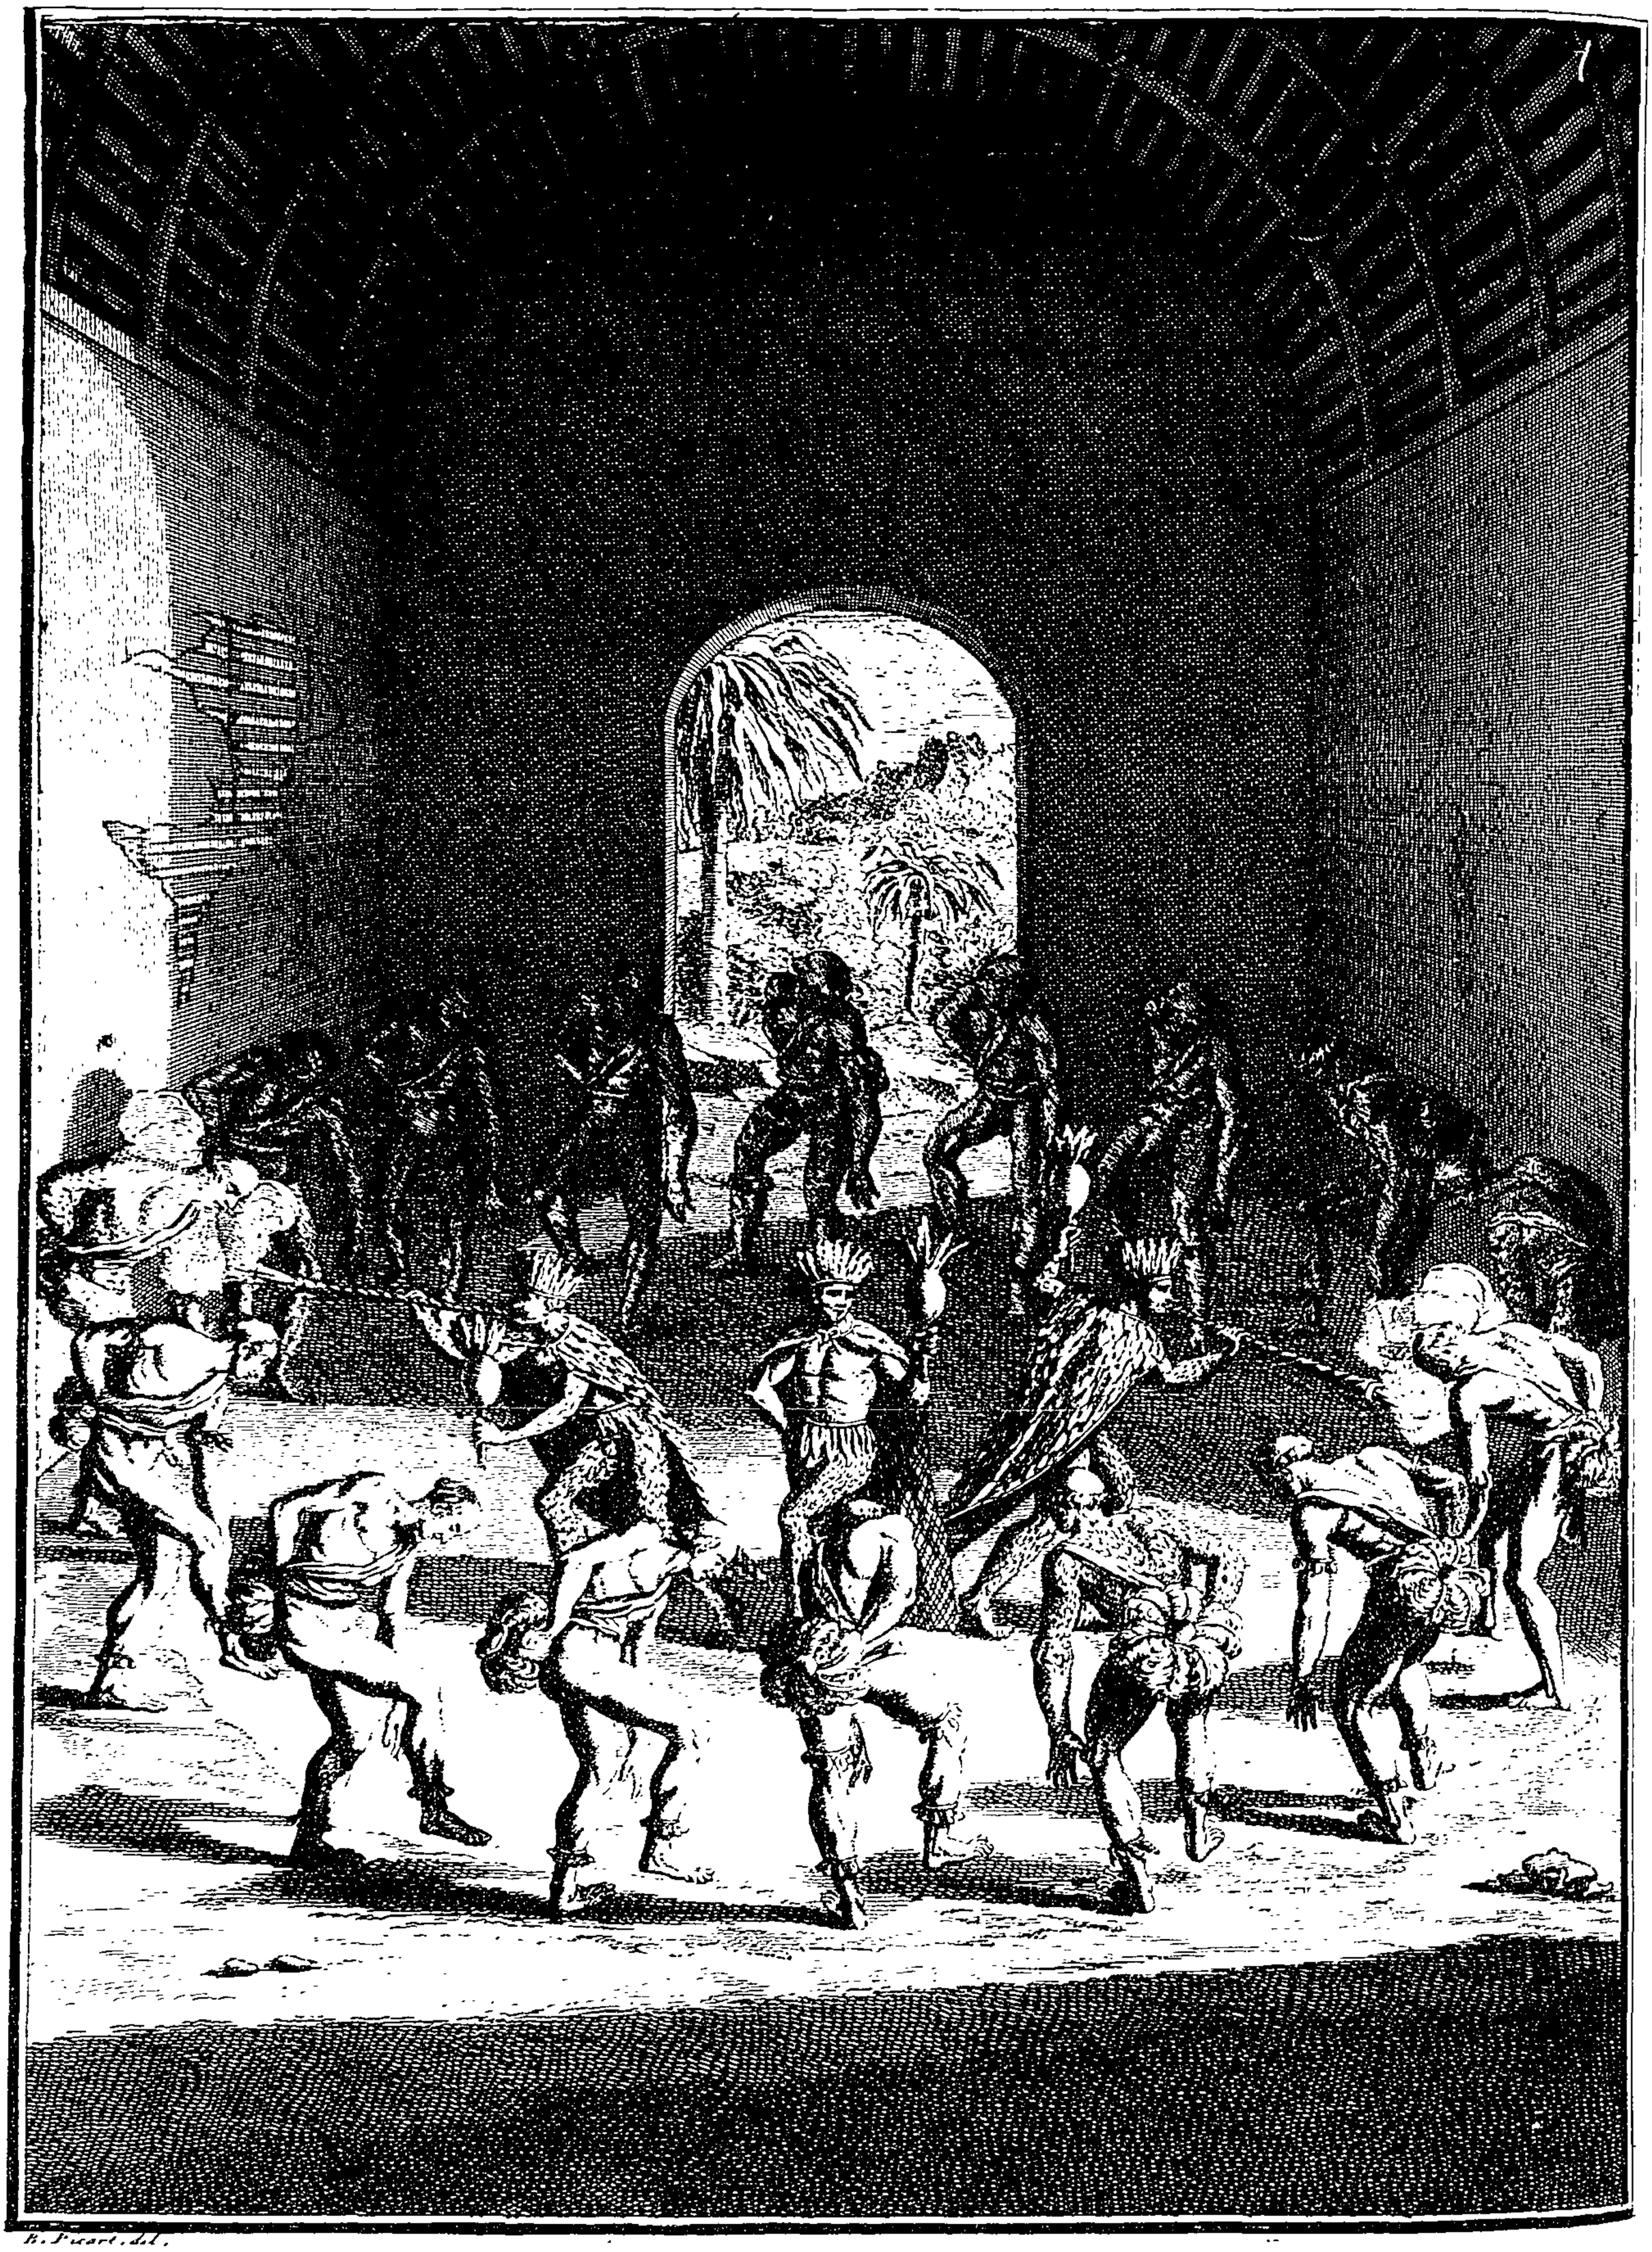
THE Savages of New Granada are as great Friends to Polygamy as any other Americans; but they don't marry out of thoſe Degrees of Conſanguinity which are forbidden by the Law of Nature; as for Inſtance, a Brother never marries a Siſter. Their Caciques have more Wives than the common People; and the Children of his beſt-beloved Conſort are the true and only Heirs.

THEY uſed formerly to bury their Caciques with gold Necklaces, adorn'd with Emeralds; or buried whatever they poſſeſs'd during their Lives, not forgetting to ſet both Victuals and Drink near their Bodies, in which Particular they were imitated by their Subjects.



A WIFE ſometimes follow'd her Husband into the other World. [a] In caſe a Woman was to die while ſhe was ſuckling her Child, the Infant was put to Death after her, to prevent, ſay theſe Americans, its being left an Orphan. They lay it to the Breaſt of its deceaſed Mother. They do not believe that any other Souls are immortal but thoſe of their great Men, and conſequently ſuch as were their Attendants in this World, ſince they diſpatch them after them, in order to their ſerving them in the next. They alſo are of Opinion, that when a Man dies with Chearfulneſs and Reſolution, and is buried with thoſe great Men, it gives him an infallible Title of ſharing with them in their Immortality. The Pleaſures of the next Life conſiſt in eating, drinking, dancing, loving, and in general, in repeating all the Senſualities of the animal Life in certain delicious Countries.

THEY celebrate very ſolemnly the Anniverſary of the Deaths of their Warriors, which conſiſts in Entertainments after their Mode, and in Songs intermix'd with Tears and Groans for the Sake of the Deceaſed, obſerving not to omit the Praiſes of thoſe Heroes, and the breaking out into Imprecations againſt their Enemies. If the Hero whoſe Memory they celebrate died in Battle, and with his Weapons in his Hand, the Imprecations againſt the Enemy are more ſolemn. They afterwards repreſent the Image of the latter as perfectly as poſſible, and tear it to Pieces in honour of the Hero whom he kill'd; after which, they eat, drink, fuddle themſelves, dance, and ſing. The next Morning at Day-Break, they place the Image of the deceaſed Hero in a great Canoo, fill'd with all thoſe Things in which he delighted during his Life-Time. They often carry Part of theſe Things in Proceſſion; but in what Manner ſoever the Ceremony concludes, 'tis certain, that whatever Things are burnt, are all for the Uſe of the Deceaſed. Then they again begin to be merry, and get drunk, and the Women diſtinguiſh themſelves from the reſt of the Company by ſuch Leaps and Gambols, as very often put Modeſty to the Bluſh. The Feſtival concludes with a general Drowſineſs, into which their exceſſive Joy, join'd to the Strength of the Liquor, throws them. The young Men, who are deſign'd to give Proofs one Day of their Valour, make a kind of Sacrifice to the Manes of thoſe Warriors, in whoſe Steps they generouſly reſolve to tread. This Sacrifice indeed is ſomething odd and whimſical, ſince it conſiſts in making an Inciſion, with a Fiſh Bone ground very ſharp, in that Part of the Body which prompts us to prefer the Sports of Venus to the Triumphs of Mars. The Blood which flows from the Wound, is a religious Libation in honour of the Dead.

THE Prieſts of Cumana, and thoſe of the neighbouring Nations, have Cunning enough to procure to themſelves the Cropping the Virgin Flower of all ſuch young Women as marry. We have nothing particular to add with regard to their Marriage-Ceremonies. There are ſome young Women among them, who make a Vow of perpetual Chaſtity, which they preſerve inviolably, even to the Hazard of their Lives; for thoſe She-Warriors, who are always equipp'd for Hunting, which is the only Exerciſe they take, boldly diſpatch the Man who ſhould dare to gather that, which, in the Opinion of Judges, is the moſt rare and moſt beautiful Flower in Nature.

THESE Savages, and thoſe of Venezuela, burn and beat to Powder the dead Bodies of ſuch as were dear to them in their Life-Time, particularly their Caciques; after which they dilute this Powder, and drink it off with their common Drink. Their Mourning conſiſts in Weeping for ſeveral Days together over the Bodies of thoſe whom they lov'd and reſpected, in the manner repreſented in the two Figures.

Religion of the Savages of Cubagua, Caribana, and New-Andaluſia.

THE only Particulars we know of their Religion, are, that they adore the Sun and Moon, but above all an evil Being, whom they worſhip only becauſe he hurts them. We are told, that thoſe of Paria worſhip the dry Skeletons of their Anceſtors. Theſe Savages, as likewiſe thoſe of the Trinity, think that the Sun makes his Progreſs in a Chariot drawn by Tygers[a]; for which Reaſon they treat thoſe Animals reſpectfully, and generally give them the Bodies of the Dead to feed upon. They have even a Tradition among them concerning a great Conflagration which the Sun occaſion'd in their Country, as a Puniſhment for their having neglected to throw their dead Bodies to thoſe Animals. This Fire was extremely violent, and conſum'd an infinite Number of Inhabitants; but we ſhall not trouble the Reader with all theſe trifling and ridiculous Stories.

THE Figure repreſents a religious Act of theſe Southern Savages, which we might very juſtly look upon as a juggling Trick of the Prieſts, in caſe the Prejudice we entertain againſt the Weſt-Indians could extend ſo far as to engage us to think it were poſſible for them to be ſo wicked as to juggle in an Affair in which ſo much Truth and Sincerity are requir'd. Here follows the Deſcription of it.

THE Caribees of Caribana receive in a ſolemn Ceremony what they call the Spirit of Courage. This Gift is beſtow'd by the Prieſts, who open the Ceremony with Songs and Dances, in which every one foams, and rolls, and tumbles about like a Demoniac: This violent Agitation is interrupted for a Moment, when they ſing and dance with greater Regularity and Cadence. All ſuch as deſire to have the Spirit communicated to them by the Mediation of the Prieſt, join Hands, and continue dancing inceſſantly, when three or four Prieſts enter the Circle, ruſh upon the Dancers, ſome with a Gourd-Bottle tied to the End of a Stick, and others with a long Reed or Cane fill'd with lighted Tobacco, with which they whiff the Dancers, crying out at the ſame Time, Receive all of ye the Spirit of Strength, by which you will be enabled to overcome your Enemies. From this Form of Prayer, we preſume that this religious Ceremony is a very ſtrict one with regard to theſe Savages, who like the reſt of the Weſt-Indians, reduce all their Articles of Faith to Dances, and certain equivocal Homages; for can we poſſibly put a better Conſtruction on the Deſcriptions which Travellers have given us of the American Idolatry? As to thoſe of whom we are now ſpeaking, all that can be affirm'd with regard to their Religion, is, that it conſiſts in fearing and praying to the evil Spirit, and in not troubling that Being whom they conſider as God; and the Deſtruction of their Enemies ſeems to be a virtuous Action. But to proceed to their other Ceremonies.

The Methods of Healing the SICK.

THE [a] Savages of Paria plunge any one who is sick of a Fever into the River, and afterwards make him run by Dint of Whipping, till he is out of Breath, round a great Fire; after which they carry him to his Hamock. They likewise sometimes prescribe Abstinence to their Patients, at other Times Bleeding; and in the latter Case they open a Vein in the Reins.

IN case they almost despair of a sick Man's Life, he is carried into a Wood in his Hamock, which they hang between two Trees, and dance round it all Day. As soon as Night is come, they give him Provision for four Days, and leave him to Fate; if he happens to recover, so much the better for him; upon which Occasions the Relations make Rejoicings; but in case he dies, they lament very little his Loss.

Their Marriage and Funeral Rites.

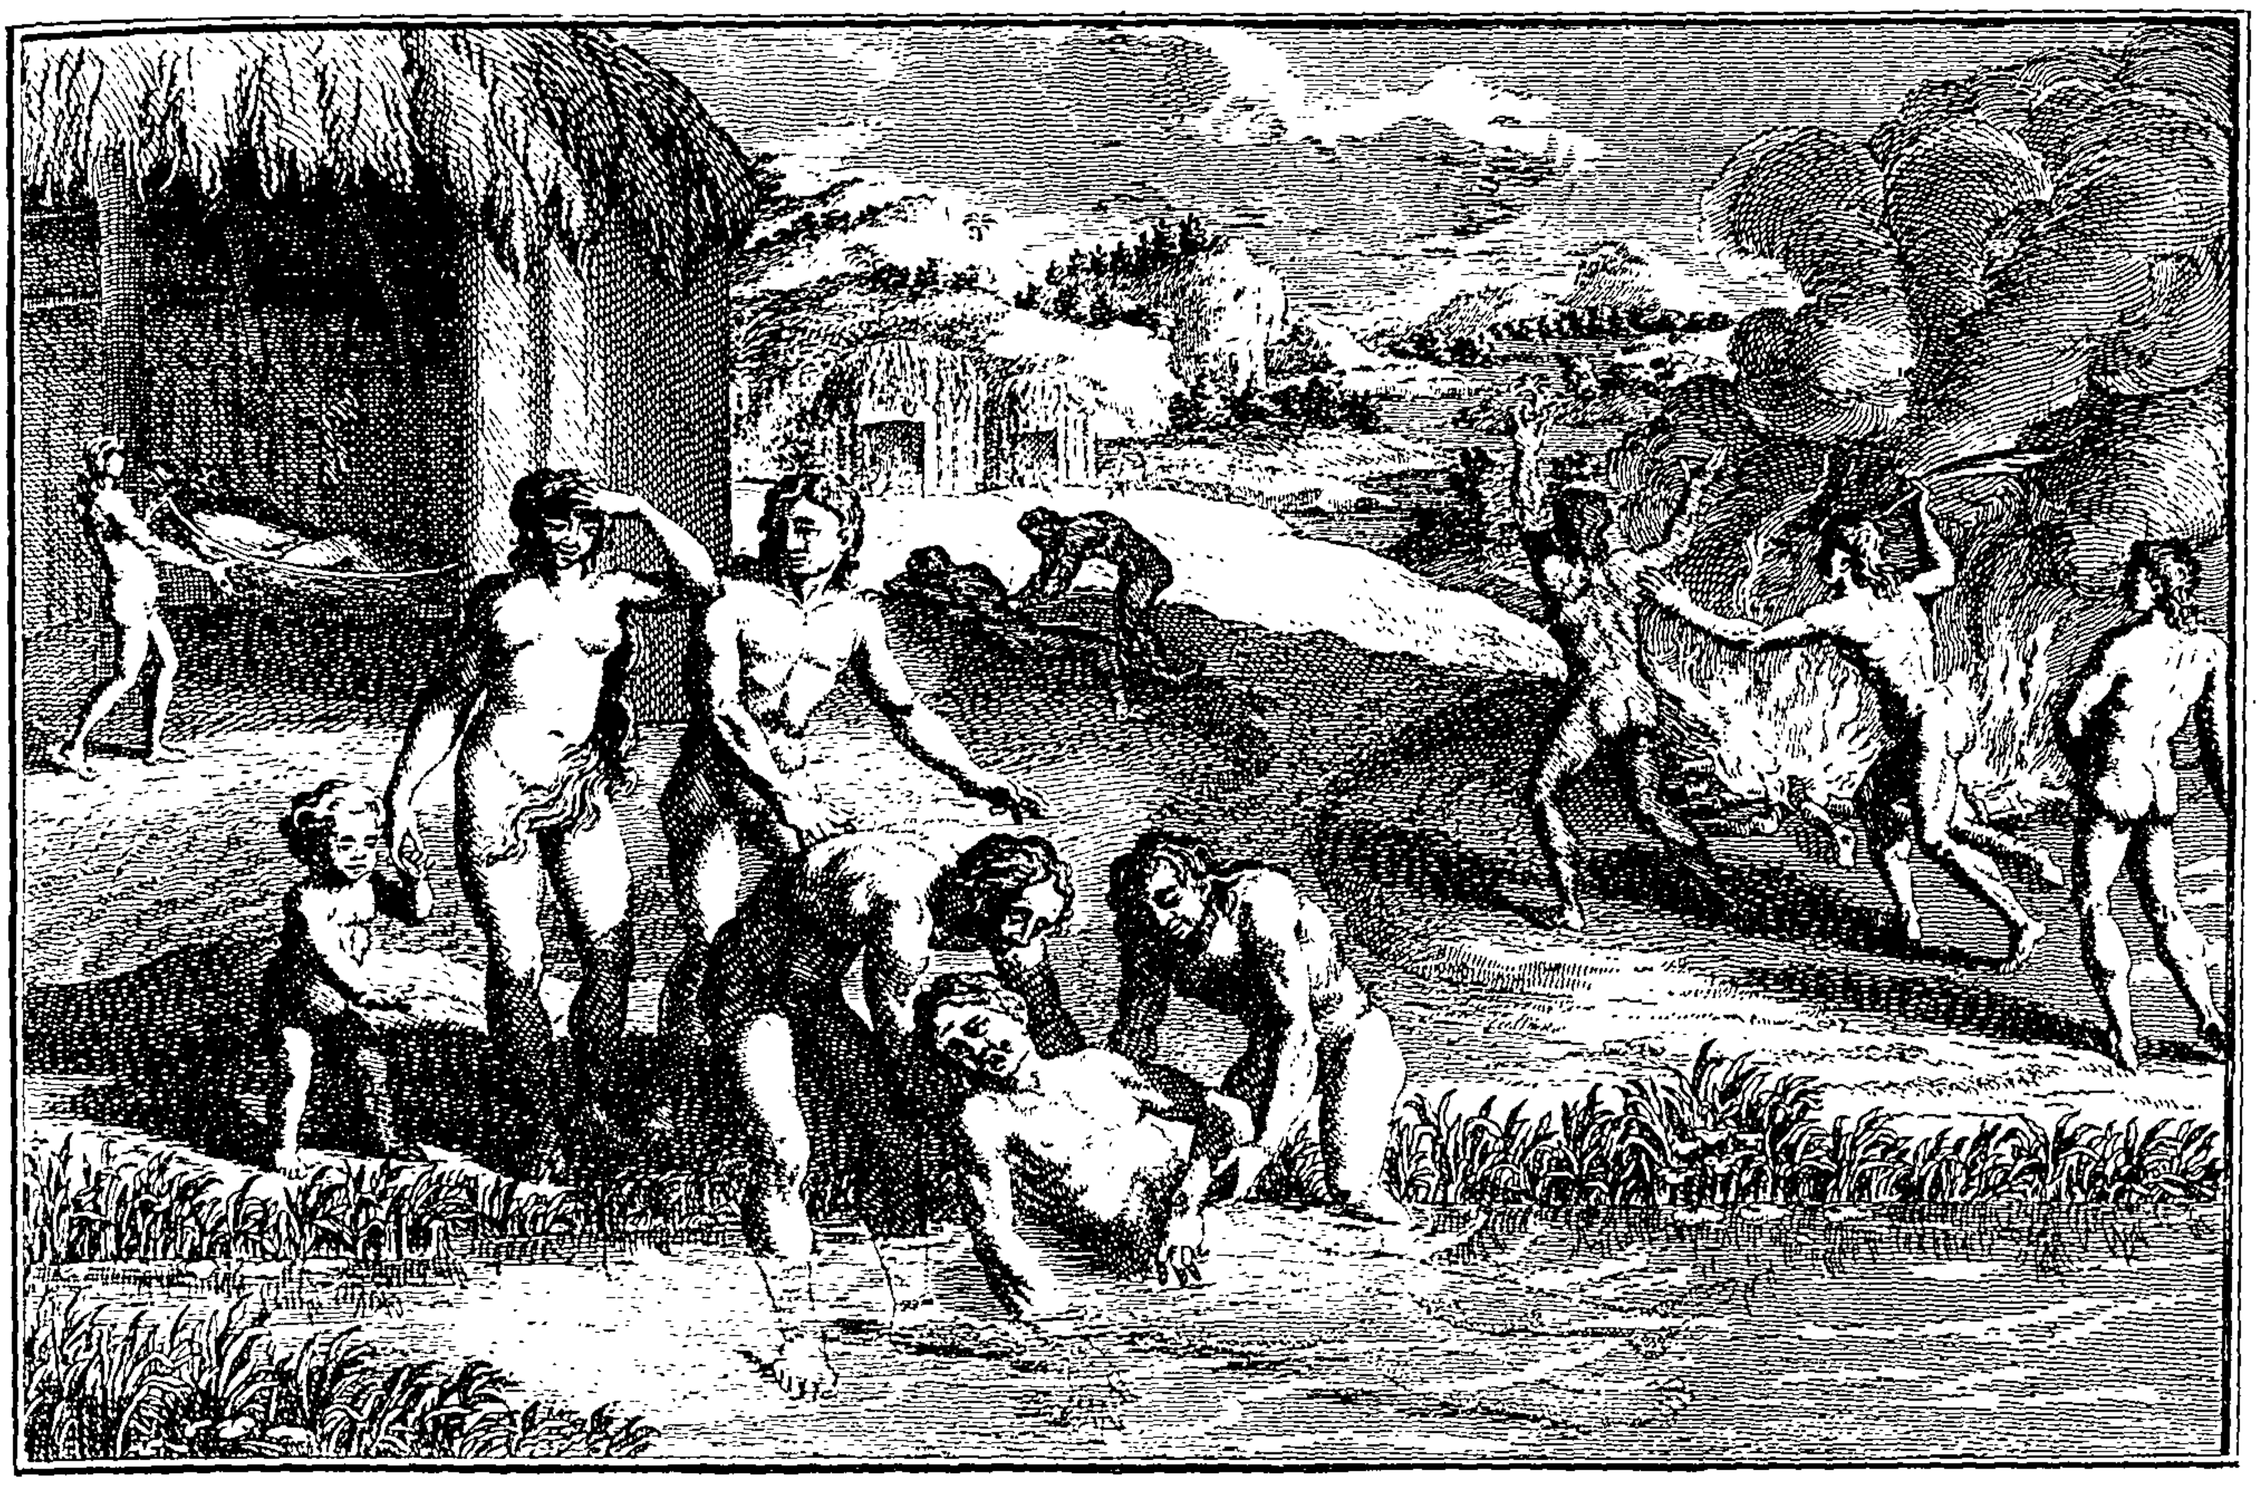
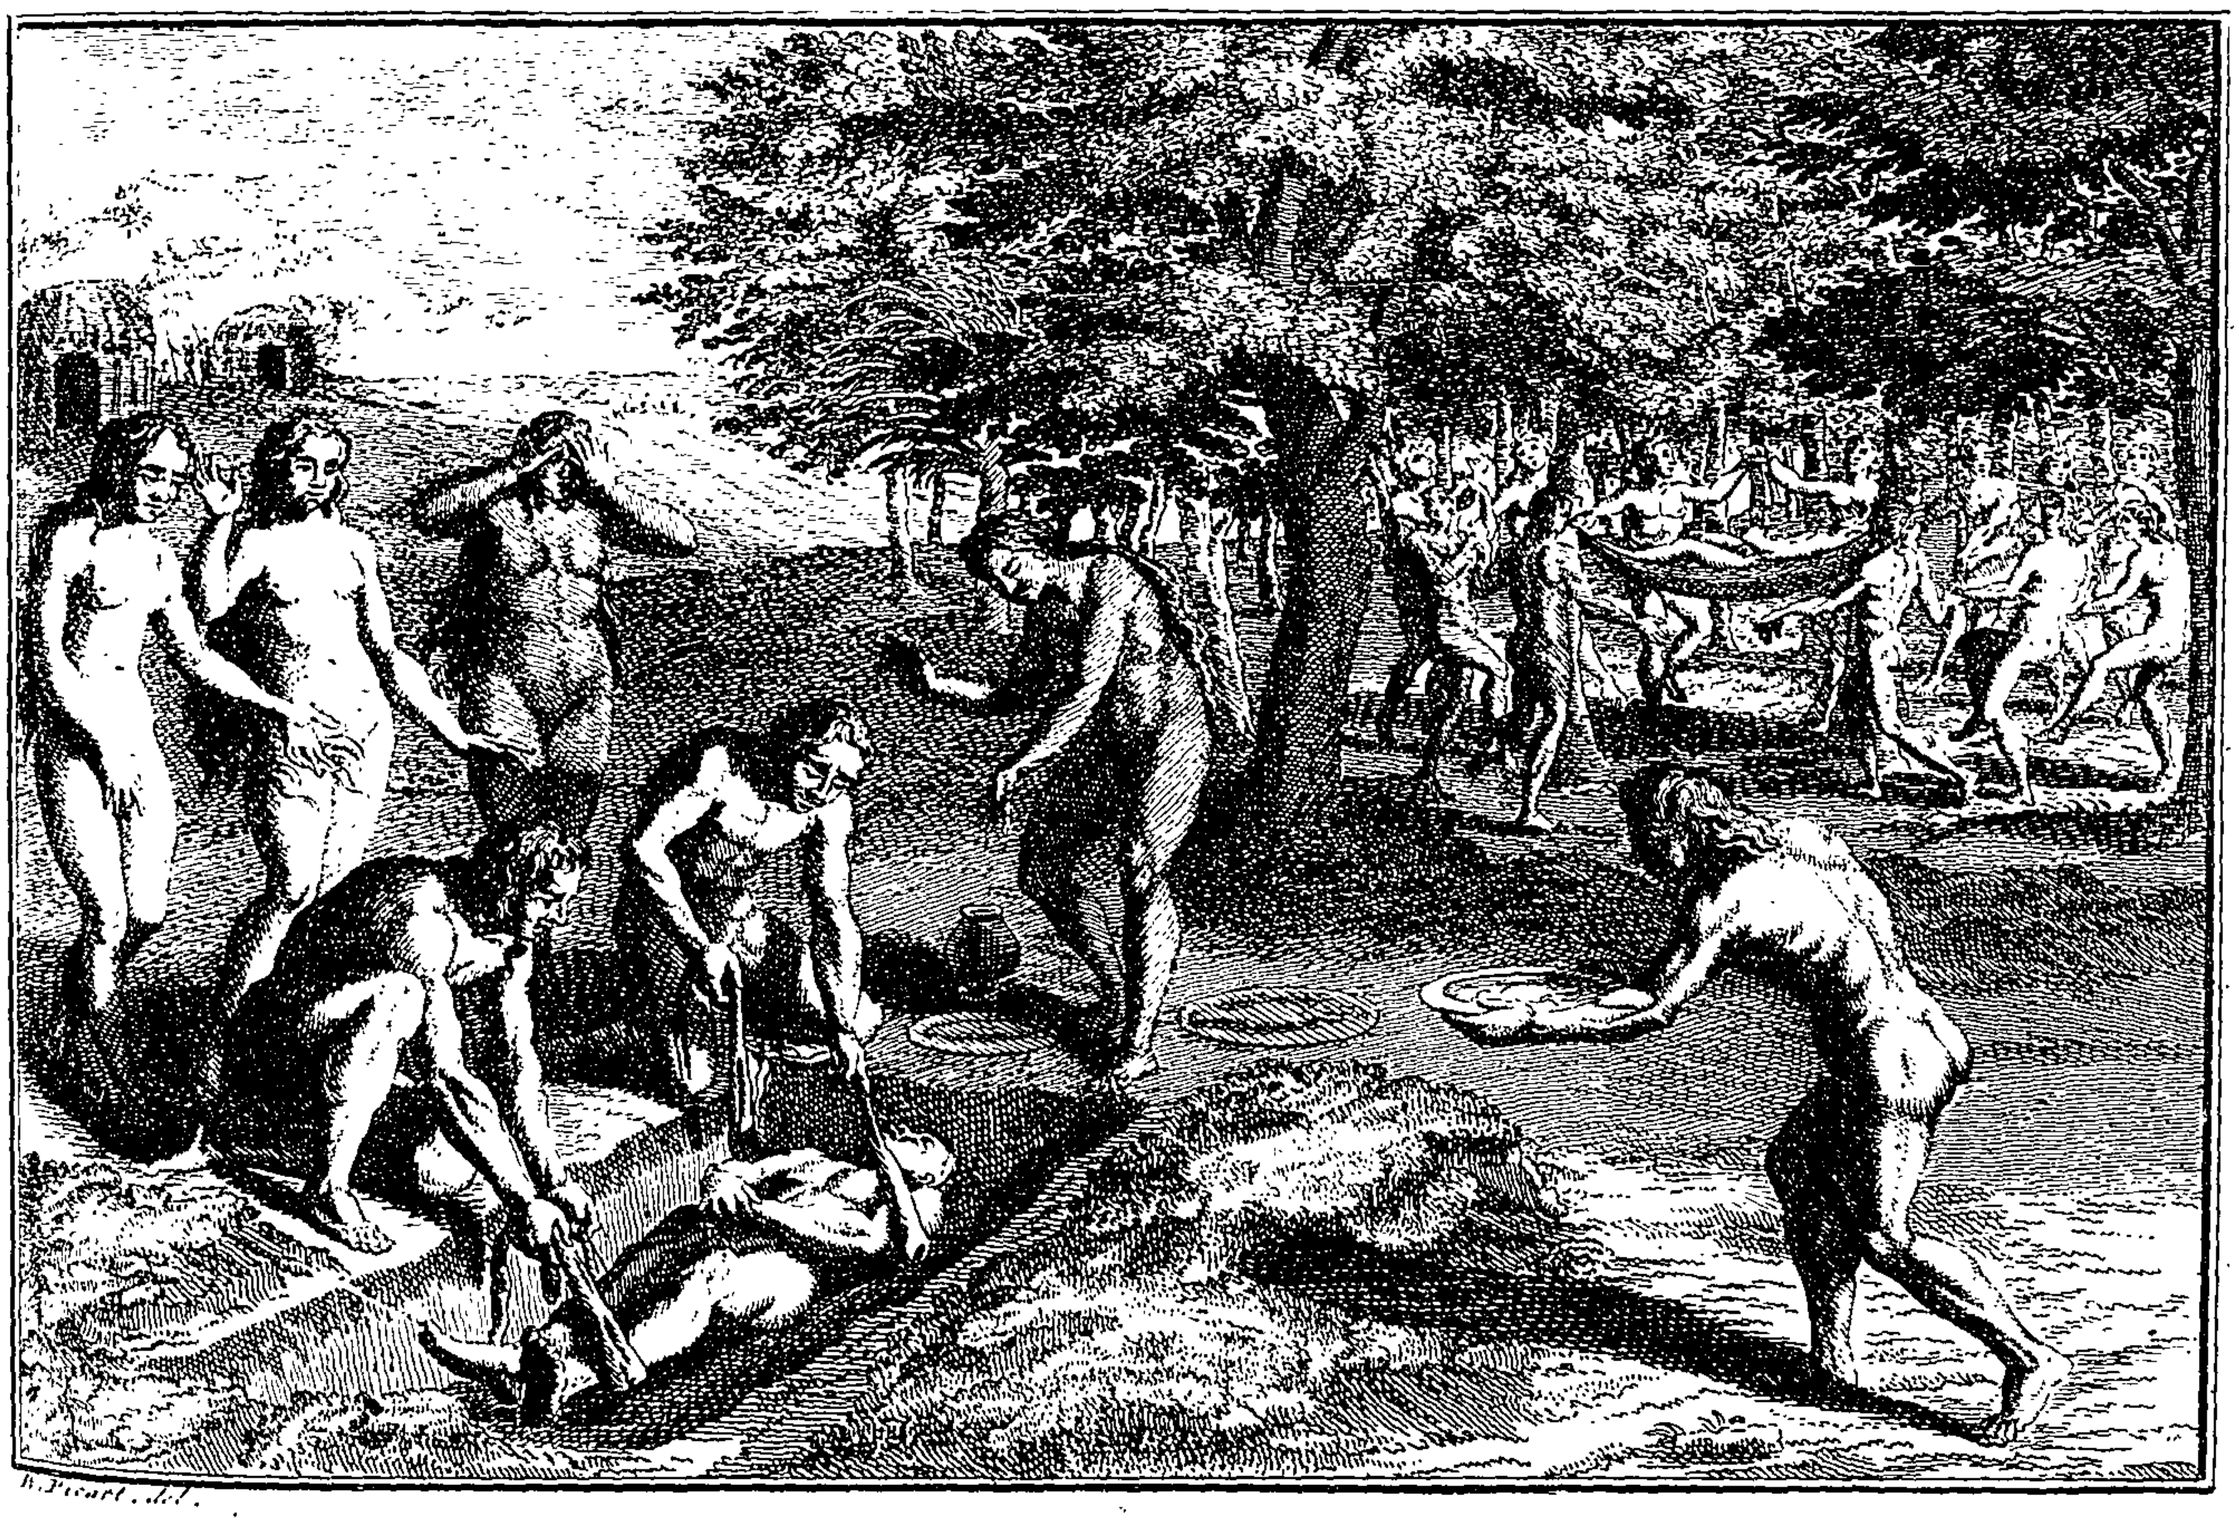
IT would be needless to repeat, that Polygamy is as much in Vogue in Caribani as in other Parts of America. Their Caciques have a great Number of Wives, and even [a] have always some kept on the Road, like our Horses, when they go a Journey. The common People have as many Wives as they are able or willing to maintain; but in general, they make no Scruple to lend them to such good Friends and Strangers as they respect. This Piece of Gallantry however, does no way affect Property; we are nevertheless assured that the Caribees put away their Wives whenever they violate their conjugal Fidelity.



WHEN a young Woman is grown up fit for Marriage, she is shut up for two Years, and during that Time is not allow'd to cut off her Hair: At the Expiration of this Term, her Parents endeavour to settle her in the World.

THE Ceremony of Betrothing is made at the Expence of their Friends, who bring Store of Provision for Eating, and a good Quantity of Wood to build a Hut for the future Couple. One of the Bridegroom's Friends cuts off his Hair from his Forehead, and some venerable Matron does the same to the Bride, which completes the Marriage. They celebrate the Festival by eating and drinking lustily; then the Priest immediately bestows his Blessing, after his Fashion, on the Marriage; after which Sir-Venerable restores the Wife to her Husband, having first made her a complete Woman. We are not to omit, that she only who is treated in this Manner, is considered as his lawful Wife: For the rest are all look'd upon as Concubines, and are obliged to obey the former as their Mistress.



THEY bury the Dead in their Huts; the Savages of Paria, after having laid them in the Grave, set Victuals by them, from an Opinion which prevails among them, that the Dead stand in Need of Sustenance. They often dry them by the Fire, and afterwards hang them up in the open Air. The whole Ceremony is accompanied with Dirges and Wailings, particularly if the Deceased had distinguish'd himself by heroic Actions, or other important Services; in this case they honour him so far as to celebrate the Anniversary of his Death, and his best beloved Wife is obliged to preserve the

They believe the Immortality of the Soul, and imagining that they ſtill preſerve the Senſes they had in this World, they affirm that they ramble up and down, and eat and drink at Pleaſure. Religion of the Savages that inhabit the Banks of the River Oroonoko, and of thoſe of Guiana.

WE are acquainted but with very few Particulars of the Religion of theſe Savages, and we are not even to give much Credit to what little we do know of it. [a] Some worſhip Watipa, who is the Devil; others worſhip the Devil under another Name, together with the Sun and Moon. Some Savages of Guiana, worſhip whatever their Prieſts command them to worſhip, or content themſelves with what theſe adore; others are of Opinion, that the Sun and Moon are living Beings, but they do not pay them any religious Worſhip. Certain Savages that inhabit the inland Parts of [b] Guiana, pay their Devotions to a Stone Idol made in the Shape of a Man ſitting on his Heels, with his Knees open, his Mouth gaping wide, leaning on his two Elbows, with his Hands open and ſtretched out. This Idol reſides in a Hut, which at the ſame Time is its Temple.

THE Nouragues, the Acoquas, and Galibis, acknowledge one God, but do not pay him the leaſt Worſhip. They ſay, that he inhabits [c] Heaven, but do not know whether he be a Spirit or not, and ſeem to think him a corporeal Being. The Galibis call God by a Name which ſignifies the Antient of Heaven. All theſe Savages have a great Number of ſuperſtitious Notions and Ceremonies, which are wholly founded on a Set of ridiculous Stories.

THE Prieſts of theſe People are alſo Phyſicians, agreeable to the Cuſtom of the reſt of the Americans. The Prieſt, before he undertakes to cure the Patient, firſt conſults the Oracle, and in caſe it pronounces his Death, they do not apply any Remedy to his Diſeaſe.

The reſt of their Ceremonies.

SOME of theſe Nations chuſe their Leader at Table, and elect him who is the greateſt Drinker. The General, the Moment after he is choſen, puts his two Hands over his Head, and while he continues in this Poſture, a long Harangue is made him with regard to his Duty, which being done, they make a Trial of his Courage, by whipping him till the Blood follows the Stroke.

THE Medico-Prieſts of Galibis go through a pretty ſevere Probation, before they can be received as Doctors in both Profeſſions. One of theſe Trials is ſo very ſevere, that ſuch as undergo it often loſe their Lives. They bruiſe green Tobacco-Leaves, and preſſing the Moiſture out of them, fill a Quantity of it equal to one of our large Drinking-Glaſſes, and give it to him who is to be received Medico-Prieſt or Boia, who is obliged to ſwallow it all down.

[a] Relations cited by Purchas.
[b] Purchas calls them Maraſhacwaccas.
[c] Journal of a Voyage into Guiana, &c.

WE

WE are not told any Thing particular with regard to their Marriages. The Galibis, and ſeveral Nations of Braſil, &c. as ſoon as their Wives are brought to Bed, get into their Places, and receive the Compliments upon their happy Delivery, as if they themſelves had ſuffered the Pains of it. The Nouragues lay their Children in the Dirt the moment they are born, and let them lie in it for ſome Time. Does not this Cuſtom ſeem to reſemble that of the Greeks and Romans in ſome meaſure, who uſed to expoſe their Children? But then there is this Difference, that the Nouragues are expoſed for a certain Time only.

BUT we are told more Particulars with regard to their Funeral Rites: The Savages who inhabit the Banks of Oroonoko, [a] hang up the Carcaſſes of their Dead in their Huts, and adorn them with Feathers and Necklaces, after all the Fleſh is rotted off. The Arvaques, who inhabit to the South of Oroonoko, beat the Bones of their Caciques to Powder; this their Wives and Friends throw into their Drink, and thus bury in their own Bodies thoſe whom they lov'd and reſpected in their Life-Time. One would imagine that ſuch Cuſtoms muſt neceſſarily flow from a very violent Affection; but the Savages have their Decorums as well as we, and 'tis well known that they differ widely from Friendſhip. Some other Savages of Guiana, make great Rejoicings after the Death of their Chiefs, and even get very drunk, at the ſame Time that one of the Wives of the Deceaſed torments herſelf, and howls as if ſhe were going diſtracted. Theſe laſt Savages preſent the Deceaſed with Captives or Slaves to ſerve him in the other World. They believe that there is a Heaven for the Good, and a Hell for the Wicked.

Religion of the Savages who inhabit the River of Amazons, and the Inland Parts of SOUTH-AMERICA, as far as Peru.

FATHER D'Acunha relates, "That there is but very little Difference in [b] the "Religion of theſe ſeveral Heathens; they all worſhip Idols which they them-"ſelves make, and to theſe they aſcribe a Variety of Operations. Some of theſe are thought "to preſide over the Waters, and are repreſented with a Fiſh in their Hands; there are "others for Seed-Time, and others again who inſpire them with Courage in War. "They ſay, that theſe Deities came down from Heaven, purpoſely to dwell among "and aſſiſt them, but they don't pay them the leaſt Worſhip; they carry them in a "Caſe, or leave them in any Place till ſuch Time as they want them. Hence, upon "their going out to War, they hoiſt at the Prow of their Canoos, that Idol in whom "they repoſe the greateſt Confidence, and under whoſe Auſpices they look for Victory. "They have the ſame Cuſtom when they go a Fiſhing, and on this Occaſion they hoiſt "the Idol that preſides over the Waters."

IF we ſuppoſe that Father D'Acunha was faithfully inform'd, his Relation may be reduced to two Particulars which merit our Regard: Firſt, that they divide the Government of Nature among their Gods: Secondly, that they never pray to them but in Neceſſity; with regard to which, we may, without too much ſtraining the Compariſon, affirm, that they do no more than imitate the Followers of other Religions. Theſe Gods are, properly ſpeaking, no more than Genii, and are ſubordinate to a ſuperior Deity. The Savages who inhabit the Banks of the Amazons, acknowledge this Principle; and the Inference may be eaſily drawn from the Sequel of the Jeſuit's Relation.

[b] Relation of the River Amazons.

THESE

THESE Savages ſtand in great Awe of their Prieſts, and have them in the utmoſt Veneration. The above-cited Father relates, that they have a particular Houſe for the Celebration of their Ceremonies; and 'tis there they pronounce their Oracles, and receive the Anſwers from their Gods. Theſe Prieſts are the Maſters, the Prieſts, the Counſellors and Directors of the People. They alſo apply to them as Caſuiſts for the Solution of their Doubts; and whenever they breathe any Vengeance againſt their Enemies, theſe worthy Miniſters of the Idols furniſh them with poiſonous Herbs for their Arrows and other Weapons.

THE Memories of theſe Directors of their Worſhip is had in ſuch extreme Veneration, that they preſerve their Bones like ſo many Relics: Theſe, after being all put together, they hang up aloft, and thus preſerve them in the ſame Cotton-Beds, in which they uſed to lie when living.

Other Ceremonies of the above-mention'd Savages.

WE have no Particulars with regard to their Marriages. Some of theſe keep the Bodies of their Deceaſed in their Houſes, " in order, ſays Father D'Acunha to " have a perpetual Memenți Mori before their Eyes. Others burn the Bodies in large " Graves, together with all that belong'd to them in their Life-Time; but they all cele- " brate their Obſequies for ſeveral Days together, all which Time they employ in weep- " ing and drinking to great Exceſs."

[a] THE Aguas, a People of a leſs blood-thirſty Temper than moſt of the other American Savages, treat all ſuch Captives as they take in War with great Humanity: Nevertheleſs, if theſe were famous for their Valour and Bravery, they cut them to Pieces on their ſolemn Feſtivals, and hang their Heads as ſo many Trophies at the Entry of their Huts.

RELIGION of the Braſilians.

" [b] CORREAL relates, that the Braſilians have neither Temples nor Monuments " erected to any Deity, a Circumſtance in which they differ very much from " the Mexicans and Peruvians. They have not the leaſt Notion of the Creation of " the World, and regulate Time by Moons only; however, we cannot ſay but they " have ſome faint Idea of the Deity, ſince they often lift up their Hands towards the " Sun and Moon in token of Admiration, &c. They have ſome Idea of the Flood; " for they relate, That a very powerful Foreigner, who bore the moſt violent hatred " againſt their Anceſtors, cauſed them all to periſh by a violent Inundation, two Per- " ſons excepted, whom he preſerv'd in order that they might propagate a new Race of " Men, from whom they affirm themſelves deſcended; and this Tradition, which points " out the Flood pretty evidently, is found in their Songs. They ſtand very much in " fear of the [c] Devil, whom they call Agnian, and yet they don't pay him the leaſt " Worſhip. They are equally fearful of Thunder, which they ſuppoſe to be under the " Direction of Toupan; and when they are told to worſhip the God who created " Thunder, ſurely, ſay they, 'tis very ſtrange that God, who is naturally a Being of " ſo much Goodneſs, ſhould terrify Mankind with Thunder."

[a] Coreal, Vol I. of his Voyages.
[b] Vol. I. of his Voyages.
[c] Authors cited by Purchas.

THEY pay a great Veneration to a certain Fruit about the Bigneſs of an Oſtrich-Egg, and ſhapp'd like a great Gourd, which they call Tamaraca, tho' Travellers have corrupted the Word, and call it Maraca. " Coreal tells us, that when the Prieſts go their " Viſitation in their Dioceſes, they never forget to carry their Maracas along with them, " and oblige the People to worſhip them with great Solemnity. They fix them at the " End of a Staff, which they ſtick in the Ground, then dreſs them up with beautiful " Feathers, and order the Inhabitants of the Villages to carry their Maracas Victuals " and drink; for, ſay the Prieſts, it is well-pleaſing to them, and they delight in be- " ing entertain'd in that Manner. The Chiefs and Fathers of Families go and offer " Part of their Proviſion to theſe Maracas;" [a] and it is a very great Crime for any one to take away what has been conſecrated to theſe Idols. The Prieſts aſſure us, that the Spirit pronounces its Oracles by the Organ or Mediation of the Maraca. We are alſo told of ſeveral other Ceremonies in which that Spirit is preſent after a divine Manner; one of the chief is, when the Prieſt breathes the Spirit of Courage upon them, which we have already deſcrib'd. In fine, they look upon theſe Maracas as domeſtic Deities; for which Purpoſe, after they have been conſecrated in a ſolemn manner by their Prieſts, they carry them to their Houſes, and conſult them upon Occaſion. [b] Another Author relates, that they alſo worſhip the Moon, particularly when in the firſt Quarter.

PURCHAS relates from Jerom Rodriguez, that there are Savages in the Inland Parts of Braſil, who have a Form of Worſhip and a Set of religious Ceremonies very like thoſe of the Roman Catholics. They have, ſays he, a Chief who preſides over a kind of Hierarchy, a prieſtly Ordination, Confeſſion, Abſolution, Beads. But this Account has all the Air of a Romance.

THE eſſential Parts of their Feſtivals conſiſt in Dances and Songs, the Subjects wherof are their glorious Atchievements in War; and are alſo of Uſe in tranſmitting to Poſterity the Memory of their Heroes. One of the greateſt of theſe Feſtivals is that of the butchering of their Priſoners, whom they afterwards eat in their ſolemn Aſſemblies: [c] Nevertheleſs, ſome Relations diſpute a little the Truth of what is here advanced, and pretend, that theſe Savages are far from being thus thirſty of human Blood; but 'tis added, that the Portugueſe had endeavour'd to juſtify their exceſſive Cruelties by this unjuſt Aſſertion.

THE Boias or Prieſts are alſo Interpreters of Dreams, and make the People believe they hold a ſecret Correſpondence with Agnian; and that they by the Virtue of his Power are able to divert Plagues and Diſeaſes, &c. from them. The Boia conſults the Oracle in a Hut built for that Purpoſe, where a Virgin of about ten or twelve Years of Age prepares a Hammock for him, and a good Quantity of [d] Caouin. The Boia, who for nine Days together is obliged to abſtain from all Commerce with Women, waſhes himſelf before he goes to Bed, and there conſults the Spirit, who never fails to anſwer his Prayers; for 'tis proper to obſerve, that he is always alone when he raiſes the Spirit.

Their

Their MARTIAL CEREMONIES.

IF it be true, that the Braſilians are as revengeful as they are repreſented, a Captive among them has no Hopes of the leaſt Quarter. Their Prieſts and old Men prepare the People for War, and give the Signal for marching, but they firſt expoſe their Maracas, thoſe tutelar Gods of the State. We ſhall not enter into a Detail with regard to their military Affairs, as foreign to our Subject; ſuffice it that we acquaint the Reader with their Treatment of their Captives, ſince their Death ſeems to be a kind of Sacrifice. [a] All ſuch as take any Priſoners, are obliged to feed and fatten them. They give Women to their Male Captives, but do not give any Men to ſuch Females as they take in War. The Woman who is thus given to the Man, ſerves him both at Bed and Board, and they allow him the Liberty to hunt and divert himſelf, till the very Moment he is to be butcher'd, which infallibly happens as ſoon as he is grown very fat. Then they aſſemble the People in a ſolemn Manner, and open the Feſtival with Dances, and ſuch Diverſions as Drunkenneſs inſpires. [b] The Priſoner himſelf has his Share in their Sports, and dances, drinks, fuddles, and ſtupifies himſelf, in order to die with the greater Bravery. We have already obſerved, that the Americans in general are pretty much inclined to this brutal Intrepidity. After they have diverted themſelves in this manner for ſome Hours, two or three of their ſtrongſt Men lay hold of the Priſoner, and bind Cotton Ropes about his Middle; however, all the Terrors of the impending Moment are not able to make the leaſt Impreſſion on his Mind. Then they carry him in Triumph up and down the City; after which he is expoſed for ſome Time to the Inſults of all the People. The Men who had bound him, have an Eye upon him all the Time, and ſtanding at about eight or ten Foot from him, they pull the Ropes with which he was bound equally to the Right and Left. A third Savage carries Stones to the poor Wretch, and he is allowed to throw them at thoſe who ſurround him. "If all theſe Particulars are true, [c] ſays a Traveller, we may juſtly conſider theſe Exe"cutions as a kind of Comedy." We muſt not omit, that he who has the Honour of taking a Priſoner, aſſumes at the ſame Time a new Name, and that the Title which he thereby acquires, is a Degree of Nobility. The Priſoner has no ſooner thrown all his Stones, but a Savage comes foward with the Tacape, which is a kind of Club, and addreſſes a Diſcourſe to him, which we may call the pronouncing his Sentence, and a little after ſtrikes the Blow; when, if the Force of it throws the Priſoner upon his Back, 'tis an Omen of the Death of the Perſon who ſtruck him. No ſooner is the Captive knock'd down, but the Woman who had been appointed for his Uſe, throws herſelf on his dead Body, and falls a weeping; however, 'tis but a very tranſient Grief; for if we may believe thoſe Travellers who have been in Braſil, ſhe feeds on the dead Body with the reſt of the Company.

Their MARRIAGE and FUNERAL RITES.

"I WILL allow, ſays Coreal, that we conſider all the American Savages as enter"taining Principles which differ very widely from thoſe of ſound Morality and Ju-
"ſtice; nevertheleſs ſome faint Traces of the moſt ſimple Duties of Nature are ſtill
"viſible among them. The Braſilian Savages never marry their Mothers, Siſters, or

" grees of Conſanguinity. The Moment a Youth is fit for Marriage, he is allow'd to " look out for a Wife. They do not conſider, as is the Practice in Europe, whether " he has Capacities or Abilities ſufficient for ſupporting a Family, and the Weight of " Civil Affairs. Formerly a young Man was not allow'd to marry before he had kill'd " an Enemy; but now, when a young Savage has ſome young Woman in his Eye, he " addreſſes himſelf to her Parents, or, in caſe ſhe has none, to her Friends, or even " Neighbours, and asks their Conſent to marry her." Theſe Savages are unacquainted " with all our Preliminaries of Marriage: There is no ſuch Thing among them as a De- " claration of their Paſſions, nor any amorous Intercourſe. If the young Woman's " Relations, Friends, or Neighbours, give their Conſent, he is from that Moment her Husband, that is to ſay, he haſtens to the Siege, and takes the Place by Storm, without allowing the leaſt Capitulation.

POLYGAMY is had in great Honour among them; a manifeſt Indication that they are deſirous of well-peopling the Nation. We are told that the Wives live together in pretty good Harmony, but that their Husbands put them from them upon the moſt trifling Pretences.

THE Husband goes to Bed as ſoon as the Wife is delivered, and acts the Part of a lying-in Woman with great Art and Skill, by receiving the uſual Viſits made on thoſe Occaſions, and cauſing himſelf to be attended as tho' he was really ſick: [a] He nevertheleſs acts the Part of the Midwife to his Spouſe, fairly cuts the Child's Navel-ſtring, and beats its Noſe flat; after that he waſhes it, and paints it red and black, and laſtly, goes to Bed, and his Wife returns to her Work. The Birth of the Child is followed by ſome Ceremonies which are ridiculous enough. If it be a Boy, his Father, laying down a Bow, Arrows, and a Knife, exhorts him to Bravery and Courage, and concludes by naming him after whatever Object makes the greateſt Impreſſion on his Mind. The Child is no ſooner grown up, than his Father takes him along with him, and teaches him to kill his Fellow-Creatures; and this is their whole Art of War. The Girls are brought up in domeſtic Affairs, and the Moment they have given Tokens of their being Ripe, a ſolemn Feaſt is celebrated on that Occaſion.

THEY believe the Immortality of the Soul, ſince they affirm that the Good, i. e. thoſe who have kill'd a great Number of Enemies, go beyond the Mountains, and there enjoy the utmoſt Bliſs in Paradiſe. As to Cowards, Agnian torments them in the next Life. They pay a great Veneration to a certain Bird, that ſings mournfully in the Night-Time. They ſay, it is a Meſſenger which their deceaſed Friends and Relations have ſent, and that it brings them News from the other World. [b] They are of Opinion, that provided they do but liſten attentively to his Melody, notwithſtanding their having been vanquiſh'd by their Enemies, they yet ſhall go one Day, and reviſit thoſe Places beyond the high Mountains inhabited by their Anceſtors, where they will enjoy an uninterrupted Series of Pleaſure, and dance and ſing to all Eternity; nevertheleſs ſome Travellers relate, that the Savages of Braſil have not the leaſt Idea of Rewards and Puniſhments after this Life.

[c] WHEN a ſick Perſon is at the Point of Death, his neareſt Relations throw themſelves upon him with ſo much Violence, that they ſometimes almoſt beat his Breath out of his Body. If the ſick Perſon dies in the Evening, the following Night is ſpent in Mourning and Wailings, and the Neighbours of both Sexes are invited to join with them; but how dangerous ſoever the Symptoms of the Sickneſs may be, in caſe they have but the leaſt Hopes of curing it, they not only refrain from Weeping, but even dance, ſing, and fuddle as uſual.

THEY waſh and comb their Dead, after which they wrap them up in Calico; [a] and if it be one of their Chiefs, in his Hammock, ſet off with all his Feathers and other Ornaments. [b] They lay him in a kind of a Coffin, but ſo as not to let any Earth touch the Body, and carry him Proviſions every Day, in order to prevent his dying with Hunger after his Death; not to mention that he wearies himſelf ſo much with eternal Dances in the other World, that he is very glad to come every now and then, and refreſh himſelf in this. Theſe are their Notions with regard to the Dead. Coreal, who tranſcribed the above-mentioned Article, and ſeveral others, from Authors who wrote long before his Time, relates, that they let down their Dead with their Feet right forward, into round Graves dug in the Shape of a Well or Cask. He adds, that they carry them Proviſions till ſuch Time as their Bodies are quite moulder'd away, in order to prevent Agnian's Malice, who would infallibly carry off the Body, did he not meet with Victuals about the Grave. "As they frequently change their Habitations, continues the ſame Writer, theſe Savages, "in order that they may know again the Spot where the Grave was made, cover it over "with Pindo, which is a Braſilian Plant; and every Time they paſs near thoſe Graves, "they roar out Dirges in honour of the Dead in the moſt frightful manner, ſo that one "would conclude they intended to raiſe them from the Dead, &c."

THE Figure repreſents a ſick Man in his Hammock, and the Boia-Phyſician or Prieſt, viſiting him with his Marack in his Hand; the dead Man carried to his Grave, and the Braſilians weeping over him. We muſt not omit, that the Mourning of theſe Savages conſiſts farther in not eating before the Going-down of the Sun, when they go and weep regularly over his Grave, and mourn in this manner for a Month.

Religion of the Savages of La Plata, and of ſome more remote Nations; their Ceremonies, &c.

WE have little or no Account of theſe Savages. Some of them conſecrate the Skins of their Enemies as ſo many Trophies in certain Houſes, which ſeem to have been deſign'd for religious Worſhip. Others adore the Sun and Moon. Some of theſe Nations, at the New or Full Moon, make certain Inciſions with Bones to which they give an Edge, and uſe them inſtead of Knives. [c] Thoſe of Tucuman have ſome Notion of a Deity, and have Prieſts among them who act the Part of Soothſayers, upon which Coreal makes the following juſt Reflection; "I am of Opinion, ſays he, that wherever there are Prieſts, there muſt neceſſarily be ſome Shadow of Religion, and that the one is always relative to the other." However, the Diſpute does not relate to the true Signi- "fication of the Word Religion, but to the Idea only. The other Savages of Paraguay and Uraghay, i. e. thoſe whom the Jeſuits have not civilized, do not differ from the Tucumans in theſe Particulars. Their Prieſts are alſo Phyſicians, as in other Places, and cure their Patients by ſucking the diſeaſed Part, or by the Smoke of Tobacco. They admit an univerſal Spirit who pervades Matter, and acts on all Parts of it; but this is too philoſophical for Savages. Let us rather ſay, that they imagine every Thing is inform'd with its peculiar Genius or Spirit, which flows from their groſs Ignorance; tho' after all,

'tis certain, that ſome very polite Nations, both antient and modern, hove ſuppoſed the immediate Action of an univerſal Spirit, and that of Genii upon earthly Bodies. Agreeable to this Notion, we are aſſur'd, that the Savages in queſtion addreſs Invocations to theſe Genii: Some [a] worſhip a pretended inviſible Tyger.

" [b] SUCH as are Candidates for the Prieſthood or Phyſic, are obliged to faſt often, " and for a long Time together; muſt have fought ſeveral Times againſt wild Beaſts, " particularly Tygers, and at leaſt have been bit or ſcratched by them. After this, they " may be raiſed to the Prieſthood; for they look upon Tygers as almoſt divine Animals, " and the Impoſition of his holy Paw is as honourable among them, as the receiving the " [c] Doctor's Cap in the Univerſity of Salamanca is in Spain. Afterwards the Juice of " certain diſtill'd Herbs is pour'd upon their Eyes, and this is the prieſtly anointing; " after which, theſe new Prieſts know how to calm the Spirits of all Beings, animate " or inanimate; hold ſecret Intelligences with thoſe Spirits, and ſhare with them in their " Virtues."
